Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he has received any confirmation of the report that torture was applied to several prisoners in the fortress of Montjuich, Barcelona, during December 1896; and whether any of the sufferers are British subjects; and, if so, whether he proposes to make any representations to the Spanish Government on the matter?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (MR. G. CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): Beyond a newspaper report which was sent to me by the hon. Member, we have heard nothing of the matter alluded to. If any evidence reaches us indicating that British subjects have been injured, of course, we should inquire.

AMERICAN PASSENGER TRAFFIC. (POLICE AT QUEENSTOWN.)

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that steerage passengers landing from British bound American liners at Queenstown are cross-examined by the Royal Irish Constabulary as to their names, occupations, American addresses, destinations in Ireland, length of their proposed stay, the names of those they are going to visit, address, etc., and that passengers embarking at Queenstown are obliged to show their tickets to detective officers going on board; whether he is aware that this practice is generally complained of by tourists, and is seriously injuring the Irish tourist traffic because, in consequence of it, tourists prefer to land in and embark from British ports; and whether he will confine this action of the police to persons whom they may reasonably suspect of the commission of crime or intention to commit crime?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: It is the practice of the police to invite passengers at Queenstown to give their names and places of destination, and passengers have cordially co-operated with the police in giving this information. It is not the fact, however, that passengers are interrogated as to the other particulars mentioned in the Question, nor is it true that passengers embarking at Queenstown are required to show their tickets to detective officers. When, however, the police have reason to believe that a particular passenger is an absconding criminal or a fugitive from justice, such person would no doubt be asked to exhibit his ticket. No complaints have been made to the police on the subject, nor is there any ground whatever for the suggestion that the tourist traffic has been injured in consequence of the police inquiries which I have indicated.

FISHERY PIER (BALTIMORE).

MR. JAMES GILHOOLY (Cork Co., W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether he has received a memorial from the Skibbereen and Baltimore Harbour Board relative to the construction of a fishery pier at Baltimore; and (2) whether, in view of the fact that the line of railway from Skibbereen to Baltimore, made for the purpose of promoting the fishing industry at a cost of £56,000, is practically useless for that purpose owing to the want of a suitable pier, he will grant the prayer of the memorial, and request the Treasury to advance the money necessary for its construction?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The memorial referred to in the first part of the Question has been received. The memorial does not allege that the line of railway from Skibbereen to Baltimore, constructed at a cost of £56,000 under the Act of 1889, is practically useless to promote the fishing industry. The memorialists, on the contrary, took the opportunity of expressing their acknowledgments of the boon conferred upon the district by the Government, whilst at the same time expressing their desire that a deep water pier should be constructed, and the existing line of railway extended to the pier. The Congested Districts Board some few years ago were prepared to contribute towards the cost of the construction of a pier at Baltimore on terms which were communicated to the Baltimore Railway Company. It does not appear, however, that the latter company agreed to the terms of this offer; and, although the Congested Districts Board do not now consider themselves bound by the offer formerly made by them, yet, if the Railway Company and the Harbour Board could come to an understanding with the Board in the matter, the question of a contribution would be again considered.

MASSEREENE ESTATE (POLICE PROTECTION).

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) will he explain why a district inspector, a head constable, a mounted constable, and two protection huts are still maintained in connection with the Massereene estate; (2) what is the annual cost of this establishment; and (3) whether any outrage has been committed in connection with the Massereene evicted farms?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The police arrangements referred to in the first paragraph are necessary for the efficient protection of new tenants on the Massereene estate. It has been found practicable to make a substantial reduction in the number of police employed on this duty on the estate since the adoption of special protective measures some years ago. Overt acts of outrage, as well as acts of boycotting and intimidation, have been committed from time to time in connection with the occupation of evicted farms on the estate, and many more would doubtless have been committed were it not for the supervision exercised by the police and the protection given to the persons and property of the new tenants. The annual cost of the police referred to in the Question amounts to about £1,436, no portion of which is charged to the district.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGES (GOVERNMENT GRANT).

SIR WILLIAM HOULDSWORTH (Manchester, N.W.): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether any Report has yet been received from the Commissioners appointed by him to visit the University Colleges which receive a Government grant; and (2), if so, whether there is any prospect of these colleges, or any of them, receiving an augmented grant in the next financial year?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: The answer to the first Question is, Yes. My hon. Friend will find an additional Grant of £9,500 in the Civil Service Estimates.

PARCELS POST (INLAND).

COLONEL MILWARD (Warwick, Stratford-upon-Avon): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, what is the average distance or the approximate average distance that parcels are conveyed by the Inland Parcels Post of Great Britain and Ireland?

MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General has no precise information as to the average distance over which inland parcels are conveyed. It has never been considered necessary to obtain this information, and it would involve much trouble and expense to do so.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA (S.E. ESSEX).

MAJOR RASCH (Essex, S.E.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether his attention has been called to the serious outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia at Purleigh, in South-east Essex; and whether he will consider the possibility of isolation instead of slaughter when there has only been a case of contact and not disease?

*THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. WALTER LONG, Liverpool, West Derby): I am, of course, aware of the unfortunate outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia to which my hon. and gallant Friend refers, but I regret that it is not possible for me to adopt the suggestion which he is good enough to make. Experience has amply shown that unless animals which have been exposed to infection are forthwith slaughtered there is no probability of the extirpation of the disease, and as a matter of fact one of the animals slaughtered at Purleigh was found to be affected with pleuro-pneumonia of long standing.

SIR JOHN LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether the cases of pleuro-pneumonia which have occurred in Essex originated in that county; if not, to what locality their origin has been traced; and whether similar measures will be taken to prevent the importation of disease from one part of the kingdom to another, as have been applied to Canadian cattle?

*MR. WALTER LONG: Inquiries are still proceeding as to the origin of the cases of pleuro-pneumonia to which the hon. Member refers. There is some ground for believing that the affected animals may have been brought over from Ireland, but although a considerable number of cattle have been slaughtered by the Irish authorities at the places from which they are said to have come, no case of disease has been discovered. The Board have full power to prevent the importation of disease from one part of the kingdom to another, but there is practically uniformity of administration in these matters throughout the United Kingdom, and there is no necessity for our taking any measures in this direction under existing conditions.

DEATH OF A POST OFFICE SERVANT.

MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.): : I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether the attention of the Post Office authorities has been called to the case of Miss Annie Jane Maxted, appointed six months ago as an assistant or clerk to the department, then pronounced healthy and strong, compelled as a condition to appointment to be re-vaccinated, suffered in consequence it is stated for six months, terminating in death on the 2nd instant; whether there is any authority by statute to enforce the above condition; whether it is ordered by the department assuming the power; and whether, while the recommendations of the Royal Commission are unconsidered by Parliament, the order will be continued?

MR. HANBURY: The attention of the Postmaster General has been called to the case of Miss Maxted, but the facts are not as represented by the hon. Member. Miss Maxted was not pronounced healthy and strong six months ago; on the contrary, the Medical Officer who examined her reported that she was not strong, and was suffering from an enlargement of the superficial cervical glands of the neck. The cause of her death is certified to have been Lymphadenoma (Hodgkin's disease), and as a secondary cause Dermato Melasma suprarenale (Addison's disease), and neither of these resulted from the re-vaccination. Re-vaccination as a condition of appointment in the Post Office is enforced, not by statute, but by Post Office Regulation. The Regulation has been in force since 1863, and, in view of the remarkable immunity from small pox enjoyed by Post Office servants under this Regulation, it is not proposed to alter it.

MR. CHANNING: I beg to give notice that in consequence of the reply of the Secretary to the Treasury I shall draw attention to this Question on the Estimates.

NAVAL PENSIONER (JOHN DEVINE).

MR. FLYNN: On behalf of the hon. Member for North Leitrim (Mr. PATRICK M'HUGH), I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty if he is aware that Naval Pensioner John Devine, of County Leitrim, is now an inmate in Sligo District Lunatic Asylum; is he aware that Devine, though discharged a physical and mental wreck, held the highest testimonials from his superior officers for honourable and efficient service; that he had been accustomed before his discharge to send his mother, Anne Devine, of Clonagh, County Leitrim, £2 per month out of his pay; and that the Governors of Sligo Asylum waived their claim against the pension of Devine, charging the amount so remitted on the local rates, and appealed to the Admiralty to pay the grant in aid without deducting it from the pension in order that the whole pension should go to Devine's mother, who has no other means of subsistence; is he aware that but for the generosity of the Asylum Governors, Mrs. Devine would now be an inmate of the local workhouse; and will he see that the pension of this man, who lost his mental and bodily health in Her Majesty's Service, is paid in full to his mother?

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. W. E. MACARTNEY, Antrim, S.): John Devine was discharged for general paralysis of the insane, constitutional, and not in any way due to his service in the Marines. The amount for which the Governors of the Sligo Asylum have waived their claim is £8 per annum. A deduction of £10 8s. a year from the man's pension is required to be made under the provisions of the Superannuation Act of 1887, on account of the Government contribution in aid of his maintenance. The full amount of the pension could, however, be paid to the mother on a certificate being furnished by the Governors of the Asylum that no claim for the Government grant will be made in this case.

NAVAL COLLEGE, DARTMOUTH.

SIR BARRINGTON SIMEON (Southampton): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether the land which was intended for the site of the Naval College at Dartmouth forms part of an estate in Chancery; whether the legal conditions render the exercise of their compulsory powers of purchase by the Admiralty undesirable; and, whether reconsideration will be given to the desirable sites which exist on the Southampton Water?

THE CIVIL LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN, Worcestershire, East): The answer to the first paragraph is in the affirmative, and the answer to the second in the negative. My hon. Friend will see, therefore, that there is no occasion for the Admiralty to reconsider their decision on the question of site.

JAMESON RAID
(PRESIDENT KRUGER'S CLAIM).

SIR ELLIS ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether President Kruger's claim for the raid is £1,000,000 in all, or £1,677,000?

MR. JAMES ROCHE: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he has yet received from the High Commissioner's representative at Cape Town the full details of the claim of the South African Republic in regard to the late raid; and, if so, will he communicate them to the House; and, whether the claim is specifically made against Her Majesty's Government, or against certain corporations and companies holding property in the Transvaal or elsewhere in South Africa?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): I have no information beyond the telegram which I read to the House on Thursday last, but I shall be happy to lay the claim on the Table when the documents reach me.

MARYBOROUGH GAOL
(JAMES FITZHARRIS).

MR. J. L. CAREW (Dublin, College Green): On behalf of the hon. Member for Dublin, St. Patrick (Mr. W. FIELD), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that James Fitzharris, a prisoner in Maryborough Gaol, is lying dangerously ill, and that the doctor has stated his condition to be critical; and, whether, seeing that the prisoner has been in penal servitude for 14 years and would be entitled under the prison rules to a revision of his sentence in 12 months more, and as the prisoner is over 70 years of age, will he advise the Lord Lieutenant to order his liberation?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: This convict is not dangerously ill, nor is it the fact that the doctor has at any time stated his condition to be critical. The convict's age, according to the prison records, is 57, not 70 years. It does not come within my province to advise the Lord Lieutenant to order the discharge of a convict, but, of course, it is open to the prisoner to memoralise the Lord Lieutenant on the subject in the usual way.

MR. CAREW: On behalf of the hon. Member for Dublin, St. Patrick (Mr. FIELD), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that Joseph Mullet, a prisoner in Maryborough Gaol, who was convicted in April 1883, has been suffering four years from weakness of lungs and chest; and, whether he will advise the Lord Lieutenant to order his liberation?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: It is the fact that convict Mullet has been suffering for several years from weakness of the lungs and chest, but his affection is not of an acute nature, and his health, on the whole, is better now than it was some years before his removal to Maryborough Prison. The observations I have made in reply to the latter part of the preceding Question apply equally to the suggestion at the end of this Question.

MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.): May I ask whether these are not two of the Phœnix Park murderers?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: One is, I believe.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: Will the right hon. Gentleman, following the example of the Home Office, allow an independent doctor to see these men and report upon their condition?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: If a memorial is sent by the prisoners their cases will be considered.

RAILWAY LEVEL CROSSING (TOTTENHAM).

*MR. J. HOWARD (Middlesex, Tottenham): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has seen the report of the inquest on Walter Calvert, who was killed on 3rd February last when passing over the level crossing at Park Station, Tottenham, and also the finding of the jury that the footbridge should be altered so that it could be reached from the platforms instead of from outside the station; whether he has received a Petition, numerously signed by residents in the neighbourhood, asking the assistance of the Board of Trade to insure the safety of the public; and what steps he proposes to take in the matter?

MR. RITCHIE: Yes, Sir; I have seen the report of the inquest, and also received the Petition referred to. I propose to communicate with the Company, and ask them whether they can alter the footbridge, so that it can be reached from the platforms; but the Board cannot make any order to that effect. I gather from the report of the inquest that the unfortunate man crossed the line, although there are notices in the station cautioning people not to do so.

BALLYSHANNON UNION (CLERK'S SALARY).

MR. KNOX: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Local Government Board have considered a proposed increase of £30 a year in the salary of the clerk to the Ballyshannon Union for keeping the keys of the waterworks; and whether, before sanctioning this increase, they will take into consideration the fact that there was no public notice before the clerk was appointed caretaker of the waterworks, the clerk undertaking the work without payment?

*MR. GERALD BALFOUR: A proposal has been made to allow a gratuity of £30 to the Clerk of the Union for his services in connection with the Waterworks since the year 1892, and this proposal is now receiving the consideration of the Local Government Board. There is no proposal before the Board to increase the Clerk's salary.

SCHOOLS OF SCIENCE AND ART (IRELAND).

MR. KNOX: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury (1) what was the actual expenditure in Ireland out of the Votes for the Department of Science and Art in 1893-4, 1894-5, and 1895-6, respectively; and (2) what was the actual expenditure in Ireland in the same years out of Sub-head D of that Vote (Schools of Science and Art)?

MR. HANBURY: This Question should properly have been addressed to my right hon. Friend the Vice President of the Council. In his absence, I may say that the answer to the first paragraph is £43,505, £45,837, and £46,109, and the answer to the second paragraph £8,194, £8,408, and £7,390.

EDUCATION FEE GRANT (IRELAND).

MR. KNOX: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, with reference to the correspondence at pages 386 to 389 of the Appropriation Accounts, what course the Treasury propose to take to settle the point of law raised by the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland as to the unexpended balance of the fee grant; and whether, to avoid such difficulties in future, the Irish fee grant will be voted for 1897-8, and subsequent years, as a grant in aid, in accordance with Section 18 of the Irish Education Act, 1892?

MR. HANBURY: If the hon. Member will read the Treasury letter which closed the correspondence, he will see that there is no point of law which requires to be settled. There is no need and no intention to change the present system.

MR. KNOX was understood to ask whether the Treasury received money from the National Education Department.

MR. HANBURY was understood to assent.

CABLE (CANADA TO AUSTRALIA).

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he is aware that it is stated, on the alleged authority of a member of the Pacific Cable Commission, that the cable from Canada to Australia would touch only at Fanning Island, Fiji, and Norfolk Island; whether he is in a position to state that this is the route recommended by the Commission; and whether he can approximately indicate the date on which he hopes to be able to lay the Report of the Commission upon the Table of the House?

Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I am unable to give any information as to the recommendations of the Committee, or to state when their Report will be published, for the reason which I gave in reply to a previous Question on the subject on the 28th of last month.

NATIONAL SCHOOLS (IRELAND).

Captain DONELAN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, whether he is aware that the present National School system in Ireland requires an average attendance of seventy pupils in order to secure the services of an assistant teacher; and whether, in view of the fact that this rule injures the efficiency of many schools, consideration will be given to the desirability of reducing the average number to sixty?

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I fear I cannot at present add anything to the replies which I gave to the Questions put to me on the 2nd and 4th inst. on this subject by the hon. Member for North Cork (Mr. J. C. Flynn).

MURDER ON LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. JAMES BAILEY (Newington, Walworth): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet considered the advisability, or otherwise, of offering a reward for any information that may lead to the arrest of the murderer of Miss Camp?

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: It has been the rule at the Home Office for many years not to offer rewards in these cases, and I have no reason to suppose that there is any ground for departing from this rule on the present occasion.

MILITARY WORKS BILL.

Mr. T. R. BUCHANAN (Aberdeenshire, E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War what amount of the money to be raised under the Military Works Bill is wanted for defraying costs of works already incurred since the 31st March 1896?

Mr. J. F. Hogan.

*The UNDER SECRETARY of STATE for WAR (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford): As far as can at present be estimated, about £86,000 will be required for work executed during this financial year.

POST OFFICE (KIRKCALDY).

Mr. J. H. DALZIEL (Kirkcaldy Burghs): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that the Town Council of Kirkcaldy have unanimously passed a resolution declaring that it is desirable that the site of the proposed new post office should be in High Street; and whether before any definite decision is made in the matter, due attention will be paid to this expression of local opinion?

Mr. HANBURY: The Postmaster General is aware that the Town Council of Kirkcaldy have passed a resolution declaring that it is desirable that the new Post Office for that town should be in the High Street, and he would be glad if their desire could be gratified. Full inquiry, however, has been made, and I regret to say that no suitable site in that street can be obtained at anything like the cost which the amount of the business would justify.

Mr. DALZIEL: I beg to give notice that I shall call attention to that matter on the Estimates.

SUPPLY (NAVY ESTIMATES).

Mr. DALZIEL: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty what is the cause of the delay in the issue of the Navy Estimates; and can he state when they will be in the hands of Members?

Mr. MACARTNEY: There has been no unusual delay in issuing the Navy Estimates. During the last ten years they have only been issued on two occasions in the month of February—on the 25th and 27th of that month. It is hoped that they will be in the hands of Members on Monday, March 1st.

Mr. DALZIEL: May I ask the hon. Gentleman whether it is not the established custom, if not absolutely the rule of the House, that Navy Estimates should be issued within ten days of the setting up of Supply?

Mr. MACARTNEY: No, Sir.

MR. DALZIEL: It is.

MR. MACARTNEY: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman refers to the circulation of the Navy Estimates.

POST OFFICE SORTERS.

SIR ALBERT ROLLIT (Islington, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, will he explain why some 50 youths, who in February and October of last year passed for sorterships in the Chief Post Office, have not yet received appointments; when such appointments are likely to be made; and whether they will bear date from the time of the entries of the candidates into the service?

MR. HANBURY: The 50 youths referred to have been employed temporarily since last autumn to meet the pressure of work in the General Post Office. Proposals will be submitted to the Treasury in a few days for making a permanent addition to the force employed in the General Post Office, and if those proposals are approved by the Treasury, the 50 persons referred to will, subject to the usual conditions, receive appointments dating from the time of their first employment on full duties.

BARRACKS ACT, 1890.

MR. BUCHANAN: I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office how much has been expended during the current financial year under the Barracks Act 1890, and what balance, if any, remains of the money authorised under that Act?

*THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham, S.): The approximate expenditure to date in the current year under the Barracks Act 1890, is £345,000, and the unexpended balance on the loan £798,000, but the whole of this balance has been allocated to definite services which have either been actually commenced or for which contracts have been authorised.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOL RATES (PUBLIC COMPANIES).

SIR JAMES FERGUSSON (Manchester, N.E.): I beg to ask the Attorney General whether Her Majesty's Government will bring in a Bill authorising the directors of public companies liable to be assessed for rates in any parish or district to pay Voluntary School rates levied therein, if it shall appear that the levy of a compulsory rate will be obviated thereby?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir RICHARD WEBSTER, Isle of Wight): In reply to the Question of my right hon. Friend, upon the information at present at my disposal, I do not think there is any necessity to bring in a Bill. Unless an express prohibition is contained in the Act of Parliament or other document constituting the company, the question of contribution to a voluntary rate is purely a matter for the discretion of the directors acting in the interests of the company, and if, as stated in the Question, it appeared that the levying of a compulsory rate which might create a heavier burden would be avoided by contribution to a voluntary rate, I see no reason why the directors should not, in the bonâ fide exercise of their discretion, contribute to a voluntary rate.

AGRICULTURAL RATES ACT, 1896.

MR. PICKERSGILL: I beg to ask the Attorney General whether, inasmuch as the copy of an amending Order making regulations under the Agricultural Rates Act 1896, which was laid upon the Table on the 5th instant, was not issued until the 18th instant, that is, three days after the time limited by section 6, sub-section 3, for objecting to the Order, there has been a substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute; and whether the Order is now binding in law?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL: I am of opinion that the statute has been complied with, and the Order referred to by the hon. and learned Member is now in force and binding. The condition of the statute is, that the Order shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament. This was done on February 5th, and the Votes and proceedings of both Houses record the fact. If, as I gather from the Question, there was some delay in the printing and distribution to the Members of the House, this does not invalidate the Order.

MR. PICKERSGILL said it appeared that, in the opinion of the learned Attorney General, there was no legal remedy. It was obvious, therefore, that it was necessary—[Ministerial cries of "Order!"]

*Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. and learned Member rising to a point of Order?

Mr. PICKERSGILL said that, to secure the rights of Members of the House, he wished to know, when Papers were presented pursuant to statute and ordered to be printed, who was responsible for seeing that the Papers were printed and circulated without delay?

*Mr. SPEAKER replied that the hon. and learned Member had the same means as himself of finding out what Department was responsible. It was a little difficult to say.

Mr. PICKERSGILL said the Local Government Board had repudiated responsibility.

*Sir C. DILKE said that as this had happened two years in succession would the Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board undertake that in future if the important Order referred to in the Question was interfered with by verbal or other amending Orders, he would call the attention of the House to the matter?

Mr. T. W. RUSSELL replied that he would consult the President of the Local Government Board on the point, but the Board had complied with the statute and were in no way responsible.

Sir W. HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.): I think everyone has suffered very much through the delay in printing Papers after they are laid on the Table of the House. Papers are laid on the Table and ordered to be printed, and then days, sometimes weeks, expire before they are in the hands of Members. May I ask whether in this House there is any authority to cause Papers which have been laid on the Table to be printed and circulated without delay?

*Mr. SPEAKER: Certainly papers which have been laid on the Table and ordered to be printed ought to be printed and circulated at the earliest possible moment. I will inquire into the matter, and if I find I have any authority I shall be ready to exercise it. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) asked whether there was not an Order of the House binding not only on the department concerned but on the officers of the House, to insure the speedy delivery of Papers that had been printed among Members of the House?

*Mr. SPEAKER: If any such Order of the kind is brought to my notice, I will consider its application.

FINANCIAL RELATIONS (GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND).

Mr. JOHN REDMOND (Waterford): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he is now in a position to fix the date for the Debate on the Financial Relations between Great Britain and Ireland; and, whether he can say how many days the Government are prepared to give for the Debate?

Mr. DILLON: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he is now in a position to fix a date for the Debate on the Report of the Commission on the Financial Relations between Great Britain and Ireland?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.): In answer to the hon. Gentleman, and also to the hon. Member for East Mayo, I have to say that, as the House is aware, the discussion on this important question of the financial relations between Great Britain and Ireland was deferred in deference to the general wish of hon. Members from Ireland. We shall begin the discussion, in Committee, of the Education Bill on Thursday next. I think it would be inconvenient that the Committee stage of the Bill should be interrupted by other business. As soon, however, as that stage is concluded, I shall be prepared to find time for the discussion of the financial relations.

Mr. J. REDMOND: Is the right hon. Gentleman not able to say anything more definite in regard to the first portion of the Question? I may point out in regard to the second portion of my Question that the right hon. Gentleman has given no answer at all.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: As regards the first part of the Question, the hon. Gentleman will see that it is impossible for me to forecast, I will not say with certainty, but with anything like confidence, the precise length of time which will be occupied in Committee on the Education Bill. I hope it will not be long, but that does not depend on the Government or on the supporters of the Government. As to the second paragraph of the Question, there is no desire on the part of the Government to unduly stint the discussion on the financial relations. We are prepared to give ample time, and I hope that pledge will not be abused by those hon. Gentlemen who desire to take part in the Debate.

MR. DILLON asked if the discussion would be taken the first week in March, when the Irish Land Bill would be introduced—the Wednesday to be free for the Irish Land Bill?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: It will be taken the second week in March, and I hope the Committee stage of the Education Bill will be finished by then.

MR. DILLON asked whether he correctly understood that, if the Committee stage of the Education Bill was not finished before March 10, the right hon. Gentleman proposed to take the Wednesday for the Irish Land Bill?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I shall have no choice in the matter.

MR. ARTHUR O'CONNOR asked whether the Government intended to proceed with the Committee Stage of the Education Bill de die in diem until it was finished?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Yes, Sir, with the exception of Friday.

MR. J. MORLEY (Montrose Burghs): May I ask whether the right hon. Gentleman would place on the Table as a Return the terms of the reference to the Commission on the financial relations? It would be convenient to have it before us in print.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I do not know whether it is usual to lay on the Table as a Return the terms of the reference to a Royal Commission, but I will see what I can do to comply with the wish of the right hon. Gentleman.

MR. J. REDMOND asked whether, in view of the strong opinion entertained against the appointment of the Commission on this subject, the right hon. Gentleman would not suspend any step in the direction of its appointment until after the Debate?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I think I gave a pledge in that direction before, but if I am wrong I am quite willing to state again that the Commission will not be appointed until after the Debate on the financial relations.

SUPPLY (SUPPLEMENTARY CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES).

MR. CHANNING: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury when the Supplementary Civil Service Estimates will be presented and issued to Members; whether they can be issued early in the week; and whether he will arrange to take them, as was done last year, before the Civil Service Estimates for the ensuing year 1897-8?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: The Estimates will be printed, or at all events all the Supplementary Estimates that will be taken next Friday will be printed on Wednesday. As the hon. Gentleman is aware, it does not depend on me but upon the Department that prepares the Supplementary Estimates as to what date they are laid before the House, but I trust that will be convenient.

MR. CHANNING; Which of the Supplementary Estimates will be taken on Friday? Will Class 4 be taken?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I believe that the only Supplementary Estimate—so my right hon. Friend the Secretary to the Treasury informs me—in regard to which there is any doubt about its being printed is one which has come in very late from the Irish Land Committee.

DISTRESS (BELMULLET UNION).

MR. D. CRILLY (Mayo, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he has seen in the Irish daily papers of Friday last, the report of the meeting held in Belmullet on the previous day, under the Chairmanship of the Right Rev. Monsignor Hewson, V.F., P.P., when that right rev. gentleman speaking with the authority of his high position affirmed that distress bordering on famine existed in the Belmullet Union; if he had noted that amongst other assertions made on the occasion by Monsignor Hewson, the following are in record in the report of his speech: (1) That the distress now existing threatened to be the most serious that the people had been in since 1860, and that it would probably not be exceeded by that of the winter of 1879, and the spring of 1880; (2) that the official sent down recently from the Local Government Board to inquire into the distress in the Belmullet Union never visited a single homestead or a single farm in the parish of Belmullet; (3) that from the end of November up to the present time the consumption of meal in the districts supplied by the traders of Belmullet had increased eighteen fold beyond the normal consumption in other years, proving as Monsignor Hewson held, that the potato crop had failed; (4) that the rates taken all round in the Belmullet Union amounted to nearly 10s. in the pound between poor rates and baroney cess; and whether in view of such assertions made by an ecclesiastic of Monsignor Hewson's position and authority, the Government will not now take immediate and exceptional measures to meet this distress in the Belmullet Union?

*Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The hon. Member who puts this Question was good enough to hand in at the Irish Office today a private notice of it; but time, of course, has not admitted of my obtaining a detailed report. I may, however, say that I have before me official reports made from sources other than the Local Government Board, which confirm the reports already made by that Board. From these reports it appears that there is no reason to anticipate general distress of a nature requiring the exceptional expedient of relief works, and it is expected that any cases of distress which may arise can be dealt with under the Poor Law system.

CRETE.

Sir ELLIS ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government will propose a Commission to inquire into the massacres recently perpetrated in Crete, and especially as to the fate of the Mussulman inhabitants of the interior of the island?

Mr. CURZON: Her Majesty's Government do not think that there would be any advantage in making such a proposal.

Mr. F. S. STEVENSON (Suffolk, Eye): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he is aware that Colonel Vassos, who is in command of the Greek troops in Crete, states among other things, in the course of his proclamation, that he has orders to keep the peace between Christian and Moslem inhabitants; and, whether, in view of the fact that the Powers are unable to keep up communication with or to keep order in the interior of the island, and that the Greek forces are in a position to do so, the Powers will consider the desirability of delegating to them that duty?

Mr. CURZON: The proclamation issued by Colonel Vassos promised among other things, peace to the inhabitants of Crete. So far, however, the presence of the Greek troops would seem to have had an opposite effect. Under these circumstances Her Majesty's Government consider it unlikely that the Powers would consider the desirability of delegating to the Greek forces any such duty as is spoken of in the Question.

Mr. STEVENSON: Does the right hon. Gentleman accept the statement in the second part of the Question that the Powers are unable to keep up communication with or keep order in the interior of the island?

Mr. CURZON: I think I have answered that Question every day during the last week. [" Hear, hear! "]

Sir JOHN COLOMB: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to what branch of the British Service does Major Bor belong; by whom was he appointed to organise the gendarmerie at Canea; and under whose directions does he act?

Mr. CURZON: Major Bor belongs to the Royal Marine Artillery. His appointment as Commander of the Cretan Gendarmerie was proposed with the approval of all parties in the Island, by the International Commissioners, but did not meet with the unanimous assent of the Powers. Pending the appointment of another officer, who should not be chosen from the subjects of any of the Great Powers, Major Bor was asked to undertake the duties of the post provisionally. He accepted and arrived on the 6th instant at Canea, where he acts under the direction of the Turkish authorities.

Sir E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: Can the right hon. Gentleman tell us what Power opposed Major Bor's appointment.

Mr. CURZON: I do not think there is any secret about it; in fact, I have stated it to the House. Major Bor's appointment was opposed by Russia.

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he is in a position to confirm or deny the statement that several Christians were roasted alive in a baker's oven during the recent disturbances in Canea?

MR. CURZON: Her Majesty's Consul reports, by telegraph, that on first hearing of the story that Christians had been roasted alive at Canea, he went with Mr. Alvarez, the British Delegate on the Judicial Commission, to the bakery where this outrage was alleged to have taken place. They carefully examined the ruins, but could find no trace of dead bodies inside or outside the oven. Four bakers' apprentices, who were said to have perished in another bakery, were subsequently found alive.

MR. JAMES BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.): I desire to ask the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs a question of which I have given him private notice. It is whether there is any truth in the statements in to-day's papers that the Cretan forces have been fired upon by the united fleets of the Powers, and whether a Turkish transport carrying troops has been escorted by a British torpedo boat from one part of the island to another?

MR. CURZON: Since I came into the House I have received private notice of quite a number of questions from hon. Members, nearly all of which relate to the same topic. Perhaps other hon. Members will allow me to reply to them at the same time. Our information is not to the effect that there has been any attack upon, or bombardment of, the Greek forces in Crete. The insurgents outside Canea, in spite of the injunctions of the Admirals who, under orders from their Governments, had made themselves responsible for the protection of Canea, renewed their attack upon the town from the south-east yesterday. Under these circumstances the international squadron had no choice but to prevent by force the advance from being continued—[Opposition cries of "Oh!" and Ministerial cheers]—which they accordingly did. [Opposition groans, several cries of "Shame," and renewed Ministerial cheers.] The firing lasted but a few minutes. As regards the Turkish transport, about which the right hon. Gentleman asked me, we have no information.

MR. HENRY LABOUCHERE (Northampton): I beg to ask leave to move the adjournment of the House.

*MR. SPEAKER: There is an hon. Member waiting to take his seat.

NEW MEMBER SWORN.

Henry Currie Leigh-Bennett, Esquire, for the County of Surrey (North Western of Chertsey Division).

NEW WRIT.

For the Borough of Halifax, v. William Rawson Shaw, Esquire, Manor of Northstead.

CRETE (ACTION OF BRITISH SHIPS).

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

MR. HENRY LABOUCHERE (Northampton), who was received with Opposition cheers, said: I beg to ask leave to move the Adjournment of the House on a matter of urgent public importance—namely, the firing on Greek forces in Crete by Her Majesty's ships. [Cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): There has been no firing on Greek forces. [Cheers and Opposition cries of "On Cretan forces!"]

MR. SPEAKER having read the Motion,

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said: On a point of Order, Sir, may I ask whether, as the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs has stated there has been no firing on Greek forces—[Opposition cries of "Cretan forces!" and an HON. MEMBER: "The House will decide that!"]—this Motion is in Order?

MR. LABOUCHERE: On a point of Order also, Mr. Speaker, I contend that the forces on whom the international ships fired were Greek forces. [Cheers.] The Cretans are Greeks, from my point of view; but I will change the word if you like.

*MR. SPEAKER: The Motion can be changed, no doubt, by using the words, "Cretan insurgents," or whatever the fact is—I do not know myself—but I do not think it is necessary to make the change as Cretans are, in one sense, Greek. [Cheers.] Is the hon. Gentleman supported by 40 Members?

The whole of the Members on the Opposition side of the House, including the occupants of the Front Bench, having risen in their places amid loud cheers,

Mr. LABOUCHERE, who was again greeted with cheers, moved "That this House do now adjourn." The hon. Member said that a few days ago the adjournment of the House was moved in order to call attention to what was going on in Crete, in regard to which many of them entertained the most profound distrust. [Cheers.] On that occasion they were told that no reply would be given to them. The Leader of the House told them that they must take very great care even when they merely asked for information from the Government, as the slightest mistake might lead to a great war in Europe. [Ministerial cheers.] He did not believe in this bugbear of a great European war. [Cheers.] They had information in the public newspapers that morning, which had been confirmed by the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, that the international fleet, with British ships in the front—[cheers]—had fired upon Greek forces—as he contended they were—but in any case they were Cretans fighting for their independence. [Cheers.] What was the explanation given to the House? Her Majesty's Government declared that the international forces had taken possession of three towns in Crete, and they protested that they only fired when they found that the Cretans would not recognise this occupation and tried to take those towns. But he would point out that the whole of Crete, with the exception of those three towns, was in the hands of the Cretans. [Cheers.] In those towns there were Turkish garrisons, and those garrisons, according to the newspapers, had frequently issued from the towns, waged war upon the insurgents, and had then fallen back on the towns. Was it surprising that the Cretans should wish to put an end to all this? [Cheers.] Upon what possible ground had the Government interfered by landing soldiers and marines to hold those towns, except for the benefit of Turkey? [Cheers.] Those towns would have been taken by the insurgents had not the Great Powers interfered, and now, not content with holding those towns, the English fleet had, to the horror of the English people, fired upon the insurgents and driven them back. It was time for the Liberal Party to speak out on this matter. [Loud cheers.] They were told that they were not to make this question of foreign affairs a Party question. [Ministerial cheers.] They made it a national question. [Cheers.] They believed that the people of England were determined that we ought not to interfere in any sort of way diplomatically, and still less by force of arms, in favour of the Turks in any part of the Turkish Empire, and yet that was what we were doing at the present moment. [Cheers.] He moved the adjournment of the House in order to give the Government the opportunity of explaining what was going on in Crete. But, so far as he was concerned, it was enough for him that the atrocious wickedness had been committed; and he would carry his Motion to a Division in order that, although they might be in a minority in the House, the country should clearly understand they should do their utmost to prevent any further action being taken on behalf of that miserable creature, that foul blot upon civilisation, the Sultan of Turkey. [Loud cheers.]

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! I must remind the hon. Gentleman that he is speaking of a friendly Sovereign; and it is one of the rules of the House to speak of a friendly Sovereign with the same decency of language as would be employed in speaking of a Member of this House or of the other House. [Ministerial cheers.]

Mr. LABOUCHERE: I beg pardon, Mr. Speaker. I am aware of that rule, but I was carried away by the thought of the statements which have been made by Mr. Gladstone and other eminent Liberals in regard to the Sultan. [Laughter and cheers, and Ministerial cries of "Oh!"] I beg to move my Motion.

Mr. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.), in seconding the Motion, said that when the question of Crete was raised a few days ago, on a Motion for the Adjournment of of the House, appeals were made by the Government to the House not to disturb the Concert of Europe, and to observe that reticence which foreign affairs deserved. In his humble judgment the House had been too silent on this question—[cheers]—and as a consequence they had this outrage—for it was regarded as an outrage by the great majority of the people of the kingdom—of the guns of her Majesty's fleet having been turned on men who, after centuries of oppression, were risking their lives in defence of everything a civilised people held dear, and were gallantly driving their oppressors, the Turks, before them. [Cheers.] For months they had been gulled by declarations as to the necessity of maintaining the Concert of Europe. But what had the Concert of Europe done—what had the mighty engines of the Great Powers which lay around the coast of Crete done to protect one man, woman, or child in Crete until their hands had been forced by the gallant Greek nation? [Cheers.] And were it not for the action of the Greeks, the fleets of the European Powers might still be hanging round the coast of Crete consulting and negotiating until the whole population of the island was murdered. [Cheers.] What was the situation in Crete? The House was told that the Powers of Europe had undertaken at the eleventh hour to maintain peace and order, and to protect the inhabitants of Crete; and in the same breath they were told that it was impossible for the Powers to communicate with the interior of the island. The fact was that the Powers of Europe would not solve this question or allow the Greeks to solve it. [Cheers.] He charged against the Government—no matter what evasive answers might be given in the House—that at the present moment the forces of England were ranged on the side of the Turks. [Cheers.] He was not surprised that the Speaker had intervened to protect the Sultan as a friendly Sovereign. Until to-day, when they read the disgraceful news in the papers, the people and the House of Commons were under the impression that the Government did not desire the Sultan to be considered as a friend of this country. [Cheers.] He was not only a friend, he was an ally. [Cheers.] The House was told that Turkish authority prevailed in Canea under the protection of the marines of the six Powers. Therefore at present the British forces were the allies of the Turks and the enemies of Greece and the Cretan people. The answer of the Under Secretary had been carefully worded to minimise the details of this bombardment; but would the Government contradict the details given by the Daily News correspondent at Canea?—

> "At 4.30 this afternoon signals were made to the Dryad, Harrier, and Revenge, and also to one Italian, one German, and one Russian ship to open fire on the Cretan position."

Who was the dictator or commander-in-chief to set Her Majesty's ships in motion in this way? [Cheers.]

> "This was done. The British ships fired some 40 shells, making with the others about 70 in all, at the village and round house which were held by the Cretans. The flag was soon hauled down. Cease fire was sounded after ten minutes. Thereupon the flag was again hoisted. The rocks round the position were crowded with Cretans. The Turks, encouraged by the fleet, now opened a lively fusilade, while the Cretans were carrying off their wounded."

The British would fire on the Cretan insurgents, but they would not silence the Turkish batteries. [Cheers.] This account ought to be contradicted by some member of the Government, or an apology ought to be made to the House. The Government had made a mockery of the House by the replies which had been given to questions. [Cheers.] It had long been asserted that everything was being done for peace and order in Crete, and the other day the Under Secretary stated that the late Vali had been appointed in accordance with the arrangement with the Powers, that no attempt had been made to interfere with his authority, and that Turkey had loyally carried out the agreement with the Powers. Now the Vali himself stated that from the moment he landed in Crete he never had any authority, and that messengers were sent from Constantinople warning the Turkish troops to take no orders from him and give him no support. It was an uncontested fact that the whole arrangement was a fraud and an imposture from the beginning. [Cheers.] The reply given to him to-day was most unsatisfactory. He asked whether it was true that during the burning of Canea some three weeks ago five Christians had been put into an oven and baked alive?

*MR. SPEAKER: I must remind the hon. Member that last week there was a discussion on the general policy of the Government in the matter of Crete, and it is a rule of the House that the same question cannot be twice debated in the same Session on a Motion for adjournment. The present Motion refers to the firing on Greek forces by British war vessels at Canea, and to that point the hon. Member must confine himself.

Mr. DILLON said his argument was that the Powers had shown themselves ineffective in protecting the life and property in Crete, that the Greeks were the right people to undertake the task, and that the Powers had no right to prevent the Greeks from restoring order. He should like to know whether that would be in order?

*Mr. SPEAKER: I cannot give a general direction to the hon. Member beforehand; but the question whether five people were baked in an oven is not relevant to the matter before the House. I must call the hon. Gentleman's attention to the words of the Motion, which relate to the firing on the Greek forces by Her Majesty's ships, and I trust he will confine himself to what bears upon that question.

Mr. DILLON said that he had received information which made him gravely doubt the answer given by the Under Secretary, and he hoped further inquiries would be made. He wished to know what was the international position as between the British forces and the Greek forces in Crete? Was England at war with Greece? [Cheers.] If not, what right had England to turn her ships' guns on the Greek forces? [Cheers.] Either England was at war with Greece or was acting as the policeman of the Sultan. Was she lending her forces to do the dirty—the infernal—work of the Sultan? [Cheers.] High and mighty politicians had delivered lectures on international obligations; and Greece had been taken to task by The Times and other authorities for breaches of those obligations. What, then, was the international position of England? [Cheers.] There were times and occasions where the motive and the cause justified breaches of the law, whether national or international. If Greece had acted wrongly, from the narrow standpoint of international law, she had done it under great provocation and in a good cause. [Cheers.] He had lately seen a letter from a lady in Athens wondering at the action of the British Government, and saying that if we had seen in the streets of our towns women and children refugees with noses and ears cut off, our blood would boil. [Cheers.] Greece had violated international law, if at all, in the cause of human freedom, and the generous sentiment of all mankind approved her. [Cheers]. England had equally violated international law; but it was done to maintain tyranny and to outrage the sentiment of the whole civilised world. [Cheers.]

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: The House will learn without surprise that I do not mean to imitate the violence of language—[cheers, cries of "Oh!" and "What about the guns?"]—which has characterised the Mover and Seconder of the Motion we are now discussing. I speak with too great a sense of the responsibility which devolves upon the Government and of the difficulties and dangers impending over Europe as a whole to allow, as far as I am concerned and as far as I can help it, this Debate to degenerate into a controversy between the two sides of the House. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member who opened the Debate, followed in this as in other matters by the Seconder, poured great contempt upon the very suggestion that the present condition of Europe was one which might well involve anxious considerations for all who care for the cause of peace—that if, either through error or misfortune, a spark really falls into the combustible material too widely spread, we may be on the verge of some great European catastrophe. [Cheers.] Those who deride such fears as illusory are surely blind themselves to facts of contemporaneous history. There have been in the history of Europe many periods when Europe was anxiously watching the ambitions of one great Power or another, not knowing whether such Power was not going for its own selfish purposes to precipitate warlike operations. Sir, there is absolute unanimity, there is an absolutely unanimous desire among every one of the Great Powers to avoid anything in the nature of war. [Cheers.] No ambition, no personal ambition, interferes or is likely to interfere with that desire. And yet when we find that the masters of these colossal armies are themselves moved with the deepest anxiety lest war should be declared, lest those embattled hosts should really be thrust one upon the other with results which nobody can contemplate without horror, surely it is not even for great international authorities like the hon. Gentleman who has just sat down—[Cheers and laughter, and counter cheers and cries of "No!"]

MR. DILLON: I did not pose as such. [Cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Or the hon. Member for Northampton, who preceded him, to say that such fears are illusory, the creations of a disturbed brain. [Cheers.]

MR. DILLON: I said nothing about international authorities. I said what nine-tenths of the people of this country feel. [Cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I hope that if the hon. Gentleman does me the honour to interrupt me again his interruption will be more relevant. I say that these fears to which I have given expression in this House, and which are entertained by every responsible Statesman in the North, in the South, in the East, in the West of Europe, are surely not to be brushed aside because the hon. Member for Northampton and the hon. Member for Mayo tell us they are illusory. [Cheers.] We are not concerned merely with the peace of Europe, although that is a consideration the gravity of which I should have thought could not have been exaggerated; we are also concerned, and I for one admit it, with the peace of Crete and with the future government of that island. The hon. Gentleman appears to hold the view that the action of the Greeks has been entirely in the direction—I am speaking now of the present condition of the island—of saving life and property, and that the action of the Powers has been wholly impotent to secure either of those great ends. Sir, there has been a sacrifice, a deplorable sacrifice, both of life and property in Crete, and I think if the hon. Gentleman will carefully and impartially consider who is most responsible for that loss and who has done most to obviate it, he will certainly not say that the international forces have been idle or ineffective, or that the actions of the Greek forces have been marked by success in these directions. [Cheers.] Let us always remember in dealing with this question of Crete that the population of Crete, although it may be a homogeneous population in point of race—I think it is so in race—is not homogeneous in point of religion, and that we have not merely to deal with a large number of those who are Christian by religion, but we have also to deal with a large minority who are Mahomedan by religion. Those who desire good government and security for life and property are bound to regard not less the security of Mahomedan life and property than that of Christian life and policy. Both are and both ought to be sacred to this House, and we ought to do all that we can, not only for one party alone, but for both. [Cheers.] Let me ask in the second place whether we are seriously to understand that this House is of opinion that when a town has been occupied by forces representative of the Great Powers, when the Great Powers have made themselves responsible for the peace and good order of such town, and when the town and the people are menaced by the operations of insurgents outside the walls, the Great Powers are to fold their arms and withdraw their ships. [Cheers.] Is that a policy which is seriously pressed upon the Government from any quarter of the House? Whatever our view may be of the proper future for Crete and of the action of the Greek Government, at all events these elementary propositions will be agreed to by both sides of the House—namely, that when the Great Powers have occupied and made themselves responsible for peace and security they ought not to tolerate from any outside force interference with the prerogative which they have taken on themselves. [Cheers.] I may say, in passing, that we have no information in any sense confirming the narrative the hon. Gentleman has given us of those transactions. I know nothing of the source from whence he derives his information.

MR. DILLON: From the Special Correspondent of the Daily News. [Cheers, and ironical cheers and laughter.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I have nothing to say against that gentleman, whose name I know nothing about. But I may say to the House that there is no information in the possession of Her Majesty's Government, and, therefore, there can be no information given to the House, which in any sense confirms what has fallen from the hon. Gentleman.

MR. DILLON: Will the right hon. Gentleman say whether the Government have received any information on the subject?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: No, we have no details. Having now briefly dealt with these two points of the European situation in the first place, imperilled, as we think, by these transactions, and of the condition of Crete and the action of the Great Powers resisting aggression upon towns under their immediate protection, I come now to what is, I believe, after all, at the bottom of the strong sentiments which I doubt not most genuinely animate hon. Gentlemen opposite—namely, the future condition of the island. Upon this subject the House will not think that I desire to keep anything from them when I say that we feel ourselves absolutely bound by the present conditions of international communications to speak with the utmost reserve upon this point. As I understand the matter, hon. Members opposite argue in this way. They say:—

> "Here are the Great Powers engaged in exacting from Turkey and trying to introduce into the island reforms which may look very well upon paper, but which, after all, are not so very much better than other reforms which have been extorted by the same influence from the same Power, and which may suffer the same fate as those previous reforms have done."

I think hon. Members opposite will admit that I have put their argument which is at the bottom of their feeling on this question fairly and in a manner which they will not desire to alter or, I hope, to add to. I can only say upon this point that Her Majesty's Government entirely feel the force of that argument. They recognise perfectly well—perfectly clearly, as clearly as any hon. Gentleman opposite can do—that to leave Crete in a condition, bless it with what paper reforms you like, in which it would rest with the Turkish Government to upset by its own will the good work which Europe has endeavoured to accomplish—to do that would fall far short of the international duties we have taken upon ourselves. [Cheers.] I do not think that I ought to say more upon the subject. The House will, I hope, appreciate the difficulties under which I speak. [Cheers.] And I hope that, although I am necessarily most reticent in the observations I have to make in regard to the future, the House will allow that the frank and clear statement of the difficulties which hon. Gentlemen opposite see in the future, and which we recognise as clearly as they do, may satisfy them that everything will be done which we can do to obviate dangers of which we ourselves are fully conscious. [Cheers.] With that declaration, which I trust may not be unsatisfactory, I hope that the House may consent to bring to an end as soon as may be a Debate which I can most conscientiously say will, in my judgment, serve neither the interests of Europe, nor the interests of Crete, nor—perhaps of no less importance—the interests of this country. [Cheers.] The task in which we are engaged is an anxious and difficult one. I hope the House will not make it more difficult by Debates animated, I believe, by honest, fervid feeling, by the expression of sentiments which I fully recognise not only exist strongly in this House, but are largely felt by gentleman of all opinions and all classes out of doors. [Cheers.] I believe that if they do not wholly trust our capacity they will at all events give us credit for good intentions —[cheers and cries of "No!"]—and for an earnest desire to do the best we can for the population of the island with a full consciousness of all the difficulties that have prevented reforms in the past, and an earnest desire to see that those difficulties shall not interfere with reforms in the future. [Cheers.]

*SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.), who rose amid cheers, said: I am quite sure that no man in this House will speak on this subject without a sense of responsibility; but this I do feel, that the time has come when the voice of England ought to be heard upon this question. [Cheers.] Upon a question involving the liberties of the Greek people the voice of England has always been the first and the leading voice. I think that it is just 70 years since the death of Canning. In those days the voice of England was heard in Europe, and with great effect, in the cause of Greece. The right hon. Gentleman has invited our silence and he has spoken of the combustible condition of things in the Greek waters. Yes, Sir, but it is because of the combustible condition of things there that we protest to-day against shells from English men-of-war—[cheers]—being exploded in the midst of that combustible material. The right hon. Gentleman has spoken sarcastically of the appeal of my hon. Friend the Member for

Mayo to the principles of international law. I am afraid I must also submit myself to his lash; I must ask, What is the international position which England claims to occupy to-day in Crete? ["Hear, hear!"] What is the position of things in Crete? Crete is a country nominally subject to Turkey. It is a part of the Turkish dominions. An insurrection has arisen in Turkish dominions. Why are you there? [Cheers.] What are you doing there? What is your object? Why, Sir, apparently your object is to assert and to maintain the dominion of Turkey against the insurgents. [Cheers.] What were those bombs fired from the British Fleet for? I suppose to put down the insurrection in Crete as against the Turks. The right hon. Gentleman has said that you have occupied these towns. Yes, but what have you occupied them for? [Cheers.] Why are you in those towns at all? For what purpose did you go to them? Well, the Greek forces have joined the insurrectionary forces in Crete. That, of course, is on their own responsibility. One country may join one side in an insurrection. The Greeks have joined the insurrectionary Cretans, and you have joined the Turks. [Loud cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: That is not correct. [Cheers.]

*SIR W. HARCOURT: But what is correct? [Cheers.] We know whom the Greeks have joined. Whom have you joined? [Cheers, and an HON. MEMBER: "Neither."] I want to get to the bottom of the situation internationally. What are you doing there, and what is the object at which you are aiming? [Cheers.] Now, there is another statement to which no answer has been made. A question has not been put, but I find this stated in the correspondence to-day, and I should like to know if it is true:—

> "The foreign admirals went to-day to Agioi Theodoroi, where Colonel Vassos' camp is situated. On their return they invited the commander of the Greek warship Navarchos Miaulis to call upon them, and informed him of their decision to attack the Greek troops with the four men-of-war anchored off Agioi Theodoroi if Colonel Vassos should advance into the interior."

This is in The Times correspondence of to-day, and we ought to have a statement as to whether or not it is true. It proceeds:—

> "The commander of the Navarchos Miaulis and the British Admiral then proceeded to the Greek headquarters and acquainted Colonel Vassos with the decision of the foreign commanders."

Is that true? Did the British Admiral make that communication to Colonel Vassos? And then, I ask, if that is so, What is your international situation? By what right and on what title and from what point of view are you taking sides in this insurrection? [Cheers.] That is an international question on which I am afraid the right hon. Gentleman would condemn me if I offered an opinion. But what we have a right to do is to ask Her Majesty's Government their opinion on this subject. [Cheers.] We are told that the Great Powers have taken this matter up. Well, Sir, but the Great Powers have been taking these matters up for a long time. [Cheers.] We have had the Concert of Europe in Armenia. What was told us with reference to the Concert of Europe in Armenia? That nothing could be done, and now we are waiting upon the Concert of Europe to determine upon the future of Crete, and meanwhile we are bombarding the insurgents. [Cheers and laughter.] That is not a condition of things which, in my opinion, ought to be allowed to continue. ["Hear, hear!"] If the Concert of Europe cannot come to a conclusion on the subject of the treatment of Crete, we ought not to take the part which unfortunately we seem to have been taking in these affairs for the last two days. ["Hear, hear!"] We have received a statement, and I am satisfied with that statement—it is understood that Lord Salisbury has sent a circular to the Powers to say that they should not interfere with Greece—and I should have thought interfered with Crete at all—until the Powers had come to a conclusion as to what was to be done in the future with Crete. If that is so, why are you bombarding in the meantime? [Cheers.] Why do the Powers not come to a conclusion in the matter. ["Hear, hear!"] I should like to know whether the Government adhere to that position —the sound position which is stated to have been taken up by Lord Salisbury in this matter. Why not adhere to that position—that they will take no part with reference to Greece, and that they will take no part in the Cretan insurrection, until a conclusion has been arrived at by the Powers as to the future treatment of Crete? ["Hear, hear!"] We are told that if we meddle in these matters there will be universal war. That argument has been used—I was going to say it has been abused—[cheers]—for some time. Whenever anything occurs, whether in Armenia, in Crete, or anywhere else, you say at once, "Do not say a word, or there will be universal war." But we are not going to make war. We want nothing. Why should war take place? ["Hear, hear!"] I do not understand what this universal war is to be. We are not going to fight anybody. Who is going to fight, and against whom? We ought to have some explanation of that. [Cheers.] Why, then, are we to be told, with reference to this Concert of Europe, which does nothing, that we are to hold our peace, and take part in nothing, because universal war will occur, and no explanation is given why a war should occur, or of what nature it will be? We ought to understand whether we are acting in this matter according to the old formula of that superannuated diplomacy which goes by the name of the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire? [Cheers.] Then we shall understand our position. It is one against which I shall protest. I rather gather from the right hon. Gentleman the hope that what the Government are proceeding to do is to detach Crete from Turkish rule. That is the only policy which, in my opinion, is worthy of an English Government—[cheers]—and I hope that the Government are pursuing that policy. If, as I had believed from the account given of the circular of Lord Salisbury, it were the fact that he was pressing that policy, that he was demanding and pressing upon the Powers to come to an understanding upon that subject, I can assure the Government that, as far as I am concerned, I should have given them my cordial support. [The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: "Hear, hear!"] I hope that is still their policy. I think the principle laid down by Lord Salisbury is a perfectly sound one, and I hope he will adhere to it, whatever else may be done by any other Power. [Cheers.] What is wanted is, that the Powers should come to a determination without delay on the question of emancipating Crete from Turkish rule. That is the point to which I think we ought to direct all our thoughts and energies—["hear, hear!"]—but in the meanwhile, until such a decision has been arrived at, and in order to precipitate such a decision, let us, for Heaven's sake, abstain from being the leading actor in putting down this insurrection—[cheers]—because we are presented to Europe and to Greece as the bombarding Power in this affair. Why is England, who is, I believe, the most desirous to bring this matter to a speedy and safe conclusion—why should we be put forward as the leading actors in this transaction? [Cheers.] I regret that very much, as on the policy of the Government generally in endeavouring to come to a settlement I am not disposed to oppose them, but rather to support them in what I understand to be their policy in demanding a settlement on the Cretan question before they interfere in any way with Greece. If that is their policy I am sure they will be supported. ["Hear, hear!"] But what shocks this House and gives great uneasiness and causes great condemnation outside this House is that, in the meanwhile, we should appear as the active opponents of the Greek cause by what we are doing, that we should be occupying these towns in Crete—for whom? Obviously for the Turk, who is nominally master of Crete. I confess I think this bombardment a most unfortunate event—an event which places England in a false position in the eyes of all the world. [Cheers.] My hon. Friend the Member for Northampton has made this Motion, as I understand it, as a protest against that transaction, and in order that, in the House of Commons, where we have an opportunity of expressing the voice of the people we represent, we may protest, until the emancipation of Crete is accomplished, against our being the foremost to take up arms, as it were, against a people who are fighting, and rightly fighting, for their own freedom. [Loud cheers.]

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) said that the right hon. Gentleman had made a most serious and dangerous proposal. The right hon. Gentleman's speech was an invitation—nay, a challenge—to the Government to break up the Concert of Europe. The conflict in Crete was a conflict between the Greeks on the one hand, and united Europe on the other.

[Opposition cries of "Oh!" and cheers.] Hon. Members had apparently forgotten that not six months ago the Powers of Europe, acting together, framed a new constitution for Crete. It was true that they did not know exactly what it was—[Opposition cheers]—but that constitution did exist, and the Powers had appointed their own Governor in the island, where he was ruler until he absconded the other day. It was contrary to fact to say that England was fighting with Greece. What had really occurred was that Greece had undertaken a piratical expedition. [Loud Opposition cries of "Oh!" and cheers.] Yes; for no allegation had been made against Turkey, and no demand had been made for reparation of an injury. It was, therefore, a piratical expedition. [Renewed cries of "Oh!"] But he did not understand the proceedings of the Powers. He could not comprehend why one day they should prohibit Greece from landing troops and munitions of war and permit her to do so on the next. [Opposition cheers.] It was not, however, correct to suggest, as the right hon. Gentleman had done, that England was fighting either against Christians or Greece. What England was doing was this—she was acting with the European Powers against a piratical expedition. Shots, however, had been fired, and practically England was at war at this moment. [Opposition cheers, and Mr. DILLON: "With whom?"] He did not quite know. [Laughter.] That was one of the things he wanted to know; but undoubtedly acts of war had been committed, and that was a matter upon which that House had a right to have all the information which the Government could give. He did not say that they had a right to information as to the negotiations of the Powers with respect to the future, but they ought to know the actual course of events of which the firing formed part. Crete was a region of mountains, with ravines running down to the seashore. Did the Government intend to occupy the seaport towns and to leave the Greek troops in occupation of the interior? Did they intend to allow the Greeks to continue to land troops, stores, and munitions of war in Crete, and did they intend to prevent the Turks from doing likewise? Although the constitution invented for Crete and surrounded with guarantees by the Powers had tumbled to pieces, the Government said that they would not do anything until they knew what the future was to be. He had no sympathy with this Motion for Adjournment, and he quite recognised the extreme gravity of the situation. At the same time, he could not forget that acts of war were being committed by British ships, and, in the circumstances, he held that they were entitled to have a plain statement from the Government of the plan by which they proposed to pacify the Island of Crete. ["Hear, hear!"]

SIR ROBERT REID (Dumfries Burghs) was glad that the hon. Member for King's Lynn had asked the Government for information. The position that they had been in during the whole of this Eastern crisis—for the last 18 months—had been most deplorable. The Government could not say that during that time any unpatriotic action had been taken by hon. Members on his side of the House. ["Hear, hear!"] But at that moment they did not know what the policy of the Government was either in regard to Armenia or in regard to Crete. ["Hear, hear!"] In the last 12 months they had heard the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs say at least 40 times that these questions were being carefully considered by the Powers. Nothing had come of the negotiations of the Powers; they had not availed to prevent the shedding of Christian blood; all that they had done was to bring into odium and public contempt the Concert of Europe. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member for King's Lynn said that there had been a piratical expedition on the part of Greece. Did not the hon. Member know that the essence of a piratical expedition was that it must be an expedition for which no Government made itself responsible? In the present instance the Hellenic Government had made itself responsible in circumstances reflecting the greatest honour upon it. [Cheers.] Let them consider for a moment what was the position of the Greeks. Their kinsmen, men of their own blood, were in an island some 60 miles from their own coast. These kinsmen of theirs had for the last 70 years been striving for freedom in various ways. They had fought for it repeatedly, and took part in the Greek war of independence, but were not allowed to share the fruits of victory.

They had been treated in a manner which could hardly bear recital, and what had they now at last risen for? It was to defend their wives and daughters against nameless outrages, to prevent their homes from being desolated and themselves from being slaughtered without pity by the same race that had perpetrated the atrocities in Armenia. Those were the reasons of the action of these men upon whom the guns of Her Majesty's ships had been firing. [Cheers.] The six Powers, afraid of one another, who had done nothing in Armenia, were content for some time to do nothing in connection with Crete. It was true that the six Powers did in August last succeed in getting a paper Constitution for Crete from the Turks, but that Constitution was only worth the paper it was written on—nothing more. These brave Powers never sent troops to Canea and the other towns of Crete when massacres were going on, but they interfered as soon as the Greeks landed. He should think that the Greeks had come to the conclusion that the Concert of Europe was contemptible; at any rate they were not afraid to risk shedding their blood in support of men of their own race, men belonging to the most famous race in Europe, who saved civilisation against Oriental attack 2,300 years ago. [Cheers.] Every gallant man must desire that the legitimate aspiration for amalgamation on the part of Greece and Crete should be fulfilled, whenever its fulfilment should be possible consistently with European peace and order. ["Hear, hear!"] The Opposition had not been unreasonable in their conduct. Last autumn it was pointed out with much force by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in a speech which had a great effect upon the agitation then begun, that we could not operate effectually in a military or naval sense to assist the Armenians, and immediately it was seen that further agitation would draw the country into danger without doing real good to the wretched Armenians the Opposition suppressed—perhaps too much—["hear, hear!"]—the feelings with which they were inspired. But then we did not take the part of the Turks. What was being done now was something quite different, and the participation of our ships in the matter was an indelible disgrace to the British Government. ["Hear, hear!"]

Sir Robert Reid.

Their ships had fired upon poor, wretched people who had risen for no other purpose than to defend their homes, their wives, and children. [Cheers.] Those were the people upon whom the Government had fired, and it was an unworthy act and an unmanly duty to impose on British seamen. [Cheers.] He deeply regretted it, and he feared that it would result in the degradation of the great name and fame of this country in the eyes of Europe and of the people of the East. The First Lord of the Treasury had suggested,—

> "Here are we entering upon three towns; is it to be tolerated that the insurgents shall come in and fire on towns where our flag is flying?"

But was it the case that the Government were allowing the Turks to fire from within those ramparts on the insurgents? [Cheers.] It could not be denied that the Turks were doing this. What was the position? It was that we, the British Power, by means of our Navy and Marines, were holding these three towns and allowing the Turks to sally out and fire on the insurgents when the latter approached to return the fire—which he hoped they would always continue to do. [Cheers.] No one would satisfy the average Englishman, Scotchman, or Irishman that this was a worthy or a respectable thing for a great Power like this to do. The Leader of the Opposition had spoken in a manner which must have attracted the attention and the respect of the House. The right hon. Gentleman had stated that it was our duty to have remained neutral, at all events until after the future of Crete had been settled, and not to take any aggressive action against Greece until that time had arrived. He understood that his right hon. Friend was limiting his observations to the point which was necessary to raise for the moment. For his own part, however, he declared that, whether arrangements were made or not, if at any time in respect of this matter the British Government was found attacking Greece, whether before or after any such arrangement, he for one—and he believed there were a great many other hon. Members—would object in the strongest possible way. [Cheers.] If we could not be saviours, let us not be executioners. [Cheers.] What the terror might be that seemed to haunt the right hon. Gentleman and the Government he could not say, nor did he deny the great responsibility of his position or seek to ignore the difficulties of the position; yet, in spite of the right hon. Gentleman's assurance that all the Powers were most anxious to avoid war, somehow we might find ourselves embarked in a war. He accepted the statement of fact, and did not seek to question it; but it was a very curious situation. At all events, this was clear—that the peace of Europe would not be improved by taking up the position of firing on the insurgents in Crete; that could do nothing to improve the prospects of peace. [Cheers.] It seemed to be a most strange thing that there were no materials, no details, in the hands of the Government, although the incidents took place on Saturday.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. G. J. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover Square): They took place yesterday.

SIR ROBERT REID said if this was the case they must put up with the want of information.

MR. DILLON: How did the Daily News know about it?

SIR ROBERT REID said at any rate this fact was true, that under some orders—they did not know what—British ships had fired on these unhappy insurgents, whose cause was as sacred, as honourable, as that which any men had ever risen to defend by arms. [Cheers.] He expressed his deep regret that not a word had been said to show regret for this action, which he thought would have far-reaching consequences, not only in respect of the Government themselves, but because it would leave a lasting stain on the reputation of this country. [Cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY: I do not suppose that it is the intention of right hon. and hon. Gentlemen opposite first to misrepresent what has taken place and then to express their indignation about it. We have a few particulars, and I can place before the House real facts as to what took place. The incident is, of course, to be regretted—[ironical laughter]—everyone must regret that an incident of this kind should have been necessary. But the fact was that time after time the insurgents had been warned that they were not to advance to such a point where their guns would command the town. In that town there would be various detachments of the allied Powers, and if the insurgents placed their guns where they intended to place them they would have been in command of the spots where the allied forces had been placed. In these circumstances, day after day a council of Admirals urged the insurgents and Colonel Vassos not to advance beyond certain points. They showed as much patience and forbearance as it was their duty to show in such circumstances, because it was admitted that the great object should be to prevent a shot from being fired. Notwithstanding all the remonstrances, or possibly in order to force the situation, the insurgents disregarded what had been done by the allied commanders and took up those positions which would have commanded the town. The right hon. Gentleman says that we attempted to put down the insurrection. I say it is a ridiculous exaggeration. [Cheers.] It is not a misrepresentation, and there was no object—

*SIR W. HARCOURT: Will the right hon. Gentleman kindly answer my question upon this dispatch, wherein it is stated that the incident took place, not yesterday, but on Saturday? [The right hon. Gentleman again read the telegram in The Times, dated Canea, Feb. 20, as already given.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY: I am perfectly prepared to say that the word "interior" must be an entire mistake. There is not an indication in a telegram received from Canea that that was the policy or the act of any single Admiral. I see now what the right hon. Gentleman feared was that Colonel Vassos was attacked in order that he might not take some steps into the interior. That is an entire mistake. The Admirals represented that the situation in the town of Canea was getting more dangerous day after day; and it was in consequence of the advance of the insurgents on Canea, and on account of that alone, that they were obliged to take this action, which all regret, though deemed to be necessary not only for the defence of Canea but for the defence of the detachments in that place. That is the explanation of the incident so far as we have information on the subject. In reply to what was said by the hon. and learned Gentleman, that we have not attempted to save a drop of Christian blood—["hear, hear!"]— I have to say that he has not read the dispatches, and he has not read the newspapers. [Cheers.]

SIR ROBERT REID: What I said was that they had not succeeded in saving it.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY: Then you have not read the dispatches. [Several HON. MEMBERS: "Where are they?"] I will tell you. Hon. Members have said that there is no Party purpose in all this. [Ministerial laughter and cheers.] Why, then, these exaggerations; why are you telling the public outside who have not access to the documents and to the same information—

SIR ROBERT REID: I say it is true. [Cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY: I say not only that it is false—[cheers]—but that not even the enthusiasm of the hon. Member justifies the gross carelessness that can alone— ["Oh, oh!" cries of "Withdraw," and cheers.]

*SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT: The right hon. Gentleman speaks of dispatches; where are the dispatches? [Cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY: The right hon. Gentleman, with all his Parliamentary resource, is not going to save the hon. Member. [Opposition cries of "Where are the dispatches?" and uproar.] The right hon. Gentleman quoted a dispatch which he had seen in a newspaper this morning. [Opposition cries of "No, no," and "Yes, he did" from the Ministerial Benches.] I will state the whole information and what is known by everyone who has studied this question. ["Oh, oh!"] I am not anxious merely to defend the Government, but I am anxious that false statements which might reflect on the general policy of this country should not be allowed to circulate. I say that we have assisted the Christians in many parts of Crete, that many a Christian woman and child is saved now that would not have been saved. ["Oh, oh!" and cheers.] Hon. Members may accept it from me that this is so. We have conveyed, we have watched the embarkation of Christians from various Mussulman towns, we have assisted to get them off, we have assisted to feed them, and we have done all we could in order to protect Christian life. [Cheers.] When the Consuls have telegraphed that Christians were in danger in any one of these towns we have immediately sent a ship there in order to overawe the Mussulmans and to protect life. Why are we there? We are at those places where the Mussulmans are in the majority, and where the Christians are in the minority, and our presence gave security to both. We have been absolutely neutral as between Christian and Mussulman; we have been anxious to save the lives of each equally. I have shown what the truth is in regard to the firing on the insurgents. I have shown that it is not true, that it is absolutely false, that it was for the protection of the Mussulmans or Mahomedans that we have been acting. We have sent ship after ship, we have increased our forces there, not to put down the insurgents, but in order to have ships at those points where disorders were likely to take place, and in order to assist in keeping order. And let me further remind the House with regard to the charge brought against us that we have been favourable to Turkey in this matter. The fact is that pressure was put on the Turkish Government not to send troops to Crete. We made them diminish their garrisons there, we did all we could to prevent this lamentable outbreak between the Mahomedans and the Christians, who, after all, are both Cretans. It is not only the Christians who are Cretans, but the Mussulman and Mahomedan population of the island also. We have done our best to keep an even scale between the two sections, and we shall continue to do our best to see whether after all, notwithstanding all these deplorable incidents, we shall not be able to say that the intervention of the Concert of Europe has been to the advantage of Crete and to the inhabitants thereof, whether Mussulman or Christian.

SIR ROBERT REID: May I say one word of personal explanation? I deeply regret that I should have been the subject or the occasion of any heat on the part of the right hon. Gentleman. I think those who heard what I said, and what I think I said, will never suppose I intended to impute to the Government that they did not attempt or desire to rescue Christians. Of course they attempted and desired to rescue Christians. All I meant to say, and all I think I said, was that they had not succeeded, and in my humble opinion, in regard to Armenia, which is I think what I was speaking about, that statement is absolutely true. I have always refrained from making personal attacks, and I regret that, for some reason best known to himself—["Oh!" from the Ministerialists]—the hon. Gentleman should have attacked me.

MR. VESEY KNOX (Londonderry) said that, according to the published reports for three or four days past, under the shelter of the ships of the Powers and the protection of British bluejackets and marines, the Turks had been making sorties and attacking the Cretans in the villages. If our troops were doing police duty in Crete why did not they do police duty upon every disturber of the peace, whether he were Mohammedan or Christian? The First Lord of the Admiralty had said, warnings had been given to the Greeks and to the Cretans that they were not to advance nearer to Canea, but all the time the Turkish troops were allowed to issue forth from under the ramparts of Canea and attack the Cretans. Was it not human nature in these instances that the Cretans should attempt to stop these sorties? A telegram had just arrived in the House stating that neither the French nor the Italian vessels fired a single shot last Sunday afternoon. [Cheers.] Was that true or not? ["Hear, hear!"] Was it a fact that the whole shame, the whole disgrace of that Christian Sunday afternoon's work—["hear, hear!"]—rested upon Germany, England, and Austria? Was it true that the only two other free countries in Europe refused to take their part in that butchery of Christians. If that were so, it infinitely deepened the shame that rested upon the British Government and the Britsh nation. Another part of the right hon. Gentleman's statement required explanation. He told them that for several days past the British and other Admirals had been warning the Greeks and Cretans not to attack Canea. He presumed those orders were reported home, and that the right hon. Gentlemen knew those threats were being made. Therefore, it was clear the blame for what had happened was not the blame of the Admiral but the blame of the Government at home. When the Government, a few days ago, asked for the confidence of the House and refused to give to the House the plain facts as to what were the orders given to the Admirals, those were the orders given. [Cheers.] It was butchery—butchery of Christians, done to order by the Government of Great Britain. [Renewed cheers.] Those were the plain facts, and the man who was directly responsible for the action of the ships was not the sailor in command, but the First Lord of the Admiralty at home. ["Hear, hear!"] Again, he asked how was it we showed such zeal in butchery? The others were content with one vessel apiece. Two of them did not even fire a shot from their single vessels, but we fired more shots than the rest of the vessels put together. If we wanted to preserve the Concert of Europe one would have thought that we should have had more respect for the other nations than to outdo them. But the zeal for the Concert of Europe was a secondary matter; we wished to show the great naval strength of Great Britain, and so we were entitled before the world to this latest exhibition of our maritime supremacy. The people of this country had been taxed over and over again the last few years to increase the Navy. Did they suppose that this was the sort of purpose to which British ships and British men were to be put? The event of that Sunday afternoon would not soon be forgotten by the great mass of God-fearing people of this country. ["Hear, hear!"] The Government had used its power to attack Christians, and they said they protected Christians; but when, in the course of protecting Christians had they ever shot a Turk? [Cheers.] Let the Government name a case. There had not been a case in all the disputes in Crete in which they had fired a single shot to defend the Christians against the Mussulmans, but they had seized the first available opportunity to attack the Christians in defence of the Turks at Canea—not to protect helpless Turks, but to protect Turks in the possession of arms who had been engaged in sorties upon the Christians, and who were now our allies in operations of war against the Christians on the heights surrounding the town, and who had used the sheltering power of our batteries in order to fire on wounded Cretans as they were being taken away from the field. Those were the plain facts of the story, and under the circumstances it was the duty of every man in the House who had any feeling for the fame of England, and of Ireland, and of Scotland, who were thus dragged at England's heels—it was the duty of every man in the House who had any resepct for the power of Christendom, to give a vote in favour of the Motion as a protest against the bloodguiltiness of Her Majesty's Government. [Cheers.]

SIR ELLIS ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall) said that the whole basis of the case presented to the House by the hon. and learned Member for Dumfries Burghs (Sir R. Reid) consisted of the most absolute misstatement of the facts. [Laughter.] What were the facts with regard to the present movement in Crete? It was by no means clear that the Cretan insurgents themselves, or the bulk of them, at any rate, wanted the intervention of Greece. But the action of Greece had forced the position in Crete, and had forced the hands of the Powers. It was by no means clear that the arrival of an armed Greek force was desired by the Cretan Christians. They desired autonomy, equal laws, and a Christian Governor, and those concessions had been made. The only excuse which could be given for the action of the Greeks was that there was a serious condition of anarchy in the island at the time of the intervention. The statement that since August last there had been massacres of Christians by Mussulmans in Crete was absolutely false. [Opposition laughter.] There was not a shred of evidence in support of it. The truth was that at this moment the persecuted, the outraged, and the massacred in Crete were the Mussulmans and not the Christians. [Opposition laughter and "Hear, hear!"] That was the simple truth, and if a European Commission was appointed to investigate into the facts, what he said would be absolutely confirmed. The only correspondent on the spot, the correspondent of The Times, gave evidence, not on hearsay, but quoted from Italian, Russian and French officers who had seen those cases of massacre of Mussulmans, men, women and children. In August last the Turkish Government gave way completely to the demands of the Powers, and granted to Crete an entirely new Constitution, which was gratefully accepted by both sections of the population.

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Gentleman is going outside the question before the House. I am quite aware there has been considerable latitude in this discussion, but I think the remarks of hon. Gentlemen are too remote from the Motion.

Mr. Vesey Knox.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT said he was answering the hon. Gentleman who had stated that the new Constitution for Crete had been rendered null and void by the Turkish Government. That was another absolutely false statement. A large portion of the new Constitution had been put into force and was in operation. What was the result? The moment there appeared to be a chance of a settlement being made and tranquillity restored to the island, the Greek secret societies sent emissaries to Crete and poured 20,000 stands of arms into the island. It was in consequence of this that the Austrian Government last November proposed the blockade of the Piræus.

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Gentleman will not be in order in pursuing that line of argument.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT said he must, therefore, confine himself to the statement that not a single fact had been advanced in the Debate in support of the allegation that there had been massacres of Christians by Mussulmans and to justify the intervention of Greece. It was of the utmost importance to the Christians throughout the Ottoman Empire that justice should be done to the Mussulmans in Crete. ["Hear, hear!"] There had been no attack on the insurgents in the island; it was the insurgents who had attacked Canea. [Laughter.] That town was crammed with defenceless Mussulman women and children, and the only protection they had from the insurgents was that afforded by the forces of the Powers. If the truth were only known in this country, the sympathy of that large section of the people which hon. Gentlemen opposite boasted that they had with them would disappear. He hoped the Government would not allow the so-called facts of hon. Members opposite to be poured upon the country without definite contradiction. The Government knew that the provocation came from the Christians, and they ought not to hesitate to lay the whole truth of the case before the country, so that the people might have before them both sides of the question. ["Hear, hear!"] After all, there were 70,000 Mussulmans in Crete, and they had as much right to live and to protection as the Christian population. Since the reduction of the Turkish garrisons the Cretan Mussulmans had been at the mercy of the Cretan Christians, except in two or three towns, and the Powers were bound to protect these Mussulmans, between whom and outrage and wholesale butchery there now only stood the Marines of the allied Powers. For the reasons he had given he should earnestly vote against the Motion. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.) said the First Lord of the Treasury and the First Lord of the Admiralty had evaded the real facts which led to the firing by the ships on Sunday. The correct version was to be found in the official dispatch of Colonel Vassos, the Greek commander, who said:—

> "On receipt of intelligence that the Canea garrison was marching against the Christians, I sent a company of volunteers to co-operate against the 1,500 troops of the Canea garrison."

That was the origin of the operations which occurred on Saturday and Sunday. It was perfectly obvious that the statements of the First Lord of the Treasury as to the threats of the Greek commander upon the towns occupied by the allied forces, and of the First Lord of the Admiralty that the insurgents were advancing their guns to a position from which they could command the interior of Canea, were absolutely inconsistent with what had actually occurred. The facts were as given in the dispatch of Colonel Vassos, and the Government had deliberately run away from them. It had been ascertained that the act of war by the British ships was committed in obedience to some orders, and before the Debate was closed the House must insist on knowing by whom those orders were given. [Cheers.] They had the clearest proof that the advance of the Cretans was solely and entirely due to an attack begun by the Turkish troops—that the Turkish troops were allowed to go out from their fortresses under protection of the guns of the British Fleet and commit marauding outrages against the insurgents, and when the insurgents retaliated and defeated the Turks, then the British Admiral ordered his men to fire upon the Cretans and commit this terrible act of war. ["Hear, hear!"] They had a right to say that the Government should deal with the facts and not indulge in such vague generalities as those which the First Lord of the Treasury and the First Lord of the Admiralty had endeavoured to use as soporifics to the common sense of that House and of the country. [Opposition cheers and Ministerial laughter.] There had been a gross, wicked, and tyrannical interference with the position of these insurgents by the British Fleet under the orders of the British Government—["hear, hear!"]—and they should insist on having the fullest explanation of how this came about. They had a right to know what this act of war was to be followed by. Was this policy of turning loose the strongest weapons of naval warfare in the world to mow down these poor Cretans to be followed by the blockading of the Piræus, and an interference on the part of this country with the splendid attempt of the Greeks to obtain their liberty?

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK (London University) said the accusation made by his hon. and learned Friend the Member for Dumfries of a stain being cast on the British name was one which ought not lightly to be made in that House. ["Hear, hear!"] His hon. and learned Friend had told them that he made no personal attack upon any Member of the Government, but if he were not attacking the First Lord of the Admiralty, who was he attacking? [Cheers.] Was he attacking the British Admiral? He believed hon. Members opposite would agree that it was not right for any hon. Member to get up and in the House attack their Admirals abroad unless they had the clearest evidence that they had done something which they ought not to have done. [Cheers.] He did not rise to continue this discussion, but rather to express a very earnest hope that it might be allowed to come to an end. [Ministerial cheers and Opposition cries of "Oh!"] He believed there was not really any great or very important difference between the two sides of the House as to what they wished at the present moment. He believed they would all agree that this was a most critical moment for Europe as a whole. ["Hear, hear!"] They were standing upon a powder barrel, and if it once went off there might be terrible results to the whole of Europe. If, when the whole circumstances came to light, it was claimed that Her Majesty's Government had done anything contrary to the policy of this country, he should make no complaint of any attack upon them. He gladly recognised that up to the present time, in these difficult circumstances, the Leaders of the Opposition had adopted a wise and patriotic policy. ["Hear, hear!"] He spoke with a deep sense of the gravity of the situation, and of the importance to all of them throughout Europe of maintaining the Concert of Europe and of friendly and harmonious action between the Great Powers. Was that likely to be assisted by such language as they had heard that afternoon from some hon. Gentlemen opposite? [Cheers.] It would be in accordance with the traditions of English policy and of the House of Commons that they should, while negotiations were going on, give their support to the Government and leave to them the responsibility. ["Hear, hear!"] Discussions in that House at the present moment were, he maintained, dangerous, and he hoped the House would not imperil that peace which they all had at heart by continuing a discussion which could do no good and which might do incalculable harm. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. PHILIP STANHOPE (Burnley) asked for distinct and decided declarations from Her Majesty's Government on two points. They had heard in the course of that Debate reference made to the circular of Lord Salisbury in which he declared, on the part of England, that he would not be a party to the employment of force against the Cretans unless there was a distinct understanding as to the future government of the Island of Crete. They had had no explanation whatever as to the tenor of that circular. Had Lord Salisbury, in the name of England, declared—what he thought every Englishman felt he ought to declare—that the future government of Crete assented to by Great Britain should in no sense whatever be connected with the Turkish Empire? ["Hear, hear!"] Unless he had made that declaration, then the sooner he and England withdrew from the Concert of Europe the better it would be for the liberties of the Cretans. ["Hear, hear!"] If he had made that declaration, then, he asked, why was the incident of yesterday permitted by Her Majesty's Government? [Cheers.] He had the highest opinion, as they all had, not only of the valour of the Admirals commanding their Fleet, but of their good sense and prudence. But the Admirals in this case were merely the instruments of the Government. [Cheers.] It was not the Admirals they were attacking, but the Gentlemen who were sitting on that Front Bench opposite, and who by their silence—not what he would call a wise and patriotic reticence, but a shamed and humiliated reticence—showed that they were unable to explain the incident which had cast a stain on the name of England. ["Hear, hear!"] The other point on which he wished for a declaration from the Government was this—whether they were to understand that the Great Powers of Europe now occupied the four towns in Crete for the purpose of maintaining order. If that were so, he asked that the Government should make a distinct declaration that from those towns no Turkish garrison or troops should be allowed to make sorties. ["Hear, hear!"] Unless they took that responsibility upon themselves, what was the need of the presence of the allied forces in those towns? They were there to maintain order, and surely the first step towards that end was to see that the Turkish soldiers in those towns were kept in proper check and control. He believed that when the country became aware of the lame and lamentable explanation which had been offered by the Government they would say that if the Concert of Europe was to be maintained by means like this, the sooner they of Great Britain had done with it the better. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. STUART-WORTLEY (Sheffield, Hallam) said he should like to know whether the main and initial fact was not this—that the British Government, allied with the Powers, had practically prevented the Sultan from suppressing the insurrection in Crete, and had not thus rendered to the Cretan population service infinitely greater than any that would have been rendered if they had abstained from intervening between the contending parties? ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member who had just spoken said we had made ourselves responsible for preventing sorties from the Turkish garrison.

MR. STANHOPE: That they ought to have been prevented.

MR. STUART-WORTLEY said if we made ourselves responsible for that, we must go further, and prevent attacks on the garrison. It was generally supposed, and was a matter of history, that a garrison with an enemy outside made sorties to repel attack. This was not all the protection afforded to the insurgents, for had we not, by our occupation of the island, prevented the garrisons being reinforced, as otherwise they surely would have been by large bodies of troops from Constantinople? ["Hear, hear!"] He hoped the House would pause well before condemning what had been done on this occasion, and he could not admit the alternative policy that had been offered to that of Her Majesty's Government, an alternative policy which would mean, if it meant anything, that we should abstain from all interference, and leave Turkey to suppress this insurrection according to her known and ordinary methods, by fire and sword, and by practices that to every civilised nation were infinitely worse even than fire and sword. ["Hear!"] He could not congratulate Members of the Opposition when, with singular ineptitude, they had no better alternative to offer. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. EDWARD MORTON (Devonport) desired some definite information upon points as to which the House had only had assertions. Three assertions had been made on reports in newspapers whose correspondents had on other occasions been found to be right on matters of fact when Government statements were found to be wrong. The first of these was that a force of the Powers in the town of Canea had protected the Turks in making a sortie against the insurgents, who had not attacked them. The second was that the Powers had forced the insurgents out of a position which they had been allowed to maintain for four days previously. The third assertion made, to which a partial denial had been given, was that the Powers caused information to be conveyed to the commander of the Greek force that he would be opposed by force if he endeavoured to go into the interior of the island. Further, he asked the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs if he could give any information as to the allegation that a British gunboat had brought under the control of British ships a Greek vessel carrying supplies for the Greek troops in Crete? The answer of the First Lord of the Treasury was similar to that given by Mr. Disraeli in the summer of 1876 when asked questions—that official dispatches did not contain the information. The First Lord of the Admiralty was the first to introduce party heat into the Debate—["oh, oh!"]—with a number of vehement assertions for which neither he nor his colleagues had given a particle of evidence. Twenty years ago there was a very similar position, and Mr. Disraeli gave denials of statements because they were not in official reports. One thing came to his mind in connection with the present situation. Only last year, at the Lord Mayor's banquet, Lord Salisbury, making excuses for the helplessness of the Powers in dealing with the Armenian question, said:—

> "We at least possess no Army big enough to attack Turkey, and our Navy cannot sail across the mountains of Armenia."

Here was a case where the Navy could and did sail to the seat of operations, and what did they find? Instead of making war on the accursed savages who massacred Christians whenever they could, they found that the British guns were turned against the Christians Lord Salisbury pretended he wanted to protect. ["Hear!"] One thing the Government could tell them—if not facts upon official information, they could state their intentions. It was a significant fact that the principal ships that fired, following the lead of the British ships, yesterday, were German ships. The French ships did not fire, the Italian ships did not fire; they were German ships that took part with British ships in the bombardment. He asked, Were the Government veering round to the views of the Emperor of Germany? Were they, by protecting the Turks in making sorties on the Christian insurgents, in bombarding the insurgents out of a place they had been allowed to occupy for four days, and in allowing Turkish guns to fire on the wounded—were they going back on their former position and to that of twenty years ago? Were they going to assist the Emperor of Germany in bombarding Greece itself? ["Oh, oh!"] Was that the significance of the German ships taking part with us in this bombardment? The First Lord of the Treasury had brought before the House in solemn tones the dangers of a European war if we did anything to protect our fellow-Christians in Turkey, and it seemed a strange argument from a Government who only thirteen months ago were ready to face the world in arms for British interests alone. [Cheers.] It seemed to him a strange comment upon the Government views that, having refused to make war, they should proceed to commit murder. ["Oh, oh!"] The right hon. Gentleman (Sir J. Lubbock) said we were seated on a powder-barrel, and it was perhaps a similar idea with regard to their position in this country which had chastened the utterances of Her Majesty's Ministers. It was almost the same position twenty years ago, when a small Liberal minority faced a Government whose majority sometimes went up to 200, and that Government was supporting Turkey as the present Government did yesterday. For four years the minority carried on the unequal political war, and the first time the country had the opportunity of speaking, it was found to be overwhelmingly opposed to supporting Turkey and in favour of Turkey's Christian victims. He ventured to think that it was the memory of this that had imparted a somewhat chastened note to the speech of the Leader of the House, and he ventured to predict that, whatever might be the Government majority on this occasion, following the Concert of Europe and the multitude to do evil, the Government would be found to be writing and sealing its own doom; and, just as their predecessors did twenty years ago, they would find they were running up a severe and terrible reckoning for the future of their Party, when the country would have an opportunity of stating that in its view the Government had betrayed the national honour and gone counter to its wishes and deepest sympathies. ["Hear!"]

*Mr. CHARLES DARLING (Deptford) rose chiefly to perform the humble office of conveying to the hon. Gentleman who had just spoken some of that information for which he professed himself to be so anxious, and as the hon. Member had spoken in terms recognising the accuracy of the Press as contrasted with unreliable official information, he could give him information from a newspaper whose authority he would acknowledge—The Westminster Gazette. When the hon. Member asked why it was that only the German ships fired beside the British, The Westminster Gazette supplied the answer in a telegram from Canea. He would therein find that at a meeting of the Admirals it was decided to open fire on the insurgents only after the latter refused to obey the injunction conveyed to them not to advance any further. The ships of the Powers were drawn up in line from east to west, and the British vessels were called on to fire first, and the German, Austrian, and Russian ships in succession. When the hon. Member found significance of the European Concert coming to an end in the fact that the French and Italian ships did not fire, let him further consult The Westminster Gazette telegram, and he would learn that the order to cease firing came before it was necessary for the French and Italian vessels stationed at the western extremity of the line to take part in the demonstration. Then came information that would be distasteful to Members opposite, for it was reported that none of the insurgents were killed by the cannonade, which caused merely material damage, not even "moral and intellectual damage." [Laughter.] Hon. Members appealed to everybody to vote for this Motion, but would they be so ready to support it if they thought there was the remotest chance of it being carried? ["Yes."] What would be the result of carrying this Motion for Adjournment? It would be the very worst day's work possible for the Cretans, because if the Motion were carried the Concert of Europe, so far as we were concerned, would be at an end. It would simply mean that we should withdraw from the Concert of Europe, but it would not mean that we were going to face the other Powers of Europe in arms on behalf of Greece. After all, this Motion for Adjurnment would not have done unmitigated harm—as such Motions generally did—for it would have shown the Powers of Europe that there was in this country a very strong feeling in favour of doing even more than they were inclined to do on behalf of Crete. At all events, all the Powers of Europe—which were always sceptical—would be convinced, when they saw the Leader of the Opposition enthusiastically approving of a raid into the territory of a friendly Power—[laughter and cheers]—that this country had got rid somewhat of its "unctuous rectitude," and that would be something gained. [" Hear, hear!"] He should like to ask, Did anyone doubt, after the speech of the First Lord of the Treasury, that Crete would never again be handed back to Turkey? Did anyone doubt that the Powers of Europe had decided upon something in future for Crete, which could not be very far different, perhaps, from independence, or possibly integration in the kingdom of Greece? Could anyone doubt that practically the cause of Crete had gained very largely by the part taken by this country in preventing a European war? The Leader of the Opposition asked who were going to war and where would they fight? War would take place upon those frontiers of Greece which were nearest to Turkey. Did not anybody know what would happen if this country were to stand aside, and the Turks be allowed to go at the Greeks in their own way? Who could pretend not to see that that would only be the beginning of a war in which France, Austria, Russia, and Italy would all take part? [" Why?"] Why? Because we were probably the only Power in Europe that did not want something that belonged to the Sultan. He thought that after this Debate there was not a Power in Europe but would recognise that unless they were held back a little this country could not be kept from breaking away from the Concert of Europe altogether, and therefore, while they were asking the people of this country to have patience a little longer, it would become the Powers of Europe on their part to see if they might not somewhat hurry their operations and give some evidence of their anxiety not only to solve this difficulty, but to solve it soon, being morally assured that if the wound were kept open for a little longer that conflagration would occur in Europe which no one but the right hon. Gentleman opposite doubted the possibility of. [" Hear, hear!"] The situation was not without a parallel. The bombardment of the insurgents was a regrettable incident, but it was not unlike the act of the Government of Italy, when the Royal troops performed the painful duty of firing on the patriots at Aspromonte, and wounding their leader, Garibaldi.

SIR HENRY CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN (Stirling Burghs) gathered from the remarks of the hon. Member for Deptford, in the first place, that he was an ardent sympathiser with the Greek nation and Greek Government in this matter; in the second place, that this discussion would have done a great deal of good; and, in the third place, that Turkey would never be able to reassert her rule over Crete. He also gathered that it was the opinion of the hon. Gentleman that the most desirable thing for them to contemplate was that the Concert of Europe should as speedily as possible come to a decision in this matter in order to put an end to the present condition of affairs. [" Hear, hear!"] He rose for the purpose of putting a question to the Government. They had no information, as he understood it, or only the very vaguest information, as to the circumstances of the last two or three days. A London paper appeared to have a correspondent who had sent fuller information than the Government possessed. He did not blame the Government and their lack of information on the matter. It was also impossible for them at present to lay before the House Papers on the subject of Crete, which would require further consideration or take time to print. But one thing, it appeared to him, might be given to Parliament which might go far to satisfy and soothe what was undoubtedly the somewhat ruffled condition of the public mind, and that was the instructions given to our Admiral as to his action in the present crisis. [Cheers.] They wanted to know what the position of the British Squadron there was, and what the position of the Admiral was. [Cheers.] Was he bound to do anything that the Concert of Europe directed him to do, and, if so, who represented the Concert of Europe at Canea, or any other point where action was necessary? [Cheers.] They wished particularly to know what his instructions were. He must be acting under some definite instructions from his own Government, as well as any instructions that might come from the so-called Concert of Europe. [" Hear, hear!"]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: If the right hon. Gentleman will put a Question on the Paper to-morrow with regard to the instructions to our Admiral, I will have the precedents looked into and see whether it can be done. But I may inform him that undoubtedly our Admiral is not bound to act against his judgment with the majority. Unanimity among the Admirals is required.

*SIR C. DILKE said this incident could not be treated by itself without regard to the whole policy of this country in her dealings with Greece. It had been assumed by three speakers at least in the Debate that Turkey, if left to herself, would be able to crush Greece. That was not the case. If the Turks were to try by sea to reach Crete with reinforcements they would fail in getting there. Their ships would be torpedoed and sunk, and the destruction of the Turkish power would be all the more rapid. The Greeks believed that the same would be the case with regard to the frontier of Thessaly, and this country was believed by Greece to have twice led the Concert of Europe to prevent the Greeks from obtaining provinces which would otherwise have fallen to them. ["Hear, hear!"] No doubt, as a nation, we were the best friends of Greece in Europe, but it was not thought so by the Greeks, at any rate, as far as the Government was concerned. The future of the Eastern Mediterranean lay with Greece. The feeling of the people of this country was almost unanimously on the Greek side. But he was one who would do much to prevent the forcible partition of the Ottoman Empire. [Cries of "Oh!"] Yes, for he believed in the danger of war. ["Hear, hear!"] But we ought not to interfere by force against that side which had the whole future of the Eastern Mediterranean Sea at its command. Greece was anxious to be our friend; she was a maritime Power, and would be drawn by associations to desire alliance with us, and free scope should be given to the feeling of the people of this country on behalf of Greece. [Cheers.] The Opposition had been singularly tolerant of the foreign policy of the present Government. Not in the Mediterranean only, but in the Pacific, it had been marked by a great change in the position of the country. The foreign policy of the Government ought to be thoroughly debated on a better occasion than the present, but he could not be silent when the whole aspirations of the Greeks were involved, and felt bound to raise his voice to, if possible, prevent those aspirations from being used as the shuttlecock of party. [Cheers.]

Motion made, and Question put, "That this House do now Adjourn." The House divided:—Ayes, 125; Noes, 243.—(Division List—No. 40—appended.)

The announcement of the figures was received with Ministerial cheers.

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N.E.)
Acland, Rt. Hon. A. H. Dyke
Allan, William (Gateshead)
Ambrose, Robert (Mayo, W.)
Arch, Joseph
Asquith, Rt. Hn. Herbert Henry
Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire)
Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
Barlow, John Emmott
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Birrell, Augustine
Brigg, John
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Buchanan, Thomas Ryburn
Burns, John
Burt, Thomas
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Sir Charles (Glasgow)
Cameron, Robert (Durham)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Causton, Richard Knight
Channing, Francis Allston
Colville, John
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crilly, Daniel
Crombie, John William
Curran, Thomas B. (Donegal)
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, M. Vaughan- (Cardigan)
Davies, W. Rees- (Pembrokesh.)
Davitt, Michael
Dillon, John
Donelan, Captain A.
Dunn, Sir William
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Farquharson, Dr. Robert
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Flynn, James Christopher
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Matthew (Durham)
Gilhooly, James
Gladstone, Rt. Hn. Herbert John
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Gold, Charles
Griffith, Ellis J.
Harcourt, Rt. Hon. Sir William
Harrison, Charles
Hayne, Rt. Hon. Charles Seale-
Holburn, J. G.
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Johnson-Ferguson, Jabez Edw.
Joicey, Sir James
Jones, William (Carnarvonsh.)
Kay-Shuttleworth, Rt. Hn. Sir U.
Kearley, Hudson E.
Kinloch, Sir John George Smyth
Knox, Edmund Francis Vesey
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Langley, Batty
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cumblnd.)
Leng, Sir John
Lockwood, Sir Frank (York)
Lough, Thomas
Luttrell, Hugh Fownes
Lyell, Sir Leonard
Macaleese, Daniel
McDermott, Patrick
McEwan, William
M'Ghee, Richard
M'Hugh, Patrick A. (Leitrim)
McKenna, Reginald
Maden, John Henry
Mellor, Rt. Hn. J. W. (Yorks.)
Monk, Charles James
Montagu, Sir S. (Whitechapel)
Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Morley, Rt. Hn. John (Montrose)
Morton, Edward John Chalmers

First Lord of the Treasury.

Mundella, Rt. Hn. Anthony John
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, James F. X. (Cork)
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Connor, James (Wicklow, W.)
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
O'Kelly, James
Owen, Thomas
Palmer, Sir Charles M. (Durham)
Parnell, John Howard
Paulton, James Mellor
Pickard, Benjamin
Pickersgill, Edward Hare
Power, Patrick Joseph
Price, Robert John
Provand, Andrew Dryburgh
Reid, Sir Robert T.
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, Hon. James (East Kerry)
Samuel, J. (Stockton-on-Tees)
Schwann, Charles E.
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Spicer, Albert
Stanhope, Hon. Philip J.
Strachey, Edward
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Tanner, Charles Kearns
Wallace, Robert (Edinburgh)
Wallace, Robert (Perth)
Walton, John Lawson
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wayman, Thomas
Wedderburn, Sir William
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, John Carvell (Notts.)
Wills, Sir William Henry
Wilson, John (Durham, Mid.)
Wilson, John (Govan)
Woodall, William
Woods, Samuel
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES, Mr. Thomas Ellis and Mr. McArthur.

NOES.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir A. F.
Allhusen, Augustus Henry Eden
Ascroft, Robert
Ashmead-Bartlett, Sir Ellis
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Baden-Powell, Sir Geo. Smyth
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Baillie, James E. B. (Inverness)
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Baldwin, Alfred
Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r)
Balfour, Gerald William (Leeds)
Banbury, Frederick George
Barnes, Frederic Gorell
Barry, A. H. Smith- (Hunts.)
Barry, Francis Tress (Windsor)
Bartley, George C. T.
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H. (Bristol)
Begg, Ferdinand Faithfull
Bennett, Henry Currie Leigh-
Bethell, Captain
Bhownaggree, M. M.
Biddulph, Michael
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Bond, Edward
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith-
Bousfield, William Robert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brookfield, A. Montagu
Brown, Alexander H.
Bucknill, Thomas Townsend
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Butcher, John George
Campbell, James A.
Carlile, William Walter
Carson, Edward
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs)
Cavendish, V.C.W. (Derbyshire)
Cayzer, Charles William
Cecil, Lord Hugh
Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Bir.)
Chamberlain, J. Austen (Worc'r)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Charrington, Spencer
Chelsea, Viscount
Clare, Octavius Leigh
Clarke, Sir Edward (Plymouth)
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Coghill, Douglas Harry
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Sir John Chas. Ready
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Cook, Fred Lucas (Lambeth)
Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow)
Courtney, Rt. Hon. Leonard H.
Cranborne, Viscount
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Herb. Shepherd (Bolton)
Currie, Sir Donald
Curzon, Rt. Hn. G. N. (Lanc. S.W.)
Curzon, Viscount (Bucks.)
Dalbiac, Major Philip Hugh
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Darling, Charles John
Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P.
Dixon, George
Dixon-Hartland, Sir Fred. Dixon
Donkin, Richard Sim
Dorington, Sir John Edward
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Drucker, A.
Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
Dyke, Rt. Hn. Sir William Hart
Edwards, Gen. Sir James Bevan
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Fardell, Thomas George
Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn Edward
Fergusson, Rt. Hn. Sir J. (Manc'r)
Fielden, Thomas
Finch, George H.
Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
Firbank, Joseph Thomas
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir R. U. Penrose
Flannery, Fortescue
Fletcher, Sir Henry
Folkestone, Viscount
Forster Henry William
Forwood, Rt. Hn. Sir Arthur B.
Foster, Harry S. (Suffolk)
Fry, Lewis
Galloway, William Johnson
Garfit, William
Gedge, Sydney
Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (City of Lond.)
Gibbs, Hon. Vicary (St. Albans.)
Gilliat, John Saunders
Goldsworthy, Major-General
Gordon, John Edward
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Rt. Hn. G. J. (St. G'rg's)
Goschen, George J. (Sussex)
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Green, Walford D. (Wednesb'ry)
Greene, Henry D. (Shrewsbury)
Gretton, John
Gull, Sir Cameron
Halsey, Thomas Frederick
Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord Geo.
Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm.
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Heath, James
Helder, Augustus
Hermon-Hodge, Robert Trotter
Hill, Rt. Hn. Lord Arthur (Down)
Hoare, Samuel (Norwich)
Hobhouse, Henry
Holland, Hon. Lionel Raleigh
Hopkinson, Alfred
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Howell, William Tudor
Hozier, James Henry Cecil
Hutton, John (Yorks. N.R.)
Isaacson, Frederick Wootton
Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
Jessel, Captain Herbert Merton
Johnston, William (Belfast)
Johnstone, John H. (Sussex)
Jolliffe, Hon. H. George
Kemp, George
Kenrick, William
Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
Kimber, Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Lees
Lafone, Alfred
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverpool)
Lecky, William Edward H.
Legh, Hon. Thomas W. (Lanc.)
Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R. (Essex)
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. Chas. W. (Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hn. Walter (Liverpool)
Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
Lowther, Rt. Hn. James (Kent)
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lubbock, Rt. Hon. Sir John
Lucas-Shadwell, William
Macartney, W. G. Ellison
Macdona, John Cumming
Maclean, James Mackenzie
McCalmont, H. L. B. (Cambs.)

McIver, Sir Lewis
McKillop, James
Malcolm, Ian
Manners, Lord Edward Wm. J.
Maple, Sir John Blundell
Marks, Henry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Mellor, Colonel (Lancashire)
Melville, Beresford Valentine
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
Milbank, Powlett Charles John
Mildmay, Francis Bingham
Milner, Sir Frederick George
Milward, Colonel Victor
Monckton, Edward Philip
Montagu, Hon. J. Scott (Hants.)
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, Walter
Mowbray, Rt. Hon. Sir John
Murray, Rt. Hn. A. Graham (Bute)
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Murray, Col. Wyndham (Bath)
Myers, William Henry
Nicol, Donald Ninian
Northcote, Hon. Sir H. Stafford,
Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
Pender, James
Penn, John
Plunkett, Hon. Horace Curzon
Pollock, Harry Frederick
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pryce-Jones, Edward
Purvis, Robert
Rasch, Major Frederic Carne
Renshaw, Charles Bine
Richardson, Thomas
Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
Ritchie, Rt. Hon. Chas. Thomson
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Round, James
Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
Russell, Sir George (Berkshire)
Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Savory, Sir Joseph
Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
Seely, Charles Hilton
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
Simeon, Sir Barrington
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Stanley, Lord (Lancs.)
Stanley, Henry M. (Lambeth)
Sutherland, Sir Thomas
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Talbot, John G. (Oxford Univ.)
Taylor, Francis
Thorburn, Walter
Thornton, Percy M.
Tomlinson, Wm. Edw. Murray
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Valentia, Viscount
Warkworth, Lord
Warr, Augustus Frederick
Webster, R. G. (St. Pancras)
Webster, Sir R. E. (Isle of Wight)
Welby, Lt.-Col. A. C. E.
Wharton, John Lloyd
Williams, Colonel R. Dorset
Williams, Joseph Powell- (Birm.)
Wolff, Gustav Wilhelm
Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart-
Wylie, Alexander
Wyndham-Quin, Major W. H.
Wyvill, Marmaduke D'Arcy

TELLERS FOR THE NOES, Sir William Walrond and Mr. Anstruther.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

MILITARY WORKS (MONEY) BILL.

Considered in Committee :—

[The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, in the Chair.]

Clause 1—

ISSUE OF MONEY FOR THE WORKS MENTIONED IN THE SCHEDULE.

(1.) The Treasury shall issue out of the Consolidated Fund or the growing produce thereof such sums not exceeding in the whole five million four hundred and fifty-eight thousand pounds, as may be required by a Secretary of State for defraying the costs of the works specified in the schedule to this Act incurred at any time after the thirty-first of March one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six.

(2.) Before any moneys are issued for the purpose of expenditure under any head in the schedule to this Act, a Secretary of State shall submit to the Treasury an estimate, with such details as may be required by the Treasury, of the expenditure under that head for which it is for the time being proposed to issue money, and shall therewith state the period within which it is proposed to expend the money so issued.

(3.) There shall be no excess of expenditure under any head in the schedule above the amount stated therein for that head, unless the Treasury and Secretary of State are satisfied that the excess will be compensated by savings on the expenditure under another head, so that no excess will be caused over the total expenditure specified in the schedule, and in such cases the savings may be applied in payment of the excess.

MR. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.) moved, in sub-section (1), to leave out the words "five million four hundred and fifty-eight thousand" and to insert the words "three million." He said that one of the precedents on which the right hon. Gentleman in charge of the Bill most relied was that of the Barracks Act of 1890. According to the statement made under that Act there was, on March 31st last, £1,143,000 unexpended under the Act, and if the expenditure this year had proceeded at the same rate as in the two previous years there would still be enough money in the hands of the military authorities for two years more. The amount asked for now was unnecessarily large. He suggested that the sum should be restricted to three millions, because the whole of this expenditure practically passed out of the control of that House the moment the Bill had passed through Committee. The amount for the purchase of the land on Salisbury plain, and about half-a-million for ranges, were the only precise amounts that had been mentioned, and which enabled them to see how the expenditure was built up. He protested against the small items being included, which should properly come upon the ordinary Estimates. If this Amendment were adopted, there would still be sufficient money left to the Government for everything that was wanted to be done under the Bill. The small items would then be excluded from the Bill, with the result that a great deal of waste and extravagance might be avoided. Loans of such great magnitude should only be made for large works, such as those in the Naval Works Bill. They had not been satisfied with the answers they had received on this subject, and he therefore begged to move the Amendment standing in his name.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford) said he did not think the hon. Member had made out a very good case for the change he proposed. The hon. Member had had an opportunity of hearing what were the grounds on which they asked for the present sum, which, on two occasions, he had himself endeavoured to justify. The hon. Member's suggestion was that a sufficient allowance would be a million for barracks, a million for ranges (including accommodation for manœuvring and mobilisation), and a million for defence works, and he tried to justify this proposal by stating that there were unexpended balances still left from the Barracks Act. His hon. Friend the Financial Secretary had already explained that, although a sum of about £780,000 was not actually expended, that sum had been already allocated to certain works which, if not actually in progress, would be in progress directly. That did not in the slightest degree relieve them from putting up barracks in other places provided for in the schedule. He did not think it was the case at all that there were many small works in the barracks item. It was desirable not only that large barracks should be erected, but that smaller barracks at the coaling stations should also be provided for by the Bill. He knew nothing that was more likely to conduce to waste or extravagance than the proposal of the hon. Member, which would compel them to get forward piecemeal with these works. The sum they now asked for was one which had been cut down to the smallest possible dimensions. It was stated that the Bill was without precedent. That was not the case. This Bill was absolutely in accordance with precedent, and he thought it was certainly the most convenient plan that the House should be able to criticise the scheme as a whole, and to decide upon it as a whole.

MR. D. F. GODDARD (Ipswich) supported the Amendment, because it seemed to him they should take every opportunity of opposing the expenditure of money which ought not, in his opinion, to be covered by loan at all. It was admitted that the whole of the money asked for under this Bill was not to be raised on loan, but what he and his hon. Friends desired was a definite statement as to what part of the money was to be raised on loan and what part was not to be so raised. The right hon. Gentleman defended the system of terminable annuities by stating that it laid the whole scheme before the House. That was not a very satisfactory answer. He could not see why, if the Government had a definite scheme, they should not state whether they intended to carry it out by way of loan or in one year's Estimates. If they stated their scheme hon. Members would have an opportunity of judging of it without being pledged to a term of years, as now proposed. He was confident it would be generally conceded that some of the items in the five-and-a-half millions sterling ought not to be covered by loan extending over a period of anything like 30 years. £66,000 was asked for converting Woking female prison into barracks. He did not think that such an item for such a purpose should be raised by way of loan. Neither did he think that the item for the replacement of huts should be raised by loan. If any municipal authority were to come to the House of Commons or to the Local Government Board and ask for sanction to borrow money for such a purpose, and to spread the repayment over 30 years, sanction would be at once refused. The loan system was calculated to confuse the minds of the taxpayers as to the amount that was really being spent, and it ought not to be carried too far. There were some items specified in the Bill as to which they had but very scanty information. There were, for instance, the items of £1,120,000 for defence works, and £1,149,000 for ranges, including accommodation for manœuvres. The military charges were constantly increasing, and the House had, therefore, a right to ask to be supplied with the fullest details. On these grounds he felt obliged to support the Amendment proposed by his hon. Friend.

*Sir C. DILKE said that, although he supported the Bill and should vote with the Government in most, if not all, of the divisions that would be taken upon it, there was one point upon which they might reasonably ask the Government to give an assurance. Hon. Members experienced great difficulty in ascertaining the total military and naval expenditure in any particular year. Ultimately they knew how much had been spent in a given 12 months, but they did not know it for a long time afterwards. He, therefore, asked the Government to undertake that the Ministers responsible for the various departments should, when making their annual statements, mention the estimated amount to be spent out of loan money in the course of the year, and also state the sum which had been spent out of loan money in the past year. [" Hear, hear!"]

Mr. HUDSON KEARLEY (Devonport) thought the point raised by his hon. Friend the Member for Islington as to the expenditure on short-lived work was one deserving of attention. Government compelled local authorities to pay off borrowed money according to a well-defined schedule, that was to say, they allowed local authorities to borrow money for buildings for a certain number of years, but they did not allow them to borrow money for furniture and many other purposes for anything like the same period. If the Government laid down such a rule for local authorities, they ought to adhere to it themselves. Much of the expenditure now proposed must be very short-lived. There was, for instance, the expenditure for barracks. That must be short-lived, and the repayment of the money borrowed ought not to be spread over so long a time as 30 years. There were many things for which money was to be obtained on loan which would be non-existent before 30 years expired. Much had been said about the schedule. As a matter of fact it was so much waste paper, for it would not appear in the Act of Parliament, and there was nothing to cause it to be adhered to in any way. Under Sub-section 2 of Clause 1, the money could be spent as it was thought proper to spend it. He proposed to move as an Amendment later on that the Estimate should be presented to the House rather than to the Treasury. If it were presented to the House, the House would have some control over the money; but, seeing that it was proposed by the Bill to refer it to the Treasury, the House would lose all control, and they were therefore entitled to ask the Government to diminish the amount of the loan.

*Mr. BRODRICK said it had never been intended to include in the loan works that were not of a permanent nature. Barrack furniture, guns, or temporary equipments were not included. It was proposed to apply the loan entirely to permanent works, such as the structure of barracks, of defence works, and the purchase of land. In reply to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for the Forest of Dean he might say that, in regard to loans, it had always been the custom of the War Office to provide Parliament with a statement of the sums actually expended each year. In the present instance the War Office proposed to supplement that statement by another annual statement of what was proposed to be spent. The House, therefore, would have complete control over the money, and would be able to review the progress of the works from time to time. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. REGINALD McKENNA (Monmouth, N.) said the promise of the right hon. Gentleman to provide an annual statement of the amount proposed to be spent was satisfactory, so far as it went. But his main reason in supporting the Amendment was, that a sufficient justification for not placing this expenditure on the annual Estimates had not been given by the Government. The only excuse advanced was that contractors desired to be paid according as they proceeded with their work. But surely that could not be accepted as a valid reason for the course proposed by the Government. He was perfectly certain that any contractor would be quite willing to undertake any work in the sure faith that Parliament, on the application of the Minister responsible, would vote the money. He thought a protest ought to be made against this growing practice of withdrawing Army and Navy expenditure from the detailed criticism afforded by the Estimates, which, if persisted in, would lead to a complete revolution in the forms of the House.

Mr. W. WOODALL (Hanley) said he desired to call attention to the fact that the Act was intended to be retrospective.

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: That does not arise on this Amendment, but on a subsequent Amendment.

Mr. CHANNING thought his hon. Friend was justified in moving the Amendment, both as a protest against this growing Army expenditure, for which no possible justification had been advanced by the Government, and against the withdrawal of the particular expenditure proposed by the Bill from the control of the House. The late Mr. Childers, who was a past master in all financial questions, had denounced as bad and improper the policy which the Government were now pursuing of attempting to oust from the control of Parliament the expenditure on those military works. The Barracks Act, which was passed when the Conservatives were last in office, afforded an ample illustration of the impropriety of the course which the Government were now pursuing. The Government had demanded under that Act far more than they had required. As large a sum as £778,000 had been left over, and no explanation whatever had been given as to the purposes to which it had been applied. He thought that a most objectionable method of dealing with public money. What guarantee was there that the same thing would not happen under this Bill? What guarantee was there that the Government, having obtained money on the pretence of wanting it for one purpose did not spend it on another? Anyone who looked at the schedule of the Bill must see the flimsy character of the proposed works. In truth, the Bill, like many more Bills of the Government, was a sham. He was sure the country would repudiate it in the most emphatic way on the very first opportunity.

Mr. J. BRIGG (York, W.R., Keighley) complained that there were not sufficient details forthcoming as to the new hospitals which it was proposed to build in Dublin, Edinburgh, and London. Had they no military hospitals there before? What was the cost to be? They had no information as to the items which they were asked to vote. He looked jealously upon these hospitals. It was the beginning of a very large and expensive item, which they might have to follow up for years. There was another item, and that related to Winchester Barracks, which had been destroyed by fire. Was there no insurance on Winchester Barracks?

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS ruled that the hon. Member was going outside the Vote.

Mr. WOODALL asked what amount of work had already been executed?

*The FINANCIAL SECRETARY to the WAR OFFICE (Mr. Powell-Williams, Birmingham, S.): I have already answered that across the Table. The sum is £86,000.

Mr. T. LOUGH said it had been admitted that there was a sum of money from last year which had not been expended. They ought to know about that before they voted a further large sum. He thought the building of barracks might be done for a much smaller sum than the amount asked for. The point he wanted specially to make was with reference to temporary earthworks. These works would not last 30 years. The Palmerston Works did not last 30 years.

Mr. J. GILHOOLY (Cork Co., W.) asked for information as to the proposed works in Bantry Bay—whether they were going to make the line of railway from Kenmare?

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS ruled that this was a matter which could not be dealt with at that time.

Question put, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 147; Noes, 47.—(Division List, No. 41.)

On the return of the Chairman of Ways and Means, after the usual interval,

Mr. LOUGH proposed, in sub-section (1), to leave out the words "at any time," and to insert the words "within seven years." He said that as the Bill read at present it was provided that this very large sum of money might be issued to defray the cost of the works specified in the schedule, incurred at any time. He, therefore, proposed to substitute for that "incurred within seven years from the passing of this Act." His object was to oblige the War Office, if the money was not spent within a reasonable lapse of time, to come back to the House. Under the Bill as it stood the War Office might carry out the works in the Schedule or not, they might spend all the money or not, as they liked; in fact, they might do what they liked with it. The expenditure might be spread over 40 or 50 years. What was the effect of that? He believed that the money granted under the Act of 1872 was only exhausted a year or two ago—indeed, he believed there was even now some little balance of £50 or £60 still unspent. The money might dribble out of the Treasury in the same way under this Bill, and he proposed that there should be a limit of time fixed. The reason why he had suggested seven years was because the last Barracks Act was passed in 1890. The effect of putting in a limit was that if, for any reason, the War Office found it was not discreet or wise to spend all the money, at the end of seven years they would have to come back to the House and show what had been spent, and to leave it to the House to say whether the Act ought to be extended. The right hon. Gentleman opposite might say that they ought to trust the War Office, but he would point out that it was absolutely certain that the right hon. Gentleman and his Party would not be at the War Office at the end of seven years. So that he was really going a long way to meet the right hon. Gentleman by giving him time to spend the money.

*MR. POWELL-WILLIAMS said he hardly realised the ground on which the hon. Gentleman made this proposal. The hon. Gentleman seemed to think that the present Government would have quitted the War Office before the seven years he proposed had expired; but supposing that were the case, and supposing the suggested limit of time were put on this expenditure, it would be exhausted before the Party to which the hon. Gentleman belonged came into power, and they would have nothing to spend under this loan. The hon. Gentleman suggested that unless a limit of time of this kind were put upon the expenditure, the War Office would be in a position to spend the money or not as they pleased; but the hon. Gentleman seemed to forget that this money could only be expended for purposes specified in the Bill, and, therefore, it was not a matter in which the War Office could do as they pleased. He did not see how the hon. Gentleman could expect to gain anything by putting in a limit of seven years. No limit of time was imposed under the Barracks Act or under the Act of 1888. Reference had been made to the Cardwell Loan of 1872, and it had been said that up to a short time ago the purposes for which that loan was granted had not been fulfilled. That was rather an argument against the Amendment, as the delay that took place in carrying out the purposes of the Cardwell Loan proved that unexpected difficulties might be encountered in the execution of works, and that it might be impossible to complete them within a fixed period. A considerable amount of the money provided under this Bill had to be spent abroad. The acquisition of land and building operations abroad were often attended with long delays. If a limit of seven years were imposed the War Office would very likely find at the end of that time that some of the contemplated work was not completed, and it would then not be possible to finish it with the money provided by the loan. It was, however, the intention of the War Office—and he believed that that intention would be carried out—to spend this money within seven years, but it was not expedient to fix that or any other limit.

MR. J. C. FLYNN (Cork, N.) supported the Amendment on the ground that Parliament ought not to part for an indefinite period with its right to control the expenditure of the War Office or of any other spending department. The Financial Secretary had rather given his case away by saying that it was the intention to complete these works within seven years. He thought his hon. Friend would be willing to substitute eight years or even nine for the number mentioned in the Amendment. It was undesirable to withdraw for ever large sums of money from the control of Parliament, whether there were precedents for such withdrawal or not. He admitted that it might not be convenient for the War Office to come to Parliament every year and to place a certain portion of this sum upon the Estimates. That might put the War Office in a very difficult position, and might interfere with the proper execution of the works. But it was a different thing to give the War Office absolute control over this money for all time. Supposing that at the end of, say, seven years, the money was not exhausted, and that it should be thought that there had been wasteful and extravagant expenditure, surely Parliament ought to have an opportunity of interfering. There was no certainty that the hon. Member opposite would keep the position of Financial Secretary for seven years, or that his successor would have the same high reputation that he had. If they parted with all control over this money, and if the barracks to be erected in Dublin should be built on an insanitary site, hon. Members who might wish to call attention to the matter would be told that they could not do so, and that Parliament was committed to this expenditure and had no right of revision. Circumstances might easily arise in consequence of a change of Ministry, or even of one Minister, or of a change of opinion respecting the works themselves, which would render it desirable and expedient to reconsider the subject after the lapse of seven years or of some such period. If the work had been well done the War Department would lose nothing by coming to Parliament. He trusted, therefore, that the Government would consent to fix a time when Parliament could again be heard on this subject.

Mr. DILLON regretted that the hon. Member for Islington had named in his Amendment so long a period as seven years. He did not admit that the War Department had made out a good case at all for this Works Loan Bill. He did not see why the Government should not ask every year in the Estimates for the amount of money they intended to spend in the year, and thus give Parliament an opportunity of criticising their policy and plans. He was in favour of the Amendment, but thought that two or three years ought to be the limit instead of seven years. They had heard that day of a loan under the Barracks Act passed in 1890, which was not nearly expended at the present hour. [Mr. Powell-Williams: "It is all appropriated."] Yes, but it was not spent. He held that every man who was in a responsible position and intrusted with the expenditure of money should be viewed with suspicion by Parliament. That was the principle upon which the Estimates were submitted for discussion. No Minister had a right to plead that the same trust should be put in him as would be put in him were he dealing with private affairs. The way in which the Barracks Act Loan had been used supplied the strongest possible argument against the course which it was now proposed to take. It afforded the strongest illustration of the evils that might arise from giving a free hand to a Minister for a number of years. In the case of the Royal Barracks in Dublin the original proposal was to construct—

*Mr. BRODRICK asked whether the question of the Royal Barracks in Dublin could be raised now. He thought it could only be dealt with on the Vote for the interest on the Works Fund in the Estimates of the year.

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS said that he understood the hon. Member for East Mayo was only referring to the subject by way of illustration.

Mr. DILLON said that was so. The Financial Secretary had quoted the Barracks Act as a precedent for granting this new loan without any limit of time, but it really ought to be a warning to them not to do so. Although the immense sum of £160,000 had been paid over, the barracks were still in the most unsatisfactory and insanitary condition. Then, again, the proceedings in connection with the Royal Barracks had been most extraordinary. Some portions of the barracks had been floored at great cost and then pulled up, but after an enormous expenditure of money the barracks were still left in a very unsatisfactory condition. He did not think that a stronger argument could be offered for having those sums on the annual Estimates than the fact of the Committee being asked now to sanction this large sum for an unlimited period.

Mr. GODDARD thought that the Amendment was a reasonable one. It appeared to him as if the Government had not much confidence in the country supporting their proposals when they objected to the insertion of so reasonable a time limit. He believed that there was not a work mentioned in the schedule which could not be carried out within the seven years mentioned in the Amendment. It was unreasonable to ask for a long extension of time in these matters. The Financial Secretary had referred to the works that were carried out in foreign stations. There might be some difficulty as to completing purchases of land abroad, and so on; but surely, when the Government put forward a programme of certain works, they had formed some conclusion as to whether they could carry them out, and none of them were of so extensive a character as to involve the acquisition of a very large tract of land. Most of the works were in the nature of enlargements, replacements, and additions to garrisons; and he asserted that there was no weight in the argument that in connection with those parts of the works situated at foreign stations there should be any real difficulty in acquiring land. Though, as he knew, there might be some slight difficulty in acquiring land in foreign places, men of business were enabled to overcome that difficulty with comparative ease, and no negotiations, according to his experience, had taken seven years. Therefore a time limit should be inserted with regard to works of a definite character, because it was undesirable to lay down a programme which might not be completed within 20, 30, or 40 years.

MR. JOHN BURNS (Battersea) said that if he were disposed to find fault with the Amendment it was that seven years was too long a period. He understood that this was a matter of urgency, and he thought that five years were long enough. The Committee had voted 5½ millions, but in his judgment the best plan would be to vote annually that portion of the sum which had not been spent in the preceding year. He believed that all those works, however urgent, could be carried out in a year or two years. He noticed that there was £59,000 for hospital accommodation at Sierra Leone; but knowing as he did that station, he could see reasons why perhaps in time the military authorities should abandon Sierra Leone as an hospital centre; and in a year or two they might suggest a healthier spot. After being half way through the alterations which were contemplated, sanitary conditions might prompt an abandonment of Sierra Leone. He objected to money being spent on a site and buildings that could not be permanently guaranteed. The same remark applied to Aldershot, which was, on the other hand, a healthy place. £150,000 were to be spent for continuation ar replacement of huts in peramanent mat rials; but 40,000 acres were to be a quired as a manœuvring ground on Sali bury Plain. Perhaps in a twelvemont a large portion of this £150,000 migh be justifiably diverted to Salisbury Plai instead. Again, St. Lucia was to l put into a stronger position; bu there was no guarantee that strategist would not alter their opinion six month hence; and therefore he objected eve to one-tenth of the £250,000 in 189 being spent on St. Lucia. The mone might be invested, and the House c Commons ought to be in a position t review this expenditure every year. I the Committee gave the Government blank cheque, they deprived the Hous of Commons of opportunities of effectiv criticism once a year as to how th money was being spent or wastec Why the Government opposed thi Amendment he could not understand, ex cept that possibly some of the Wa Office authorities were a bit doubtful c some of the sites for barracks and hosp tals which they had recommended, an hoped by this blank cheque to do wha they would not attempt to do if the were tied up to an annual, or a thre five, or seven years' limit. As matte stood, the House of Commons was simpl asked to hand over 5½ millions to th military authorities to do what the pleased with it.

MR. DILLON, on the point of orde said the Amendment did not require th Government to spend the whole of th 5½ millions within seven years. On th contrary, if they did not spend it al the portion which was unspent the should account for to Parliament.

MR. LOUGH said the Committee ha only had one answer from the Gover ment, and that of the most unsatisfacto character. The hon. Member gave aw his case. He said the Government i tended to spend the whole money with seven years. But, mark what the sta of the answer was. It was, We want limit of time, because the money c only be spent on the purposes specifi If the hon. Member looked at sub-secti 3 of the clause he would see that t specification had not a shred of meani in it. If the Government spent more the barracks they might spend more the ranges; or, if they spent less on t ranges they might spend more on Salisbury Plain. They might throw it into the sea, as they pleased. There was no guarantee that the money should be spent in accordance with the schedule. If the Government wanted to shorten the proceedings they should accept the Amendment.

*MR. BRODRICK repeated that the Government could not accept the Amendment. They had undertaken to lay before the House every year, not merely a statement of the expenditure incurred during the past year, but an estimate of the probable expenditure for the subsequent years, thus giving the House, on two occasions an opportunity of investigating and criticising the performances and proposals of the Government. The Estimate for the year would, in every case, he stated by whoever was responsible for introducing the Estimates. The subject could be criticised upon that Vote, and it could be criticised again on the interest taken on account of the works voted, which would have to be charged each year.

MR. FLYNN pointed out that the House of Commons could not repudiate the interest due. That would be a most ungracious proceeding.

*MR. CHARLES HARRISON (Plymouth) said the schedule showed that there was no practical difficulty in coming to the House for further money if the work was not completed. That was in fact the present state of things. The very note put into the schedule referred to "works not completed." But no inconvenience was stated to have been caused by such interruption to the carrying on of those works. Application was now made to increase the capital sum originally dedicated to particular works, and if there was no inconvenience in reference to the application there could be no inconvenience in coming, at seven years, for the purpose of applying for further money. It was more than possible that the defence works might get out of date in seven years, looking to the constant advances in artillery and military science. He had seen in his day works constructed at Gibraltar which were absolutely useless at the present time. In seven years time the whole system of defensive works might be so entirely changed that this House should be called upon to exercise a control over the capital expenditure. So in regard to barracks. There was a revolution every five years in sanitary arrangements. They could not tell what might be the state of science seven years hence in regard to military works and sanitation, and yet the House of Commons was called upon to hand over to the Department five millions of money without any specification except for a comparatively small sum. For these and other reasons, he submitted that the control of Parliament over the expenditure ought to be maintained, and if the capital had not been spent in the seven years, that then a further opportunity should be afforded to Parliament to review the situation.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY appealed to the Committee to now come to a decision on the Amendment. He thought that what had fallen from his right hon. Friend should have had the effect of shortening the discussion.

MR. MCKENNA had been satisfied to some extent, though not wholly, by the reply of the right hon. Gentleman when he said that hon. Members would have the opportunity of discussing the matter each year on the Estimates, as to the amount that had been expended or was to be expended. If that were so, and they were each year to vote upon it—

*MR. BRODRICK: No, no, not to vote upon it. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. MCKENNA: Then what was the use of discussing the matter if there was to be no vote. ["Hear, hear!"] On that ground alone he should be prepared to support the Amendment.

*MR. BRODRICK said that there could be no vote again on moneys that had been already voted by Parliament; but the work of the expenditure could be criticised on the Estimates, and it would be open to hon. Members to move a reduction on the Estimates or to move a reduction in the Under Secretary's salary if they disagreed with the action of the War Office in the matter.

MR. MCKENNA said that that did not meet his main objection. One of the details of the Bill, as had been said, was to fortify London. Now, under the Bill as it stood the whole of the five and a half millions might be spent on that one purpose, if the Government chose so to decide. ["Hear, hear!"] If there had been an opportunity of voting every year on that work—

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Order, order! That point does not arise on the Amendment, which is to limit the expenditure of the money within seven years. ["No, no!"] If this Amendment is carried the whole of the money would have to be spent in seven years. [MR. LOUGH: "No, no."]

MR. MCKENNA said the words were that the money should be expended as might be required by the Secretary of State, not necessarily that the whole amount must be spent in seven years. The object was to limit the works to seven years.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said the argument of the hon. Member was that every year this proposal was to be discussed on the Estimates, but that was not met by the Amendment.

MR. MCKENNA granted that the point was not met by the Amendment, but he certainly understood that the right hon. Gentleman promised that hon. Members would have an opportunity of discussing the matter every year on the Estimates. ["Hear, hear!"] One of the objects he had in supporting the Amendment was to put a check on the extravagance of the War Office. He had by no means been satisfied with the reasons the Government had given to show why the Amendment should not be accepted. Unless some limit of time was imposed the Committee would be giving the Government a blank cheque for five and a half millions to spend when they liked and how they liked. It would be possible even for them to devote the whole of the money to one purpose. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. LABOUCHERE said that when he entered the Chamber a short time before he ascertained by inquiry that an impression did prevail among many hon. Members on that side of the House that the Under Secretary had promised that the matter would be brought up each year in the Estimates, and that hon. Members would be able to discuss and vote upon it. ["Hear, hear!" and Ministerial cries of "No, no!"] But now they knew that was not to be the case. The proposal to place some limit of time on the expenditure of the money and on the works was a most reasonable and legitimate one. Supposing a General Election took place on the morrow and the Liberals got into power, though they were in for six years they would not have anything to do with this wasteful expenditure—no, not even to the extent of a shilling. [Cheers, and Ministerial laughter.] If they did he would as cheerfully vote against them as he intended to vote then against right hon. Gentlemen opposite. [Cheers.] Then supposing after this time that right hon. Gentlemen opposite again came into power, they would have the whole of this money at hand, but by that time the condition of things might have wholly changed. ["Hear, hear!"] He was fully of opinion that there ought to be some limit of time inserted in the Bill, and the only hesitation he had in voting for the Amendment of his hon. Friend was that seven years was too long a period. He should have preferred a much shorter period—say four or five years, for it should not, he thought, be so long as possibly to extend the matter to other Parliaments. ["Hear, hear!"] For those reasons he should vote for the Amendment.

Question put, "That the words 'at any time' stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 178; Noes, 68.—(Division List, No. 42.)

MR. LOUGH proposed, in sub-section (1), to leave out the words "ninety-six," and to insert the words "ninety-seven." He said he anticipated no objection to this Amendment. As the clause stood loans would date from the end of the last financial year instead of, as they should, from the end of the present financial year, 31st March 1897. He could hardly think that the figures 1896 had been inserted intentionally, he thought it must be a mistake or misprint and, if so, he would be glad that he interrupted, but if the date 1896 was intended then it appeared to him a monstrous proceeding. What was the position of the right hon. Gentleman at the end of 1896? He had an amount of £1,150,000 of the Barrack Loan of 1890 according to the average expenditure of the previous years, and yet with this large amount in hand he brought in this Bill giving it a retrospective character in regard to the date from which it should start. The Under Secretary had answered a question to-day, and probably that answer would enter into the reply now. He said that a certain amount of this money had already been expended, some £80,000 or £90,000. It was a most improper proceeding if any money had in this way been expended, it touched the point of the control of the House of Commons over the expenditure of the kingdom. It was a monstrous thing that any money should be expended under a Bill before that Bill had been discussed. Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman would say that the amount of £90,000 was wanted, and if that were so, then it might have been obtained in two ways. It might have been taken from the last loan, or, better still, it might have been placed on the Estimates, and then it would have come before the House in a legitimate way. To ask the House to give the Bill a retrospective character would be to set a bad precedent on these financial operations. He appealed to the present Chancellor of the Exchequer and his predecessor to say if there was any precedent for such a proposal to meet a rash expenditure of the War Office.

*MR. BRODRICK said of the two courses the hon. Member suggested in regard to the expenditure since March 31, 1896, he was at a loss to know which was the more objectionable. First the hon. Member said the money might have been provided out of the balance of the Barrack Act 1890, thus diverting the money to different services altogether to those contemplated in that Act. The hon. Member's proposal was that the Government having judged themselves that the money under the Barracks Loan of 1890 should be applied to one service should deliberately apply it to another. That was a course the Government did not think it ought to take. An alternative suggestion was that the requirements should be included in the Votes for the year. The Bill was introduced last year and would have been carried had time permitted. The proposal to put the money on the Votes was negatived for the best of all possible reasons, that the House and the Public Accounts Committee should be able to judge of the expenditure on the different services, but to spread part of the expenditure over the Votes of 1896-7 and then subsequently to transfer the major portion of a large sum to the Bill would be an unsound system of finance and one that a Minister would adopt if he desired to hide what had been done from public criticism. It was a course that the Public Accounts Committee would certainly condemn and obviously would be a financial inconvenience. For these reasons the course proposed in the Bill had been adopted.

MR. T. R. BUCHANAN (Aberdeenshire, E.) said though he supported the Bill he did not quite think this retrospective proposal was one to be commended. The right hon. Gentleman had not stated whether there had been a precedent for a Loan Bill being brought before the House when part of the money borrowed under it had been already spent. Was this £86,000 spent upon new works?

*MR. POWELL-WILLIAMS said the sum of £86,000 was expended entirely upon fortifications under the Imperial Defence Act. The whole of the money provided by the Estimates having been expended, the War Office was in the position last year of either absolutely stopping the works which were going on, and in respect of which some contracts had been made, or of having to anticipate by a month or two the sanction of Parliament to continue the works. The latter course was adopted, it being absolutely necessary to take that step, and the sum of £86,000—wholly for fortifications—was expended in that way.

MR. BUCHANAN: Are we to understand that this £86,000 was spent in continuation works which had been undertaken by the Imperial Defence Act?

*MR. POWELL-WILLIAMS: Yes.

MR. BUCHANAN remarked that that answered his question as to whether these were new works or not, but he should like to have an answer to his query as to whether there was any precedent for bringing forward a Loan Bill borrowing money, and spending part of that money before the Bill had been passed?

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Sir MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, Bristol, W.) replied that there was. In the autumn of 1895 the House of Commons sanctioned the principle of the Uganda Railway, and a small sum was voted to commence operations. On the basis of that sanction a certain sum, he thought over £100,000, was expended in the first eight months of 1896, before the Act of last Session authorising the loan of £3,000,000 for the purpose became law, and such anticipatory expenditure was included in that Loan Act. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. BUCHANAN admitted that that, to a certain extent, was a precedent; but the assent of Parliament was given in the autumn of 1895.

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: So it has been for these works. The schemes of which the works comprised in the £86,000 form part, had all been previously sanctioned by Parliament.

MR. BUCHANAN: The assent of Parliament to the grant of the money had not been given.

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: The money had been spent upon the strength of the sanction already mentioned.

MR. BUCHANAN asked whether, it being found this further expenditure was necessary, the regular method would not have been either to have obtained the money from the savings of other War Office Votes, or to have come before the House with a Supplementary Estimate on the subject?

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER replied, No. As his right hon. Friend had said, it would have complicated the accounts in a manner that would have made them absolutely unintelligible to Parliament. They thought it a more regular financial proceeding, as Parliament had sanctioned the works and a large expenditure upon them had been by loan, that they should be carried on by loan in the same way.

MR. BUCHANAN, whilst recognising the force of what the Chancellor of the Exchequer said, remarked that the process which had been adopted weakened the control of Parliament over the expenditure of public money. He presumed that there was no more money left under the Imperial Defence Act for the completion of these works. It was thought proper, however, that the works should be completed, and money, not authorised by Parliament, had been expended for their completion, upon the trust that this Bill would be passed and the money made available. Surely that was a somewhat irregular process.

MR. McKENNA observed that, as he recollected the matter, it was stated, in reply to a Question last July or August, that this £86,000 had been spent upon Irish harbours. They now understood from the Chancellor of the Exchequer that that money was found partly under the Imperial Defence Act. But there was no authority in that Act to expend any money for the defence of Irish harbours, and there had never been any Parliamentary authority for the expenditure of a single penny of public money upon Irish harbours. In the case of the Uganda Railway the issue was brought before the House whether they would or would not sanction the expenditure, and the House agreed to do so. The principle was accepted, and the amount agreed upon, on a Supplemental Estimate, and the money subsequently ordered to be raised by loan, the expenditure since then having been defrayed out of the loan. In the case of the Uganda Railway there was a preliminary vote by the House for the expenditure of the money, but there had been no such vote for the expenditure of money in respect of Irish harbours, and no authority under the Imperial Defence Act for such expenditure. The money had been expended in the hope of the passing of a certain Measure. It was anticipated that the Measure would have passed last year, and upon that anticipation money had been expended without any prior authority as to principle or amount. In such a case as that he submitted that the right hon. Gentleman was without any defence to the Amendment put forward by his hon. Friend that this Act should not be retrospective. He did not think that the procedure of that House in relation to the provision for the construction of the Uganda railway was analogous to that which had been adopted in the present case. In the present case a portion of the money asked for by this Bill had been already spent, and now the Government came down to the House with this Measure and asked that under it sanction should be given to their illegal expenditure. He should certainly support the Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. T. P. WHITTAKER (York, W.R., Spen Valley) said that he had two great objections to this Bill. In the first place a portion of the money asked for under this Bill had been already spent before it was voted. There could be no excuse for the War Department having adopted such a course. They knew that the money would be required, and they ought to have come to the House and asked for sanction to spend it. Instead of taking that course they spent a portion of the money, and at the end of the financial year came to the House of Commons and asked for their sanction for an expenditure which had already been incurred. He regarded that as being a most irregular course of proceeding. He did not know whether the War Department had any experience of the principles which regulated local expenditure, but he might inform the right hon. Gentleman opposite that in case a local authority spent money in advance of their right to do so, the Local Government Board made the matter a serious cause of complaint. He thought that that was a sound principle of finance, and that it should be enforced against Government Departments as well as against local bodies. It was impossible under our present system to know precisely where we stood in the matter of these loan Bills, or to know whether they were sanctioning a past or a future expenditure. These loan Bills overlapped each other to such an extent that it was impossible to say when one loan was finished with or another began. It would be far better if one loan were to be cleared off distinctly and definitely before another was begun. From the Bill itself no definite information could be obtained. In his opinion they ought to vote money for future expenditure only. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. HARRISON said that he regarded this question as a very serious one, involving as it did the financial procedure of that House. It was not the ordinary case of an Estimate being slightly exceeded owing to the absolute necessities of the work, and then the Government asking Parliament to sanction that overdraft. In this case the expenditure was made under two Acts, the Imperial Defence Act, 1888, and the Barracks Act, 1890. Both Acts devoted not merely a capital sum to the work in question, but, by express enactment, declared that although amounts might, under certain conditions, specified under certain heads, be amalgamated and applied to other heads or subhead of expenditure, yet that the excess should not cause the total expenditure to exceed the total sum specified in the Schedule. There was, therefore, only a vote of the capital sum, but an express statutory prohibition against any excess over that sum being paid without the sanction of Parliament. In his view no Government Department should be allowed to expend money without the express sanction of Parliament. In the face of distinct statutory prohibitions, it might well be that as Parliament was voting a capital sum to be raised on loan for the purposes of these sums, the House might in principle have stipulated that the Department should be expressly prohibited spending more over a period of years unless they came back to Parliament and obtained sanction. In these circumstances he should certainly support the Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. COURTENAY WARNER (Stafford, Lichfield) said that he thought that the House was entitled to some more definite explanation from the Government as to the reasons that had led them to adopt the course they had done in reference to this matter, and why they had incurred an expenditure which had never been authorised by Parliament. The Government were endeavouring by means of this Bill to cover up the illegal conduct of which they had been guilty. He had never heard of any previous Measure founded upon the principles upon which this Bill was based.

MR. CHANNING thought they were entitled to some explanation. They had no information before them, it was all wrapped up in this mysterious policy of Conservative Ministries, which consisted of asking for vast sums of which no particulars were given to the House. They had no information as to whether there was or was not a surplus under the Imperial Defence Act. If they did not receive an adequate explanation they must record an emphatic protest against these items being withdrawn from control.

Question put, "That the words 'ninety-six" stand part of the clause."

The Committee divided. Ayes, 191; Noes, 75.—(Division List, No. 43.)

MR. KEARLEY moved the Amendment which stood in the name of the hon. Member for Londonderry, namely, in Sub-section (2) to leave out the word "Treasury," and to insert the words "House of Commons." The effect of the Amendment would be that before any moneys were issued the Secretary of State should submit an estimate to the House of Commons. The Treasury were altogether unreliable in such matters. In the Barracks Act of 1890 there was a clause of which this was an exact counterpart—

> "The Secretary of State shall submit to the Treasury an estimate of any expenditure proposed."

There was a large expenditure upon the Dublin Barracks. The House of Commons were given to understand that about £60,000 was to be spent on those barracks, but, notwithstanding that the Act provided that an estimate must be submitted, the work was proceeded with without an estimate. When the work was measured up the contractor claimed £150,000, and, after protesting, the Treasury paid that amount. He cited that as a justification for objecting to the Treasury having control of these estimates. The proper people to whom these estimates should be submitted were the Members of the House of Commons. It would be argued that that would be inconvenient, and that the Treasury were the proper body. But the Treasury had grossly neglected their duty.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: If I correctly understand the proposal of the hon. Gentleman it is that an estimate should be laid before the House of Commons in order that the House of Commons should decide upon it. Such a proposal would be clearly out of order, because that would be contrary to what the House has already decided. If the hon. Member merely proposes that an estimate of the expenditure should be laid on the Table of the House, for the information of hon. Members, that, of course, would be in order.

MR. KEARLEY said that that, of course, was his proposal. [A laugh.] If an estimate of the expenditure was submitted to the House year by year, the House would be able to keep in touch with that expenditure, which for many reasons was most desirable. So far, no Amendment had been accepted by the right hon. Gentleman. He thought he had given reasons why his own modest Amendment at least should be accepted. It only made the moderate demand that the Estimates should be submitted to the House instead of to the Treasury.

*MR. BRODRICK said he had already given an undertaking that what the hon. Gentleman desired should be done. The Government proposed to give the Treasury control in the first instance. But they would lay before the House every Session a statement of the expenditure under the Act for the preceding year, and an Estimate of the amount required for the ensuing year, so that the House would have every year opportunity for discussing the expenditure under the Act. The hon. Gentleman was under a delusion in supposing that the original Estimate of £60,000 for alterations in the Royal Barracks, Dublin, was intended to cover the whole work. It was an estimate for only part of the work. For years the engineers had been baffled in their search for the source of the continual outbreaks of disease in the barracks; and it was only by removing the soil in all parts of the barracks and discovering cesspools of which there had been no previous knowledge that the evil had been got rid of. That, of course, was a work for which it would have been impossible to contract. The Public Accounts Committee would be able to comment upon it, and, therefore, having given that pledge he hoped the hon. Member would consider his Amendment unnecessary.

*MR. WOODALL said he should vote with his hon. Friend. He thought the right hon. Gentleman opposite was hardly fair in raising an objection to the Amendment under consideration, by referring to another not before the Committee. Why was objection made to the return now proposed, and in a form approved by the Treasury? The Committee was already aware of the very large powers they were giving under the proposal of the Government. The power was given to divert money from works sanctioned to other works during the progress and expenditure over a long term of years. It was very important that the House of Commons should be constantly in touch with the expenditure of this money. Having conceded the principle he could not understand the refusal of the Government.

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER was very much surprised to hear that the hon. Member intended to support the Amendment. Really the Amendment did not carry out what the hon. Member who moved it desired. He did not understand that the hon. Member who had just sat down desired to get rid of the Treasury control. ["Hear, hear!"] The Amendment as it stood was intended to provide that the expenditure should be submitted as an annual Vote to the House of Commons. That was a different matter altogether. If the hon. Member desired to retain Treasury control, he ought not to press this Amendment but submit another at the end of the sub-section providing that the matter should be submitted to the House of Commons. He asked for the Chairman's ruling on the point.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said that was distinctly his view, but he felt that he could not stop the hon. Member.

MR. LOUGH said he had put down an Amendment which he understood had been accepted. What was the answer of the right hon. Gentleman? He said, because he objected to the next Amendment he could not accept the present one. He thought their contention was perfectly reasonable. The principle had been conceded, but the right hon. Gentleman had declined to give legal expression to it.

MR. WARNER said that the Committee wanted to be in a position to know what the Government were doing. Under the Bill as it stood, there would be no control by the House, no power over what was spent, the objects on which it was spent, or the time that was occupied in its spending.

Question put, "That the word 'Treasury' stand part of the clause."—The Committee divided:—Ayes, 181; Noes, 65.—(Division List, No. 44.)

MR. LOUGH moved to omit Sub-section (3). He said that the sub-section was pure surplusage, and the Bill would be greatly improved if it were left out. The sub-section dealt with excess of expenditure under any particular head of schedule, and said "There shall be no excess of expenditure under any particular head, unless." It was the word "unless" that he objected to. It invalidated the only useful provision the sub-section contained. The clause said:

> "Unless the Secretary to the Treasury and the Secretary of State shall be satisfied that there will be a saving."

It was a most problematical arrangement at the best. He thought that, the fact that there was a saving on one head should not sanction an expenditure of more than was required on another head. If something was saved in barracks it was no reason why another range should be built; and similarly, if, say, £500 was saved in defence works, why on earth should more than was required be spent on barracks? He thought that if any amount could be saved it should not be taken out of the Consolidated Fund at all.

*MR. BRODRICK said he found it rather difficult to believe that the hon. Gentleman was quite serious in moving this Amendment. In large works of this kind it was impossible to be certain that the contract amount would not be exceeded in some way or other, or that works in the way of foundations or otherwise would not require to be made good; and if such expenses could be met by a judicious saving in some other of the works contemplated under the Bill, surely there was no reason why it should not.

Amendment negatived.

Question put, "That Clause 1 stand part of the Bill."—The Committee divided:—Ayes, 173; Noes, 55.—(Division List, No. 45.)

Clause 2:—

BORROWING FOR PURPOSES OF ACT, AND ACCOUNTS AND AUDIT.

(1.) The Treasury may, if they think fit, at any time for the purpose of providing money for the issue of sums out of the Consolidated Fund under this Act, or the repayment to that fund of all or any part of the sums so issued, borrow money by means of terminable annuities for such period not exceeding thirty years from the passing of this Act as the Treasury may fix, and all sums so borrowed shall be paid into the Exchequer.

(2.) The said annuities shall be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament for army services; and if those moneys are insufficient, shall be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund or the growing produce thereof, but shall not be payable as part of the permanent annual charge for the National Debt.

(3.) The Secretary of State shall in every financial year cause to be made out and laid before the House of Commons an account, in the form required by the Treasury, of the money expended and borrowed and the securities created under this Act, and the accounts of expenditure under this Act shall be audited and reported upon by the Comptroller and Auditor General as appropriation accounts in manner directed by the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act, 1866.

MR. LOUGH moved, in Sub-section (1) to leave out the words "may, if they think fit, at any time," and to insert instead thereof the word "shall." He desired to remove the indefinite character of the clause as it stood. The clause was drawn so that the Treasury need not borrow for the purposes of the Act unless they liked, but they did not know what the Treasury would do if they did not borrow. He feared that there would be some objectionable alternative savings. In his opinion the phraseology of the Bill could not be defended.

*MR. BRODRICK opposed the Amendment, saying that the clause was drawn in the ordinary way.

*MR. HARRISON said he maintained that the rationale of the Bill was based on the supposition that this was capital outlay for permanent works which ought not to be provided for out of revenue, but out of capital. It was stated during the Debate that the whole of these works were of a permanent nature, and the sole argument in favour of asking Parliament to part with its annual control of expenditure was simply because this outlay was provided for in a lump sum, and to be voted once and for all. No portion of this £5,000,000 was proposed or ought to be taken out of revenue. The whole ought to be raised by loan, and the Amendment gave effect to this proposal, and prevented any part being paid for out of revenue, and unless it was adopted there was nothing in the Bill, as at present drawn, which prevented the money from being taken entirely or largely out of revenue.

MR. FLYNN said that he did not consider the explanation of the Under Secretary to be a satisfactory one. Either the money was to be raised by loan, or it was not; and the Committee wished to know how the Government stood exactly with regard to the Measure. Did the Government propose to come to Parliament annually for sanction as to the unexpended portion of the money, or did they think it was inadvisable to come to Parliament for a ratification of the sums that were to be expended. This large sum contained in the Bill was to be spread over an indefinite period, and it appeared that Parliament should not be competent to revise the expenditure. If that was the position of the Government in the matter, surely the words of the suggested Amendment were more in keeping with the object which the Government had in view than the words in the Bill itself.

And, it being midnight, the Chairman left the Chair to make his Report to the House.

Committee report Progress; to sit again upon Thursday.

PUBLIC HEALTH (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading (5th February) further adjourned till Thursday.

LAW OF EVIDENCE (CRIMINAL CASES) BILL.

Second reading deferred till Thursday.

SUPPLY [19TH FEBRUARY].

Resolutions reported.

ARMY ESTIMATES, 1897-8.

1. "That a sum, not exceeding £553,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge for the Pay, Extra Pay, Bounty, &c. (exclusive of Supplies, Clothing, &c.) of the Militia (to a number not exceeding 135,243, including 30,000 Militia Reserve), which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898."

2. "That a sum, not exceeding £76,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge for the Pay and Miscellaneous Charges of the Yeomanry Cavalry, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898."

3. "That a sum, not exceeding £627,200, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge for Capitation Grants and Miscellaneous Charges of Volunteer Corps, including Pay, &c. of the Permanent Staff, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898."

Resolutions agreed to.

4. "That a sum, not exceeding £639,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge for Transport and Remounts, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898."

Mr. FLYNN asked the Government if they could now say whether they would grant a return of the number of horses bought in Ireland last year as compared with the number in former years.

*Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS said he understood from what was said on Friday night that the hon. Gentleman wished the return to extend as far back as ten years. He was not yet in a position to say whether such a return could be furnished.

Dr. TANNER asked how it came to pass that the Austrians bought Irish horses, and the English Government absolutely refused to do so? In the matter of the sale of horses he maintained that his country was wronged.

Resolution agreed to.

5. "That a sum, not exceeding £2,553,400, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge for Provisions, Forage, and other Supplies, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898."

Mr. FLYNN said he desired to raise again the question of the supply of foreign meat supplied to the troops stationed in Ireland. The Financial Secretary to the War Office had stated in Committee that the maximum amount was 60 per cent. of foreign meat—it might be less, it could not be more—but he was informed that this did not accurately represent the facts. The hon. Gentleman seemed to think that, by informing the Committee that the War Office would make inquiries, an end had been put to the matter. The War Office had been postponing a fair answer to this very legitimate complaint for a long time, and they wished, before this Resolution was agreed to, for some full, satisfactory and, if possible, final explanation from the Financial Secretary. He would remind the House that they could get good Irish beef and mutton at very low—certainly at very reasonable—prices; and it was not economy—it was false economy—to supply these hard, frozen junks of indifferent beef to the soldiers of their Army.

*Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS said the hon. Member claimed that with regard to these purchases Ireland should have preferential treatment.

Mr. FLYNN said Ireland wanted nothing of the kind. All they wanted was fair play.

*Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS said, with reference to the hon. Member's statement that the troops were fed with junks of frozen meat, that the meat supplied to the troops was subjected to the severest inspection. It was of first-rate quality, and no complaint whatever from the troops reached the War Office. The proportion of frozen refrigerated beef was 60 per cent. at the outside, and the proportion of frozen mutton was one-seventh of the whole supply. He had pointed out to the hon. Member in Committee that, as a matter of fact, the proportion of fresh meat actually supplied to the troops was higher than that laid down in the contracts. The Secretary of State had appointed two officers specially to look into this matter in all its details, and to endeavour, if they could, to surmount the difficulties, which undoubtedly were great in certain directions, with a view to a further purchase of home produced meat becoming possible. He thought the hon. Member ought to be satisfied with that assurance. The hon. Member could find out for himself, by reference to any of the Army Service Corps authorities, that this matter was involved in the greatest difficulty, and that any premature dealing with it would result in a serious failure of the supply to the troops.

Resolution agreed to.

6. "That a sum not exceeding £1,016,400, be granted to Her Majesty to defray the Charge for the Staff for Engineer Services, and Expenditure for Royal Engineer Works, Buildings, and Repairs, at Home and Abroad (including Purchases), which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898."

7. "That a sum, not exceeding £118,600, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge for Establishments for Military Education, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898."

8. "That a sum, not exceeding £54,800, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge for Sundry Miscellaneous Effective Services, which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1898."

Resolutions agreed to.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (ALDERSHOT AND FARNBOROUGH) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

BERRIEW SCHOOL BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

SUPPLY.

Committee deferred till Wednesday.

MILITARY LANDS ACT (1892) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

TRUSTS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Committee deferred till Wednesday.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) (No. 2) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday 2nd March.

CORONERS' INQUESTS (RAILWAY FATALITIES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for committal to Standing Committee on Trade, etc. [17th February] further adjourned till Thursday.

SHOP ASSISTANTS (HALF-HOLIDAY) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

BENIN EXPEDITION.

On the Motion "That this House do now adjourn,"

Sir JOHN COLOMB (Great Yarmouth) asked the First Lord of the Admiralty, in view of the rumours in circulation, if the Government had any information in reference to the expedition to Benin?

The FIRST LORD of the ADMIRALTY: Yes; I am glad to say news has been received of the successful issue of the expedition and with very little loss of life. The following is from Consul General Moore:—

"Advanced from Ologbo, 14th, in two columns, joining up on 16th. Benin City taken afternoon 18th. Distant 24 miles. Running fight entire route. Great difficulty with carriers getting up water. Considerable resistance taking city; entire force brought up; numbers, 540 men; casualties since my No. 8:—One naval sergeant, one chief petty officer, two Marines, one sergeant Protectorate force, one scout, one carrier killed; one Marine officer, one warrant officer, one petty officer, four Marines, one seaman, six force, eight carriers, three scouts, one interpreter severely wounded; three Marines, two seamen, two force slightly wounded. City now deserted. Neither king nor Juju men captured. A few natives of Phillips's party have come in from bush. Dreadfully mutilated human sacrifices met en route, and in city crucifixions and mutilations. Juju houses, compounds surrounding them, reek with human blood several deep holes in compounds filled with corpses. Effects of Europeans, Phillips's party, found in King's palaver house. Admiral proposes remaining few days assist establish Protectorate force here with necessary supplies. Immediate action taking (sic) capture king and Juju men and pacify country. Inhabitants inclined come in. All survivors well. No fever." [Cheers.]

Adjourned at Twenty-five minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, 23rd February 1897.

LORD FARNHAM.

Petition of Somerset Henry Maxwell Lord Farnham claiming a right to vote at the elections of Representative Peers for Ireland: Read, and referred to the Lord Chancellor to consider and report thereupon to the House.

NEW PEER.

Sir Joseph Lister, Baronet, President of the Royal Society, having been created Baron Lister of Lyme Regis in the County of Dorset—Was (in the usual manner) introduced.

House adjourned at Half-past Four o'clock, to Thursday next, a Quarter past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 23rd February 1897.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

CLERICAL INCOMES (TAXATION).

Mr. JAMES ROUND (Essex, Harwich): To call attention to the Taxation of Clerical Incomes; and to move a Resolution.—[Tuesday, 23rd March.]

SHOPS (HOURS OF LABOUR).

Sir JOHN LUBBOCK (London University): To call attention to the excessively long hours of labour in shops; and to move a Resolution.—[Tuesday, 23rd March.]

TAXATION (LONDON) (GRANTS IN AID).

Mr. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.): To move, That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that a Select Committee be appointed to consider whether the amount annually received by London under Grants in Aid bears a just proportion to the amount contributed by London to the General Taxes of the Nation.—[Tuesday, 23rd March.]

QUESTIONS.

POST OFFICE MONEY ORDERS.

Mr. JAMES RANKIN (Herefordshire, Leominster): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, with regard to the fact that the cost of Post Office money orders under £3 has recently been raised from 2d. to 3d., whether he will consult the Postmaster General with a view to obtaining an abatement of the rate for members of friendly societies who largely transmit their payments, mostly under £1, by means of Post Office money orders?

Mr. E. STRACHEY (Somerset, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware of the loss inflicted on members of friendly societies by the increase of the commission on money orders under 20s. from 2d. to 3d.; and whether the charge cannot be reduced to what it was before the increase?

The SECRETARY to the TREASURY (Mr. R. W. Hanbury, Preston): So far as I have been able to ascertain it is not the fact that the affiliated societies, who form a large majority of the friendly societies, make any large use of money orders for the transmission of their remittances. It is, however, true that the Hearts of Oak Society, which is organised on a different basis from the other societies, and makes all its remittances from its head office in London, has represented that it has suffered serious inconvenience from the change. I find, however, that the society is in the habit of directing its members to remit small sums of 2s. 6d. and 1s., which could be remitted to them for 1d. and ½d. by postal orders, per money orders made payable at one particular sub-office in London; and I find that they have also given instructions to their members that money orders and postal orders should not be crossed. It is difficult to understand why the society thus deliberately imposes a charge of 2d. or 3d. on its members for the transmission of small sums of this amount, which could be forwarded with absolute security by a crossed postal order. If the case of the society stood alone the Postmaster General would not feel justified in withdrawing the recent alterations in the Money Order Regulations. It is found, however, that very poor persons who have been in the habit of transmitting portions of their wages or other sums to their families complain that they have suffered from the recent changes, and the Postmaster General is therefore prepared to consider whether it is possible, by an alteration in the machinery for the transmission of the smaller orders, so to reduce the cost as to enable him to reduce the commission on a £1 order to 2d. ["Hear, hear!"] Some little time may elapse before it may be possible to make this change, which may require the sanction of the Legislature before it can be effected.

Mr. J. McLEOD (Sutherland) asked whether any representations had been received from banking firms on the subject of these orders?

Mr. HANBURY said he was not aware that there had been any such representations.

NATIONAL SCHOOL TEACHERS (IRELAND).

Sir THOMAS LEA (Londonderry, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been drawn to meetings of the National School Teachers of Ireland, where resolutions have been passed requesting that the rate for school teachers' residences be reduced from 5 per cent. to the time extended from 35 to 61 years for repayment; and if the Government will accede to the request?

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central): Resolutions of the nature referred to have been received. I could not, however, say whether the Government are prepared to accede to the request of the teachers without having an opportunity of further considering the proposals put forward, as well as the views thereon of the Commissioners of National Education, who, I understand, have had the subject before them at their meeting today. I may also remind my hon. Friend that the question raised is largely a financial one affecting the Treasury, and that legislation would be necessary, in any event, to give effect to the proposals—even should it be considered desirable to make any alteration in the existing law.

BANN DRAINAGE.

Sir THOMAS LEA: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if the Government have any intention to introduce a Bill dealing with the Bann Drainage this year?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The reply to this Question is in the negative.

PILOT SERVICE, FALKLAND ISLANDS.

Mr. J. W. SIDEBOTHAM (Cheshire, Hyde): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether the Government maintains the pilot service of Port Stanley, Falkland Islands; whether there is need of a good strong tug boat for life-saving purposes and for assisting vessels in distress; and whether any vessels have been lost in close proximity to the port for lack of such a tug; and, if so, whether one can be placed in the port without delay?

The SECRETARY of STATE for the COLONIES (Mr. J. Chamberlain, Birmingham, W.): The Colonial Government maintains the pilot service at Port Stanley. My attention has not been called to the need of a tug boat, but I will cause inquiry to be made. Vessels have been lost in the proximity of Port Stanley, but I am not aware that their loss can be attributed to the want of a tug boat.

POLICE PATROL, SKIBBEREEN.

Mr. JAMES GILHOOLY (Cork Co., W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether complaints have reached him that a tenant farmer named John Ross, who was evicted from a farm at Lugacoppel, near Skibbereen, is continuously annoyed by a police patrol who visit the farm on which he at present resides, enter his house, which is situate several miles from the evicted farm, and question his children as to his (Mr. Ross's) movements; (2) whether he is aware that Mr. Ross repeatedly offered The O'Donovan of Lissard to allow the rent of the evicted farm which was £60, Poor Law valuation £38, to be fixed by the Land Commission or by arbitration, and solvent security given for its payment; and (3) whether, in view of Mr. Ross's offers of amicable arrangement, this action of the police will cease?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: It appears to be a fact that on two occasions in October last a police patrol entered the house of John Ross, but there is nothing unusual or exceptional in this, as the police very often when on duty enter houses and are cordially received. Of course when their presence is objected to they leave. I am informed that Ross's children were not questioned by the police as alleged. I have no knowledge as to the truth of the fact alleged in the second paragraph.

LAND COMMISSION (IRELAND).

SIR THOMAS LEA: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland when the Returns of the rents fixed by the Head Commission on appeal in November and December last will be laid upon the Table; and if the Returns will give the rents as fixed by the Sub-Commission and revised by the Head Commission?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The Returns of proceedings for November and December last have been presented to Parliament, but these Returns do not contain the information indicated, which is given in the Annual Report of the Land Commission. The preparation of the Monthly Returns in the form suggested would add considerably to the labour and expense of compilation, and would needlessly change the system of presenting the average annual results which has been followed since 1881. I trust, therefore, that my hon. Friend will not press for any alteration in the form of the existing Returns.

CAPTAIN DONELAN (Cork, E.): On behalf of the hon. Member for North Kilkenny (Mr. MCDERMOTT), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware of the great inconvenience suffered by the tenant farmers of County Kilkenny, owing to the delay in holding a Sub-Commission Court to deal with their cases; and whether he can state about what date these tenants may hope to have their cases inquired into?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: A Sub-Commission Court sat in September 1896, and disposed of all cases save two in the county referred to, received up to the 31st July preceding. A further sitting for the county will be held at the earliest date possible having regard to the claims of other districts. The applications received from this county since the 1st August last are not, I am informed, numerous.

POSTAL ACCOMMODATION (COUNTY LEITRIM).

MR. PATRICK M'HUGH (Leitrim, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he has received representations from the inhabitants of Cormongan, and adjoining districts, near Drumshanbo, County Leitrim, complaining of the want of postal accommodation; is he aware that the Postmaster at Drumshanbo, who is a shopkeeper, has opposed the establishment of a sub-post office at Cormongan; and will he have the matter inquired into with a view to granting the people of Cormongan the accomodation they ask for?

MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General has not received any representations in regard to the want of postal accommodation in the district referred to, and he is not aware that the postmaster at Drumshanbo is opposed to the establishment of a sub-post office at Cormongan. Inquiry will be made as to the possibility of establishing a post office at Cormongan, and the result shall be communicated to the hon. Member.

FOREIGN VESSELS IN BRITISH PORTS.

MR. W. F. LAWRENCE (Liverpool, Abercromby): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade, is he aware that it is alleged by the Liverpool Steam Ship Owners' Association, in their Annual Report for 1896, that vessels that have been transferred from the British to a foreign flag are sailed in and out of British ports loaded more deeply than they could have been loaded under the British flag; and what steps do the Board of Trade propose to take with a view of securing to British shipping the right to compete on equal terms with foreign shipping in the ports of the United Kingdom?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. C. T. RITCHIE, Croydon): I have seen the allegations to which my hon. Friend refers. Every effort is made by the Board of Trade to secure equal treatment under the law for British and foreign ships in the matter of loading at ports in the United Kingdom. In 1896 40 foreign ships were detained in our ports for overloading, as against 11 British, and, for bringing in deck loads in contravention of the law, 7 foreign ships were proceeded against as compared with only 1 British. I will cause every case which is brought under my notice to be carefully considered; but I am advised that the present law is not inadequate so far as overloading of foreign ships leaving our ports is concerned.

MR. WARR (Liverpool, East Toxteth): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) whether he is aware that, as stated by the Liverpool Steam Ship Owners' Association, in their Annual Report for 1896, a foreign vessel embarking only cabin passengers in this country is exempt from all the regulations applicable to British emigrant vessels, even although such foreign vessel may be carrying emigrants on the voyage upon which such cabin passengers are carried; (2) whether the German Emigrant Regulations permit of 30 per cent. more emigrants being carried with 40 per cent. less boat accommodation than is permitted by the British Regulations; and (3) whether the Board of Trade are prepared to take such steps, so far as British ports are concerned, as will enable British shipowners to compete on equal terms with foreign shipowners using such ports, and to enforce on foreign vessels such Regulations as are deemed necessary according to the British Regulations to insure the safety of the passengers carried from this country?

MR. RITCHIE: I am aware of the statements in the Report to which my hon. Friend refers, and I am advised that the effect of the law is as stated in his Question. I have no authentic information with regard to the present German Emigrant Regulations as compared with our own. The Board of Trade have no power under the existing law to interfere with a foreign emigrant ship unless she takes emigrants from a port in the United Kingdom, and as at present advised, I am not prepared to propose an alteration of the law on the subject. With reference to the last Question put to me by my hon. Friend, I have to say that I see great difficulty in applying to the ships of foreign nations without their consent the Regulations which we consider in this country to be desirable in the interests of safety.

INDIAN MAIL SERVICE.

SIR JOHN LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether, in view of the threatened difficulties to the transit of the Indian mails through France and other European countries on account of the plague at Bombay, and the possibility of the existing mail service being interfered with, arrangements will be considered for conveying the Indian mails from Port Said direct to this country; whether he is aware that the distance by sea between Port Said and Plymouth is almost identical with that between New York and Plymouth, which has been done by mail steamers in little more than six days; and whether, in the event of serious interruption of the overland mail service, either in consequence of quarantine regulations or international complications, an expeditious sea service can be provided?

MR. HANBURY: No objection has yet been raised to the transit of mails from India through Italy and France; and in the event of that route being interrupted hereafter the hon. Member may rest assured that every effort will be made to secure the conveyance of the mails to this country by sea as quickly as possible. His calculations as to distances are accurate, but the shortest voyage from New York to Plymouth occupied about six days and a half, and the average length of the passages was nearer seven than six days. He is of course aware that the conditions of the passenger trade have not developed nearly so high a speed on the lines to and from the East as on the New York line; that on the latter there are few steamers afloat that can accomplish the voyage to New York in a little over six days, and these are not available for the Mediterranean and Eastern service.

TRUCK ACT (RAILWAY COMPANIES).

MR. S. WOODS (Essex, Walthamstow): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is aware that under the Truck Act, 1896, several of the large railway companies and some of the printing trades have posted up in their works long lists of new additional fines to be taken from their employees' wages, to which fines the workmen object; and if he will take the necessary steps to remedy the grievances of which the workmen complain.

Mr. J. WILSON (Durham, Mid.) said before the right hon. Gentleman answered this Question he would ask him another anent this matter—namely, whether deductions are made legal simply by posting a list of them without previous consultation with the workmen and their agreement in such fines being imposed; and whether, as a primary step, workmen were consulted and their assent obtained to the breaking of an existing contract?

*The SECRETARY of STATE for the HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir Matthew White Ridley, Lancashire, Blackpool): I do not quite follow the Question of the hon. Member, but perhaps he will communicate with me afterwards. In reference to the Question on the Paper I have to say no, I am not aware that any new additional fines have been posted up. What has happened is that the companies, under the obligation imposed by the Act, have posted all the fines which they held themselves formerly entitled to inflict. The result of this compulsory publication has been to make these fines subject to criticism and enable such as are objectionable to be abolished. I am taking steps at the present time to obtain information with the view to removing any grievances that may exist under the Act.

Mr. J. WILSON repeated his Question.

*Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: No posting of notices makes fines legal.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): Will the right hon. Gentleman say, does the Truck Act of 1896 impose any fines whatever on the workmen?

*Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: No, it imposes no fines whatever. ["Hear, hear!"] What it does, as I have more than once explained, is, it compels the publication of fines not previously illegal in order that it may be seen if those fines are now really legal or not under the other provisions of the Act.

Mr. J. SAMUEL (Stockton): Does not the Act give power to impose fines? [Hon. Members: "No, no."]

*Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: No; it does exactly the contrary. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. LOUGH: Will the right hon. Gentleman say what evidence is there that these fines now posted formerly existed?

*Mr. SPEAKER said these Questions were travelling into irregularity.

Mr. J. SAMUEL: Is the right hon. Gentleman in a position to inform the House of the number of applications under Section 9—

*Mr. SPEAKER ruled that notice should be given of this Question.

PERTH AND DUNDEE PRISONS.

Mr. C. L. ORR-EWING (Ayr Burghs): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether he can state the number of prisoners which can be accommodated in Perth and Dundee Prisons respectively, and if he also can state the number of prisoners in each prison on 1st February 1897?

*The LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. Graham Murray, Buteshire): The cell accommodation in Perth is:—

Ordinary cells	529
Cells for female convicts ...	197
Criminal lunatics in rooms ...	87
Total for Perth ...	813

In Dundee—

Ordinary cells	116

On 2nd February there were confined in Perth Prison—

Ordinary prisoners ...	68
Female convicts	14
Criminal lunatics	64
Total for Perth ...	146

And in Dundee Prison, on the same date, there were—

Ordinary prisoners ...	108
Making in all	254

Mr. ORR-EWING: I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether he can state if an addition is now being built at Dundee Prison; and whether, in view of the fact that the journey from Dundee to Perth occupies 30 minutes in the train, Dundee Prison is a feeder for Perth Prison?

*The LORD ADVOCATE: Yes, Sir; when Dundee Prison was taken over it had 153 cells, many of which needed improvement. In the alterations 37 cells were lost. The intention is to replace these, and to add 38 more cells by prison labour. Dundee, during 1896, fed Perth Prison with 625 prisoners; but the intention is to make the transfers less frequent.

LOAN FUND SOCIETIES (IRELAND).

CAPTAIN DONELAN: On behalf of the hon. Member for North Longford (Mr. JUSTIN MCCARTHY), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether he is aware that, owing to serious defalcations and frauds on the part of the late senior clerk of the Edgwarthstown Loan Fund Society, the Loan Fund Board in Dublin dissolved that Society about a year ago; (2) whether the books of the Society were regularly inspected by the Loan Fund Inspector, who failed to perceive irregularities in the accounts, and expressed no disapproval of the system of management; and (3) whether, having regard to the fact that, owing to the dissolution of the Society and the difficulty of collecting outstanding debts by a receiver, who now desires to be relieved of his duties, the debenture holders are likely to be heavy losers, any relief or compensation will be given to them for the loss of securities through defalcations and frauds which the Inspector of the Loan Fund Board, a body constituted by statute, and whose officers are Government officials, failed, from negligency or other cause, to detect for a long period of time?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The facts, I am informed, are as stated in the first paragraph. The books of the Society were examined periodically by the Inspector of the Loan Fund Board, and, consequent upon his reports to the Board, communications were addressed to the Trustees and Committee of the Society on the 10th March 1893, 21st March 1894, and 11th March 1895, directing their attention to various irregularities in its management and the conduct of the late clerk. As regards the third paragraph, I must repeat that neither the officers of the Loan Fund Board nor those of the local societies working in connection with the Board are civil servants of the Crown, and that Government exercises no control over the proceedings of the Board or of the local bodies. The Government cannot accept any responsibility in the matter, and cannot relieve or compensate debenture holders who may sustain loss under circumstances such as indicated in the Question.

CONVICTION FOR PERJURY (POLICE CONSTABLE MURRAY).

MR. E. H. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has released Thomas Murray, a police constable at Hampstead, who, on the 24th November last was convicted of perjury at the Central Criminal Court, and sentenced by the Common Serjeant of London to nine months' imprisonment with hard labour; if so, whether Murray has received a free pardon, a conditional pardon, or a remission; and whether he advised the Crown to exercise its prerogative in this case on grounds affecting the conviction, or in simple mitigation of sentence?

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: Yes, Sir; Murray has been released, Her Majesty being pleased, on my advice, to grant a remission of the remainder of the sentence. The question whether a free pardon should also be granted is now under my consideration. The grounds on which my advice to the Crown was based were grounds affecting the conviction, and included certain important facts which were not before the Court.

VOLUNTEER DRILL HALLS, ABERDEEN.

CAPTAIN PIRIE (Aberdeen, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury on what grounds the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury have declined to make payments in lieu of local rates in respect of Volunteer drill halls in Aberdeen and elsewhere; and whether, seeing that the local authorities are prevented from recovering such rates from the commandants of the regiments by a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Government have considered the desirability of making such payments in future; and, if so, what decision has been arrived at?

MR. HANBURY: The invariable rule is for the contributions in lieu of rates to be charged on the particular fund which has to pay for maintaining the property. The maintenance of Volunteer property falls on Volunteer funds, towards which the taxpayer is only one out of many contributors. In conjunction with my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary of the War Office I have carefully considered the question whether a primâ facie case has, under these circumstances, been made out for imposing a rating contribution on the taxpayer, and we have come to the conclusion that it has not. The general taxpayer already foregoes his similar claims for Income Tax, Schedule A, and Inhabited House Duty; and, considering that the Volunteers are primarily a voluntary and local force, the local ratepayer may reasonably be expected to do the same in regard to the rates. This was the view taken by Parliament in 1863, when it expressly exempted Volunteer storehouses from rates.

EVICTION (COUNTY MONAGHAN).

MR. D. MACALEESE (Monaghan, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether he is aware that Lord Rathdonnell has declined to accept the offer of purchase made by his evicted tenant, Margaret M'Manus, of Mullanavanog, County Monaghan; (2) on what date was M'Manus's proposal made, and on what date did Lord Rathdonnell communicate to the Land Commission his intention not to entertain the offer; and (3) did any document pass from the Land Commission to M'Manus about the 13th of November last accepting her as tenant at 20 years' purchase?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: An application dated 6th October 1896, was made by Margaret M'Manus, but not received by the Land Commission till the 17th of that month. A notice was served on the landlord on the 13th November, and an objection dated the 5th instant was received from him in the office of the Land Commission on the 6th instant. The reply to the last paragraph is in the negative.

COLONIAL PREMIERS (VISIT TO LONDON).

MR. J. F. HOGAN (Tipperary, Mid): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether a decision has been arrived at in the matter of holding an Imperial Conference, during the visit of the Colonial Premiers to London, for the discussion and determination of questions of common Colonial concern; and, if so, whether he can give a general indication of the subjects to be discussed?

SIR G. BADEN-POWELL (Liverpool, Kirkdale) also asked the right hon. Gentleman whether he could now state in outline his scheme, proposed some time ago, for a conference on matters of mutual and Imperial interest between the Premiers of the several self-governing colonies who would visit England in connection with the celebration of the 60th year of Her Majesty's reign?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I will say in answer to both hon. Gentlemen that there is no question of holding what is called an Imperial Conference, but, of course, if the Premiers come, the Government will take the opportunity of discussing with them any matters of common interest which any of them may desire to raise. I may further say that up to the present time I have not received replies from five of the colonies out of the 11. As soon as I receive the whole of the replies I propose to lay them on the Table, with my own letter of invitation, and I think until I am able to do that I should be glad if all other questions would be postponed. [" Hear, hear!"]

IRISH MAIL SERVICE.

MR. BERNARD MOLLOY (King's Co., Birr): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, if he is aware that the mail train postal service from this country and from Dublin to Birr, Roscrea, and Nenagh has not been altered for some 40 years, and that the existing arrangements are such as to cause the greatest inconvenience to a district comprising about 70,000 inhabitants; and that owing to the present mail arrangements the practical effect is that for a distance of 60 miles from Dublin it requires two days for sending a letter and receiving a reply over that short distance; whether the claims made by the inhabitants of this district, and contained in a petition presented to the Postmaster General last July, will be satisfied before the conclusion of any new terms with the Great Southern and Western Railway of Ireland, and before the issue of any new time table; whether he will enforce the expenditure of some portion of the contract sum with the railway for the purpose of improving the railway connections with the above-named districts; and whether the existing post-offices of Birr, Roscrea, and Nenagh are now self-supporting?

Mr. HANBURY: In the short notice which the hon. Member has given of his Question, the Postmaster General has not been able to ascertain whether the postal service from this country and from Dublin to Birr, Roscrea, and Nenagh has or has not been altered for 40 years. He is not aware that the existing arrangements cause the greatest inconvenience to the district, and it certainly is not the fact that in every case it requires two days for sending a letter and receiving a reply to and from Dublin. The difficulty in serving these places is that it would not be desirable to add a stop at Ballybrophy to the time table of the Cork Day Mail, and that in consequence the Day Mail for Roscrea, Nenagh, and Birr is necessarily forwarded by the succeeding train. Whether any other arrangement can be made at a cost which would be justified will be considered in connection with the revision which is now engaging the attention of the Department. There has been no time to inquire whether the post offices at Birr, Nenagh, and Roscrea are self-supporting.

INDIAN FAMINE.

Mr. M. M. BHOWNAGGREE (Bethnal Green, N.E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India if he has received any information regarding the mortality caused in connection with the famine in the Central Provinces and other districts of India up to a recent date; and, if so, to furnish the number and other details regarding the same?

The SECRETARY of STATE for INDIA (Lord George Hamilton, Middlesex, Ealing): I have received the following information regarding mortality in the Central Provinces:—Total deaths in 1895, 349,137; 1896, 468,469. The latter year was exceptionally unhealthy, and it appears that cholera deaths were 37,479 in excess over those in 1895; fever, 59,342; diarrhœa and dysentery, 9,566; small-pox, 1,103; other causes, 11,842. This mortality gives for the whole year a death-rate of 36·03 per 1,000 in 1895, and of 49·03 per 1,000 in 1896 on the present population.

Mr. B. Molloy.

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH (Flintshire): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether, in view of the immense extent of the famine area in India and the heavy drain it will entail on the finances of that country, the Government will take into consideration the expediency of making a grant in aid of India from the Exchequer of this country?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) said that he had nothing to add to the answer which he gave to a similar question on January 21. He would remind the hon. Member that in a few weeks the Finance Minister of India would make his official statement to the House.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS BILL.

Major RASCH (Essex, S.E.): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education whether the Government would favourably consider a proposal to include Clause 24 of the Education Bill of last Session in the Bill now before the House?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I do not think it would be consistent with the Resolution the House has passed, to enlarge the scope of the Bill in the direction the hon. Gentleman desires. There are other objections also to the course he suggests.

Mr. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.) asked the right hon. Gentleman whether the Government proposed to take Wednesday, March 10, the day on which the Irish Land Bill was the first order?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I think I indicated in answer to a question put yesterday that we could not interrupt the business of the Committee stage of the Education Bill for a lengthy discussion on other matters. ["Hear, hear!"] Whether the Education Bill will be finished by the 10th of March it is impossible for me to say. The Bill will be taken on Thursday next and will go on de die in diem. The 10th of March would be the eighth day of discussion in Committee, and I should have thought that after eight days a short Bill might be easily disposed of. ["Hear, hear!"] But perhaps the hon. Gentleman has better information than I have.

Mr. DILLON said the right hon. Gentleman used a rather ambiguous expression when he said the discussion on the Education Bill could not be interrupted by a lengthened discussion on another Bill. Was the Irish party to receive this treatment as a reward for their support of the Education Bill?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY replied that the hon. Member boasted of having supported the Government on the Education Bill, but he would remind him that he opposed every attempt of the Government to find time to discuss it. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.]

EGLOSKERRY PARISH (CORNWALL).

MR. THOMAS OWEN (Cornwall, Launceston): I beg to ask the Attorney General, the County Council of Cornwall having, in 1894, held an inquiry to decide whether the parish of Egloskerry should be transferred from the Camelford Union to the Launceston Union, in April 1896 the clerk of the County Council sent an account for the expenses to the Chairman of the parish meeting, who has been advised that to pay the same would be illegal, and so, if on no other ground, because the claim was not made within 12 months, and that an auditor would be bound to disallow the payment if made; and, will he say, for the guidance of the parish meeting, whether they legally can pay this claim, and whether they must pay it?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir RICHARD WEBSTER, Isle of Wight): I have been unable from the information contained in the Question of the hon. Member to trace the cause to which he refers, or to obtain sufficient information to answer the Question; but if, as I imagine, it relates to an inquiry at St. Gennys, it appears that the County Council had no power, under Section 36, to make an order for the transfer, and being an application which they had no power to entertain, the expenses of the inquiry were not recoverable from the Parish Council.

FINANCIAL RELATIONS (GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND).

MR. J. J. CLANCY (Dublin Co., N.): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury, in reference to his statement on 16th February, that he saw nothing in the terms of reference to the new Commission on Financial Relations to preclude that body from inquiring into the amounts expended in England, Ireland, and Scotland respectively, of the sums voted for purposes common to the United Kingdom in the event of the Commission thinking the inquiry relevant, whether he will so alter the terms of reference as not to leave the point of relevancy open to doubt?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: As I understand the hon. Gentleman's Question he desires me to so alter the terms of the Commission that it should be obligatory on them to inquire into the subject mentioned in the Question. I do not think that would be a proper course to pursue, and I cannot hold out any hope that we shall be able to pursue it. ["Hear, hear!"]

CRETE.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have received any information as to the conduct the Government of Turkey intend to adopt as towards neutral ships during the state of war now existing between Turkey and Greece; and, in particular, whether Her Majesty's Government have reason to believe that Turkey will exercise her right to issue commissions to privateers and her right to capture Greek merchandise in neutral vessels on the high seas; and whether Her Majesty's Government propose to issue any Proclamation of neutrality?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. G. CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): There is no indication that the Turkish Government are intending to take any hostile measures at sea; and, as the Turkish Representative remains at Athens and the Greek Representative at Constantinople, it cannot be said that a state of war now exists.

MR. F. S. STEVENSON (Suffolk, Eye): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in view of the fact that the Powers made arrangements to prevent an attack upon Canea, what steps they took to prevent a sally of the Turkish troops from that town for the purpose of attacking the Cretan position?

MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.): Before the right hon. Gentleman answers, I should like to ask him a question of which I have given him private notice—namely, whether it is true, as stated in the dispatch of Colonel Vassos, that the Turkish troops sallied from Canea to attack the advanced position of the insurgents, or to defend the position held by Turks, and whether this was done by the order or with the approval of the representatives of the Powers?

Mr. CURZON: I only received the private notice of the hon. Gentleman's question two minutes ago. [Ministerial laughter.] With all respect to him and the House, I cannot undertake to answer these intricate questions on so short a notice, and I must ask him kindly to put it on the Paper. With regard to the question on the Paper, we have received no official intimation of any sally of the Turkish troops from Canea.

Mr. CHANNING: Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that the dispatch of Colonel Vassos was reported in The Times of yesterday?

Mr. CURZON: I have no official information of the dispatch in The Times.

Mr. F. S. STEVENSON: I beg to ask the right hon. Gentleman who gave the signal for the bombardment of the Cretan position by the combined fleet of the Powers?

Mr. CURZON: We do not know who gave the signal. The course of procedure was arranged between the admirals of the international squadron, and presumably the senior naval officer, who is the Italian admiral, gave the signal.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: Is the Italian Admiral in command of the squadron, including the British ships? [Cheers.]

Mr. CURZON: I am not a naval authority. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will address his question to another quarter. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: I will ask the First Lord of the Admiralty—

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Gentleman must put down notice of the Question, if addressed to another Minister.

Sir WILLIAM HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.): On behalf of the hon. Member for Stirling Burghs (Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman), I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he can lay upon the Table the instructions given to the British Admiral in Cretan waters?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: It would not be possible under existing circumstances to lay the instructions on the Table of the House. It has never been the practice, so far as I know, to make public the instructions given to military or naval officers on active duty, and the inexpediency of such a course would be greatly augmented in the present case, owing to the fact that we are acting in concert with other Powers, and it is impossible at present to lay on the Table the whole series of Papers bearing on the events in Crete.

Mr. THOMAS BAYLEY (Derbyshire, Chesterfield): Have the Government any official Report from the British Admiral in Cretan waters of what took place on Sunday last?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: Does the hon. Gentleman mean telegraphic report?

Mr. THOMAS BAYLEY: Yes.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I think any question such as that of the hon. Member should be put upon the Paper.

Sir E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall) asked whether the Government had confirmation of the statement in The Times of to-day that over 1,100 Mussulmans, including many women and children, had been massacred in cold blood in Sitia, and that 2,500 Mussulmans were besieged at Selinos by Cretan insurgents and were in great peril, and whether the Great Powers proposed to take effective steps to save these unfortunate people from massacre?

Mr. CURZON: There has been no confirmation of the alleged massacre at Sitia, and Her Majesty's Consul reported on the 19th that the fate of the Mussulmans of one village only in that district—whose population must be far inferior in number—remained unknown. Inquiry on the spot was about to be held. With regard to Selino, the following two telegrams, dated February 22nd, have been received from Sir Alfred Biliotti:—

"Just returned with Russian and Italian Consuls from Selino district, where fight of extermination is carried on between the two sects. Mussulmans in very critical position. 1,700, with 246 soldiers and three mountain guns concentrated at Candamos four hours from sea-shore, where uninterrupted firing is exchanged for the last fortnight. At Spaniaco, an hour from sea, and Selino Castelli, 750 Mussulmans, 242 soldiers, and three mountain guns.

Christians refused provisions being sent to Candamos Mussulmans, but consented in writing to suspension of arms during seven days, and free passage to blockaded Mussulmans, provided that soldiers with arms and baggage were also withdrawn together. This declaration is under reserve of non-appearance of Greek troops. Candamos evacuation, which we shall submit to authorities, very dangerous, owing to hatred and extreme distrust of both races, which has increased after massacre by Christian escort of more than 100 Mussulmans from village of Sarakina, and of 12 Christians at Selino Castelli. We crossed to Candamos and back under Christian fire, although we had notified arrival and shown two white flags. On return to Selino Castelli found Christians firing from fresh positions above, bullets reaching boats. Organised exchange of prisoners. Doctors attended 10 wounded. Italian and Russian colleagues who went with me to Selinos send identic telegrams." (2.) "My Russian and Italian colleagues and I have done our best to calm the Christians with regard to the Cretan Question, giving them to understand that its solution depended exclusively on the Great Powers. This declaration produced a great impression upon the insurgents, but is not sufficient to save from a certain death the 2,000 Mussulmans blockaded in Candamos, nor perhaps the 1,000 at Spaniaco and Selino Castelli, if a Greek ship of war should make her appearance there. From a lengthy interview which we had with the insurgent chiefs, I gathered that the present outbreak of the Christians has not been caused by any serious local reason, but by the belief that horrible massacres had taken place in Canea, and by encouragement received from the presence of Greek ships of war and soldiers in Crete. Notwithstanding that the Greek flag is flying over the Christian camp of Selino, Christians and Mussulmans, last of whom repeatedly declared that they placed all their hopes in Europe, have openly expressed the wish that mixed occupation by the six Powers should be extended to their district as the only means of restoring order. They both stated that 300 troops would be sufficient for the purpose. My Russian and Italian colleagues are telegraphing similar information to their Governments."

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT asked whether the Government could not authorise the dispatch of 300 troops to save the lives of these unfortunate men, whose lives, it was said, were in the greatest danger?

MR CURZON: That is a matter which clearly depends on an agreement between the Powers as to which I could not give an answer at this moment.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT said he would repeat the question on Thursday.

*MR. C. J. DARLING (Deptford) asked the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether his attention had been called to a passage in the speech of M. Hanotaux in the French Chamber yesterday, as reported in The Times, in which the French Foreign Minister was reported to have said:—

> "M. Millerand thinks that we should have entered the Dardanelles and seized in his palace the man responsible for so many calamities. Such a proposal was made by one Power at the end of November, 1895, but it was set aside."

He wished to ask the Under Secretary whether that proposal was made, by what Power it was made, and who the man was it was proposed to seize?

MR. CURZON: That is not the question of which my hon. Friend gave me notice. [Opposition cries of "Read!"]

*MR. DARLING: I think I did ask whether England was the Power that made the proposal.

MR. CURZON: The answer to my hon. Friend's Question is in the negative.

*MR. DARLING asked, since it was not England, would the right hon. Gentleman state what was the Power that made the proposal referred to?

MR. CURZON: No, Sir. It is no part of my duty to answer in this House for any Foreign Power. ["Hear!"]

MOTIONS FOR THE ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.

*SIR C. DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean) said he wished to ask a question of Mr. Speaker relating to the order of proceedings in the House. What was the proper course to be followed on a Motion for the Adjournment of the House being made after Questions? Should not the pleasure of the House first be consulted before the question was put as to the hon. Member moving the Adjournment having the requisite support?

*MR. SPEAKER said that the right hon. Baronet had correctly stated the Standing Order, and the course he always endeavoured to pursue. But sometimes he was anticipated by the House. He always first put the question whether it was the pleasure of the House that the Adjournment should be moved, and the proper course for hon. Members was to retain their seats and say "Yes" or "No." If there was no negative the House was taken to consent generally to the discussion. Hon. Members might differ upon the subject matter of the proposed discussion, and yet agree that it was a proper subject for discussion. So he hoped hon. Members would strictly observe the Standing Order, and, on the question whether it was their pleasure that leave be given, retain their seats, only rising, in case of a negative, on his putting the further question whether the hon. Member who wished to move the Adjournment had the requisite support.

MOTIONS.

WAREHOUSEMEN'S CERTIFICATES.

Bill to define the position and obligations of a Warehouseman who issues a Certificate of the deposit of a Warrant for the delivery of goods, and to render the title of the holder on such a document more complete, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Martin, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. Alban Gibbs, Mr. Faithfull Begg, Mr. Howard, and Mr. Clough; presented, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Monday, 29th March, and to be printed.—[Bill 141.]

JURIES DETENTION.

Bill to permit Juries to separate in cases of felony, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Lloyd Morgan, Mr. H. D. Greene, Mr. Bucknill, Mr. Walton, Mr. Robson, and Mr. Samuel Evans; presented, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Tuesday next, and to be printed.—[Bill 142.]

PRISON-MADE GOODS (IMPORTATION).

Bill to restrict the Importation of Goods made by Foreign Convicts and Felons under duress, and unfairly competing with free labour in Great Britain and Ireland, ordered to be brought in by Sir Howard Vincent, Sir Frederick Seager Hunt, Mr. Labouchere, Mr. Muntz, Mr. Havelock Wilson, Mr. Maclure, Mr. Boulnois, Mr. Field, Major Rasch, Sir Benjamin Stone, and Sir Henry Howorth; presented, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time To-morrow, and to be printed. —[Bill 143.]

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

JUDICATURE ACTS.

MR. ATHERLEY-JONES (Durham, N.-W.) rose "to call attention to the unsatisfactory working of the Judicature Acts," and to move:—

"That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty praying her to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the administration of justice under the Judicature Acts, with a view to secure greater efficiency and economy."

The hon. and learned Member said he was afraid the subject upon which he had the honour to address the House was not of a fascinating character. Therefore he should endeavour to make as small a demand as possible upon its patience. But although the subject was not fascinating itself it was, he was perfectly sure, a very important one, because it affected the administration of justice, which he imagined to be almost paramount to any other institution in the country. He claimed some right for the Motion which stood in his name for the reason that a period of more than 25 years had elapsed since there had been an inquiry into the administration of justice in this country. Prior to that there were frequent inquiries into the mode in which justice was administered, and they from time to time led to changes in procedure not only in the High Court of Justice but also in the inferior Courts. The different changes culminated in the Judicature Act of 1873, which, with the amending Acts, constituted the procedure upon which the business of the High Court was conducted. It was a remarkable fact that, since 1873, there had not only been amending Acts, but rules piled upon rules, constituting a vast volume of detailed procedure and rules under which justice had to be administered. The following conditions were absolutely essential for the effective administration of justice: that it should be honest, expeditious, economic; and that the tribunals of the country should be popular so far as litigation or judicial proceeding could in any sense be considered popular. With the exception of the first condition, honest administration, he believed that every other condition was absolutely violated. He yielded to no one in his appreciation of the integrity of Her Majesty's justice, but the system was so cribbed, cabined, and confined, and so surrounded with technical and detailed obstructions that the result was very little removed from chaos. The system of judicature in this country, possibly with the single exception of France, was the most extravagantly expensive in the world. On the average every year one in 24 of the population of Great Britain was engaged in litigation.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir RICHARD WEBSTER, Isle of Wight): Civil litigation?

MR. ATHERLEY-JONES said he referred to litigation of a civil character in all the Courts. He believed that percentage was confined to civil proceedings only. They paid to the Law Lords, excluding the Lord Chancellor, no less a sum in salaries than £24,000 a year. The House of Lords as a working tribunal commanded respect, but he pointed out that the number of appeals which came annually before them averaged only between 60 and 70, while the number of appeals annually disposed of averaged only between 40 and 50. Ireland contributed annually only five of these appeals, and the number of appeals sent from the colonies had been steadily decreasing within the last two or three decades. The contrast with other countries, not only in respect of the remuneration paid to the judicial officers, but in respect to the work done, was most startling. He would turn to another tribunal, the continued existence of which was little short of a public scandal—the Railway Commission. In addition to the employment of one of Her Majesty's most distinguished judges on that Commission, there were two judicial officers paid £3,000 a year each, and there was also a staff. The amount of business that was done, however, by that Commission during the last year for which they had a report took only 21 days, and the number of cases disposed of amounted to the magnificent total of 24. He would suggest an immediate reform in regard to that Commission, because they might introduce the system that obtained with the Admiralty—a Judge of the High Court with assessors. The work would then be done at probably one-fiftieth of the present expense. The Attorney General would not deny that the Court of Admiralty performed its work to the satisfaction of litigants. As showing the unpopularity of the administration of justice in this country it was a curious fact, with the single exception of the Chancery Division, there had been an absolute shrinkage of litigious work in all the Courts. On the other hand, the business of the County Courts, which, except in a few isolated cases, did their work with expedition and gave satisfaction, had steadily increased. Going only as far back as the years 1873 and 1877, there was one case in the High Court to every 289 of the inhabitants, whereas now the number of cases had fallen to one in 360. Everybody knew that in the last few years the amount of commercial work had shrunk to insignificance, although every effort was made by the High Court Judges properly to encourage commercial work. The universal experience, not merely in the metropolis but throughout the circuits, was that the shrinkage of High Court work was due not so much to the amount of work which had been thrown upon the County Courts, but to the tendency of commercial bodies to withdraw their work from the cognisance of the Courts in favour of those domestic tribunals which they had themselves created, although they recognised that in those domestic tribunals the duties involved were not discharged so effectively as they would be in the High Courts. In the Court of Appeal the Judges were paid no less than £31,000 a year. From 1821 to 1825 there were 814 cases in that Court, and from 1891 to 1894, the number had shrunk to 574 cases. The explanation was that commercial men were shunning the High Court of Justice and were more and more availing themselves of the County Courts. So small was the amount of work to be done in the Court of Appeal that it was a common thing to find in the newspapers at least every fortnight the announcement that the Court was not sitting; and that notwithstanding the increase in population and in National Income, there was a great deal of work to be done, and a large amount of arrears of business to be made up in the Courts could not be denied. But why were not the Law Lords, who only sat for 50 days in the year, employed in assisting in disposing of the congestion of business which constantly arose in the inferior courts of the High Court of Justice. He did not think that the Law Lords, who were paid such large salaries, would be callous to any call made upon them of that kind in the public interest. But perhaps the greatest disgrace in our present judicial system was the vacations. What would be said if they were to close all the hospitals in London for nearly three months in the year, and to say that the doors of those hospitals should not be open except for cases of life and death? Yet that was precisely the position in the High Court of Justice. The doors of the High Court of Justice were closed from the 12th of August to the 24th of October, and for that period of three months no suitor could approach the Courts except in a case of utmost emergency, which was dealt with by the Vacation Judge. There was no parallel for such a state of things in any other civilised country. Was it not an absolute scandal that the Courts should be closed for five months during the whole of the year, and that they should remain closed for three months at one particular period? He did not blame the Judges, he blamed the system. No one grudged the Judges reasonable leisure. Their work was arduous, and they were necessarily men who had been called to their positions at a late period of their lives. But it was incumbent upon the Government to abolish this archaic system of long vacation and substitute for it a system of reasonable vacation. Again, the number of days on which the Judges sat was absolutely insignificant. Would the House believe that the Judges who were paid £5,000 per annum each, and in addition to that, £7 10s. per day for every day they were absent from London on Circuit, did not sit in London on an average for more than 115 days in the year per Judge, and that the total number of days they sit on Circuit or in London was less than 200 days per Judge? A Judge of a foreign country to whom he related these facts, said:—

> "Why, we sit in our Courts practically daily throughout the year, and we are not paid anything approaching the remuneration that is paid to your Judges."

It was a great scandal that in this country a complete and exhaustive return of the number of days the Judges sat could not be provided, as they were provided in France, and Italy, and Germany. In this country it was quite a matter of grace whether or not the Judges supplied the information. Indeed, two or three Judges absolutely refused to make such a return, and the consequence was that the number of days the Judges sat was mere guess work. He would also point out that this return of 200 days per annum per Judge was rather delusive. A Judge might only appear in Court or in Chambers for half an hour, and still it was put down as a day's attendance. Again, he did not blame the Judges but the system. But he would point out that though the Judges enjoyed this large amount of leisure their subordinates in the offices were compelled to work all the year round, with short vacations, and if they absented themselves from the office for a day they received a severe letter of condemnation, and if it occurred again they were discharged. He now came to a subject which he ventured to say was about the greatest scandal associated with the judicial system of any country of the world—he referred to the Circuit system. The Circuit work of the country had since 1873 decreased 30 per cent. according to the judicial statistics. In 1865 there were 693 cases on circuit. In 1894, with an almost geometrical increase in population and in wealth, there were only 1,124 cases, and of these 864 came from four Circuits, the Northern, the Midland, the Western, and South-eastern, leaving only 261 cases to be disposed of in the remaining five Circuits. The Judge on Circuit fixed the number of days he would attend in each Assize Town. As an illustration of how that system worked out he might mention the recent Assizes at Newcastle-on-Tyne. The Lord Chief Justice was there, and no one would suggest that he was not most anxious to discharge the duties of his office to the very best of his great capacity. His Lordship had only seven jury cases to dispose of, and these he finished on last Saturday. But he was not due in the next Assize Town until next Friday; therefore, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday were spent in enforced idleness by the Lord Chief Justice.

Sir FRANK LOCKWOOD (York): What about crime?

Mr. ATHERLEY-JONES said that Mr. Justice Bruce was there to try criminal cases, which were compartively insignificant in number. On the Welsh Circuit there were no cases at many of the towns, yet judges were sent down to give three or four days of public time to each town. At Worcester there was only one prisoner and one cause, and yet four days were given. Was it not scandalous that judges, who were properly paid high salaries, and who received expenses at the rate of £7 10s. a day, should be sent to these towns on the pretence that there was something to do, and should have to spend days in absolute idleness while the Courts in London were waiting for business to be dealt with, and litigants were driven away owing to the manner in which business was transacted? That the local Member insisted on the dignity of the Assize Town being maintained was no sufficient excuse; probably only a few innkeepers and livery-stable owners were concerned. Their interests did not justify this scandalous waste of public money and time on a system which had become a ridiculous anachronism. He would read from the Judicial Statistics a paragraph which was, in effect, the strongest condemnation of the present Assize system:—

> "More than 55 per cent. of the causes were entered at four towns—Birmingham, Leeds, Liverpool, and Manchester. About 50 per cent. of the whole number of actions tried were tried on the Northern and North-eastern Circuits. No actions were entered for trial at the following towns:—Huntingdon, Aylesbury, Oakham, Devizes or Salisbury, Welshpool or Newtown, Lampeter and Brecon. At the Winter Assizes only one action was entered at each of the following towns:—Guildford, Lewes, Hertford, Chelmsford, Bedford, Northampton, Reading, Oxford, Merioneth, Dorchester, Taunton or Wilts, Dolgelly, Ruthin, and Mold. At the Summer Assizes only one action was entered at Hertford, Cambridge, Ipswich, Bury St. Edmunds, Northampton, Carlisle, Oxford, Shrewsbury, Dolgelly, Ruthin, Mold, and Haverfordwest. Of the total amount recovered, more than one-half was recovered on the Northern Circuit. The largest number of days on which actions were tried at any town was 55."

It had been suggested that it would be possible to group towns for Assize purposes. That would be a good but inadequate change. But what was there to prevent the County Courts from being given an equally extensive jurisdiction with the High Court? Such a system already existed in Scotland. The County Courts would form an excellent tribunal; and it was to be remembered that the High Court did not at present do its Assize work efficiently. The Incorporated Law Society showed by figures, which were incontestable, that the commercial communities in Liverpool and Manchester, although favoured with more frequent Assizes, could not be satisfied with the way in which their business was transacted. During the Long Vacation they had to wait three or four months before they could get a cause on, and when the Judges did come down they always worked at high pressure in order to get back to London quickly. Instead of, as in London, sitting from 10.30 to 4 o'clock, the Judges sat from 9.30 in the morning up to 7, 8, 9, and even 10 o'clock at night. No one wanted a case tried in such circumstances, when everyone engaged was worn out. It was an absolute denial of justice; and the feeling in Liverpool was very strong. The Incorporated Law Society was constantly asking the Lord Chancellor to let a Judge sit continuously in Liverpool, but the only response was to send a Judge for a few days, and the scramble of business resulted in this—that cases of magnitude the Liverpool solicitors preferred to bring to London for trial. There was no reason why a co-equal jurisdiction should not be given to the County Courts. They already possessed power to deal with bankruptcy to any amount, to deal with employers' liability, and with Admiralty jurisdiction up to £500. Yet under the present ridiculous system they were forbidden to deal with a suit for more than £50. One of the grossest scandals of the day was that while the poor man bringing an action of tort for £50 damages must go to the High Court, the defendant might turn him out by summons on the ground that the plaintiff had no visible means. Of course litigants might have the option of going to the High Court instead of the County Court; but if a sufficient number of cases were not notified beforehand for an Assize, the business of one centre should be sent to be dealt with at another. There must also be some revision of the system of costs in the County Court. It cost as much to take out a plaint for £15 in the County Court as it took to issue a writ for £15,000 in the High Court. It appeared in the Judicial Statistics for 1893-4 that, including costs and fees, for every pound recovered in the High Court about 7s. was spent in costs. We had lately established the Commercial Court which, presided over by Mr. Justice Mathew and Mr. Justice Henn Collins, was becoming more and more popular, because litigants knew that they could get their causes tried there without unwarrantable delay, and that their cases would be from the beginning to the end, even in the interlocutory stages, under the control of the Judge himself. In the Chancery and the Probate, Matrimonial, and Admiralty Courts the same system was adopted with equally satisfactory results. But things were very different when they came to the Queen's Bench Division. When a cause was set down for trial before a special jury in that Division, it might be sixth or seventh in the day's list, with the result that if it were not reached that day it would be announced that no more special jury causes would be taken that week, and the witnesses who had been brought up to town would have to be sent back to the country in order to be again brought to London the following week. Again, when a special jury cause was not reached on a particular day when it was in the list for trial, the Judge of the Court might on the following day have to try prisoners at the Old Bailey, or to try Common Jury Causes, or to go on Circuit. Why could not a Special Jury Court be appointed, which should sit from day to day until every Special Jury Cause in the list for the Sittings was disposed of. Causes which were not reached in a day's list often most unaccountably and mysteriously disappeared from the list, and did not reappear for a long time. Such a state of things was a scandal, and amounted to a denial of justice. Turning to the question of costs, he found that in 1893 causes were tried, in which an aggregate sum of some £500,000 was recovered at a cost to the litigants of £200,000. Then there was our ridiculous system of the taxation of costs. In his opinion solicitors as a rule were not adequately rewarded for the trouble they had to take on behalf of their clients, and the result was that their whole object in conducting causes was to pile up costs by multiplying interlocutory proceedings. The consequence of such a system was that a wretched Taxing Master had to go through bills of costs, item by item, striking off a little here and there, with the result that the solicitors were dissatisfied, while the clients had to pay far more than they ought to do. Under the German system a solicitor was paid a sort of percentage upon the amount recovered, say £20 for each £100 recovered, and an additional sum for extra work. He was conscious that there were many other matters of detail that he ought to touch upon in bringing forward a Motion of this kind, but he felt that he had already trespassed at too great length upon the attention of the House, to whom he was very grateful for having listened to him with so much patience, while he dealt with this very dry subject. He hoped that his right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney General would not reject the very moderate proposal he had put forward, that there should be some inquiry had into this important question. The right hon. and learned Gentleman might, perhaps, think that the particular machinery of a Royal Commission was the best adapted for such an inquiry, but he himself would be content to accept any other form of inquiry which the right hon. and learned Gentleman might suggest as better fitted to carry out his object. What was being done at the present time? They were told that the Rule Committee were preparing a new set of Rules, but the late Master of the Rolls had asserted that every fresh body of Rules cost litigants some two millions before its interpretation was complete. The Rules which had been made since 1870 constituted a huge volume, which would surprise the House if he had brought it with him. And yet it was said that it was necessary to make all those Rules in order to simplify and cheapen our legal procedure, while, in fact, they merely multiplied the difficulties of our legal system. Our legal procedure ought to be simplified by a body of men consisting, not only of judges and barristers, but of members of the lower branch of the profession, and of members of our great commercial bodies. In conclusion, he begged to move the Motion which stood upon the Paper in his name. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. Atherley-Jones.

MR. AUGUSTUS WARR (Liverpool, East Toxteth), in seconding the Motion, said that the subject was one which certainly deserved consideration and discussion by that House. Although he did not know that the machinery of a Royal Commission was the best for conducting the inquiry which the hon. and learned Gentleman opposite asked for, still he thought that an inquiry of some kind ought to be instituted into the question. He shared with the hon. and learned Gentleman the opinion that the time had come when the country was entitled to have an inquiry into the working of its judicial system, in order to ascertain whether it did or did not conform to the requirements of the day, and if it did not, what change ought to be introduced into it. Some hon. Members would remember the state of things that existed before the Judicature Acts were passed, and would wonder how it had been allowed to endure for so long. The truth was that the old system, with its old-fashioned system of pleading, and its numerous pitfalls, and the mystery which surrounded it, had become entirely out of harmony with common sense, and was intolerable. And yet, it was simplicity itself compared with some of the things before the procedure of the Courts were altered by the Common Law Procedure Acts and by, he thought, simultaneous changes in Chancery proceedings. And so again, a time had come round when changes must be introduced into the present system, if it was to harmonise with the views of the people. It was almost inevitable that legal procedure would always, he believed, be in advance of public opinion. Until periodical investigations such as were secured by some process of inquiry, similar to a legal commission or committee, could take place, reforms practically could only emanate from Her Majesty's Judges, who were not, necessarily, in close touch with the views of the public for whose security and benefit those Courts were supposed to exist. It would be the greatest presumption on his part, and very very far from his desire to speak with anything but unfeigned respect of Her Majesty's Judges. He was certain that it was the desire of the present occupants of the Bench, and especially of those of them who had been accustomed to practise at the Bar in recent years, to do everything in their power to devise methods for the simplification of procedure, for the avoidance of delay, and for the abolition of useless expense. [" Hear, hear! "] But it was evident that they could only act within the limits of the law, and, above all, they could not add to their number. They had reason to be grateful to them for what they had done. They had introduced two of the most useful changes that had been made in procedure, at all events within the last twenty years. He meant the originating summons and the practice introduced in the Admiralty Division, and since adopted in the Commercial Courts. Under these systems, the procedure was in strict accordance with common sense. It was encumbered with no useless steps, and the result was that its adoption had been attended with complete success. It was capable of great development. [" Hear, hear! "] There was no reason why the principle of an originating summons should not be applied to any case in which the construction of a will or of any contract was involved, and there was no reason why the procedure of the Commercial Court should not be widely extended. [" Hear, hear! "] These were improvements which, it would be safe to predict, would certainly result from any form of inquiry. Then, again, there was the Assize system. They in Lancashire had urged for years that that system was utterly out of harmony with the needs of the times. Every commercial body in Lancashire had said so over and over again, but no real change was made, or could be made without legislation, and they should look for legislation as a result of inquiry. They had been made aware that this question had been the subject of deliberation by Her Majesty's Judges. Unfortunately, they were not permitted to have the advantage of reading the expression of their Lordships' opinion, as he learnt in answer to a question which he addressed to the Attorney General in this House. He could well believe that the Judges found it difficult to propose changes, which would give Lancashire what she claimed without infringing upon the privileges of other places, and he could well believe that their views would have been different if they had been considering the disposition of the time, not of their own numebr, but of an increased number of Judges. They had evidence of the goodwill of one of their number (Mr. Justice Kennedy), a member of the Bench whom they in Lancashire had every reason to respect and admire—[" hear, hear! "] —in the fact that he had allowed himself to be constituted what he might call the Lancashire Judge for a period which they hoped was not destined soon to expire. That advance, however grateful they might be for it, did not bring the administration of justice into harmony with the needs of Lancashire, and left the Assize system still in existence, though they believed it to be obsolete. [" Hear, hear! "] Then, again, the County Court system, to which the Mover had referred, was capable of infinite improvement, good though it was. They wanted to see the County Courts made part and parcel of the Supreme Court of Judicature, so that the system might be harmonious throughout, and this, he thought, could result only from an inquiry. The subject before the House was not one which, from its nature, could ever command great popular enthusiasm, or be a popular topic on election platforms, but it was nevertheless a subject which very vitally affected the interests of the public for whom the administration of justice should be not only absolutely pure—which it was and always would be throughout the Queen's dominions—["hear, hear!"]—but also be unattended with delay and expense, and in harmony with the views of the times in which they lived. ["Hear, hear!"]

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said he agreed with his hon. Friend that the aspect of the House did not encourage the thought that great interest was taken in this matter in the House; at the same time he realised that a great amount of interest was taken in it outside the House. ["Hear, hear!"] He might say at once that it was not possible for him to accede to the prayer, if he might call it so, of the Motion that a Royal Commission should be appointed to deal with the matter. He did not in any way wish it to be supposed that he thought there was not ample room for inquiry; but, in his opinion, a Royal Commission would be about the worst way of proceeding that could possibly be devised. ["Hear, hear!"] They were not dealing with a single question or a single class of questions, but with a number of different questions, which had to be considered from different points of view. The effect of appointing a Royal Commission would be to hold the matter up, it might be for years, certainly for a considerable time; and, so far as the administration of the law was concerned, no very practical results had come from Royal Commissions in the past. ["Hear, hear!"] His hon. and learned Friend the Member for Durham had travelled over a great deal of ground, not too much by any means, but he was not sure that it would not have been better if he had confined himself to certain points he had raised in order that hon. Members might have better understood the bearings of the question and the difficulties the hon. Member had to cope with. He was bound to say that he thought his hon. and learned Friend had introduced matters somewhat foreign to the matter immediately before the House, and had rather encumbered the question with criticisms on parts of the system which, in his opinion, were not open to the attacks he had made upon them. What he had prominently in his mind was the attack made upon the expense of some parts of the system. It seemed to him that they had nothing to do with the expenses incurred in connection with the actual working of the Judicature Acts, and the particular instances the hon. Member had taken did not deserve the somewhat forcible remarks he made upon them. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member started with criticising the constitution of the Privy Council and the appointment of the Lords of Appeal, and he deprecated the expenditure of £24,000 a year which their appointment entailed. He did not hesitate to say that no better reform had been carried out of late years than the establishment of the four Lords of Appeal who sat in the Privy Council and the House of Lords. It was the constant complaint in years gone by that the judicial strength of the House of Lords consisted of the Lord Chancellor and the ex-Chancellors who might be sitting there. Of course from time to time distinguished Judges were created Peers, but it had been a great source of weakness in the House of Lords that there were no Judges there who had been solely trained as lawyers. But that was not by any means the only reason which led to the appointment of the four Lords of Appeal. His hon. and learned Friend the Member for Durham had passed very lightly over the question of appeals from the Colonial and Indian Courts. Formerly there were constant complaints from the colonies, from Canada, and Australia, of the weakness of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and that was the case, notwithstanding the fact that there were available for service on the Judicial Committee a good many learned lawyers who were not available for service in the House of Lords. But the members of the Judicial Committee were often Judges who already had judicial duties to perform, or Judges who had done their work and served their time. Consequently there was not formerly a body of men who could be relied upon to sit at all times upon this tribunal and to strengthen it. His hon. and learned Friend talked about 50 or 60 appeals at a cost of £24,000 a year, and said that the Lords of Appeal only sat

50 days in the 12 months. By some error his hon. and learned Friend had been misled into making an inaccurate statement. The whole number of days on which the Lords of Appeal sat in the House of Lords and the Privy Council would be found to be far more than 50—probably 150 or 160.

MR. ATHERLEY-JONES explained that what he had said was that the Lords of Appeal heard some 50 cases only. He did not say that they only sat on 50 occasions.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL did not think that the statement that they heard only 50 cases would be borne out by the statistics; but even if it were, that would not be an unsatisfactory state of things, having regard to the character of the judgments delivered in the House of Lords. It was absolutely necessary that the highest Court of Appeal should be constituted of men of the highest reputation as lawyers, so that their judgments should command universal respect. The judgments of the House of Lords laid down legal principles and developed, so to speak, our code of law. They formed the foundation of decisions in the United States and in Australia and Canada, and were cited with approval in Continental Courts. Remembering that the Lords of Appeal had to sit in the House of Lords and on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in regular rota, he did not think that their remuneration was at all excessive. The next subject referred to by his hon. and learned Friend had only a very remote connection, if any, with the Judicature Acts. That subject was the constitution of the Railway Commission, and his hon and learned Friend considered it a scandal and abuse that there should be two Railway Commissioners, receiving £3,000 apiece. He had been conversant with the work of this Court ever since its establishment, and it was his opinion that it was not just to measure the work of the Commissioners simply by what was done in court. They had a great deal of work to do in connection with traffic arrangements and in connection with applications that were never heard of in court. But he agreed that the cases that came before the Commissioners for trial would be equally well tried before a Judge and expert assessors appointed ad hoc. The reason why that system had never been adopted was on account of the pressing and increasing demand from commercial litigants that there should be permanent members of the tribunal constituting its popular and commercial element. He was by no means sure that the traders had been wise in making that demand, but it was impossible to connect any failure on the part of the tribunal to transact work with any faults in the Judicature Acts, with which the Railway Commissioners' Court had nothing to do. The Court was established by special Act in 1873, and re-established in 1889. Dealing next with the Court of Appeal, the hon. and learned Member said that the sum of £31,000 was a great deal for that Court. There were six Judges in the Court, and the sum was £31,000 instead of £30,000, because one of them was now also Master of the Rolls. There were two Appeal Courts sitting continuously during the judicial year. That imposed a severe strain on six Judges. The late Lord Bowen attended on many days when he was not in a fit state to do so; possibly his life might have been spared had he not been so strictly conscientious, and at the present time Judges often went to the Court, although they were in bad health, so strong was their determination to get through the work. His hon. and learned Friend did not suggest that the Judges in the Queen's Bench Division were paid too highly. They received £5,000 a year apiece, and could anyone maintain that the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal, which stood next in importance to the House of Lords, ought to receive less than ordinary Judges? His view was, that the price the country paid for the services of the Lords Justices was certainly not too much, having regard to their position and the work they had to do. In fact, he was disposed to think that some day or other they might rightly be given higher remuneration. The hon. and learned Member said that there had been several days in recent months when the Court had not sat. That might have been the case in the last few months, but he knew that the learned Judges were making every effort to keep abreast of their work, and if they had found it practicable to sit on fewer days, he was satisfied that they had not allowed their work to get into arrear in consequence. It was a matter for congratulation that the arrears were fewer than system. It was the circuit system which enabled Judges to go to Lancashire more frequently than to other parts of the United Kingdom, while at the same time the causes were tried by High Court Judges with a direct appeal to the Court of Appeal. Only in the possible development of that system, he thought, were they likely to satisfy the demands of large centres such as Leeds, Bristol, and other places. [" Hear, hear! "] Before a Royal Commission could come to a conclusion upon the various grievances dealt with in the speeches of the Mover and Seconder they would be at work for two or three years, and they would produce a Report which might itself be obsolete, having regard to the length of time over which their inquiry had extended. The method of remedying existing defects by the tribunal of Judges might not be altogether an ideal one, but he was satisfied it was far better than a Royal Commission; and, while he joined in the hope that there might be prompt inquiry and a speedy improvement into some of these matters, he submitted that the purpose would not be served if the House were to accede to the Motion.

Sir FRANK LOCKWOOD cordially agreed with the Attorney General with regard to the undesirability of dealing with the matters in question by such a cumbersome piece of machinery as a Royal Commission. The facts were not in dispute. What was the good, then, of subjecting very intricate legal machinery to a long, exhaustive, and probably useless inquiry by Royal Commission? There was no matter upon which the House of Commons had a better right to express criticism, or to exercise its judgment upon than the administration of justice, and they might depend upon it that in calling attention to the necessity for reform time was not being thrown away. Those who were responsible for our legal machinery could not be said to be perfect, and this Debate would probably do them good as well as anybody else. [A laugh.] He hoped it would not be supposed it was the Judges he was speaking of—[laughter]—although perhaps it might be said that even they would be the better for a little prodding. ["Hear, hear!"] Take the criticisms upon the circuit system. Frequently it happened that the Court was called upon to sit for an unconscionable number of hours. He had himself defended a man for murder at 12 o'clock at night. That was not good form either for him or the Crown. [Laughter.] Who was responsible for that? It was the most ridiculous system with regard to the detention of jurors on trial for felony. This was done out of mercy to the jurors. Judges hesitated to keep those men away from their homes all night, and rather than do so they would sit late in order to finish a case. He should like to see the counsel who would have the hardihood to object to sit late in these circumstances. [Laughter.] The criticisms which had been made were in the main criticisms upon administration. Take, again, that most important question to all lawyers—in which he admitted, however, clients had some secondary interest—the question of costs. [Laughter.] He quite agreed with the Attorney General in making costs an indemnity to the successful litigant. He had heard of one of Her Majesty's Judges—not now on the Bench—who was excusing the present system, and when it was pointed out to him how hard it was that the successful litigant should have to pay in respect of his successful litigation, said, with a reminiscence of the sports of bygone days, " Well, you see, even the winning cock loses a few feathers." [Laughter.] He happened to know that the present Lord Chief Justice of England was strongly for making costs an indemnity. Of course lawyers were all for making the Courts as popular as possible—in other words, for increase of business—[laughter]—for that was what his hon. and learned Friend suggested. He did not see that a Royal Commission was needed to determine that point. He did not quite agree that the dealing with costs in the manner suggested by the Attorney General could be done by rule, though it might very well be done by legislation; and he thought the Attorney General might possibly introduce a clause to that effect in one of his Bills dealing with proceedings in the High Court of Justice. Then with regard to the Circuit system, did his hon. and learned Friend propose to abolish it? He only knew that he should be sorry to advocate any such proposal in his constituency. [" Hear, hear! " and laughter.] He believed there was a strong feeling in the country in favour of serious legal questions being tried by Judges of the High Court of Justice. [" Hear, hear! "] It would be monstrous to suppose that all such cases should be brought up to London, and if they could not bring up those local cases to London, then the Judges must go down to the locality to try them. As to the arrangement of the time at the disposal of the Judges, his hon. and learned Friend said that witnesses might be brought up to London in a special jury case, and the next day the learned Judge concerned might announce that he had to do duty at the Old Bailey. He felt perfectly sure that if his hon. and learned Friend could bring any such instance to the knowledge of the Lord Chief Justice he would make every effort to prevent such a thing occurring again. With all deference to his hon. and learned Friend he did not think that such a circumstance had happened in the Courts lately. Under the direction of the Lord Chief Justice great pains had been taken to prevent such things happening. Generally speaking, the subject was one on which they were all agreed, and he did not think his hon. and learned Friend, on reflection, would come to the conclusion that in this matter, the facts being ascertained and criticised, a Royal Commission would be a serviceable mode of dealing with the difficulties and anomalies to which he had properly and most effectively drawn the attention of the House. [" Hear, hear! "] Therefore he would suggest to his hon. and learned Friend whether he should not be content with having drawn attention to the subject and with the discussion he had elicited. The hon. and learned Member had certainly rendered a service to the country by directing the notice of Parliament to matters which were, unquestionably, of great public interest. [Cheers.]

*Mr. W. F. LAWRENCE (Liverpool, Abercombie) thought the hon. Member for Durham was entitled to the thanks of the House for having brought forward this subject, which was a matter that came home to a great many suitors. He was sorry that the Attorney General dealt so lightly with what Lancashire thought was a very serious grievance. He endorsed all that his colleague, the hon. Member for the Toxteth Division had said as to the strong local feeling in Liverpool and Manchester with regard to the time now occupied in hearing of commercial cases. The Attorney General thought he gave them some consolation in saying that, in future, there would be a summons for direction as to the venue where a case was to be tried, but the result would be that the grievance of Lancashire would be increased. Their grievance at present was that their cases were so congested in number that an adequate time was not given to each. In Liverpool, in 1894, 144 cases occupied 56 days in consideration, whereas in London these cases would have ocsupied 75 days of the Courts. Therefore, a Lancashire case had only two-thirds of the time given to a case in London. If cases were to be sent back from London to Lancashire, then there would be more hasty consideration at the hands of the Judges. The House would be surprised to hear that it had been known that new cases had been undertaken in Liverpool, sometimes after six o'clock in the evening. Such a state of things was altogether preposterous. [" Hear, hear! "] In London the Judges sat about five hours a day, whereas in Lancashire they sat six or seven hours a day. He submitted that they could not get proper consideration for their cases so long as that was the case. Another grievance arising from the foregoing circumstances was that there was no fixed time for the meeting or rising of the local Courts, and that additional expense was sometimes thereby caused to the suitors, who often had to wait about the Courts uselessly for a long time. He did not entirely associate himself with the opinion of the hon. Member for the Toxteth Division that the Circuit system was obsolete, but undoubtedly it required amendation. As to the Attorney General's argument about the feeling that would be raised if the Circuit system was taken away from the old towns, he would remind him of what was done with the Parliamentary representation of old towns, and would submit that they should consider, not only the feelings of a small community, which had the privilege of the visits of Her Majesty's Judges, but also the legitimate claims of places which had become large centres of business. [" Hear, hear! "] In Liverpool at one Assize the Court sat until past seven o'clock on eleven days, and at another until past nine o'clock on nine days. Hon. Members would see from these facts that it was not merely from a desire to have a Judge to themselves that Liverpool felt so strongly on this question, nor was it from a desire to emulate London, but that there was a real need for this legal business to be transacted in a proper way. [" Hear, hear ! "] He assured the Attorney General that he did not speak on this subject in any way from a mere professional point of view. [" Hear, hear ! "] He spoke for the commercial men of Liverpool, for the Chamber of Commerce, and for the Corporation, all of whom felt that their interests were prejudiced and expense needlessly incurred by a necessary reform being so long delayed.

Sir HENRY FOWLER (Wolverhampton) said he thought there was one branch of the subject presented by the hon. and learned Member for Durham which had not received the attention it deserved, and which lay at the root of many of the reforms he had suggested. He referred to the present condition of the County Courts, and to the necessity for a wide extension of their jurisdiction, and of very drastic reform in a great deal of their forms of procedure. The hon. Member who had last spoken had mentioned the opinion of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce on this point of the extension of the powers of the County Courts, and he believed commercial men generally were in favour of such a reform. In Scotland, where the administration of justice was far in advance of that in England, a much better system prevailed, and he believed that properly qualified Judges of the County Courts in England were quite capable of dealing with many of the cases now dealt with at Assizes. [" Hear, hear ! "] The County Courts ought to be something higher and better than mere debt-collecting machines. [" Hear, hear ! "] The number of County Court Judges at present might be less numerous. What was wanted in those Courts were men of a high class, with better remuneration and a wider jurisdiction. Reference had been made to the number of days Judges had sat in the year—one Judge had not sat more than 100 days, and others only 70 or 80 days—but power was given that help should be rendered by one Judge to another. He did not think any practical good had resulted from that, simply because the clause had really not been put into force. He should very much demur to the appointment of a Royal Commission. He did not think that the appointment of Royal Commissions, at all events as they were at present constituted, were a very encouraging means of procedure. Royal Commissions used to be bodies of a judicial character—men with unpledged minds hearing evidence and coming to what they thought was a sound conclusion. Royal Commissions nowadays had degenerated into a gathering together of a number of advocates on both sides. Interests were supposed to be represented and not the public—[" hear, hear ! "]—facts were not to be ascertained, but theories were to be proved, and he should be very sorry to let loose the administration of justice in this country among a body of that description. The precedent had not been encouraging. He did not think he was exaggerating when he said that the result of the Judicature Acts, which were the product of a Royal Commission, had been to enormously increase the cost of litigation in this country. The practical question was whether they could do anything to utilise and to better employ the great machinery which their High Court gave them. [" Hear, hear ! "] He thought there was a great waste of power in the appropriation of time. He was not going to quarrel with the local sentiment to which the hon. Member for Liverpool had alluded, but he did not think it was necessary to waste all the time that was wasted in what was called the opening of commissions and the other paraphernalia which characterised Circuit life. [" Hear, hear ! "] There was another point—he knew he was not treading on very dangerous ground—and that was, Was it not possible that rather too much time was devoted to vacations? [" Hear, hear ! "] He certainly thought the Courts of Justice in this country should not be closed for something like 12 or 13 weeks. He thought a readjustment could be made without entrenching on the rest which, of all men, the Judges were entitled to, or on the recreation and rest which the members of that most laborious profession, the Bar, were entitled to have, and, at the same time, without shutting the doors of the Courts of Justice in the face of the whole community. He was under the impression until that Debate that the hours of sitting of the Courts had been very much abbreviated.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL: They have in London.

*SIR H. FOWLER said he would not express his own opinion on this point, but he would venture to tell the House what a very distinguished Member of that House, who now occupied a high judicial position in this country, once told him. "If," he said,

> "the Courts of Justice sat at the same hour at which they sat when I was called to the Bar, and rose at the same hour, and if they did not have such very long adjournments in the middle of the day, it would be equivalent to two additional Judges."

["Hear, hear!"] All these were minor questions, but he thought that if the attention of Parliament were drawn to them perhaps the attention of other high dignitaries might be drawn to the fact that judicial time was public property, and that the public were entitled to have a just use made of that judicial time. ["Hear, hear!"] He spoke with very great respect of the Lord Chancellor; but he also thought that he might assist the wide feeling for improvement in the administration of justice in this country, in facilitating its progress and in lowering its cost, by means of Rules, if his Lordship and the Rule Committee would devote their time, their attention, and their determination to those Rules. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. C. J. MONK (Gloucester) agreed that County Court jurisdiction might be advantageously extended, even beyond the limit suggested by the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Wolverhampton. He thought a remedy for the congested state of business in the country might be found in a revision of the County Court Circuits, and probably by the appointment of what he might call a superior class of Judges in those circuits. They would relieve the Judges of the High Court, and would render unnecessary their absence from London. It was a matter which would require very considerable attention, and would necessitate legislation. He had brought in a Bill with regard to County Court jurisdiction, and he hoped that during the present Session an opportunity would be afforded of considering that Bill and of sending it to the Standing Committee on Law.

MR. ATHERLEY-JONES said he did not desire to press his Motion to a Division. He thought the Debate had been a satisfactory one, and he would ask leave to withdraw the Motion.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

PEASANT FREEHOLDERS (WALES).

MR. J. LLOYD MORGAN (Carmarthen, W.) rose to call attention to the serious effects of the long period of agricultural depression, so far as it affected peasant freeholders in Wales; and to move,

> "That this House is of opinion that the distressed condition of the peasant and small occupying freeholders in Wales is such as to call for the earliest attention of the Government, and that it is desirable that State loans, subject to a low rate of interest, should be granted to such of the said freeholders as purchased their own holdings with money borrowed on the security of their land to enable them to redeem existing mortgages in respect of which a higher rate of interest is payable than such freeholders are able to pay in the present state of agriculture."

He said that the peasant freeholders were described in the Report of the Royal Commission dealing with the matter as a class "who are on the verge of financial ruin," and, in the minority Report, as being "in a condition which is positively disastrous." Under these circumstances he felt it his duty to bring the matter before the House in the belief that the Government might see their way to give some relief to this class without doing any injury to the taxpayers or prejudicing their interests in any respect. The Report of the Commissioners, so far as this question was concerned, was a unanimous one. Indeed, so much impressed were they with the strength of the case put forward on behalf of this class, and so struck were they with the grievances under which these men were suffering and with the hardships they had gone through, that he thought he was right in saying that at one point in their proceedings the Commissioners considered whether or not an interim Report should be published for the purpose of asking the Government of that time to render immediate relief to the small occupying freeholders in Wales. The Commissioners reported that the "freeholders are now in a most precarious position, and they have nothing short of ruin staring them in the face," while in another part of their Report they said, "in the west counties of South Wales their position is most precarious, and the problem of their future is a very difficult one." They therefore recommended that assistance should be granted to them by means of State loans at a low rate of interest.

With regard to the question of interest, he would not suggest any more than the Commission had suggested, that money should be granted for the relief of these small freeholders of Wales except upon terms not prejudicial to taxpayers. All he suggested was that loans should be granted at the lowest rate of interest at which the Treasury could lend without any loss to the State. The Report suggested that this relief should be granted to a limited class, to the class who were owners of their freeholds, farming them themselves. He would not go into the details of the scheme the Commissioners suggested, nor would he suggest an alternative scheme in detail; he would only deal generally with the main features of the case. The principle of establishing small occupying freeholders had in Ireland been tried with success, so much so that one Act had followed another in rather rapid succession for the benefit of this class of peasant proprietors in Ireland. Not only had it been applied to Ireland, the principle had also been adopted in this country by the passing of the Small Holdings Act, which established the principle that it is desirable, even in England and Wales, to facilitate the acquisition of small holdings. It was true the Act had been very little, if at all, availed of, but the principle remained established, the failure of the Act being accounted for by the somewhat cumbrous nature of its provisions, and the difficulty of applying them in many cases. The passing of the Act, however, established the principle, and the Report of the Select Holdings Committee declared that the very reference of the question to the Committee assumed the desirability of extending the class of small cultivating owners in this country. Another principle was laid down in the Report of the Committee, that those who were to be first assisted should be those who had done something to help themselves. The object of Governments then in the past had been to establish this very class in England and Wales, and what he suggested by the Motion was that even so the present Government should continue that policy in Wales, extending assistance to the class whose very existence was at stake. Upon this point the present Colonial Secretary, writing to Mr. Marchant Williams, the Secretary of the Welsh Liberal Unionist Association, on April 23 1895, said:—

> "I am not competent to speak dogmatically on the Land Question; but if I might venture an individual opinion it would be that the only permanent and satisfactory road to a better state of things is to be found in an extension of the Land Purchase Act, by which landlords and tenants may agree to make the cultivators the owners upon terms enabling them to support themselves comfortably in their holdings."

The Commissioners had recommended that assistance should be given to a limited class in Wales, and he would, therefore, trouble the House for a few moments in considering the cases which had brought about the difficulties of this class and the condition of affairs which called for reform. Their difficulties were to be attributed to the land hunger which existed in Wales. He would not deal exhaustively with this, the question of land hunger, because hon. Gentlemen opposite representing Welsh constituencies would agree that this land hunger existed. ["Hear, hear!"] It was impossible for an Englishman, unacquainted with the state of agriculture in Wales, to really appreciate what this land hunger meant—this rush for farms, this tremendous bidding at auctions where land was for sale—a state of things that a British landowner would envy if he had had any Welsh experience. This land hunger had led tenants to purchase their holdings at ruinous prices. The reasons which induced this eagerness arose out of the feeling of tenants that if they lost the occupation of their farm, if they did not buy the farm, they would find great difficulty in getting another farm equally suitable on any land at all. Ever present with them was a sense of the insecurity of their tenure. This might be said to be a controversial point, and he would not go into it; but, whatever might be said about it and the causes that had brought it about, it could not be denied that a feeling existed in Wales that tenancies in the past were uncertain. There was a further inducement to tenants to buy their holdings in the fact that they had expended money on the land, they had lived on the land for many years, and improved it much, and if they did not secure the result of this they would have to incur the same expense again. When they bought, prices were high, and in many instances the tenants bought improvements they had themselves carried out on the land. A further inducement to purchase was the feeling that they were handing on the value of their labour to their children, and there was the sentiment strong in Celtic people which a farmer described as a passionate fondness for the familiar features of the farm, the parish, and its surroundings. The land hunger was more pronounced in Cardigan than in any other county; the ratio of freeholders to tenant farmers there was 21 to 78; and in the parish of Penrhyn there were 102 farmer freeholders, and 90 of these had bought their farms during the last 12 years. As a witness said, it would have been much better for them had they not done so, because their interest or mortgages was more than the rent they had previously paid. Owing to the insatiable desire for land in Wales, the prices paid had been ruinously high, and farmers had paid such a price that they found it impossible to keep up the payment of the interest on their mortgages. The Commissioners felt the importance of the question, and they sent out private circulars asking for information on the question of prices paid for land, and from the replies received they selected 100 as examples. Out of these they found that five farmers had bought at 20 years' purchase, 46 at from 20 to 30 years' purchase, 12 at from 40 to 50 years' purchase, and 14 at prices varying from 50 to 100 years' purchase. ["Hear, hear!"] The tenants who had bought these farms had, in most cases, not sufficient capital to complete the purchase, and consequently had to borrow. Sometimes they could pay a half, and in other instances they had to mortgage to the extent of two-thirds of the property. The interest varied from 4 to 4½ per cent., and occasionally rose to 5 per cent. The tenant purchasers therefore found themselves in this position: they that bought the land at a very high price, a large portion of which they had raised on mortgage, and in many cases they found that for the amount they had had to borrow they were paying interest equal to the rent they had previously paid. The whole difficulty then had arisen out of this land hunger, and those who were in the worse position were the farmers who had bought during the last 25 years. The farmers who had bought before that period had passed through an interval of good times, had taken the best advantage of those times, and were now in comparatively easy circumstances. The class who had bought later were in a position worse than that of the tenant farmers, their condition being described by witnesses as "badly off," as "dire necessity," and "straitened in circumstances because of the pressure of mortgage loans." In the year 1888 a letter appeared in The Times which well described the condition of this class of cultivators. The letter was from a gentleman who went as a Commissioner from The Times to report on the state of agriculture in Wales. He said of Cardigan that the shadow of the mortgagee hung over the land, and that the difficulties of the men who had bought their freeholds ten years before had increased year by year, until payment was becoming impossible, and the end could not be far off. There was no doubt that between 1887 and 1894 there was an increase of 1 per cent. in the class of farming owners in Wales; but that slight increase was attributable not to the fact that the small freeholders had become more thriving in those years, but to the fact that the land hunger continued to exist during that time, and existed to the present day. The increase had taken place principally in counties like Anglesea and Carnarvon, where very large sales of property had occurred in recent years, whilst the decrease was to be accounted for by the fact that large numbers of the small freeholders had at length found the burden they had to bear was more than they could carry. An experiment had been tried in Wales by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners which threw some light on the question as to how a scheme to assist this class of tenants would work in the Principality. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners commenced in 1885 the sale of farms by means of deferred payments to the tenants. Up to 1895 they had sold 9,500 acres of agricultural land, the price realised being £153,000. The sales were by auction, 15 per cent. of the purchase money had to be paid up, the other 85 per cent. remaining on the land as a terminable mortgage, payable in 30 years. Mr. Bock Porter, the Secretary to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, gave evidence before the Land Commission in regard to the working of the scheme. He stated that there had been no difficulty with the tenants, and that in the whole of the ten years there had not been a single defaulter. During a period of the greatest agricultural depression every one of the tenants paid his instalments and interest with the promptest regularity, and the experiment, Mr. Bock Porter said, had been completely and absolutely justified. Mr. Morgan Richardson, a solicitor, land agent, and land owner in Wales, who had practically made this question his own in some respects, and who had had the widest possible experience of this class of people, said that where they had been enabled to purchase their farms they had paid the interest with regularity even in the very worst of times. That showed that if the Government could establish a system of loans by which this class of farmers could be assisted in Wales, they would receive payment of the instalments promptly and regularly. Whilst the Welsh Land Commissioners differed on many other points, they came to a unanimous conclusion on the question that some scheme in the direction suggested by this Motion should be adopted. At present many of the small freeholders had mortgages on their farms on which they were paying interest of 4 and 4½ per cent., varying according to the character of the security. These freeholders were an industrious class, who, as a rule, paid the mortgage interest punctually, but their position was most unsatisfactory. Having to pay this high rate of interest they were unable to reduce the principal, and they lived in constant terror of having the amount of the mortgage called in. This scheme of assistance by the State would put an end to the uncertainty and insecurity which at present weighed so heavily upon the Welsh peasant owner. He hoped the Government would give this question not only their serious and sympathetic, but also their favourable consideration. He was quite certain if they did they would be helping a most deserving class of people, who year in and year out worked from early morn till late at night, calling their children and their wives to their assistance, but who yet, in spite of all their efforts, were in a state which could only be described as lamentable. He begged to move the Resolution.

*MR. REES DAVIES (Pembrokeshire) seconded the Motion. Those hon. Members who represented such large numbers of small freeholders in Wales asked the Government to adopt some principle of State loans to small freeholders, and if they could get a definite declaration that the system which had worked so well in Ireland would, in the near future, be adopted in Wales, they should have obtained the object they had in view. The Welsh Land Commission had clearly established two things. In the first place they had established the fact that there were genuine grievances in Wales in regard to land tenure which ought to be remedied, and in the second place they had established the right of Wales to separate treatment, for, although there might be hardships of a similar character in England, the Commission were unanimously agreed as to Wales. The Commissioners had arrived at the unanimous conclusion that some scheme of the kind indicated in the Motion was desirable. His hon. Friend had described the insatiable land hunger in Wales, or, as the Commissioners termed it, the sacred attachment to the ancestral home. The Welsh peasant freeholder preferred to give a large sum to purchase his farm rather than be deprived of the place where his father, grandfather, and perhaps his great-grandfather, had lived before him. He might be allowed to quote the following passage on this subject from the report of the Welsh Land Commission, which exactly expressed the condition of things—

> "Speaking broadly we are inclined to think that in the majority of cases the depression with which we have dealt above has affected them from an economic point of view quite as much as the land owning and tenant farming classes. But we have had forcibly brought to our notice in the course of our inquiry the fact that a large percentage of the occupying freeholders are persons who, or whose immediate ancestors have been, tenant farmers, and especially that during the time of the agricultural prosperity in the sixties and in the seventies many tenant farmers purchased their holdings at prices which were probably even then high, but which, owing to the subsequent depression, have proved to be ruinously excessive. It was stated, and we believe with accuracy, that in many cases the purchase money equivalent to fifty years' annual value was given for a farm holding by the tenant who was in possession at the time of the sale. Such cases were perhaps exceptional, but it is perfectly true to say that very high prices—prices quite out of relation to the economic value of the land, considered as an investment—were given by many of those who are now occupying freeholdings in Wales, who were impelled by an intense desire to remain in possession of the holdings on which they had been brought up, and with which the life of their families had been associated for generations and even centuries."

This quotation clearly showed the state of things in Wales. One district of the county of Pembroke consisted largely of small freeholders. In many cases the farms were bought at high prices in prosperous times after the General Election of 1868, when there had been a great deal of irritation between landlord and tenant in Wales, and many unjust evictions. The Report of the Commission showed that many of the freeholders bought their farms when prices were high, that they had struggled for years under great difficulties, and were obliged to buy their farms to save themselves from unjust eviction, and in some cases were compelled to buy the improvements on their farms. A man was in a different position under a mortgagee from what he was under an ordinary landlord. There were in Wales many excellent local landlords, who lived among their tenants and met them in bad times with reductions and remissions of rent. The mortgagee was often a trustee, and no abatement of the high rate of interest could be made by him, because it was not in his power to do so. Mr. Griffith Jones, formerly a solicitor, but now a barrister, in his evidence before the Land Commission, said that in Cardiganshire the small freeholders had greatly increased in numbers of recent years, and he would tell the House what he said:—

"He estimated that the proportion of small owners to occupiers was 'at any rate one to every three.' There is one district about five miles by six miles occupied almost exclusively by small freeholders. Witness had acted professionally (as solicitor) in the purchase of many of these holdings, and the purchasing price had invariably reached thirty years' purchase, often 35 years or more on the rack rent. The usual course was that the purchaser found one-third or one-fourth, and borrowed the remainder at 4 per cent., with the result that he stood at a higher rent than if he were only a tenant."

He was not going into details, or suggest a scheme, but the Report of the Land Commission recommended that a State loan should be granted in the case of farms not more than 150 acres in extent. For himself, he did not agree in that view. Those who represented Welsh constituencies did not wish so much for any definite declaration by the Government on the subject as the recognition of the principle itself. There were many struggling freeholders in his constituency whose farms were over 150 acres, and he should be sorry to see State loans restricted to farms under that extent. He wished to draw the Chancellor of the Exchequer's attention to a letter, embodying a suggestion of practical utility, which appeared in the Economist newspaper on 9th January last. It was headed—"Post Office Savings Bank: Interest on Deposits," and read as follows:—

"Sir,—Rumours are abroad to the effect that the Chancellor of the Exchequer is considering how much longer the Post Office can continue to pay 2½ per cent. as interest on money deposited with it. When this question of the rate of interest allowed by the Post Office to depositors comes up for discussion, two points only are generally raised—first, that banks do not like the competition of the Post Office for customers' money at such a rate as 2½ per cent.; secondly, that the public exchequer loses by the transaction, but as this loss is a small one and the 2½ per cent. interest is supposed to encourage thrift, it is regarded as a matter of no great concern to the public. The net result of these two considerations is that little inclination is felt on the part of the public to disturb the existing arrangements. There is, however, a third aspect which is left out of sight, which has a very considerable effect indeed upon the public convenience, and of which the public take apparently no note. The balance sheets of banks show that on the average quite half the money deposited at the bank is loaned out again locally to be employed in business of all kinds. Now the Post Office deposits are reckoned to amount to some £120,000,000 or more. If the Post Office acted like other banks, one-half of this vast amount would be let out again locally to promote business of all kinds. If we could only get a Return published of the amount of money deposited by each county in the Post Office Savings' Bank on, say, January 1st in each year, we should know, by halving that amount, what each district loses by the withdrawal of these large amounts by a bank which does nothing to encourage local trade. This is a matter of the greatest public importance not only to borrowers, but to the infinite number of people who would benefit in countless ways by the business carried on with this capital. If we had a compulsory public registration of land, and the Post Office advanced half their deposits on well-secured mortgages, something would be done to prevent the absolute withdrawal of large sums of money from local industries, but the Post Office will probably not care to trouble itself about any such undertaking. If we could only suppose for a moment other banks acting on the same principle as the Post Office, and while receiving money on deposit, declining all advances, local business would soon come to a deadlock. The wonder is that the public have not long ago seen through the evil of the present large absorption of local capital by the Post Office, and insisted upon a reduction of the rate of interest for the sake of local industry.—I am, yours faithfully, E."

He did not know what the Post Office deposits in the different counties amounted to. He would move for a Return on the subject, which he hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer would grant him. He submitted that the suggestion contained in the letter he had read was well worth consideration—that these local deposits should be applied for local purposes—and it appeared from what he read that the Post Office could well afford to lend at a low rate—say, 3 per cent., or, at the most, 3½. The claims of Welsh peasant freeholders was not a matter of Party. It would be supported by hon. Members opposite. They who represented a large number of freeholders put the matter before the Government as one which Conservative and Unionist candidates at the last Election declared strongly in favour of. He did not think there was a Liberal, Conservative, or Unionist candidate seeking the suffrage of any agricultural constituency at the last Election who did not prominently favour those claims. He hoped the Government would make a declaration in favour of helping them and saving them from the absolute ruin with which for a long time they had been face to face.

Mr. POWLETT MILBANK (Radnor), in supporting the Motion, said he knew the small freeholders of Radnorshire intimately. They were thrifty and industrious men, and the reason of their difficulty was they had to pay higher interest than their land enabled them to pay. Their position, although they were freeholders, was worse than that of an ordinary tenant or labourer. Much of their land they bought 25 years ago, when agricultural prosperity was great. The tenant farmers had been met generously by their landlords in reductions and remissions of rent, the repair of buildings, and in other ways, but these unfortunate freeholders had had no help of that kind.

Mr. Rees Davies.

There was no class of men in Wales more deserving of support than these peasant freeholders, and he hoped the Government, if they possibly could, would see their way to advance them loans at the present price of money. This was not a Party question, for Members from Wales on both sides of the House were absolutely united on it.

Mr. VAUGHAN-DAVIES (Cardigan) said he was delighted to hear the remarks of the hon. Member for Radnorshire. This was no Party question. He himself did not speak as a Party man on that occasion, for in his county amongst these freeholders he found Conservatives and Liberals. It was not a question of Party politics, but a question of the necessity of the people. He had received a letter from a district which would be known to many in the House—the district of Penrhyn—which stated that a tenant farmer who, 25 years ago, bought his farm and became a freeholder, was now actually a pauper. Why was this? They had heard that the land hunger in Wales was the cause of it; but that was not the only cause. In Cardiganshire, where large estates had been sold, the tenant farmer occupied the same farm on which his father and grandfather had lived for years. Under these circumstances a man could not go to an auction and see the farm sold over his head without a struggle to try and keep it in his own hands. That was partly the reason why such large sums had been given in his county for farms—from 50 up to even 70 years' purchase having been given. There was the case of a farmer who, after buying his farm, for which he had paid a rent of £50 a year, had to pay £105 a year in interest on the money and do the repairs. That was an impossible state of affairs. The real cause, however, was the curious position of the tenant farmers in Wales. The English tenant farmer, if turned out of his holding, could go and try to make a living in England, Scotland, Ireland, America, Canada, or any other part of the world where English was spoken, but of these men 90 per cent. could not speak English, and therefore they were tied to their country as were no other tenant farmers. That was the secret of their giving such high prices for the land in Wales. Another trouble was the sweeping number of notices to quit after an election.

He could not help thinking that the Government could meet them in the same spirit as had been done in the case of Ireland, where large sums had been lent at 3½ per cent. [Mr. W. LONG shook his head.] The right hon. Gentleman shook his head, but it was the case that sums of money had been lent to the tenant farmers in Ireland at that percentage. They were simply asking that what had been done before should be done again; if it was not, these freeholders would end their days in the workhouse.

*THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. WALTER LONG, Liverpool, West Derby) said he was sure nobody who had spoken sympathised more than the Government did with the condition in which agriculturists in many parts of the country found themselves. No doubt that position had become particularly hard in the case of occupying owners, and the small freeholders, who had to bear the losses both of owner and occupier, had probably felt the depression of agriculture and the consequent decrease in their properties more than any other class of agriculturists. He would point out, however, that some of the speeches which had been made were not altogether in support of the precise Motion that was upon the Paper. The hon. Gentleman who had just spoken had misinterpreted what he intended to convey by shaking his head when it was asserted that similar assistance had been given to the Irish tenants; what he had intended to indicate was, that in the case of Ireland, as also in regard to the Small Holdings Act which had been quoted, the assistance of the State had been given to the tenant to enable him to become the owner of the soil instead of being the occupier—in other words, turning the tenant into an occupier. But, as he understood this Motion, the recommendation made to the House was that money should be lent by the State at a low rate of interest, to enable, not the occupiers to become owners, but to enable the burdened owners to pay off existing mortgages, which it was admitted they had entered into, in many cases, with their eyes open, giving, as they had done, a much higher price than the property was worth even at the time when they bought it. In consequence of the present depression in agriculture, moreover, the value of the property had been greatly depreciated. The Welsh Land Commission had reported in favour of a limited application of this proposal to lend money, but he did not understand that there was any such limit in the Motion before the House. The hon. Gentleman who moved this Motion did not confine himself definitely to the recommendations of the Royal Commission, but left it open to them to embody generally those recommendations. The Seconder of the Motion, on the other hand, said that any such limitations as those imposed in the recommendations of the Royal Commission found no favour with him. If the Government undertook to lend money upon easy terms to occupying owners to enable them to redeem their mortgages it would not be the hon. Member for Pembrokeshire alone who would ask that the limit should be extended. They would find representatives, not only of Welsh constituencies, but of constituencies in every part of the United Kingdom, making a like request, and proving, as they could undoubtedly prove, that the condition of things in England were similar to those in Wales. He admitted there was a great and strong desire amongst the Welsh farmers to continue to live on their farms and amongst their native surroundings. Generally speaking, that desire might not be so universal in England, but he asserted that on the part of the freeholders in England there had been as close and warm attachment to their land as was to be found in any other part of the United Kingdom, and many of them had bought their properties when land was much more valuable than it was now, and had encumbered themselves with heavy mortgages, with the result that to-day their position was as serious as that of any freeholder in Wales. Whatever the cause of the present condition of things in Wales might be—whether it was land hunger or the fact that many of the men could only speak Welsh—it was not the cause they had to consider, but the result, and whether it was desirable, and, if desirable, possible to deal with the state of affairs. He submitted that to lend men money to discharge their mortgages or to transfer their mortgages from one holder to another, the other being the State, was not a system which could be recommended as a sound one or one which the State could wisely adopt. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, to whom reference had been made, had offered occupiers the opportunity of becoming the owners of their holdings by the payment of so much down and the rest by deferred payments spread over a series of years, with the provision of a sinking fund with which to redeem the capital. That was a businesslike proposal. He would always be prepared to look with consideration upon a proposal to enable occupiers to become owners when there was evidence that they desired so to do; but he did not notice any strong desire on the part of occupiers anywhere to become the owners of their land as things were at present. There was an impression, which was not limited to England, that land was not altogether a desirable possession at the present moment, and he was afraid there was some foundation for it. If the present proposal were adopted, the principle embodied in it could not possibly be confined to Wales. Before the Commission on Agricultural Depression abundant evidence was given by Mr. Clare Sewell Read, Mr. Everett, and others, which showed that every word which could be said in respect to occupiers in Wales could with truth be said in regard to occupiers in other parts of the United Kingdom. What did this proposal mean? Did it mean that they were only going to transfer the mortgage from the individual who now held it to the State, who was to hold it on the same terms as it was held now, or did it mean that they were to transfer the mortgage to the State and that the State was to lend money to the freeholder on such terms that he could not only pay the interest, but also redeem the debt at the end of a certain period?

*MR. REES DAVIES: The Commission mention 30, 40, or 50 years.

*MR. WALTER LONG said he was aware what the Commission said, but he desired to know what hon. Members meant by the Resolution. The Resolution did not on the face of it mean that mortgages should be redeemed by annual payments. But if that was the meaning what would be the result? The wish was to give these poor men, who were suffering severely, present relief. Would they be able to give the men present relief? He found that under the Housing of the Working Classes Act money had never been lent for so long a period of time as 50 years at less than 3½ per cent. interest. If they added to that rate of interest the necessary sinking fund, they would find that for every £100 the State might be willing to lend the tenant would have to pay £4 5s. in place of the interest he was now paying. That was not all. There would be considerable cost attending the transfer of the mortgage. They would have to have the properties certified and examined. In the case of the purchases from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, or of those under the Irish Land Act, or of those proposed to be carried out under the Small Holdings Act, the State lent money to the individual with which he was to be able to buy his property at the present value and at the present price. But what the State was asked to do in this instance was to enable men to redeem obligations incurred many years ago at the price at which the land was then bought. He did not wonder that hon. Gentlemen made Motions like this, because no one knew better than he how bitter was the cry which came from many agriculturists. He knew that every word which had been said as to the industrious, hard-working lives of those people was perfectly true, and he did not wonder that hon. Members from Wales, knowing the hard struggle it was for those people to live, should make this appeal on their behalf. But he asked the House not to be led into adopting this Motion by a natural and proper feeling of sympathy with a large and deserving class in distress. The Motion if adopted could not possibly be limited to this particular class of freeholders in Wales alone. It must be extended to the freeholders of the whole country. Any attempt to limit its application to this particular class of freeholders in Wales would be swept away by the force of the representations which would be made to Parliament of sufferings just as keen on the part of freeholders, large and small, throughout England. If they gave this assistance to small freeholders in Wales on the ground that their land-hunger had overcome their prudence, they would have to extend it to all freeholders. Therefore, while the Government made no complaint of the bringing forward of this Motion—for there were excuses for it, and it had been moved in a moderate and temperate manner—they must ask the House to reject it, because it would not have the effect of relieving the burdens of the class it sought to help, because it would be impossible to limit it to that class, and because it would entail an enormous liability on the State.

Mr. BRYN ROBERTS (Carnarvonshire, Eifion) said the right hon. Gentleman had argued that the Irish case was a case of the Government having turned an occupying tenantry into owners, whereas the Motion proposed to assist landholders who were already owners to pay off their mortgages, which, in the opinion of the right hon. Gentleman was a totally different matter. The distinction the right hon. Gentleman had drawn between the two cases—the Welsh and the Irish—was totally fallacious.

Attention was here called to the fact that there were not forty Members present. The House was thereupon counted, and a quorum having been found,

Mr. BRYN ROBERTS said the Motion was not to assist small freeholders, as the right hon. Gentleman supposed, but to assist only such freeholders as had already purchased their own holdings.

*Mr. WALTER LONG: I am quite aware of that fact, but I pointed out that, whatever your intention might be, it would be quite impossible to maintain that restriction.

Mr. BRYN ROBERTS said the only difference between the Welsh case and the Irish case was that the Welsh farmers had, unlike the Irish farmers, helped themselves in the first instance by purchasing their own holdings, and surely they were not on that account the less deserving of assistance now that they found themselves unable to adhere to the original terms of purchase. The right hon. Gentleman declared that if the case were admitted it would not be possible to confine it to Wales. But the principle had been admitted in Ireland; it would be impossible to confine it to Ireland, and it must be extended to Wales. The intention was that the advances from the State should be repayable, principal and interest, in a specified term; and the right hon. Gentleman had argued that in that case the burden of the tenants would not be alleviated because they would have to repay at the rate of 4½ per cent. In the case of Ireland the advance was repayable, principal and interest, at the rate of 4 per cent. for forty years. But at the time that advance was made Consols were below par, and now that Consols were at £112, the money could be advanced to the Welsh at a lower rate of interest. The right hon. Gentleman also said that in Ireland the land was bought at the depressed price, whereas the proposal in the case of Wales was that the tenants were to be helped to purchase at the high price, or to relieve themselves of their mortgages at the high price. He ventured to say that in no case did a mortgage amount to more than three-quarters of its value. They were therefore not asking the Government to advance the full price that was got from the land twelve or fourteen years ago, when land was at a very high value; but only three-quarters of that price, which would not be more than the present value of the land in the market. The only questions that remained were—did the necessity for this transaction exist in Wales? and would it be a safe investment for the State? The necessity was proved by the evidence given before the Land Commission, and that it would be safe for the Government to advance the money would be admitted by everyone who knew that the Welsh farmers, like their mountain sheep, could make a living in circumstances that would mean starvation to anybody else.

On the return of Mr. Speaker, after the usual interval,

General LAURIE (Pembroke and Haverfordwest) said that he was sorry that he should have intervened in the Debate so as to have prevented the House from coming to an immediate decision upon this Motion, but the interest he took in this question must be his excuse for having done so. No doubt, the answer to the Motion that had been given by the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Agriculture was most conclusive, from his point of view; but he thought that there was one point to which he was bound to refer. It was admitted that, in many cases, the position of the Welsh freeholder was almost desperate, and that unless he received substantial and speedy assistance he would be unable to continue to be a freeholder, and must fall back upon the position of a tenant of the land he now owned. That would be the inevitable result if those who held mortgages on these freeholds were to foreclose and sell the land. It had been stated on the part of the Government that it was a principle of public policy that public money could not be used for the purpose of perpetuating the race of freeholders who could not manage to hold their own. But was that contention well founded? During the last 20 years there had been a new departure in this matter, and public money had been used over and over again for the purpose of enabling tenants to become freeholders. The acquisition of their holdings by the Irish tenants had been facilitated by the use of public money, which had also been applied in the case of the Scotch crofters and of the tenants in certain parts of England. He wanted to know why what had been done in the case of Ireland, Scotland and England, could not be done in the case of Wales? Surely it was as important to prevent freeholders from becoming tenants as it was to enable tenants to become freeholders. He admitted that the use of public money for these purposes was a new departure; but still that was the order of the day. For these reasons he should feel bound to support the proposal which was embodied in the Motion. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. THOMAS ELLIS (Merionethshire) said, in the first place, he must express his deep regret that the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Board of Agriculture, speaking on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, should have felt himself bound to meet this Motion by a direct negative. In the case of tenants whose families had occupied holdings for generations, and had improved the waste land until it was now good land, it was not to be wondered at that they tried to keep a tight grip on their holdings and their homes. Within the last 25 or 35 years large numbers of Welsh tenants had been evicted. When these estates came into the market and the holders had lost the security they had in the honour of their landlords, they did their utmost to secure their homes and their improvements, and it was too subtle a distinction for the right hon. Gentleman to draw between assenting to State loans for farms that were being or were about to be purchased, and refusing absolutely to sanction any State loans in order to ease the burden which lay upon these hard-worked peasant freeholders. ["Hear, hear!"] The first argument of the right hon. Gentleman was that an hon. Friend of his had said that he was unwilling to assent to certain limitations which the Commissioners had laid down. That was not sufficient to take away the responsibility of the Government for refusing to deal in any shape or form with the unanimous recommendations of the Royal Commission.

General Laurie.

*Mr. WALTER LONG said that what he had said had been that it would be impossible for the Government to maintain these limitations. The opinion of the Government was that the case of freeholders in England was as grave as the case of freeholders in Wales, and he said the Government did not see any justification for making any difference between the freeholders in Wales and the freeholders in many parts of England.

Mr. THOMAS ELLIS said that at any rate the right hon. Gentleman could not say that it was impossible to set up limitations. Limitations were constantly laid down in Bills brought before the House, as, for instance, in the Small Holdings Act of 1892. As to the other shelter the right hon. Gentleman endeavoured to get from the case of the freeholders in England, the freeholders in Wales had stated their case before a Royal Commission, and every one of the Members of that Commission signed a recommendation to the Government to ease their burdens. The peasant freeholders in Wales had petitioned the House years and years ago, and every representative of Wales sitting on either side of the House had that night backed the recommendation of the Commissioners. ["Hear, hear!"] He therefore ventured to say that a clear case had been made out for dealing with peasant freeholders in Wales, and so far as he knew, not a single hon. Member had got up to advocate any such case on behalf of England as was now advocated on behalf of Wales. The distressed freeholders in England had presented no petition to the House, and no Royal Commission had made any recommendation on their behalf. To the clear case that had been made out the right hon. Gentleman only gave a blank and decided negative, and he could only express his deep regret that, coming to the House and speaking for the Government was all that the right hon. Gentleman could do.

MR W. T. HOWELL (Denbigh Boroughs) regretted that in a discussion of this kind the last speaker should have introduced something of the bitter element by referring to events very long past—he meant those disputes between landlords and tenants which had something political in them. ["Hear, hear!"] Those disputes were dead, and he thought it would be better for Wales if all recollection of them were buried. There was one fallacy which underlay what had been said so far concerning the small freeholders in Wales and elsewhere. Speakers had ignored the fact that, after all, a freeholder who was under a heavy mortgage was in effect a tenant, though he happened to be tenant to a mortgagee instead of a superior landlord. The difficulty was this, that years ago they charged their land with heavy mortgages. In many cases they were anxious to buy land they were farming, and had not sufficient capital to buy it, and so borrowed at high rates of interest at a time when agricultural depression began to be a burden on farmers. They thought the depression was only temporary, and that they would be able to repay the money in good years. Their expectations had unfortunately been wrong. They now came before Parliament to ask for special aid on the ground that they represented an industry which the country could not afford to allow to go to rack and ruin. They said that they had an exceptional case. He agreed with that position, but he must say that, when he stood in a Parliament which was supposed to represent all sections in the country, it was impossible for him to say that because the small freeholder who had charged his land happened to hold land in Wales, he was to be preferred to the small freeholder in exactly similar circumstances throughout the English counties. ["Hear, hear!"] Even if limitations were enforced, the opinion of Members of the House must first be obtained as to what those limitations were to be on which such a gigantic scheme as was proposed was to be carried out. If the Chancellor of the Exchequer said he could carry out a scheme of such magnitude, it would be an undoubted boon to the freeholders throughout the country; but until he was informed that it was possible financially to carry out such a scheme, he was afraid the Motion of his hon. Friend could not result in much good. An attempt was made in the Resolution to establish the position that there was something different in the Land Question in Wales from the Land Question in England. [Opposition cheers.] He knew hon. Gentlemen opposite held that opinion, and wished to add one more to the orthodox ten commandments, the commandment "Be selfish. ["No, no!"] Get everything you can for Wales and do not give it to others who have just as good a claim to it." Although he sympathised with the small freeholders in England and Wales he could not admit that there was an essential difference between the Welsh and the English Land Question. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH (Anglesey) said that the hon. Member who had just sat down represented a Welsh borough. He presumed that the hon. Member would vote against the Resolution, but would hon. Members who represented Welsh counties do so? ["Hear, hear!"] He denied that the supporters of this Motion were selfish in this matter. They wanted this reform for Wales, but if evidence were adduced showing that England needed a similar reform they would not oppose the demand. In Wales the matter was pressing. There had been great sales of landed estates, and when they took place the tenants were in this dilemma: they had to buy their farms, paying for their improvements over again, or they had to part with their farms and with their improvements. In a great many cases they purchased, paying for their own improvements, and thus putting into the landlords' pockets money to which they were not entitled. Their position now was very precarious, and they came to that House and said, "You have for a great number of years omitted to reform the Land Laws of this country, and under those laws we have been put in a position of great stress, and only a new law can put us fairly right." They asked that in order to improve their position they might be allowed to borrow money in the manner and for the purposes set out in the Resolution. In his opinion their demand was just, and he trusted that the House would accede to it.

MAJOR WYNDHAM-QUIN (Glamorgan, S.), as the representative of a Welsh agricultural district, supported the Motion that had been brought forward. [Opposition cheers.] At the same time he was fully alive to the fact that what was due to the peasant freeholders in Wales was also due to the small freeholders in England. ["Hear, hear!"] The inquiries of the Land Commission, however, had been confined to the Principality, and therefore Welsh Members were justified in limiting their proposals to the case of the freeholders of that part of the country which they represented. Large advances of public money had been made to Irish tenants to assist them in times of distress, and he could not understand why a similar benefit should not be conferred on small freeholders and tenants in Great Britain. There was no difference of principle between assisting financially a freeholder who had bought his land and assisting a tenant to purchase his holding. In helping the small Welsh freeholders the Government would be assisting a loyal, industrious, and law-abiding portion of the community.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.) said that the question before the House was regarded as urgent and pressing in Wales. He represented an important agricultural constituency in North Wales, and he could say truly that great interest was taken in this subject by his constituents. The number of small freeholders in Denbighshire was decreasing he was sorry to say. One of his constituents who had given evidence before the Royal Commission, said that he had purchased his farm in two lots, in 1873 and 1880, and that since then he had enjoyed greater liberty of cultivation, and had spent £1,000 on improvements. He had however found it extremely difficult to make the farm pay, although he worked as hard as a man could. That was a typical case. One fact that differentiated the case of the small freeholders of Wales from that of small freeholders of England was that the number of the former was not as large as the number in England. In Wales there were only 424 to each county, but to each English county there were 1,203. Then the area of ground held in England by these freeholders was 14 per cent., whilst in Wales it was only 11 per cent. Reference had already been made to what occurred in 1868, after the historic elections of those days. Notices to quit were showered upon the farmers, many of whom were thus forced to buy their holdings on unfair conditions, and they had suffered in consequence from that time up to the present. He did not agree with the hon. Member opposite, who said "We must leave the past to bury its dead." They could not do so. Large numbers of the inhabitants of Wales remembered too vividly the cruel events of that period. The Royal Commission had recommended powerfully the adoption of the principle of the Motion, and that evening, with the exception of the hon. Member opposite, the whole representatives of Wales in Parliament were in favour of the proposal. In these circumstances he trusted that the House would accept the Resolution.

*Mr. STANLEY LEIGHTON (Shropshire, Oswestry) said he had heard something from hon. Gentlemen about the insatiable hunger for land. The other day he offered for sale in small portions a small estate of his in Wales, but he did not get a single offer. [Laughter.] It was all humbug; this land hunger did not exist. He should like to find those persons who were willing to give 50, 60, 70, and 80 years' purchase for land. It was admitted that this Motion would not, if translated into an Act of Parliament, increase by one the existing number of freeholders in Wales. Hon. Members were asking for assistance on behalf of a certain small section of the people out of the pockets of the artisans, cottagers, and tenant farmers of the whole country. How magnanimous! but how far from an economical method of dealing with a financial difficulty! If hon. Gentlemen could do something for the freeholders by relieving them a little of their taxation and by placing them more on an equality with those whose income came from other sources, then they would do some real good to the freeholders in Wales and England. Why did not hon. Gentlemen who professed to be so anxious to help the people of Wales try to relieve them from the inequalities of local taxation? The Radical representatives of Wales did nothing in this respect; they hindered rather than helped the agricultural interest in the Principality. When it was claimed that the State should come to the rescue of those who had made bad bargains, he reminded hon. Members that there was once a certain young man who bought a gross of green spectacles. [Laughter and "That is fiction."] Ought the State to have come to his rescue? If it came to the rescue of one set of people who made bad bargains, ought it not to come to the rescue of all? Wales had suffered less from agricultural depression than any other part of the United Kingdom. An hon. Member said that the end of the mortgaged freeholder was not far off. What did this mean? Simply this: that a freeholder who had bought his land for £100 would have to sell it for £50. His place would be filled by another freeholder, with this difference—that the new man would be unmortgaged. This Resolution might be described as one to indemnify mortgagees and endow moneylenders. Why should the State interfere in order to pay back money lent on a bad security and to pull the mortgagee out of his difficulty? From the economic point of view the State ought not to interfere in a case like this. Though he wished to see as many people become freeholders as possible, he did not wish to see the State come forward and, by use of the taxes, buy their estates for them, or pay their bad debts. He would rather urge hon. Members opposite to help their Welsh fellow-countrymen by endeavouring to teach them the language of the world and the language of commerce—English.

*The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER (Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Bristol, W.) said he could not accept the speech of the hon. Member (Mr. T. Ellis) as representative of that which would have been made by a Welsh Chancellor of the Exchequer had he taken part in this Debate. And he was convinced that if the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouthshire had happened to have been in his place he would hardly have re-echoed the eloquent sentiments of the hon. Gentleman. He was anxious to put this matter before the House from a point of view which had been neglected—that of the taxpayers of the country. Personally, he thought there was much in this Motion with which he could sympathise. All of them desired to maintain the freeholders, and especially the small freeholders, of the country. He was too well acquainted with many cases where mortgages had compelled, not only small, but large freeholders to part with old family estates, large or small, not to sympathise with the desire that some help should be given to persons in these circumstances. But he was obliged to consider the matter from the point of view in which it must present itself to the taxpayers. What was the position? What was asked by the Motion was not akin to anything that had been done for Ireland. What had been done for Ireland was to pass Act after Act in order, if possible, to substitute a system of small ownership for a system of landlord and tenant. ["Hear, hear!"] Throughout that legislation this had been always required; a valuation of the property to be transferred from landlord to tenant at the time of the transfer by a responsible Department on behalf of the State, so as to secure that the tenant did not give too large a sum for the property which he was purchasing. That was entirely different from the system now proposed. The House was asked to sanction the principle that mortgages of property which had been already purchased, whether by their former tenants or by persons entirely unconnected with those properties, should be redeemed by an advance from the State—in other words, at the expense of the taxpayers. That was a principle which had been, he thought, very wisely refused in advances made for public purposes by the Public Works Loan Commissioners. That body made advances for every kind of work almost that could be suggested, but it was one of their rules never to make advances to pay off old debts. And for this obvious reason, that if the old debt had been incurred, and it was advisable for the person incurring it to come to the State to pay it off, the probability, nay, almost the certainty, was that the value of the property on which the debt had been incurred had depreciated, and therefore nobody else would lend money upon it. That was the very case which hon. Members had put. They said the condition of the freeholders in Wales was so bad, that, in spite of their industry, their honesty, and all their good qualities, they were reduced to such a position that they could not maintain their farms, that they would be sold up and their farms transferred to other persons unless the taxpayers stepped in to help them. The property had depreciated in value since its purchase, and it was part of the case that the purchase was made at a higher value than the property was worth even in prosperous times. In his opinion, the result of any such proposal as this would simply be that the taxpayers would find themselves mortgagees of all the worst properties in the country, while those properties which had increased in value and whose owners were able to borrow on good terms in the public market would take very good care never to come to Government at all. ["Hear, hear!"] He trusted the House of Commons would not initiate a principle which, it seemed to him, would have the greatest possible danger for the taxpayers in the future. Because there was nothing more true than what had been said by more than one speaker—that Parliament could not adopt this principle and confine it solely to Wales. There might be—he knew there was—a very strong feeling of nationality on the part of hon. Members from Wales. They might contend, and possibly with some truth, that the circumstances of owners and occupiers of land in Wales were in some measure different from those in most parts of England; but of this he was quite sure, that there were parts of England where the depreciation in land had been far greater than in Wales, and if there were a case for the aid of the State to small landowners in Wales, there was a much stronger case on behalf of the landowners in the east and south of England, where the value of land had depreciated 50 per cent., or even more, in some cases. Then it had been admitted that if Parliament once initiated this principle they could not confine it to small landowners only. The hon. Member who seconded the Motion said that 150 acres, the limit recommended by the Royal Commission, could not, in his opinion, be adhered to. No limit of acreage could possibly be adhered to, because the value of 50 acres in one part of the country might be quite as much as that of 1,000 acres in another part. Therefore they would be compelled, if they took any limit, to take a limit of value and not of acreage. But how were they going to adhere to a limit of value? Why was the owner of 500 acres, worth, perhaps, £5,000, not to be as much entitled to assistance in this way as the owner of five or ten acres? He was bound to say that some of the hardest and most painful cases that had come under his notice—and he had had many applications for State assistance of this kind—had come from owners of the larger estates—estates which had been in certain families for many generations, and whose owners, owing to the present depreciation in the value of land, had found themselves in the position of being obliged to part with old family property. What must be the answer in such cases? He was afraid only this—that it was better, hard though it might seem, in the public interest, that the property should be sold and vested in a person who could afford to manage and farm it properly than that it should remain in the hands of an owner encumbered with heavy mortgages and who, therefore, was not in a position to do justice to it at all. ["Hear, hear!"] This was not a Motion in accordance with the Irish Land Acts, to increase the number of owners of land in Wales or anywhere else. Rather it would only prevent an encumbered owner from parting with his estate in favour of some other owner who was able to do more justice to it, and, therefore, to do more good to the country at large. And for this the State and the taxpayers were asked to undertake a burden which, if once accepted, must be increased until it would become a burden far too great to be reasonably borne. He trusted the House would pause, in the interest of the taxpayers of this country, before it accepted the principle embodied in the Motion, for he was convinced that if once accepted and acted upon for Wales, it must be extended to the rest of the United Kingdom. [Cheers.]

The House divided:—Ayes, 43; Noes, 102.—(Division List—No. 46—appended).

AYES.

Arch, Joseph
Brigg, John
Caldwell, James
Davies, M.Vaughan- (Cardigan)
Davitt, Michael
Dillon, John
Donelan, Captain A.
Ellis, Thos. Edw. (Merionethsh.)
Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
Flynn, James Christopher
Gilhooly, James
Griffith, Ellis J.
Holburn, J. G.
Jameson, Major J. Eustace
Jones, David Brynmor (Swansea)
Jones, William (Carnarvonshire)
Kilbride, Denis
Langley, Batty
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Lewis, John Herbert
Macaleese, Daniel
McGhee, Richard
McKenna, Reginald
McLeod, John
Milbank, Powlett Charles John
Morley, Charles (Breconshire)
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
Owen, Thomas
Pickersgill, Edward Hare
Price, Robert John
Provand, Andrew Dryburgh
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Samuel, J. (Stockton-on-Tees)
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Thomas, Alfred (Glamorgan E.)
Wedderburn, Sir William
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Wilson, Henry J. (York, W.R.)
Wilson, John (Govan)
Wyndham-Quin, Major W. H.
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES, Mr. Lloyd Morgan and Mr. Rees-Davies.

NOES.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir A. F.
Arrol, Sir William
Ascroft, Robert
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Balcarres, Lord
Balfour, Rt. Hon. A.J. (Manch'r)
Balfour, Gerald William (Leeds)
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H. (Bristol)
Begg, Ferdinand Faithfull
Bhownaggree, M. M.
Blundell, Colonel Henry
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Cavendish, V.C.W. (Derbyshire)
Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Birm.)
Charrington, Spencer
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Coghill, Douglas Harry
Colomb, Sir John Charles Ready
Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
Corbett, A. Cameron (Glasgow)
Cross, Herb. Shepherd (Bolton)

Curzon, Viscount (Bucks)
Darling, Charles John
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Doxford, William Theodore
Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
Dyke, Rt. Hon. Sir William Hart
Edwards, Gen. Sir James Bevan
Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn Edward
Fielden, Thomas
Finch, George H.
Fisher, William Hayes
Flower, Ernest
Folkestone, Viscount
Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (City of Lond.)
Giles, Charles Tyrrell
Gilliat, John Saunders
Gordon, John Edward
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Rt. Hon. G. J. (St. Grgs.)
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Greene, W. Raymond- (Cambs)
Gull, Sir Cameron
Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm.
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Heath, James
Heaton, John Henniker
Hill, Rt. Hn. Lord Arthur (Down)
Howell, William Tudor
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. Grice-
Johnston, William (Belfast)
Kemp, George
Knowles, Lees
Leighton, Stanley
Long, Rt. Hn. Walter (Liverpool)
Lorne, Marquess of
Lowles, John
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lyttelton, Hon. Alfred
Macartney, W. G. Ellison
Macdona, John Cumming
McCalmont, H. L. B. (Cambs)
McKillop, James
Mellor, Colonel (Lancashire)
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
Milward, Colonel Victor
Monk, Charles James
Murray, Rt. Hn. A. Graham (Bute
Parkes, Ebenezer
Pollock, Harry Frederick
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Pryce-Jones, Edward
Purvis, Robert
Rankin, James
Richardson, Thomas
Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
Round, James
Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
Seton-Karr, Henry
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Stanley, Lord (Lancs.)
Sutherland, Sir Thomas
Taylor, Francis
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Wm. Edw. Murray
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Valentia, Viscount
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Webster, Sir R. E. (Isle of W.)
Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
Wharton, John Loyd
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Willox, John Archibald
Wodehouse, Edmond R. (Bath.)
Wolff, Gustav Wilhelm

TELLERS FOR THE NOES, Sir William Walrond and Mr. Anstruther.

STATUTE LAW REVISION BILLS.

Lords Message [2nd February], relating to the appointment of a Joint Committee on Statute Law Revision Bills, considered.

Ordered, That a Select Committee of Seven Members be appointed to join with the Committee appointed by the Lords (as mentioned in their Lordships' Message of the 2nd February) to consider all Statute Law Revision Bills and Consolidation Bills of the present Session.

Message to the Lords to acquaint them therewith.

Committee nominated of :— Mr. William Ambrose, Sir Edward Clarke, Mr. Samuel Evans, Mr. T. M. Healy, Mr. Hobhouse, Sir Robert Reid, and the Solicitor General.—(Sir William Walrond).

PETROLEUM.

Select Committee appointed to inquire into and report upon the sufficiency of the Law relating to the keeping, selling, using, and conveying of Petroleum and other Inflammable Liquids; and the precaution to be adopted for the prevention of accidents with Petroleum Lamps.

The Committee was accordingly nominated of :—Sir Thomas Carmichael, Mr. Jesse Collings, Mr. Alexander Cross, Mr. Fortescue Flannery, Sir Edward Hill, Mr. Wootton Isaacson, Mr. Kenyon, Mr. McKillop, Mr. Mundella, Mr. Pollock, Mr. Harold Reckitt, Mr. Compton Rickett, Sir Benjamin Stone, Mr. Tully, and Mr. Ure.

Ordered, That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers, and records.

Ordered, That Three be the quorum. —(Sir William Walrond.)

INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT AND INCORPORATED BUILDING SOCIETIES (PURCHASE OF FEE SIMPLE) BILL.

MR. H. J. WILSON (York, W.R., Holmfirth) rose to move the Second Reading of this Bill.

Notice taken that 40 Members were not present; House counted, and 40 Members not being present,

House adjourned at a Quarter past Ten o'clock till To-morrow.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 24th February 1897.

STATUTE LAW REVISION BILLS, &c.

Ordered, That Three be the quorum of the Committee appointed to join with the Committee appointed by the Lords to consider all Statute Law Revision Bills and Consolidation Bills of the present Session.—(Sir William Walrond.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

BURIALS BILL.

*MR. ROBERT CAMERON (Durham, Houghton-le-Spring) moved "That this Bill be now Read a Second time." He felt that, in this matter, there was a grievance in the country that ought to be remedied, and this Bill proposed a remedy. In this Bill Dissenters were simply seeking to share what he considered the equal rights of free citizens in a free country. Hon. Gentlemen opposite sometimes thought it was the dissatisfied and discontented Nonconformist who was always fighting for imaginary wrongs. In his opinion the root of the controversy was very different from that. It was simply, not because they were Nonconformists in the main, but because they were Englishmen, and Englishmen would not submit to unjust extortions and be always kept in unequal positions, and would not always submit to unfair treatment in any department of the activities of citizenship. He considered, therefore, that the Nonconformist or anyone else, seeking redress in this matter, was only discharging a duty of citizenship. This question had been repeatedly brought before the House with varying results; but in the last Session but one, a Bill dealing with the subject was carried by a majority of 110. Behind it all lay the desire, not of Nonconformists only, but of those who conducted and managed their Burial Boards, and who found themselves always at a loss to which of the two or three Acts of Parliament dealing with the subject they should apply. In 1880 there was a great step taken in advance on this question. Then Nonconformists got conceded to them a great privilege—the right to be buried in consecrated ground. For his own part, he always regretted that these concessions had to be wrung from the clergy. They ought to be generously given as simple matters of justice. Since that date a more liberal spirit had arisen. Five or six Bishops, some gone, some living, had expressed themselves in favour of abolishing consecration now that they had got cemeteries, and were not restricted to burials in churchyards. But the clergy thought, and perhaps not unnaturally, that in consecrated ground they ought to possess all their old privileges. This Bill proposed that the rite of consecration should confer no privilege or disability or obligation, but that it should be purely and simply a religious rite. He trusted hon. Gentlemen opposite would see that that demand was not an unreasonable one, seeing that so many Bishops themselves felt it was just, and that many of them refused to consecrate and dedicated instead. Clause 2 provided that a cemetery or part of a cemetery might be consecrated by the Church of England, or by any other church or denomination. Clause 3 gave power to the burial authority to provide buildings for the performance of burial services, and, whether consecrated or not, they could be available to all the people. This question of the consecration of chapels had led to a great deal of bitter contention in different parts of the country. He thought no one could see these two chapels in a burial ground, frowning at each other, without feeling that our religion was not represented by them, but dishonoured by them. This Bill would obviate that, for it would allow one chapel, and that chapel to be used by all parties. He thought it was little short of a scandal that they could not co-operate in the solemn services over the dead. It was not only the clergy that suffered from this exclusive spirit, but Christianity itself largely suffered in the eyes of the people. Clause 4 provided that the Bishop's authority should not be required for the plan of any building or as to the fitness of any tomb, monument, or monumental inscription. He thought that was a very just and necessary provision. The plans of buildings, tombs, and so forth, should surely be in the hands of a responsible secular authority—the authority the people had elected to carry the work out. Clause 5 dealt with the burial of paupers or lunatics in consecrated ground; and Clause 6 reserved existing rights to perform duties and receive fees. Subject to this, however, the right of any minister, incumbent, parish clerk, sexton, or other person holding a parochial office to perform any duties or to receive any fees in respect of any burial or any purpose in connection with the use of a public burial ground should absolutely cease after the commencement of the Act. This provision, in his opinion, would remove one of the chief sources of annoyance and objection, and one of the chief reasons why funerals were made so expensive. There was also a provision enabling the burial authority to make arrangements for the payment of fees by agreement with those entitled to receive them. There were further Amendments of the old Act, which he considered of great importance. These proposed to lengthen the time during the day in which a funeral might take place; that shorter notice might be given that a funeral was to take place; and that, when notice was given of a change in the time at which a burial was to take place, it might take place on Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas Day. He thought this would be a great convenience to the working classes, for on such days they did not lose a day's labour, and would be able to have around them their friends to administer the comfort and consolation customary on such occasions. There were also Amendments abolishing those small distinctions which belonged to other times and not to their day. The Bill left the fees as they were at present, though this was a very sore question in the country. Burial Boards felt it as well as other people. The Select Committee had reported very summarily and drastically on the necessity of abolishing those fees. He might mention that the Vicar of Hampstead had received £700 a year for the last ten years from fees, while the Vicar of Weston-super-Mare had received over £11,000 for interments. When he read this Return for the first time he was not surprised at the strong objection of clergymen and others to Disestablishment and Disendowment. During the five years ending 30th September 1892, the inhabitants of the City of London paid £2,632; of Islington, £2,038; of Lambeth, £1,496; of Paddington, £2,889. Brompton Cemetery yielded to the clergy the large sum of £8,092; and for only 717 interments in the Metropolitan cemeteries the clergy received no less than about £27,000, or about £5,400 a year. And what services were rendered in return? None! None at all!! One sect, and one sect only had this advantage, simply because the law allowed it, and he denounced this as a wrong against fairness and freedom. Dissenting ministers had been tempted with the same fees for interments in unconsecrated ground. When funerals on unconsecrated ground increased because the fees were less, Burial Boards had illegally offered equal fees on the unconsecrated to those on the consecrated side, but for his part he would be ashamed of any Nonconformist minister who would take them. What he would like in a matter of this kind, and he really thought it would be the proper and Christian method under the circumstances would be that the friends of the deceased should make a voluntary or freewill offering to mark their respect for the minister who conducted the service, to show their belief in him as guide and friend. To exact a fee by law was one thing, to receive a free gift of love and respect from the community was quite another thing. The fundamental mistake the Church made was to exact these fees as a legal charge. Not by such compulsory powers did the Church gain credit and influence, the Church lost more than it gained in the moral and Christian respect of the community at large. He thought he need not go further into this question, and would only remind the House of what Bishops of the Church of England had said in relation to the subject; and, in citing these authorities, he might be allowed to say he held them in high personal respect, he had read some of their writings, and perhaps knew as much of them as did many of those who were opposing the Bill. First he quoted the late Archbishop Tait, a name respected all over the Christian world, and especially respected in the schools of this country and among its schoolmasters. Speaking in Debate in 1880, the late Archbishop Tait, referring to a cemetery with two chapels, said it was

"A proclamation to the whole world of the differences between the Church and Dissenters, and he should not regret if the instances of that proclamation were not multiplied."

Then the present Archbishop of Canterbury—and, surely, here again was a man who was held in respect by hon. Gentlemen opposite—had pronounced on this subject in very definite language. In referring to probable alterations in the Burial Laws, Archbishop Temple said:—

"It would be necessary in providing for the future to do away with the distinction between consecrated and unconsecrated ground. It would not be possible in future to compel the erection in cemeteries of separate chapels for the services of the Church of England. Nor could he say it would be desirable. The very existence of the two chapels in a cemetery was a scandal and a reproach."

The late Bishop of Manchester, Dr. Fraser, whom he had had the honour of meeting more than once on platforms and elsewhere, a man of sterling character, and an honour to the Church, when consecrating a cemetery at Accrington, said:—

"There is only one thing that gives me pain, and that is when I look round this cemetery and see three chapels standing there, which are so many witnesses that Christian people are not all of one mind; that the distinctions which part them in life are, unhappily, continued after death."

On another occasion Bishop Fraser said:—

"I do hope the day will come when Churchmen, Nonconformists, and Roman Catholics may at last agree to use the same building set apart for the holy purpose of reading a service over the dead."

The late Bishop of Ely expressed views to the same effect, and he performed the ceremony of dedication, instead of consecrating cemeteries. The same might be said of others he could name. He thought he need say no more. He commended the Bill as a Measure for allaying the contention on this subject between the Church and Dissent, and as a clear guide to burial authorities throughout the country. It would save ratepayers a large amount of money, and he did not know how it would in any way injure anybody, except that it would destroy a monopoly that never should have been allowed to exist, a monopoly that was discreditable to any church or chapel participating in it. He moved that the Bill be now read a Second time.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield) hoped the House would not be led to draw an erroneous inference from the two facts that he happened to be one of the promoters of the Bill, and that the hon. Member for the Tunbridge Division (Mr. Griffith-Boscawen) had given notice to move the rejection of the Bill. He differed fundamentally from the hon. Member on the question of Disestablishment; but this Bill raised no such issue as that, and was strictly limited in its object. It might be discussed, and ought to be discussed, quite outside the wider question of Disestablishment. In the Debate which took place two years ago the hon. Member for the Hyde Division (Mr. J. W. Sidebotham), in a speech of remarkable frankness, made an important admission. He said, and truly said,

"that it was the greatest mistake in the world to suppose that Churchmen were not as much interested as Nonconformists in the settlement of this question."

The hon. Member went even further than that, for he contended that the privileges granted to the clergy under the existing law

"were not wanted, nor even valued by those who possessed them, and there was no reason why they should not be removed by law."

He could state dozens of facts showing that dissatisfaction with the existing law was not confined to Nonconformists, but was shared by a large number of Churchmen; but he would mention only two. Before the late Home Secretary went out of office he was waited upon by a deputation from various Burial Boards throughout the country, to complain of the excessive fees paid to clergymen and others for burials in the consecrated parts of cemeteries; which fees the deputation declared were unjust, because no service was rendered in return. He had nothing whatever to do with that deputation, and was not previously aware of the arrangement. It was introduced by a Conservative Member of Parliament, and that fact sufficiently indicated its non-party and non-denominational character. The second fact was yet more striking. Such was the antipathy in some parts of the country to the present law in regard to consecration, that Burial Boards, or Parish Councils, had actually entered into agreement with local Churchmen, clergy, and the Bishop of the diocese to contract themselves out of the Burial Acts, and by legal agreement the clergy waived their claim to rights and fees under those Acts. The only objection he had to this contracting out was that it was merely a makeshift arrangement, and it did not bind the successors to the present incumbents and others, so that troubles might arise hereafter. But such arrangements served to show how great was the dislike to the existing system, and how it was regarded even by those who might be supposed to be among its defenders. The promoters of the Bill had approached this subject, this in some respects painful subject, in a strictly practical spirit, and with a sincere desire to put an end, so far as the law could do it, to all contention in connection with the sacred duty of the interment of the dead. It would be a mistake on the part of opponents of the Bill to suppose that any provisions they found in it were dictated by a desire to wound the feelings of Churchmen, or to do injury to the Church of England. There was not a single provision in the Bill that could not be justified by the experience of several years past, as being necessary to remedy some existing and admitted grievance, or remove some defect in the existing law. It was only because the authors of the Bill had wished to be comprehensive and to do their work thoroughly that some of the objections were taken. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not think he could give a better proof of the bona fides of the authors of the Bill than by calling attention to the alterations which had been made since the Bill was introduced in 1895. This was not precisely the same Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] It differed from the Bill of 1895, because the authors had taken into careful consideration the objections urged against certain provisions in that Bill. For instance, it was strongly objected to the Bill of 1895 that it gave compulsory powers to burial authorities for the purchase of land for cemeteries. Such powers they believed were greatly needed, but they belonged really to a much larger question, the land question, and were not necessary to the burials question, and so it had not been deemed desirable to press that provision on the present occasion. Another objection was raised to the prohibition of all distinguishing marks between the consecrated and unconsecrated parts of cemeteries. That was a matter which might be safely left to local feeling, and therefore that provision had disappeared from the present Bill. Then strong objection was taken to the proposal that the expenses of consecration should not be defrayed out of public funds. It had been thought not worth while to urge that point against objection, and so that provision had been omitted. He referred to these facts to make good his statement that the authors of the Bill had tried to display that "sweet reasonableness" of which the late Matthew Arnold was a distinguished apostle. He did not know whether it was too much to hope that the opposition to the Bill would not be based on the same extraordinary misconceptions, and the same forgetfulness of existing facts, as characterised the Debate of 1895. The greatest offender in that respect was a right hon. and learned Gentleman no longer a Member of the House; he had been promoted to another place—the then Mr. Matthews, at one time Home Secretary. He actually spoke of the Bill as depriving the members of the Church of England of the possibility of having funeral rites in new cemeteries in accordance with their convictions; while there was not a line in the Bill to justify such a statement. He also spoke of consecrated chapels being open for Mahommedan and Pagan services, and the noble Lord the Member for Rochester added "infidel or atheistic;" both of them forgetting that the Burials Act, 1880, expressly provided that all services in consecrated ground and chapels should be "orderly and Christian;" so that infidel services were altogether prohibited. Then another hon. and learned Gentleman, of whose services the House had not yet been deprived, the present Attorney General, asked how clergymen could regard with equanimity burial services wholly unconnected with their Church; he also forgetting that that was the principle on which the Burials Act of 1880 was based, and was not one of the provisions of the Bill. The hon. Member for Preston (Mr. Tomlinson) objected to burial services while services were proceeding in church; not knowing apparently that that was prohibited by the Act of 1880. He also imagined that the regulation of burial fees was one of the duties of the Home Office; whereas the Home Secretary had no more power to interfere with the clerical fees than anybody else; and finally, Mr. Matthews made the egregious double mistake of saying that the consecrated chapels in cemeteries were built out of the funds of the Church, which no longer would have the use of them. He recalled those blunders by way of warning to those Gentlemen opposite who apparently continued to offer implacable opposition to the Bill. For this was one of the statements which, according to The Times, was to be found in a paper containing objections to the Bill. The Bill, they were told, proposed, among other things, "to throw open all existing consecrated burial grounds and mortuary chapels (besides those consecrated after the passing of the Bill) to all persons alike, including non-Christians." If all that was meant by that was, that all persons would have the right of burial in parochial burial places, and in consecrated ground, that was no more than existed under the present law, and in churchyards as well as cemeteries. If, however, it meant that the Bill would authorise non-Christian services, the statement could only be described as absolutely untrue. One of the objections which would be taken to the Bill was, that it made consecration dependent on the will of Burial Boards, instead of being compulsory, as it now was. But had those who took that objection forgotten that that was the principle on which what was known as "Marten's Act" was based? Under that Act sanitary authorities were left absolutely at liberty to have consecration or no consecration, to have what chapels they liked, or no chapels at all. That Act also completely ignored the parochial clergy, and gave them no claim whatever to fees. If the opponents of the Church Establishment had drafted that Act it could hardly have been more drastic. Well, but who brought in, and who passed, that Act? Not those who sat on that side of the House. Mr. Marten was a Conservative Member and a Churchman. It was supported by all his Party. It passed the House of Lords, and was assented to by the Bishops. In this Bill they were adopting the very principle which the Church Party of 1879 deliberately adopted, and if that principle now excited indignation, the indignation should be directed to the right quarter, and not be used to excite prejudice against this Bill. Those who wished to pass it wanted to give the same powers to all burial authorities as Marten's Act gave to sanitary authorities. The Local Government Act unfortunately did not include the Act among the Acts which might be adopted by Parish Councils; and the members of those new, and often very vigorous, bodies strongly objected to be bound by the rigorous provisions of the Burial Acts. They were living under two sets of contradictory burial laws, administered by two different Government Departments. One system was, to a large extent, based on principles of liberty and justice; while the other system violated both; and he challenged the party which carried Marten's Act to give good and sufficient reasons why the principles which they maintained in 1879 should not be reaffirmed 18 years later. If asked what were the cardinal principles of the Measure, he replied that they were two. The first was the principle of local option. That, as he had shown, was a principle already adopted by the Legislature. Several members of the Episcopal Bench, instead of being shocked at the fact, had cheerfully acquiesced in both Marten's Act and the Act of 1880. It was not for him to say whether the Bishops were right or wrong in not attaching the same supreme degree of importance to consecration as some other Churchmen did. He wished to call attention to the mode in which the question was dealt with in this Bill. Instead of denying to Churchmen the right to have cemeteries consecrated, it facilitated consecration by removing existing objections to consecration. How did it do that? Why, simply by stripping consecration of its present legal and financial accidents, and placing it on the footing of a religious rite only. It was a mistake to suppose that the supporters of this Bill wished to deprive members of the Church of England of any comfort or satisfaction which they might derive from consecration. They objected only to the exclusive rights, the legal privileges, and the claim to unjust exactions which now attach to consecration. Take those away, and there was no reason why every cemetery should not be consecrated, aye, every yard of it; because the fact of consecration would not injure a single inhabitant. The Attorney General, when this Measure was last before the House, made a very significant reference to the question of fees. He said that there was very little about fees in the Bill, and very little had been said about them in the Debate. Then he made the admission that, as to the mode of levying fees, perhaps some Churchmen might desire to see a change as much as any Dissenters. He would like to know what the grievance was, and see if a remedy could be proposed on broad and general lines. He (the speaker) was very glad to find that that was a point on which the hon. and learned Gentleman had an open mind; and he would explain what was the grievance complained of by the promoters of this Bill. The Established clergy were entitled to receive, by ancient custom, fees of various kinds in connection with parochial churchyards. It was not proposed to deal with them by the Bill, much as they needed dealing with. But when a churchyard was closed, and a cemetery provided at the expense of the ratepayers, then the same fees which were payable in the churchyard were made payable in the consecrated part of the cemetery—fees to the incumbent, fees to the clerk, fees to the sexton—for all time. In some cases these fees were so high as to be very burdensome to bereaved relatives. In some places the aggregate of these fees was so large as to practically involve a loss to the parish which had provided the cemetery. The Vicar of Hampstead had received no less than £10,500 from a cemetery on which there had been a loss to the inhabitants of £15,000. He asked the House to pass the Measure without further delay, because, as churchyards were in many places rapidly filling up, the necessity for new burial places was constantly increasing. The creation of new District Councils and of Parish Councils had placed power, in regard to burial matters, in new hands, and the new bodies were much more hostile to the existing law than were the old Burial Boards. Several Burial Boards had refused to apply to the Bishops to consecrate any part of their cemeteries, and it had been necessary to apply to the Courts for a mandamus to compel them to do so; so that consecration and litigation had been associated in the most incongruous fashion. That fact led him to make an appeal to the present Home Secretary and to the Government. He was sure that this process of mandamasing Burial Boards must be as disagreeable to him as it was to his predecessor. Both could plead that they were simply carrying out the law; but, if the law were objectionable, would it not be better to amend than to enforce it? This Government had professed great anxiety to promote social reforms. Well, here was a question which surely could be treated on social and non-political grounds. In 1877 Mr. Disraeli's Administration made a courageous effort to consolidate the Burial Laws; but when the House of Lords adopted an Amendment embodying the principle afterwards adopted in the Act of 1880, the courage of the Government failed them and they abandoned the Measure. If this Government would undertake the task of first amending, and then consolidating, the Burial Acts he could promise them a large measure of support from outside. He also ventured to make an appeal in another quarter. The hon. Member who was going to move the rejection of the Bill and those associated with him sincerely desired to promote the reform of the Church to which they were attached. He asked them if they were likely to promote their object by resisting other changes, which were in harmony with the spirit of the times, and which were desired by multitudes of Churchmen no less than by Nonconformists? The Church of England had in past times lost much of natural sympathy and support by maintaining unjust privileges, and no less unjust exactions. Now, if ever, was the time when it should display a broader and more equitable spirit; that it might secure the respect, if not the adhesion, of all classes of the community.

*Mr. GRIFFITH-BOSCAWEN (Kent, Tunbridge) moved to leave out the word "now," and at the end of the question to add the words "upon this day six months." He said he would not approach this subject in any sectarian or party spirit. He entirely agreed that on that side of the House they ought, as far as they could, to try and remove the legitimate grievances in religious matters of hon. Members opposite just as they looked to them to help them in the reforms in the Church which they desired. He opposed this Bill because really only a small part of it was devoted to the removal of any grievances, the greater part being devoted to a sort of guerilla warfare against the Church of England. The hon. Member who had just spoken said no question of Disestablishment was raised. He admitted that the question of Disestablishment was not raised directly, but the greater part of the Bill was devoted to a series of most unwarrantable, unjustifiable, and petty attacks on the rights of the Church of England. ["Hear, hear!"] He admitted that parishioners and ratepayers in general had a grievance with regard to mortuary fees in cemeteries. If the Bill had confined itself to remedying this grievance he should not have opposed it. But that grievance was greatly over-rated. It was all very well to say "Why" should the incumbent receive these fees when no services are rendered. But these fees took the place of the fees for interments in churchyards which were compulsorily closed, and were, therefore, part of the endowment of the parish, and to take this away without compensation would be practically a measure of disendowment. Nonconformists were allowed to be buried in consecrated ground, but they need not be, and if they were so buried it was only reasonable that they should pay the fees. Now he would examine some of the attacks which the Bill made on the Church of England. In the first place it proposed that consecration should not take place in any burial ground in future without the consent of the Burial Board.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS: It is the case now.

*MR. GRIFFITH-BOSCAWEN said he was aware of that in the case of Marten's Act, but the principle was a bad one, and he did not see why that bad principle in a Sanitary Act should be extended to the case of all Burial Boards. Let the House think what the result would be. Churchmen had a feeling that they would like to be buried in consecrated ground, and why should they not be? ["Hear, hear!"] Was it to be left to Burial Boards to decide whether they should be buried in consecrated ground or not? If Churchmen happened to be in a minority on the Burial Board the result would be that funerals of Church people could not take place in consecrated ground. Let the House consider the inequality. By the Burials Act of 1880 Nonconformists could be buried in the parish churchyards with Nonconformist rites. Why, in the name of religious equality, put disabilities on the Churchmen which it was sought to remove in the case of Nonconformists? Then the Bill would make consecrated grounds open to everybody, and cemetery chapels, which had been built at the expense of the Church of England. Clause 3 of the Bill practically abrogated the provision that there should be "a Christian and orderly service." So Jews, Turks, and infidels could use the consecrated ground of the Church of England.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS: So they can now.

*MR. GRIFFITH-BOSCAWEN: Certainly not. But they would be thrown absolutely open in the future, and how Christian and orderly services could be guaranteed he did not know.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS said that Section 6 of the Burials Act of 1880 said that

> "the burial may be with such Christian and orderly religious service at the grave as such person shall think fit."

*MR. GRIFFITH-BOSCAWEN said he was not a lawyer, but he thought any Court of Law would say that the words in the Bill abrogated that clause. If they did not, Jews, Turks, or infidels could be buried in consecrated ground with the use of the Christian service. He could imagine nothing more illogical or incongruous. The Bill excluded the Bishops from having any control over plans, buildings, or inscriptions. It was not a matter of great importance, but it was one to which Church-people attached value, and he regarded the proposal in the Bill as a gratuitous attack on the Church of England, and not a remedy of any grievance. The object of the second part of the Bill was "to remove difficulties and doubts arising out of the operation of the Act of 1880." He was much surprised that it should be necessary to remove any doubts or difficulties, because when the right hon. Member for Denbighshire moved the Second Reading of the Bill of 1880, he said,

> "I rise to move the Second Reading of a Bill which I trust will have closed one of the most painful and long controversies that have harassed this House."

Yet here was the right hon. Member again, 15 years after, with his name on the back of the present Bill to remove difficulties and doubts. But he himself contended that it did not remove doubts or difficulties, but created a great many. Lord Llandaff stated that during the six years he was at the Home Office he was only cognisant of three or four discreditable scenes such as had been referred to. When these scenes took place, it was because the clergy would not obey the law; but did the hon. Member and his Friends think they were going to get the clergy to obey the law by creating fresh illegalities? They proposed to reduce the time of the notice that must be given to the incumbent from 48 to 24 hours, but the 48 hours' limit was rightly put in by the Lord Chancellor of a Liberal Government in the House of Lords, and he had never heard a single complaint against it. The suggestion that the bell was to be tolled was a step to enable hon. Members to get from the churchyard to the church. One of the worst provisions in the Bill was that these funerals were as a matter of right to take place on Sundays, Christmas Days, and Good Fridays, although, with the consent of all parties, that was expressly prohibited in the Act of 1880. In cases where the incumbent signified that it would be inconvenient to have the funeral at the time suggested, it might take place on these days, and the bell might be tolled and a Nonconformist funeral might be going on in the churchyard at the same time that there was a service in the church. [" Hear, hear! "] Hon. Members talked about disliking these scenes, and they all did, but he thought a quicker method for creating such objectionable scenes than this could not be devised. He submitted that it would raise every sort of passion, and create every sort of scene, and he therefore asked the House to reject the Bill. Then they proposed to take away from the clergyman his right of control of the churchyard, which was a most unreasonable interference with the rights of the incumbent. The real fact was that the Act of 1880 had proved almost a dead letter. [" Hear, hear! "] It was born of a manufactured grievance, and now they wanted to tinker it up. When the right hon. Baronet brought in his Bill he said there were no less than 600,000 Nonconformists in Wales alone affected by the grievance. But in 1889 in the Diocese of St. Asaph there were 3,618 funerals performed by the clergy, and only 251 under his Act. If they took the five years from 1885 to 1890 they would find that out of 208 parishes in that diocese, in 18 only two of these funerals took place, in 30 only one, and in 94 none took place at all. The statistics showed therefore that the grievance was practically non-existent. Perhaps the worst clause in the whole Bill was Clause 11, which, it seemed to him, meant that an incumbent holding Church property, such as glebe land in the parish, might not make an addition to the churchyard, or that if he did it would become a public burial ground—[" hear, hear! "]—although the churchyard might be overcrowded. He thought that was a piece of the most intolerable tyranny ever proposed. [" Hear, hear! "] They were attempting to subject the Church of England to a disability that no man would dream of subjecting any other body to. They on that side of the House did not wish to stop the remedying of any real religious grievance. If hon. Members had a grievance about fees let them bring in a short Bill about fees, and they would not oppose it. But this Bill was a series of mean, petty, and unwarranted attacks on the Church of England, and he therefore asked the House to reject it. He begged to move his Amendment.

*MR. J. G. TALBOT (Oxford University) seconded the Amendment. He did so on two grounds: first, that the Bill was a needless stirring up of strife; and, secondly, that it sprang from a failure to apprehend the religious position of other people. He had been engaged for a great many years in these burial controversies, and they were amongst the most melancholy of his recollections. He regretted that the right hon. Member for East Denbighshire was not able to be present, but if he had been present he should have appealed to him in a manner in which he could hardly appeal to other hon. Members, for the right hon. Member had the credit—great, no doubt, from his point of view—of having settled this question. But if the question had been settled in 1880 it surely ought not to be raked up again in the time of the same generation which settled it. It seemed to him that there ought to be some sort of finality—at any rate, a modified finality, if he might use the expression—on a subject of this kind, and that the time of Parliament should not be perpetually occupied with these questions. Of course, no great question on which men's minds were deeply agitated could be settled entirely to the satisfaction of both sides, and it was notorious that the settlement of 1880 was very painful to many on that side of the House. But they took their defeat like men, and he earnestly appealed to the House not to upset that settlement. His second point against the Bill, which he considered the more serious, was the evidence it afforded of the failure of its supporters to appreciate the religious convictions of other people. ["Hear, hear!"] It was assumed by hon. Gentlemen opposite that while Nonconformists had consciences, Church-people had none—[laughter and "hear, hear!"]—and that while the most scrupulous respect was to be paid to the grievances of the Nonconformists, that while they had only to state a grievance to have it removed, if such removal inflicted a hardship on the consciences of Church-people, that grievance was to be entirely ignored. That was not fair play, to put the matter on no higher ground. ["Hear, hear!"] If two sides disputed a question, and if one side, while insisting on having all their scruples attended to, refused to pay the slightest regard to the scruples of the other side, it was hopeless to expect a satisfactory settlement of the dispute. ["Hear, hear!"] Take the question of consecrated ground. It was a matter of conscience to a great many people to have consecrated ground in which to bury their dead; and if an Act of Parliament were passed declaring that there should be throughout the country districts in which there could be no consecrated ground for burials, it would put upon the conscience of Church-people the same kind of grievance as was alleged to be put upon Nonconformists if they were not provided with ground in which to bury their dead according to their own rites. ["Hear, hear!"] The Church of England, being the Established Church of the country, was the established exponent of Christianity to this land. Its services might be supposed to be in a sense the services of the whole nation. [Opposition cheers.] Then why should they not consider the spirit of those services with respect? And if they did not consider them with respect they struck a serious blow at the consciences and convictions of a great number of people. ["Hear, hear!"] He would not say that if the Bill were passed every dissenting funeral would be conducted in the churchyards on Sundays in such a manner as to make them most offensive to the feelings of Church-people. But he did say that there were Nonconformists in this country—he did not mean religious Nonconformists, for Nonconformists were not all religious any more than all Church-people were religious—who would not scruple so to arrange matters that the funeral would take place at the beginning or at the end of the Church services, and so interefere with those services as to be an offence to the consciences of Churchmen. He, therefore, asked the House not to pass the Bill—first, because it was not a case for Parliamentary interference at all, the matter having been settled within the memory of them all; and, secondly, because it would tend to further embitter religious controversies which they all deplored, and which it should be their object to soothe rather than to inflame.

*Mr. R. W. PERKS (Lincolnshire, Louth) said he regretted that the ignoble task of seconding the rejection of this Bill should have fallen to the lot of the Member for a distinguished University, which in bygone years had so often played such a conspicuous part in the assertion of the religious and civil rights of this country. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Gentleman had spoken of what he had called "modified finality in legislation." But he would point out that the House had been for several Sessions engaged in amending the land laws of Ireland and the educational laws of this country, which, according to the hon. Gentleman, should have been laid aside altogether and not interfered with, on this theory of Parliamentary settlement. He would remind the hon. Gentleman also that when the Burial Act of 1880 passed through the House of Commons, and went up to the House of Lords, the Liberal Lord Chancellor, Lord Selborne, stated, on behalf of the Government of the day, that the Measure was imperfect, and required rectification in some important particulars. The hon. Gentleman asked what was the object of Clause 11. It was to prevent a colourable evasion of the Act of 1880. It had been found in many parts of the country that the clergy, anxious to maintain their spiritual authority, such as it was, over the churchyards, but more anxious to retain their emoluments in the shape of fees, and in order to defeat the Act of 1880, which gave Nonconformist ministers the right to go into a parochial churchyard and conduct their services, had been in the habit of taking bits of glebeland or buying other pieces of land and adding them to the churchyards, and vesting them in trustees, and thus preventing Nonconformists from conducting their services in those parts of the parochial churchyards. It was gratifying to the supporters of the Bill to find that the duty of stating the views of the Government had been relegated to the right hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of the Home Office, who had often expressed sympathy with the objects of the Bill. The right hon. Gentleman was the one man who in Committee on the Burials Act of 1880 objected to the provision which required Christian and orderly services in the consecrated portions of churchyards and cemeteries, and who moved an Amendment to exclude from the Bill that very clause which hon. Gentlemen opposite regarded as their palladium and chief protection. ["Hear, hear!"] The right hon. Gentleman then said:—

> "No Burials Bill could be satisfactory which deprived any section of the community of their civil rights on account of their religious opinions."

The right hon. Gentleman further claimed that

> "Jews, Atheists, Theists, Positivists, Secularists, and all who did not choose to call themselves by the name of Christian" should have the right of conducting their services in those churchyards and cemeteries without any religious service; and he wound up by declaring:—

> "As Nonconformists who had not forgotten their own trials, they objected to co-operate with their former persecutors"

—the hon. Gentlemen who now sat behind the right hon. Gentleman—"in the prosecution of classes not included in the scope of the Bill."

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. JESSE COLLINGS, Birmingham, Bordesley): All dealing with the civil rights of individuals.

*MR. PERKS said it dealt with the rights of Jews, Atheists, Theists, Positivists, Secularists, to conduct funeral services in the consecrated portions of churchyards and graveyards without this restriction, that they must be "Christian and orderly." He thought, therefore, they could rely on the right hon. Gentleman to support this Measure, and not to do as he had done last Wednesday, when he opposed a Bill for the benefit of the working classes in the teeth of his former declarations. The supporters of the Bill did not object to the consecration of cemeteries; they acknowledged that it would be an anomaly if provision were not made for those desiring to be buried in consecrated ground. He had heard the noble Lord, the Member for Rochester, express great admiration for Wesley. ["Hear, hear!" from VISCOUNT CRANBORNE.] The Wesleyan Church had declared over and over again in favour of this Bill. Wesley attached no importance to the ceremony of consecration.

*MR. TALBOT: I do not quite trust that statement.

*MR. PERKS said that he would read Wesley's own words:—

> "I never wished that any Bishop should consecrate any chapel or burial ground of mine. Indeed, I should not dare to suffer it, as I am clearly persuaded that the thing is wrong in itself, being not authorised by any law of God or law of the land. In consequence of which I conceive that the clerk or sexton might as well consecrate the church or churchyard as the Bishop. With regard to the churchyard, I know not who could answer this plain question. 'You say this is consecrated ground so many feet broad and so many feet long. Pray how deep is the consecrated ground?' 'Deep! What does that signify?' A great deal, for if my grave is dug too deep I may happen to get out of the consecrated ground, and who can tell what unhappy consequences may follow from this. . . . I take the whole practice to be a mere relic of Romish superstition."

He admitted that great importance was attached to consecration by many persons; for instance, he knew of a man who would have been cremated but for the fact that the funeral urn could not be consecrated. But there was nothing in the Bill to prevent the consecration of a portion of the cemetery.

MR. GRIFFITH-BOSCAWEN: The Board may or may not permit the consecration.

*MR. PERKS said that it would be a fair Amendment of the Bill to provide that a portion of the cemetery should be consecrated, if a certain proportion of the inhabitants demanded it. But that should not carry with it the obligation to pay large fees to clergy for services not rendered. Cases of intolerable hardship were much more frequent in the rural districts than hon. Gentlemen opposite supposed. They were almost of daily occurrence. In the Division which he represented a late Chairman of an important Parish Council was buried in an obscure portion of the graveyard, because his friends insisted on a Nonconformist service. There were cases where the bell could not be tolled, where extra fees to the extent of 10s. were imposed on Nonconformists, where the use of the bier or the services of the sexton were denied. Some years ago, at a place called Martin, in Lincolnshire, the mourners at a Nonconformist funeral had to lower the coffin into the grave themselves, because the sexton was not there. Complaint was made to the Bishop of Lincoln, who said that, while he should have advised the sexton to be present, the law of the land did not require his presence. If the Church of England were to prosper as a spiritual force, it would not be by the perpetuation of these acts of petty tyranny, but by such a moderate Amendment of the law as would enable the rural communities to live in harmony.

*SIR FRANCIS POWELL (Wigan) said that this was not the first time he had addressed the House on this subject. He found that he had submitted observations to the House no less than 25 years since, when one of the Members for Yorkshire. Hon. Members seemed to forget that the Acts of 1870 and 1880 were both the work of Liberal Governments, and that the latter Measure was the end of a long and bitter controversy. It was hoped that these melancholy Debates would be ended by the Bill introduced by Lord Selborne, and supported by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the majority of the Bishops in 1880. Mr. John Bright said, with respect to that Bill,

> "I think the time has come when we ought to close the door upon this controversy and settle it at once and for ever."

It was therefore very disappointing to find the whole question reopened at this day. But the settlement of 1880 had not been in vain. Remembering the Debates of those days, he could not help contrasting the position then and now. At that time the Nonconformists had grievances; and in 1872 he spoke in disapproval of the continuance of the law which gave rise to those grievances. There was now a very different state of affairs. The contrast between the grievances which were brought forward then and the allegation of grievances now was, indeed, amazing. At that time there was a complaint as to the want of burial grounds, and in 1879 Sir A. Marten introduced a Bill dealing with the subject. That Bill was spoken of with contempt, and in the year 1880 they were told that that legislation was dead. He found, however, on referring to the Local Government Board's Report of last year that the loans under that Act had reached £576,855 and was yearly increasing, £37,134 having been borrowed during the year to which the Report relates. He wished to refer briefly to one or two of the complaints made by the Mover of the Second Reading. The hon. Member referred to the hours, and said they were now so short that there was often hurry and confusion. In his opinion, the hours were sufficient. In conducting these sad ceremonials there was, in all classes of life, often a great want of punctuality, and he believed that some restriction of hours which would cause greater regularity would be a gain rather than a loss to the community. The hon. Member spoke of the convenience to the working classes it would be to have burials on Sunday. The hon. Gentleman entirely forgot the comfort of the congregation whose parish church he wished to use. He did not know anything more calculated to give pain to Nonconformists and Church-people alike, and to cause that friction which they all desired to remove, than having a burial service on the Sunday about the time that the services in the church were being conducted. He shrank from even the contemplation of the difficulties which must arise, and which would increase rather than diminish, where there was a kindly feeling between the two classes of the community. The same remark applied to Good

Friday and Christmas Day. The Mover of the Second Reading spoke of those days being holidays. They might be holidays in one sense, but they were sacred days to members of the Church of England, and they were exactly the days when the members of that Church would least desire to have such services as were proposed celebrated in the churchyard. The hon. Gentleman referred to the use of the bell. He was surprised that the hon. Member, who was, he believed, in favour of the Disestablishment and Disendowment of the Church, should desire to use the bell. He hoped the hon. Gentleman's desire to use the bell would create a wish in him to preserve the Church some portions of whose ceremonials he regarded as of value to the community. He admitted the question of fees required attention, but he did not follow with any sympathy the criticism as to a £5 fee for a railing round a grave. Personally, he would substitute for a fee entire prohibition. He knew nothing more unseemly in a churchyard, and in graveyards belonging to Burial Boards, than these hideous railings round tombs. But if he objected to dealing with the question of fees as the hon. Member proposed, it was partly because he could not separate such a suggestion from the general attack upon the Church of England. As regarded the consecration of chapels, he felt that hon. Members opposite had not paid sufficient regard to the sentiments of Churchmen. He had no doubt there were some Churchmen who attached little importance to consecration; and, if he were cross-examined, he should be obliged to confess he belonged to that number. But he was bound to have regard for the feelings of others, and he knew perfectly well that appreciation of consecration was not confined to the highest and wealthiest classes. Turning again to the clauses of the Bill, he confessed he did not understand the meaning of the first clause. Was it intended that the parish churchyard should, on the passing of this Bill, cease to be the parochial burial ground? It certainly appeared to him that, under the words of the clause, the parish churchyard would entirely disappear. He trusted that before the Debate closed they would have a definition of the language of the clause, which to him was wholly unintelligible. Clause 4 took away from the bishop any power in respect to inscriptions and the fitness of monuments. A burial ground was a sacred place, and it appeared to him that nothing could be more in accord with the desire of those who had regard for sacred things than that some high ecclesiastical official should have a veto upon monumental inscriptions. Even under the present regulations there were many inscriptions which jarred upon one's sentiments, and he believed that some revision by the bishop would be a great advantage, not to one class of the community only, but to all. Under clause 10 the authorities were forbidden to assign particular parts of the churchyard to particular persons. He had received a letter from a vicar of a large parish in Yorkshire, in which the writer said that any clergyman who was so mean as to set apart any portion of the churchyard for particular burials deserved reproof. He was sure the condemnation which such conduct would receive would be sufficient to prevent such an occurrence. He did not say there were not in the Church of England a stray fanatic or two—[a laugh]—but to visit on the Church as a whole the errors of a few was a signal injustice which could not do good to any cause. He could not agree with what had been said as to the prohibition of dedication of land by public bodies to the purposes of a churchyard. He was greatly surprised that such proposals as were contained in the Bill should have been made in this Bill by the friends of religious liberty; but he found here, as often happened, that religious liberty and political tryranny went hand in hand. The Act of 1880 had not been in vain in its healing effect. That Act removed grievances; it satisfied sentiments which they revered. It was intended to close the controversy. This Bill removed no grievances; it satisfied no sentiment. It closed no old controversy, but opened a new one. It was said that no attack on the Church was meant, but he could not separate the Bill from those who proposed it. In the Bill dealing with the Welsh dioceses the clauses relating to burials were not the most fortunate, and did much to destroy the Bill. This Bill was an attack on all dioceses, English as well as Welsh, and one which could not succeed. [" Hear, hear! "]

Sir Francis Powell.

*MR. JOHN BRIGG (Yorks, W.R., Keighley) said that, while admitting a good deal of what had fallen from the hon. Member who represented Wigan to be full of good purpose and good intentions, and he was sure no one would give the hon. Gentleman more credit than he did for his distinguished efforts on behalf of what he thought to be right in the interest of the Church of England; he did not agree with all he had said, neither could he agree with much that had been said by the Member for Oxford University, who had put it distinctly to the House that there ought to be finality in this matter; at any rate, a modified finality, and had suggested that they should wait for another generation for any alteration in the law. That might be all very well for a Gentleman who represented a University, the associations of which had a tendency to cause people to lead a sleepy life, and think they might live long; but he and those for whom he spoke felt that the world was moving far too quickly for them to wait all that time for the Amendments they desired. It was absolutely necessary they should move with the times in which they lived. As a full explanation of the Bill had already been given he did not think it necessary to go into details; but he would say that the conditions under which the Burials Act was at present worked were full of great difficulty. In a place with which he was connected the clergy, for the sake of peace and quietness, had been quite willing to forego their fees in order that the Act might be carried out without ill feeling. That was, no doubt, generous conduct on their part, but as it could not be known how long the present Vicar would live, it was not thought desirable to adopt a compromise of that kind. There was undoubtedly great need of alteration, and of getting rid of the wrangling which now took place at funerals. ["Hear, hear!"] There was nothing in the Bill to interfere with religious sentiment. Only the legal position was to be changed. All that was asked was that the clergy should not be allowed to interfere and demand fees for services which they themselves did not render. The difficulties which arose in this way were often being thought of. The sayings and doings at weddings and funerals were neither forgiven nor forgotten. He could tell the House of a case in Keighley in which for the last seven years a lively contest had been carried on as to the consecration of a burial ground. In 1889 the Vestry empowered the Burial Board to purchase adjoining land to add to the unconsecrated part of the churchyard. The contest had been continued ever since, and at every vestry meeting there had been unseemly gatherings in the churchyard; and mobs of persons, standing or seated on the gravestones, were gathered for the purpose of electing to the Burial Board only members who held unconsecrated views. Eventually, the Home Office stopped the opening, and asked for plans showing the division of consecrated and unconsecrated ground. That, of course, caused more disturbance, and a division of parishes subsequently took place which caused still further trouble, and the Burial Board, fearing legal proceedings, sold to the Corporation under Marten's Act, the whole of the ground they had bought, and the purchase was approved by the Vestry, the Town Council, and the Local Government Board. No further difficulty was expected after this, but the matter was still unsettled. The Burial Board would continue to manage the old part of the ground, and as the old part was filled up it would cease to exist, and the two authorities would be merged into one. There was no objection on the part of the supporters of this Bill to consecration itself; the objection was to the legal position which consecration entitled members of the Church to take up. The power of an incumbent to exact fees for burials in his churchyard was oppressive in many cases. A case had been brought under his notice of a young girl who died away from home, and whose last wish was that she might be buried in the village churchyard where members of her family had been laid to rest, and where she, as a child, had played. But the clergyman raised objections on the ground that the girl was not a parishioner; and he claimed a very high fee for allowing the interment. In this case the relatives of the girl came forward and paid a very substantial sum, in order that the girl's last wish might be fulfilled. The question of consecration did not affect himself personally, for, owing to circumstances over which he had no control, he would not be buried in a churchyard. A former member of his family had quarrelled with the parish clergyman, and had given instructions that he should not be buried in the churchyard, and he was buried under a tree in a field; and that was where he should himself be buried. One of the elders of his family was once imprisoned in York Castle for six months for having kept away from church. It was high time that a change was made and more power given to the people. Behind demands for reforms such as this Bill would effect, members of the Church Party fancied they saw the ghost of Disestablishment stalking. He believed that if they could get rid of that apprehension many Members on the other side of the House would vote for Bills like the one now under discussion.

Mr. J. W. SIDEBOTHAM (Cheshire, Hyde) said that he had voted for the Second Reading of the Bill of 1895 because he approved its principle, although he disliked intensely many of its provisions. He could still more readily give his support to the present Bill, because many of the most objectionable features of its predecessor had been omitted from it or had undergone modification. The Bill was not, however, without imperfections, but these, he maintained, could be removed in Committee. The law respecting the consecration of cemeteries was in an exceedingly unsatisfactory state, and questions arose which caused keen religious controversies, resulting in bitterness and enmity. Under Marten's Act, which gave the local sanitary authority power over burial grounds, that authority could permit consecration or refuse to permit it, could build chapels, and make its own regulations about fees; but immediately it allowed a portion of the ground to be consecrated it lost its control over it; another authority stepped in, a Church of England chaplain was appointed; his salary had to be paid, the register of burials had to be kept by him, and a number of other consequences followed, including the chaplain's right to fees. All this was wrong, and they could not be surprised that, in these circumstances, local authority after local authority refused to permit any portion of their burial ground to be consecrated. That state of things constituted a serious injustice to Church-people, who were compelled to contribute their share towards the purchase of the ground, but who could not use it, because it was not consecrated. The special rights and privileges that accrued to clergymen of the Church of England when consecration took place ought to be done away with. He said so two years ago, and he then received a number of letters from clergymen approving the position which he took up. One clergyman wrote to him, saying:—

> "Your speech was very clear and proportionately valuable. With its principles I agree thoroughly."

Another said:—

> "With your speech, as you may expect from our former talks, I thoroughly sympathise and agree."

A third said:—

> "I most thoroughly agree with all you say. It seems to me perfectly idiotic that the present state of affairs should be allowed to continue. It is Church-people far more than Nonconformists who are already, and will be more and more, the sufferers from the existing state of affairs. Personally I feel inclined to say let us have legislation at any cost."

When the Bishop of Chester, in October last, was about to consecrate a portion of a cemetery in the district of Hyde he voluntarily abandoned the claim to special rights and privileges for the clergy of his church. The following was an extract from the deed of consecration:

> "Whereas the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Hyde . . . have acquired certain lands . . . and are desirous that a portion of the said cemetery shall be consecrated for the burial of the dead according to the rites and usages of the Church of England . . . that it has been agreed between the said Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses, and the Incumbents of the several ecclesiastical parishes or districts comprised in the said Borough, with our approval, that the salary of the chaplain appointed to officiate in the consecrated part of the cemetery shall be nominal, namely £1 per annum, and that such chaplain shall permit the clergy of each of the several parishes or districts aforesaid to officiate at any interment if the representative of the deceased so desire, and to receive upon each such interment such fees as shall from time time be fixed by the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses, or their successors, and shall permit any Nonconformist minister, being duly invited or authorised, to officiate at any interment in the consecrated portion of such cemetery, to receive upon each such interment such fees as aforesaid:—that it has been agreed that the Register of Burials shall be kept by the Registrar of the said cemetery . . . and that the fees in the consecrated portion of the said cemetery shall be the same as in the unconsecrated portions thereof."

It would be noticed that the Bishop gave up the chaplains and the salary of the chaplains, the fees and the registers, and the cost of consecration borne by the Church. It might be urged that if this arrangement could be carried out in Hyde it might be carried out in other places; but he knew what years and years of controversy had preceded the settlement in Hyde, and he wished to save other districts from the bitterness, controversy, and ill-feeling which had been created in the district he represented. All Bishops, moreover, might not be so wise or broad-minded, and local authorities might be more exacting than the local authority of Hyde. This was a question the House ought to take up and settle, carrying it out of the region of controversy altogether. The Church would do well to embrace the opportunity of settling the question, and the House would do a good day's work if it accepted, not in its details, but in its main and broad principle, the Measure now before it. [" Hear, hear!"]

*MR. R. PURVIS (Peterborough) said he had among his constituents a large number of Nonconformists who, in common with himself, desired to live in peace and harmony with their neighbours on the points raised by the Bill. The Mover of the Bill raised a great many questions as to the doings of an ancient Bishop of Exeter and old unhappy far-off things and troubles long ago; but when it was seen that the effect of this Bill would be to allow funerals in the churchyard to be carried out on such days as Christmas Day and Good Friday he believed that the House would come to the conclusion that the liberty sought for by a certain section of the community was to take liberty with their neighbours. The Act of 1880 was more or less a practical settlement of this question, and it seemed to him that this Bill was a mere fanning of the flame of religious controversy and the breaking out of that old disgraceful human failing—a desire on the part of religious bodies to show their hate of each other for the love of God. The throwing open of consecrated ground in the circumstances claimed appeared as if there was a desire to climb over the wall instead of going in by the gate. It should be remembered that the burial fees were part and parcel of the endowment of the Church, and the Bill sought to take away from the incumbent the control of the churchyard. Some one must have the control of the churchyard, and while we had an Established National Church he suggested that the best person to have the practical control of the churchyard was and must be the Incumbent. [" Hear, hear!"] This Bill sought to disturb the peace between Nonconformists and members of the Church of England. As far as he could gather, the real religious Nonconformists did not seek the change, but rather the Nonconformists who, in endeavouring to make what was supposed to be an improvement in the relations between them and the Church of England, sought in reality to cloak under this Measure political aims of the very worst kind. [" No, no!"]

*MR. W. WOODALL (Hanley) said that the hon. Member had been re-echoing the fears and apprehensions uttered during the discussions of 1880, and which had long been proved to be groundless, but which were honestly entertained by the opponents of the Bill of that day. The hon. Member for Wigan spoke of that Measure as having been generally accepted as a solution of the whole question, and as ensuring a permanent settlement involving peace between all parties. The hon. Member should, however, remember that the whole conduct of that Bill was marked by a spirit of compromise, and that they carried on their Debates under the shadow of threatened opposition in another place, a threat which was continually held over the House by those in charge of the Bill at that time. It was said that this Bill was promoted, not by Nonconformists generally, but by those who desired to cloak under religious Nonconformity political aims. This was an old charge. No one could be ignorant of the fact that the public and local life of the country was very much stirred under a sense of the injustice and inequality of the existing law. Why should this be? One could not help feeling that if hon. Members opposite addressed themselves to the question in a spirit of charitable equity, and with a desire to promote kindliness of feeling between those who differed on points of religious faith in different communities, a very great end would be achieved. What were the main points asked for? That in grounds provided by the general community out of public funds, where there was a division of cemetery ground, and where consecration was desired, consecration should be allowed; but the religious advantage that might be supposed, according to the sentiments of Churchmen, to attach to consecration, should not carry with it any pecuniary advantage to any class of the community such as might be supposed to attach to the vested rights of the clergy of the parish. By all means let this ground be marked out in the severest manner desired, but do not attach to it a privilege on the one hand and a penalty on the other. He raised the question of chapels in 1880, and it was only in deference to the apprehension and the strong opposition against the Bill, that his right hon. Friend in charge of the Measure was induced to refuse the insertion of the right to erect a single chapel for the use of all denominations in grounds provided at the general expense of the community. But hon. Members must be aware that in many parts of the country single chapels had been provided, in some cases with the consent of the Bishops and by general agreement; and, speaking from his own experience in Burslem, this arrangement had been accepted as convenient and as representing the general equity of the situation.

*VISCOUNT CRANBORNE (Rochester): Is the chapel consecrated?

*MR. WOODALL: No; had it been consecrated it could only have been used by the adherents of one Church, and that was the main point of this Bill. Concede everything asked for—consecration, dedication—but only do not let that religious rite exclude from equal privileges the members of other communities. He thought it might fairly be said that since the passing of the Act of 1880 there had been no case of any kind of scandal, except where, from the obstinacy or illiberality of Churchmen, such regrettable incidents had been provoked. He joined in the general expression of the hope that this Bill would be read a Second time, and that the House might go into Committee with a sincere desire to reconcile differences, and to avoid those scandals that were a great reflection on their common Christianity. ["Hear, hear!"]

*VISCOUNT CRANBORNE said those who were opposed to the Second Reading of this Bill, as he was, were placed in one respect in great difficulty, because undoubtedly there was a sentiment, a very honourable sentiment, prevailing in all parts of the House that in the presence of death, as far as possible, all minor questions should be laid aside. [Opposition cheers.] He for one had no sympathy whatever with that violent exercise of legal rights which had occasionally, but only very seldom, been seen in the case of certain clergymen of the Church of England. [Opposition cheers.] He had no sympathy whatever with such abuse of their legal position in order to outrage the feelings of Nonconformists in connection with the burial of deceased persons belonging to that faith. He resented very much the impression which had got abroad by the excesses of certain individuals among the ministry of the Church of England that they were a tyrannical or despotic Church. They were far from having those sentiments, and he should do his best, as he had done in the past, to restrain the outrageous conduct of certain rather rare individuals in their ministry in that respect. While he felt all that, he was not inclined to vote for this Bill, which in many respects was absolutely uncalled for. The mere fact that the present law was not perfect—and he was not concerned to say it was perfect—was not a reason for voting for the changes proposed in this Bill, almost every one of the clauses of which would require to be vitally amended. Hon. Gentlemen opposite said, for example, that they had respected vested interests, that they had saved the rights of existing incumbents. Yes; they had saved the rights of existing incumbents, but not the existing rights of the Church. The rights of the present incumbents were very important, no doubt, but the rights of the Church as a whole were far more important, and though it might be very well to provide that as long as a present incumbent lived he should enjoy the fees to which he was entitled, still the rights now vested in the Church of England would continue long after the present incumbent had ceased to be. They could not accept any alteration of the law which would deprive the Church as a whole of the enjoyment of those rights which she enjoyed under the existing law. Under Clause 11 an incumbent was forbidden to grant or be instrumental in granting for the purpose of a churchyard parts of the property belonging to the church which might be more fitted for a churchyard than any other property which could be pitched upon. Even though the churchyard was full, or approaching fullness, and there might be a strong desire among the parishioners to have the churchyard enlarged so that they might continue to be laid under the shadow of the ancient church like their forefathers before them, yet that was prevented by this clause. And not merely was a clergyman prevented, but any corporation, such as a town council, was prevented from granting or selling land belonging to the municipality to be devoted to interment in accordance with the Prayer Book of the Church of England. Anything more unfair was never incorporated in an Act of Parliament. The main principle of the Bill, according to the memorandum of the promoters, was that consecration should carry with it no legal consequences whatever. He did not say that consecration was essential, but it was not a question merely of what was essential. Surely it would be admitted that in the eyes of Churchmen there was a holy sentiment attached to the fact of consecration analogous with the particular class of sentiments which Nonconformists themselves valued. He would ask hon. Gentlemen, therefore, to have some regard to Churchmen's sensibilities in this matter just as he, on his side, respected those of Nonconformists. The Bill did in fact outrage Churchmen's sentiments, and it was principally for that very reason that he asked the House to reject the Second Reading. As had been pointed out, under the Act of 1880 the services conducted in the churchyard or in a consecrated building had to be Christian and orderly. But there was no limitation in this Bill—none whatever.

*Mr. CARVELL WILLIAMS: The Act of 1880 is not repealed, and therefore remains law.

*Viscount CRANBORNE retorted that it did not remain law in defiance of an Act of Parliament which succeeded it and which was absolutely inconsistent with the tenour of the Act. There was no such limitation, and therefore it would be perfectly possible under this Bill for a Mahomedan or any other person to carry on any kind of service in consecrated ground or in a consecrated building in the burial ground as defined by this Bill. Such a provision was perfectly monstrous and outrageous. [" Hear, hear ! "] The only thing that could be said in behalf of the provision was that it was consistent. From the non-Christian point of view there was no logical reason why the conditions of consecration under the present law should not be departed from altogether. [" Hear, hear ! "] Let them once depart from the line with respect to consecration and there would be no logical reason for stopping anywhere; indeed, it would be possible to have services in the churchyards however impious and revolting. [Opposition cries of " No, no ! "] But under the provisions of the Bill it would be so. [Opposition cries of " No ! "] Hon. Gentlemen opposite might not have intended it, but what he had stated would certainly be the effect of the Bill. [" Hear, hear ! "] He contended, therefore, that it was impossible to depart from the broad and simple line established in respect to consecration. [" Hear, hear ! "] The buildings had been consecrated for a particular purpose —for funerals carried on according to the rites of the Church of England—[" hear, hear ! "]—and the question was not whether those buildings should be consecrated or not, but whether, being consecrated, they should afterwards be desecrated. [" Hear, hear ! "] He could not agree with the hon. Member for the Hyde Division in believing that a good deal of the friction now attending the appointment of the burial or local authorities would be avoided if this Bill was passed. Those who controlled the Burial Boards would be free to allow consecration or not, and surely there could be no means more certain of insuring friction than to leave such a matter to the discretion of an elected local authority. [" Hear, hear!"] The fact was that Nonconformists were not quite consistent in this matter of consecration. He understood the hon. Member who introduced the Motion to say that even some Nonconformists desired that they should be buried in consecrated ground. That being so, it would appear that many Nonconformists appreciated consecration as well as the Members of the Church. ["Hear, hear!"] Yet the object of the Bill was to destroy as much as possible the distinctive nature of consecration, for the meaning of Clause 1, read with the Schedule—which repealed certain Acts or portions of Acts—was to destroy any marking line between what was the consecrated portion of a burial ground and what was not. But was that consistent with the knowledge that even some Nonconformists wished to be buried in consecrated ground? ["Hear, hear!"] As to Clause 4, which provided that the ecclesiastical authorities should no longer have control over the tombs and monuments and monumental inscriptions in any portion of the public burial ground, if a portion of a burial ground was consecrated, surely the monuments erected in it should have some relation to the sacred sentiment with which the act of consecration was associated —["hear, hear!"]—and, if so, there must be some ecclesiastical authority—some authority devoted to religion—whose business it should be to decide what was proper in such cases. The Bishop was the chief minister of the Church, and the duty should rest with him. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. HERBERT LEWIS (Flint Boroughs): What about the Bishop of Lincoln and the Wesleyan minister?

*VISCOUNT CRANBORNE presumed that the hon. Member referred to a case in a quotation that had been read, in which it was shown that the incumbent was inclined to be tyrannical, but that the Bishop said the clergyman ought not to have behaved as he did, and that he regretted he had not the legal power to compel him to act differently.

*MR. PERKS: The reference was to a former Bishop of Lincoln, who refused to allow the word "reverend" to be placed on the tombstone before the name of a Wesleyan minister. ["Hear, hear!"]

*VISCOUNT CRANBORNE said he had no doubt there was the proper legal remedy available for any offence of which the Bishop was guilty. He did not believe the Bishops were at all likely to use their powers over monuments unwisely, or with undue severity, but as long as a portion of the burial ground was set apart as consecrated there must necessarily be some ecclesiastical authority to control those matters. He therefore held, in respect to all the matters to which he had referred, that the Bill was a thoroughly bad Bill. If the Measure went to a Commitee every clause of it would have to be amended—vitally amended. It would be necessary for Churchmen to negative the very principle on which the Bill was put forward —that there should be no distinction between consecrated and non-consecrated ground. Therefore, those on that side of the House who were opposed to the Bill had no course open to them but to ask the House to reject it. Still, he could not say that the present state of the law was perfect, and if a Measure had been brought forward dealing with some of the minor matters included in the present Bill —such as the question of fees, access to churchyards, and so on—it would have been met and considered by him and his hon. Friends in a very different spirit. But in regard to a Bill which was bad in principle and in all its provisions they had no choice but to urge the House not to assent to its Second Reading. [Cheers.]

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs) said the invariable attitude of the noble Lord towards Measures introduced to remedy the grievances of Dissenters was to sympathise with the Nonconformists, to express a desire to see their grievances remedied, and then to declare that he must oppose the Measure before the House because it was a bad one. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.] That had again been the course of the noble Lord on the present occasion. Now, the Bill was opposed on the ground that it was an attack on the rights and the sentiments of the Church of England, but he denied that the Bill involved an attack on either. With regard to the question of fees, he would remind the House that the fees were paid as remuneration for services rendered. If the services of the clergyman of the Church of England were brought into requisition those services should be paid for, but surely if the clergyman was not called upon to render any service he ought not to be paid. ["Hear, hear!"] Then it must be borne in mind that the consecrated ground as well as other ground was bought at the expense of the ratepayers of the locality; and why should the clergyman be entitled to charge fees in respect of every burial that took place in one part of the burial ground whether he officiated or not? ["Hear, hear!"] As to Clause 11, which had been strongly objected to, he maintained that it had been grossly misrepresented. It simply provided that if they were going to make an addition to a burial place or churchyard out of glebe land, it should not be a private burial ground for one denomination only. It was parochial property, held by a gentleman who was a trustee for the parishioners, and the clause said that they were not to be allowed, out of parochial property, to use a plot of land for the benefit of one sect and one sect alone. ["Hear, hear!"] The noble Lord the Member for Rochester knew perfectly well that that clause was intended to meet a grievance which was a very substantial one. He knew a special case in point, where an addition was promised, in the first instance, towards a parochial burial ground before the Act of 1880. Unfortunately the deed was not prepared before the Act. A few years after the Act was passed the title deeds were prepared, and it was then found that there was an express condition that what was promised for the whole of the parishioners before the Act was to be used exclusively for the benefit of the members of the Church of England. This clause was to prevent what was practically a fraud on the parishioners being perpetrated again in the same way. The Bill was also objected to by the noble Lord on the ground of sentiment, and he said that the Church of England were entitled to consecrate a portion of the churchyard if they wished to do so. The members of the Church of England were perfectly entitled to do this, but what they objected to, in the first place, was the consecration being done at the expense of the whole community when it was not in the interests of the whole community; and, in the second place, to a part of the churchyard being set on one side, by means of that consecration, for the benefit of one sect absolutely and exclusively. If Churchmen wished to consecrate the whole of the churchyard he did not believe that Nonconformists in any parish in the kingdom would object, but they did object to consecration being made the means and instrument of vesting the property in one part of the churchyard, which belonged to the whole parish, in one sect and one sect alone. ["Hear, hear!"] That was really the whole point of their objection to consecration. This Bill would create no grievance in this respect so far as the Church of England was concerned. The noble Lord said that if Clause 3 of the Bill were carried in its present form the result would be that Mahomedans might use the chapels which were erected in the burial grounds. He did not accept the noble Lord's interpretation, but, even so, they were all absolutely agreed that, whether the section bore that construction or not, what was intended was that the service must be a Christian one. It simply wanted the addition of a couple of words at the end of the section and the whole thing would be placed absolutely right. There was no desire to desecrate the churchyards. All they wished was to give the same rights to Nonconformists as to Churchmen in these burial grounds. The noble Lord wanted to create a property in a corner of the churchyard for one sect only. The noble Lord said: "Let us build walls, let us consecrate, let us give a vested interest in the form of fees, let us create an absolute property which will be a source of profit and remuneration to a particular sect of the community, and let us do that at the expense of the general body of the ratepayers." That was perfectly unfair as between one denomination and another. ["Hear, hear."] The noble Lord kept perfectly clear of the last part of the Bill, and he was not surprised that he did so. The only thing he said was that he deprecated the action of certain clergymen who insisted on their legal rights under the Act of 1880. But what was the good of expressing a general denunciation of extreme and violent acts of clergymen when, according to the noble Lord himself, they were acting well within their legal rights. What they wanted to do was to make these ridiculous and violent and unfair claims on the part of the clergy which outraged the feelings of Nonconformists illegal. The noble Lord admitted that he had no sympathy with this conduct. Well, then, why didn't he help them to alter the law of the land and make what he regarded as unfair illegal as well?

*MR. W. E. M. TOMLINSON (Preston) said that however much Members on that side of the House might desire to allow this Bill to be Read a Second time, with a possible view in Committee of taking out a great deal that was in it and of putting in a great deal that was not in at present, and thereby, in some way, to bring about a state of peace in reference to these matters, that desire was not advanced by such speeches as the House had just listened to. It was obvious from the speeches of the hon. Member for Carnarvon and of other hon. Members opposite, that Clause 11 was regarded as a very essential clause of the Bill, and that being so it did appear to him that those who took that view really did not understand fair treatment of those who did not happen to agree with them. The clause, in his opinion, would inflict gross injustice on every corporate body, and not exclusively those connected with the Church of England. How anyone who desired to deal fairly as between the Church of England and other bodies, and yet said it was not an injustice and a hardship that for all future time the Church of England should be deprived of the power of adding any land to the churchyard which might happen to come from a corporate body or glebe, passed his comprehension. If such a clause were left in the Bill, it appeared to him that the Measure, so far from tending to peace and quiet, would only stir up strife and ill-will. He did not think any of them would not wish to see the law as to fees, whether burial or other kind of fees, carefully considered, but he did not think any good result arose out of discussing that subject upon a Bill merely brought in by a private Member. The question of fees was a very large one. It involved matters on which the direction of the Home Office, or whatever other Department might be concerned, was eminently desirable, and he did not himself see sufficient prospect of being able to work out an arrangement with regard to fees to make it worth while attempting to go into Committee on this Bill. When he first looked at the Bill he did not do so in a hostile spirit, but with every desire to consider whether it was a Bill to which a Second reading might fairly be given. If the desires and intentions expressed by some of the supporters of the Bill had been found embodied in the Bill itself then he would not have been disinclined to reserve his objections to certain points for Committee. But it was, in its main features, so objectionable, it showed so little conception of the fair and just position of the Church of England and its members, that he should certainly vote for the rejection of the Bill.

*SIR HENRY FOWLER (Wolverhampton, E.) thought the Debate had been very unsatisfactory as a subsequent edition of the Debate of the Act of 1880. Every objection raised during the afternoon had been urged with great force and persistence in the Debate of 1880; he had heard no criticism that had not been then used, and with predictions of the lamentable and evil results, good order, and the interests of the Church that would follow such legislation as was then proposed. The anxiety displayed on that occasion was even greater than that evinced this afternoon, and yet he did not think that anyone would now insist that the Act of 1880 had rendered any disservice to Christianity or the Church of England. He had heard a very distinguished bishop, speaking at the Church Congress, caution his clerical auditors not to be too much alarmed at modern legislation, and he mentioned that he had regarded this Act with very great apprehension and dissatisfaction, but that all the fears he had then entertained vanished with the actual working of the Act, and no injury to the Church was done. If the House could approach the subject in the spirit of the hon. Member for Hyde, then a practical compromise might be arrived at on many points raised by the Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] He reminded the House of the point at which legislation had arrived. The day was too far advanced, and we had got far beyond the points raised by the hon. Member for Peterborough. The law was as it had been for many generations, that every parishioner had the right of burial in the churchyard of the parish where he died, and the right to be buried in consecrated ground. That right involved, of course, the user of consecrated ground by the minister with the services and the protection of which the noble Lord spoke with so much appreciation with reference to such burial. But the Legislature stepped in and said: No, that does not meet the case of those who wish to be buried in consecrated ground and with orderly and Christian services in accordance with the rites of their own community; and, so far, exclusive control for purposes of burial passed from the Church of England. ["Hear!"] What an hon. Member called climbing over the wall and cloaking under this Bill the claims of Nonconformists were arguments which were all demolished and pulverised before the Act of 1880 passed and both Houses sanctioned legislation to remedy admitted grievances. That was not a perfect Measure, and no Measure was perfect on its first inception; experience had to be brought to bear, and experience had shown that certain grievances remained—grievances of an administrative character, and grievances of what the noble Lord had called a sentimental character, and in the form of the present Bill a request was made to Parliament to remedy these grievances. It was not the occasion to raise upon a Bill, which was emphatically a detailed Bill to remove grievances, any great question of disestablishment or any theological questions of consecration or non-consecration. What were the administrative grievances? He could not put them better than they had been put in the speech of the hon. Member for Hyde. Of course, our churchyards are rapidly filling up, and in or near towns additional ground was not added to churchyards, but, instead, cemeteries were provided. The state of the law in regard to cemeteries was most chaotic and unsatisfactory. There were private cemetery companies—which he would like to see abolished—there were Burial Boards in certain old districts formed before recent modifications of the Public Health Act, and there was Marten's Act and the amendment of the Act passed in 1879, vesting in local authorities all the powers of Burial Boards with regard to the construction of cemeteries, giving those authorities certain option in regard to consecration. As the hon. Member for Hyde had pointed out, unsatisfactory results followed from having two authorities in burial grounds, the one controlling one part, the other controlling another part of a cemetery; and there were further grievances which had been pointed out by the hon. Member for Carnarvon, and the question of what the noble Lord had called the right of the Church of England, though it was a question of creating new rights, not of existing rights. A local board, acting, no doubt, in harmony with the feelings of those over whom it exercised jurisdiction, decided to provide consecrated ground, but upon the consecration of the ground according to the rites of the Church of England there arose certain pecuniary conditions, a salary had to be assigned for a chaplain, and certain fees were required to be paid.

*Viscount CRANBORNE said that, as far as fees were concerned, he had expressly drawn a distinction between existing burial grounds and burial grounds created after the Act.

*Sir H. FOWLER said this was a Bill of detail, and a great many of the objections of the noble Lord were powerful so far as details were concerned, but would be most unjust reasons for throwing out the Bill altogether. The hon. Member opposite quoted a case at Hyde, and he remembered a similar case in Cheshire, under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Chester, which came before him when he held the office of President of the Local Government Board. A clergyman, very sensibly, wanted to resign the rights he had in regard to fees for burials in consecrated ground. But the Local Government Board was obliged to decide that, although the clergyman might surrender his fees, that would in no way bind his successor, so that the grievance could only be remedied for the lifetime of that incumbent. This grievance the Bill sought to remedy. The noble Lord had pointed out grave evils he thought would result from several clauses of the Bill. He had raised a point upon which it must be admitted the Bill was not clearly drawn in reference to the third Clause. A very astute mind could construe that clause as the noble Lord had construed it, but he did not think the intention of the promoters or the legal construction agreed with the interpretation of the noble Lord. The third Clause practically repealed, so far as burial grounds were concerned, a portion of the Act of 1880, and the noble Lord apprehended that this would render possible Mahomedan or infidel services on consecrated ground. But if the noble Lord would look at the clause again he would see, perhaps, that his apprehensions were unfounded. Burial authorities might provide a building for the performance of burial services in any public burial ground, and this was to be available for all persons attending the funeral. But if the noble Lord would turn to the clause on the construction of the Act he would find that this Act was, so far as was consistent with the tenor thereof, to be construed as one with the Burials Acts, 1852 to 1885. That was, that the Burials Act of 1880, which sanctioned this user of consecrated ground, yet provided that there should be orderly and Christian services. He was not an authority on the law of the case, but, bringing his mind to bear on the construction of the Bill, he believed that the Burials Act of 1880 would apply to this provision in Clause 3. Be that so or not, three or four words would make that intention clear, and there was really no difference as to what should be the effect. Then he came to another question, which he regarded as of more practical importance, and though it had a sentimental character, it had throughout the country created a great deal of bitter feeling. The noble Lord said there were certain portions of the Bill to which he had no objection. He denounced "the outrageous conduct of certain clergymen" of the Church of England, and, with perfect truth, he said those guilty of such conduct were few in number. ["Hear!"] Yes, but what consolation was it to the victims of such outrageous conduct to be told that they were few in number? A poor man takes the body of his child to the burial ground, and he finds it—he might almost say—thrown like a dog into a portion of the ground used for rubbish, because the Church of England will not allow the burial in consecrated ground. What consolation is it to that poor father to be told there is not many men in England would do as that clergyman has done? ["Hear, hear!"] The cases were limited, but why not prevent any single case of the kind? That was the object of the clause. ["Hear, hear!"] There were certain other matters of detail to mention; one hon. Member talked about "climbing over the wall," but let him refer to Subsection 2 of Clause 10, and there he would find provision for going through the gate, and which would put an end to such scenes as the breaking down a wall, because entrance by the gate was refused. Why should Dissenters, because they lived in a parish and were compelled to be buried in the churchyard—where they had a right to be buried, and to have the service conducted by their own minister—solely because they were Dissenters, be deprived of the ceremony of the tolling of the bell and the use of the various appliances of funerals which were there?

["Hear, hear!"] He knew that the laity of the Church of England in that House, the great bulk of the clergy, and the Episcopal Bench, repudiated that sort of behaviour; and why, he asked, should they not render it illegal once and for ever? ["Hear, hear!"] The noble Lord opposite objected to Clause 11, but he considered it dealt with a real and practical evil. It was intended to prevent the evasion of the Burial Act of 1880 by conveying, adjacent to a churchyard, and as part of it, a piece of land to be used as a burial ground to which the Act was not intended to apply. He believed that high legal authority had advised that that device would not succeed. There could be no doubt it ought to be prevented from succeeding, and surely there could be no objection to saying that, where additional land was added to a churchyard, that new additional land should be subjected to the same conditions as the existing churchyard, and that a Nonconformist should have the right to be buried there, and for a minister of his own denomination to conduct the burial service. ["Hear, hear!"] The noble Lord had said that a great many Nonconformists desired to be buried in consecrated ground. Yes; they desired to be buried where their forefathers and relatives were buried, but that was no reason why they should be subjected to any disadvantages. He put it to hon. Members, not in the interests of a political party, but in the interests of Christianity and the Church of England, it was time that these troublesome scandals should be brought to an end. ["Hear, hear!"] No one who remembered the state of things before 1880 could doubt that it was impossible to maintain the then existing conditions, and no one could contend that any injury had resulted from the legislation of 1880, or that there had been anything discreditable to religion or injurious to the Church in consequence of that Act. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not pretend that the Bill was perfect in point of draftsmanship, but he ventured to think it was one to which the House ought to give a Second Reading, and then allow it to be sent to a Committee in order that the various points might be considered. He could assure hon. Members opposite that no one on his side of the House desired to commit any injustice or do anything that was offensive to the Church of England. All they claimed was that in the most solemn period of life, when persons were mourning the loss of their dead, they should not labour under the grievances which had been shown to exist. They had tried to state the case temperately and fairly, and they asked the House, as representing both Churchmen and Nonconformists, to remove those grievances and make Amendments in the administration of the law which they believed would be beneficial to the whole community, and tend to the allaying and not the exciting of sectarian controversy. [Cheers.]

*THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool) expressed his anxiety to respond to the appeal of the right hon. Gentleman, and to meet this question in a reasonable spirit. He was perfectly prepared to admit that, on the whole, the Act of 1880 had not worked unsuccessfully, but that there were still some grievances, which had arisen under the operation of that Act or which were not touched by it, that it was very desirable should be considered. He did not think there had been in the carrying out of the Act of 1880, by the clergy of the Church of England, the great number of improper attempts to go against the spirit of the Measure which was sometimes imputed to them out of doors. There had been exceptional instances in which certain clergymen—the fanatics of their party and of the Church —had not acted as could have been wished; but to ask the House by legislation to meet those isolated cases appeared to him to be a mistake. ["Hear, hear!"] If he had been asked to assent to the principle that it was desirable there should be some inquiry into, and some improvement in their Burial Laws, with special reference to the points indicated in the Bill, he should have done so. There were many points which were somewhat difficult to handle under the present law, and which legislation might improve; but when he was asked to vote for the Second Reading of this Bill he was asked to go a great deal further than that, and to vote for the way in which the Bill dealt with the points it raised. The right hon. Gentleman said it was all matter of detail. Very likely it was, but if the only principle upon which they were asked to vote was that there should be a reform of the Burial Laws, then he thought, before the House assented to the Second Reading of a Bill of this sort, it should have some knowledge of the method in which that improvement was to be carried out. The principal argument in support of the Bill centred round the vexed question of consecration. It had been admitted that, whereas there might be differences of opinion as to the value to be attached to consecration, the reverence for it was a feeling which ought to be respected. The Bill proposed to abolish the necessity of compulsory consecration in the provision of new burial grounds. Why had the law provided for this compulsory consecration? Because that burial ground was a substitution for the old parish churchyard, which, by Order in Council, had been closed as inadequate for the burial of parishioners; and what the law had said, with great fairness, was that, if the parishioners were deprived by the closing of the parish churchyard of the right to interment according to the rites to which they were accustomed, and which they valued, then they ought in the new ground to be established under the local authority to have—whatever be the smallness of the minority—compulsorily by law, the same rights of interment as they had in the parish churchyard. ["Hear, hear!"] The Bill proposed to leave the matter entirely in the option of the local authority, so that the rights of the minority to have consecrated ground might be taken away from them by a small majority. That, he submitted, was an objectionable proposal, and it was not surprising there should be strong opposition to it by all hon. Members on his side of the House. ["Hear, hear!"] There was, again, the question of chapels. He should have wished that, in all future burial grounds, arrangements could be made by common consent, and, if necessary, by law, that there should be an adequate mortuary chapel built at the expense of the ratepayers, to which there should be common access and common rights. In the cases where there was no general desire to have a consecrated chapel, he did not think that there should necessarily be one, nor did he see that any member of the Church of England would be injured by its absence. But he did share the feeling of repugnance to the proposal that, when they had a specially-erected mortuary chapel in the consecrated portion of the burial ground, into that mortuary chapel, although there was another provided by law in the unconsecrated part, there should be, as proposed by Clause 3, an absolutely unrestricted right of access by persons who had possibly no religious belief whatever. ["Hear, hear!"] He dared say many of the difficulties which had been alluded to by hon. Members were made on the floor of the House of Commons, for, certainly in the districts with which he was connected he was not sensible of any. When, therefore, clauses were introduced into Bills for the purpose of remedying grievances of which there was very small complaint they had a right to ask that those clauses should be of a more reasonable character. ["Hear, hear!"] As to fees, it could not be denied that there was some grievance. But, while the vested interests of existing persons should be protected, it was unreasonable that when Nonconformists were given the right to be buried in consecrated ground, they should pay not only the legitimate reward of services rendered by a Nonconformist Minister, but also the fees to an incumbent. [Opposition cheers.] The Bill no doubt was well meant, but it greatly irritated members of the Church of England, and attempted to remedy in the most illogical and impracticable manner both alleged grievances and others which he admitted to exist. Clause 1, read in connection with the Schedule, seemed to take away a great deal of the authority which the incumbent and parishioners now exercised over the parochial burial ground, and would prevent a burial authority establishing a cemetery with exclusive right to the Church of England even if desired. Permissive consecration was a matter which required to be carefully considered. Fair-minded men would agree that when a burial ground was being provided, not in addition to but in substitution for an old parish churchyard, there should be some provision under the law for compulsory consecration to preserve the rights even of five or six parishioners who were members of the Church of England.

*SIR H. FOWLER asked whether the objection of the local bodies had not been entirely on the ground of fees.

*SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY replied that he did not think that was the case. He believed the objection had been on the ground of consecration. But whatever the objection might have been, the Home Office was bound to carry out the law—that when there was a burial ground of that sort a portion of it must be consecrated. As regarded the second part of the Bill, his hon. Friends said the proposals of the Bill were not only ill-conceived, but caused—he did not say intentionally—quite unnecessary irritation to members of the Church of England. There had been few complaints on the subject to which that part of the Bill related since he had been in office. In one or two cases there had been an abuse of the Act of 1880, but to say that abuse of the Act was general or required general amendment of the law admitted of considerable doubt. If voting for the Second Reading of the Bill had meant that something should be done, he should have been inclined to vote for it, and if hon. Members opposite had asked him whether it might not be useful to institute an inquiry into the Act of 1880 he should not have objected. But he was asked to support the Second Reading of a Bill which contained so many unreasonable clauses, and which gave dissatisfaction to many members of the Church of England. Personally he would be obliged to support the Amendment for the rejection of the Bill. His own conviction was that there might be great improvements in the law, but before amendments in the law were made there should be some satisfactory inquiry. The proposals of the Bill were crude and unnecessarily offensive to the Church of England, and for himself personally he should support the Amendment for its rejection. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. JOHNSON-FERGUSON (Leicester, Loughborough) said he should not have intervened in the Debate, but would have given a silent vote, except for the fact that one of the cases to which allusion had been made occurred in the constituency which he had the honour of representing, and the arrangement by which that difficulty was ended presented perhaps one of the strongest arguments in favour of the passing of this Bill. The difficulty to which he alluded arose in the parish of Barrow-on-Soar, in Leicestershire. The churchyard had been closed by order of the Home Office, and a cemetery had been formed, but the Parish Council declined either to comply with the order of the Home Office or to have one portion of it consecrated, because of the objection which a large majority of the Parish Council felt to the right which it gave the rector of the parish to claim special fees in respect of interments which took place. He need hardly say that the former Home Secretary, in whose term of office this difficulty originally arose, and the present Home Secretary, acted in the most reasonable and courteous manner with respect to the difficulty, and did everything that lay in their power to bring it to a satisfactory and amicable settlement. But it was ultimately brought to a settlement by the intervention of the Bishop of the diocese, the present Bishop of London, who, jointly with the rector of the parish, gave an undertaking that no extra fees should be demanded by the rector where interments did not take place by himself or his curates, and the 48 hours' notice at present required to be given to him when an interment was to take place in the consecrated portion of the cemetery should no longer be demanded. What was the position? On one side they had the law distinctly stating that a portion of the cemetery should be consecrated, and he entirely agreed with every word the Home Secretary had said as to the right of every Churchman to insist that a portion of the cemetery should be consecrated. He himself should be one of the last to support a Bill which could not be amended so as to insure that right to every Churchman in the country. But, on the other side, they had the Bishop of the diocese, the rector of the parish, and the Parish Council deliberately joining together to see if they could not evade the law. Was that a condition of things which they in that House wished to see maintained? Since then another cemetery had been consecrated on precisely the same terms as those arranged in the parish of Barrow-on-Soar, which constituted a distinct evasion of the law. When they saw an astute man of the world like the present Bishop of London coming forward and making an effort like that, which practically amounted to an evasion of the law, it showed that he at least recognised that had the right hon. Gentleman opposite put the law in motion to enforce on the Parish Council the legal consecration of the cemetery, it would have done more harm to the Church than the giving up of the paltry fees. He thought that they ought to bring the law into harmony with what was the public sentiment in a very large number of the districts of the country.

Sir Matthew White Ridley.

MR. HERBERT LEWIS (Flint Boroughs) regretted that the Home Secretary had not seen his way to support the Bill. He thought the right hon. Gentleman should have paid more attention to the weighty utterance of the hon. Member for the Hyde Division of Cheshire, who had had a long and somewhat bitter experience in connection with this matter. Undoubtedly a grievance existed, and they had had Commission after Commission from the other side of the House. The hon. Member for the Tunbridge Division admitted that if the Bill were only shortened in the way he indicated he would be willing to support it. It seemed to him that from the noble Lord the Member for Rochester, the hon. Member for the Tunbridge Division, and the hon. Member for the Hyde Division, they had had an admission that there was a need for this Bill, which, at all events, would justify the House in passing the Second Reading. A similar Measure, though one very much less acceptable he was sure to hon. Gentlemen on the other side, passed that House two years ago by a very large majority. He was pleased to hear the hon. Member for Wigan deliver a paternal benediction on the Bill of 1880, and he hoped that he might live long enough also to pronounce a benediction on this Measure. He hoped this matter would be dealt with with as little bitterness as possible. He earnestly appealed to hon. Gentlemen opposite to give this Bill a Second Reading. They on that side were absolutely in their hands, all that they desired was that the Measure should be discussed point by point in Committee and thoroughly thrashed out. Unquestionably there were a number of questions on which they agreed. He would like to lay emphasis on the fact that they had absolutely no objection to any kind of consecration; all that they objected to were the legal distinctions and unnecessary disqualifications that followed the act of consecration. The right hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for the Home Department in 1880 protested against the Bill of that day being introduced, because it put Nonconformists together with Churchmen inside a sort of pale of favouritism, and excluded a large number of other persons. He had hoped that they might have had a little light and guidance from the right hon. Gentleman on this question. He was sure the House would listen with the greatest interest to what he had to say about those whom he then described as the persecutors of Nonconformists. All that they asked was that those causes of bitterness which had existed in the past should be removed, and that they might have a chance of making this Bill into a workable Bill.

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.), referring to what had been said by the hon. Member for the Tunbridge Division as to the very few instances of Nonconformist burials that had occurred in the diocese of St. Asaph, said that the real reason why there was a small number of Nonconformist burials in Wales under the Act of 1880 was, not because the people did not desire to take advantage of the Act, but because of the unexampled difficulties placed in their way by a large number of the clergy in Wales. There was the difficulty of the 48 hours' notice, especially in the rural districts, where it was not easy to make rapid arrangements. He knew a number of cases where objection had been taken because of the shortness of the notification. Another objection that was frequently made was that the person to be buried did not live exactly within the borders of the parish to which the churchyard belonged. He cited the case which had occurred in connection with a Nonconformist minister at Barmouth, and said that these cases frequently occurred in Wales. Then there was what he would describe as the cruel method sometimes adopted of deciding the exact spot where a person was to be buried. Perhaps the spot selected might be unsuitable and unattractive, and there was a case where a clergyman had insisted on a person being buried in the suicide portion of the churchyard. The grievances they complained of were real, and they appealed to hon. Members opposite, therefore, to allow the Bill to pass its Second Reading.

Question put, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question."

The House divided:—Ayes, 150; Noes, 194.—(Division List—No. 47—appended.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Cork, N.E).
Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Acland, Rt. Hon. A. H. Dyke
Allan, William (Gateshead)
Allen, Wm. (Newc.-under-Lyme
Allison, Robert Andrew
Arch, Joseph
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Asquith, Rt. Hn. Herbert Henry
Atherley-Jones, L.
Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire)
Austin, M. (Limerick, W.)
Baker, Sir John
Barlow, John Emmot
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Birrell, Augustine
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Brigg, John
Brown, Alexander H.
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Burns, John
Burt, Thomas
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Sir Charles (Glasgow)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Carmichael, Sir T. D. Gibson-
Causton, Richard Knight
Channing, Francis Allston
Clough, Walter Owen
Colville, John
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Crilly, Daniel
Crombie, John William
Curran, Thomas B. (Donegal)
Dalbiac, Major Philip Hugh
Davies, M. Vaughan- (Cardigan)
Davies, W. Rees (Pembrokesh.)
Davitt, Michael
Denny, Colonel
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Dillon, John
Dixon, George
Donelan, Captain A.
Doughty, George
Dunn, Sir William
Ellis, Thos. Edw. (Merionethsh.)
Evans, Samuel T. Glamorgan)
Evans, Sir Francis H. (South'ton)
Farquharson, Dr. Robert
Fenwick, Charles
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Flynn, James Christopher
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hn. Sir Hy. (Wol'tn)
Gilhooly, James
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Gordon, John Edward
Gourley, Sir Edward Temperley
Green, Walford D. (Wednesb'y)
Haldane, Richard Burdon
Harcourt, Rt. Hon. Sir W.
Harwood, George
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Hayne, Rt. Hon. Charles Seale-
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Howard, Joseph
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Jacoby, James Alfred
Jameson, Major J. Eustace
Johnson-Ferguson, Jabez Edw.
Johnston, William (Belfast)
Jones, David Brynmor (Swansea)
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry

Lambert, George
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cumb'land)
Leng, Sir John
Leuty, Thomas Richmond
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lockwood, Sir Frank (York)
Logan, John William
Lough, Thomas
Luttrell, Hugh Fownes
Lyell, Sir Leonard
Macaleese, Daniel
McArthur, William
McEwan, William
M'Hugh, E. (Armagh, S.)
McKillop, James
McLaren, Charles Benjamin
McLeod, John
Mappin, Sir Frederick Thorpe
Mellor, Rt. Hon. J. W. (Yorks.)
Mildmay, Francis Bingham
Montagu, Sir S. (Whitechapel)
Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Morley, Rt.Hn.John (Montrose)
Mundella, Rt.Hn.Anthony John
Nicol, Donald Ninian
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
Owen, Thomas
Palmer, Sir CharlesM.(Durham)
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
Perks, Robert William
Pickersgill, Edward Hare
Pirie, Captain Duncan Vernon
Power, Patrick Joseph
Price, Robert John
Provand, Andrew Dryburgh
Reid, Sir Robert T.
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John Bryan (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, Hon. James (East Kerry)
Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
Schwann, Charles E.
Shaw, Charles Edw. (Stafford)
Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Spicer, Albert
Stanhope, Hon. Philip J.
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Edward
Strauss, Arthur
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Tanner, Charles Kearns
Tennant, Harold John
Thomas, Abel (Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas, Alfred (Glamorgan, E.)
Wallace, Robert (Edinburgh)
Wallace, Robert (Perth)
Walton, John Lawson
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wayman, Thomas
Wedderburn, Sir William
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Wills, Sir William Henry
Wilson, Frederick W. (Norfolk)
Wilson, Henry J. (York, W.R.)
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wilson, John (Govan)
Woodall, William
Woods, Samuel
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES, Mr. Cameron and Mr. Carvell Williams.

NOES.

Acland-Hood, Capt. Sir A. F.
Aird, John
Allhusen, Augustus Henry Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Anstruther, H. T.
Arrol, Sir William
Ascroft, Robert
Ashmead-Bartlett, Sir Ellis
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Baden-Powell, Sir Geo. Smyth
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Bailey, James (Walworth)
Baird, John George Alexander
Balcarres, Lord
Baldwin, Alfred
Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r)
Balfour, Gerald William (Leeds)
Banbury, Frederick George
Barry, A. H. Smith- (Hunts.)
Bartley, George C. T.
Bass, Hamar
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt.Hon.SirM.H.(Bristol)
Beach, W.W. Bramston (Hants.)
Bhownaggree, M. M.
Biddulph, Michael
Bonsor, Henry Cosmo Orme
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith-
Bowles, T. Gibson (King'sLynn)
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brookfield, A. Montagu
Burdett-Coutts, W.
Carson, Edward
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V.C.W. (Derbyshire)
Cecil, Lord Hugh
Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Charrington, Spencer
Clare, Octavius Leigh
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Compton, Lord Alwyne (Beds.)
Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
Cooke, C. W. Radcliffe (Heref'd)
Cranborne, Viscount
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Herb. Shepherd (Bolton)
Curzon, Rt.Hn.G.N.(Lancs.SW.)
Davenport, W. Bromley-
Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P.
Donkin, Richard Sim
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Doxford, William Theodore
Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
Dyke, Rt. Hn. Sir William Hart
Edwards, Gen. Sir James Bevan
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Fardell, Thomas George
Fergusson, Rt.Hn.SirJ.(Manc'r)
Field, Admiral (Eastbourne)
Fielden, Thomas
Finch, George H.
Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir R. U. Penrose
Flower, Ernest
Folkestone, Viscount
Forster, Henry William
Forwood, Rt. Hon.Sir Arthur B.
Foster, Harry S. (Suffolk)
Galloway, William Johnson
Garfit, William
Gibbs, Hn.A.G.H.(Cityof Lond.)
Gibbs, Hon. Vicary (St. Albans)
Giles, Charles Tyrrell
Gilliat, John Saunders
Goldsworthy, Major-General
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, George J. (Sussex)
Goulding Edward Alfred
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Gretton, John
Gull, Sir Cameron
Halsey, Thomas Frederick
Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord Geo.
Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm.
Hardy, Laurence
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Havelock-Allan, General Sir H.
Heaton, John Henniker
Helder, Augustus
Hermon-Hodge, Robert Trotter
Hill, Rt.Hn.A. Staveley (Staffs.)
Hoare, Samuel (Norwich)
Hobhouse, Henry
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Howell, William Tudor
Howorth, Sir Henry Hoyle
Hubbard, Hon. Evelyn
Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. Grice-
Hutton, John (Yorks., N.R.)
Isaacson, Frederick Wootton
Johnstone, John H. (Sussex)
Jolliffe, Hon. H. George
Kennaway, Rt.Hon. Sir John H.
Knowles, Lees
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverpool)
Leigh-Bennett, Henry Currie
Leighton, Stanley
Llewelyn, Sir Dillwyn-(Swnsea)
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. CharlesW.(Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hon. Walter (L'pool.)
Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
Lorne, Marquess of
Lowles, John
Lowther, Rt. Hn. James (Kent)
Lucas-Shadwell, William
Lyttelton, Hon. Alfred
Macartney, W. G. Ellison
Macdona, John Cumming
Maclean, James Mackenzie
McCalmont, Mj.-Gen(Antr'mN)
Malcolm, Ian
Maple, Sir John Blundell

Marks, Henry Hananel
Martin, Richard Biddulph
Massey-Mainwaring, Hon. W. F.
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
Milward, Colonel Victor
Monckton, Edward Philip
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
Morrison, Walter
Mount, William George
Mowbray, Rt. Hon. Sir John
Murdoch, Charles Townshend
Murray, Rt. Hn. A. Graham (Bute)
Murray, Col. Wyndham (Bath)
Northcote, Hon. Sir H. Stafford
Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
Penn, John
Plunkett, Hon. Horace Curzon
Priestley, Sir W. Overend (Edin)
Pryce-Jones, Edward
Purvis, Robert
Rasch, Major Frederic Carne
Rentoul, James Alexander
Richards, Henry Charles
Richardson, Thomas
Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
Round, James
Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenh'm)
Russell, Sir George (Berkshire)
Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
Saunderson, Col. Edw. James
Savory, Sir Joseph
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Shaw-Stewart, M. H. (Renfrew)
Simeon, Sir Barrington
Smith, Abel (Herts.)
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Stanley, Lord (Lancs.)
Stanley, Edw. Jas. (Somerset)
Stanley, Henry M. (Lambeth)
Stephens, Henry Charles
Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Wm. Edw. Murray
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Usborne, Thomas
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. Howard
Walrond, Sir William Hood
Wanklyn, James Leslie
Warde, Lt.-Col. C. E. (Kent)
Warr, Augustus Frederick
Webster, R. G. (St. Pancras)
Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon
Wharton, John Lloyd
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Willox, John Archibald
Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart-
Wylie, Alexander
Wyndham, George
Wyndham-Quin, Major W. H.
Wyvill, Marmaduke D'Arcy

Tellers for the Noes, Mr. Talbot and Sir Francis Powell.

Words added; Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to. Second Reading put off for six months.

ARCHDEACONRY OF LONDON (ADDITIONAL ENDOWMENTS) BILL.

Mr. A. GIBBS (Herts, St. Albans) moved, "That this Bill be now read a Second time." He said its object was to remove an inequality which existed in regard to one of the canonries in St. Paul's Cathedral—the Canonry annexed and united to the Archdeaconry of London. The Dean and Chapter desired to increase the salary of the Archdeacon of London in respect of that canonry, which was at present only two-thirds of the ordinary allowance; but that increase would come out of the funds of the Dean and Chapter and would involve no public charge.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE said that, after the Bill dealing with the grievances of Dissenters had been rejected, they now came face to face with another Bill dealing with an alleged grievance of the Church of England. As he understood the Bill, its object was to raise the salary of an archdeacon. That might be a good object in itself, but it was not sufficient to commend the Bill to hon. Members on the Opposition side of the House, who were smarting under a grievance inflicted on them by hon. Members on the other side. ["Hear, hear!"]

The hon. Member was speaking at Half-past Five o'clock, when the Debate stood adjourned; Debate to be resumed To-morrow.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION (PERMISSIVE RATES AID) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday, 18th May.

LABOURERS' COTTAGES (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LOCAL AUTHORITIES OFFICERS' SUPERANNUATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday, 29th April.

LOCOMOTIVES ON HIGHWAYS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday, 5th March.

LICENCES (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

COUNTY COUNCILLORS (QUALIFICATION OF WOMEN) (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday, 5th March.

RATING OF MACHINERY SUSPENSORY BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday, 10th March.

ASSISTANT COUNTY SURVEYORS (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday, 8th March.

CEMETERIES RATING BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

ALIENS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

SHOPS (EARLY CLOSING) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

SHOPS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

WORKING MEN'S DWELLINGS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (COUNTY COUNCIL CLERKS) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

SUPPLY.

Committee deferred till Friday.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Committee deferred till Friday.

CORONERS' INQUESTS (RAILWAY FATALITIES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday, 11th March.

PRISON MADE GOODS (IMPORTATION) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

OCCUPYING TENANTS' ENFRANCHISEMENT (PURCHASE OF FEE SIMPLE) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday, 12th March.

METROPOLITAN AND OTHER POLICE COURTS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY (FOREIGN SIHPOWNERS) AMENDMENT. BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday.

ESTATES TAIL BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

MOTION.

LAND TENURE.

Bill to amend the Law relating to the Tenure of Land, ordered to be brought in byMr. Lambert, Mr. Seale-Hayne, Mr. Channing, Mr. Luttrell, and Mr. Frederick Wilson; presented accordingly, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Wednesday, 24th March, and to be printed.—[Bill 144.]

House adjourned at Twenty-five minutes before Six o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday, 25th February 1897.

STATUTE LAW REVISION BILLS AND CONSOLIDATION BILLS.

Message from the Commons to acquaint this House that they have appointed a Select Committee of seven Members to join with the Select Committee appointed by this House, as mentioned in their Lordships' Message on the 2nd instant, to consider all Statute Law Revision Bills and Consolidation Bills of the present Session.

CRETE (MINISTERIAL STATEMENT).

THE EARL OF DUNRAVEN: I desire to ask a question of the noble Marquess at the head of Her Majesty's Government—of which I have given private notice—namely, whether he is in a position to give this House any information as to the situation of affairs in Crete, and as to the progress of negotiations between the Powers with a view to the adoption of Measures for the pacification of Crete and for the reorganisation of the administration of that island?

*THE PRIME MINISTER (The MARQUESS of SALISBURY), who was received with cheers, said: I do not know that we have got quite so far as my noble Friend seems to anticipate, but we feel that it is not convenient or desirable that we should abstain from informing the House, so far as we can do so, of the policy which we are anxious to press, and which we think our allies agree with us in pursuing. I will read to the House, as the best form of placing them in possession of the actual facts of the moment, a telegram that was sent late last night to the five Powers:—

> "Inform Government to which you are accredited that Her Majesty's Government propose to make the following public declaration of the policy which they are prepared to pursue and which they believe to be in accordance with the views of their allies:—1. That the establishment of administrative autonomy in Crete is in their judgment a necessary condition to the termination of the international occupation. 2. That, subject to the above provision, Crete ought in their judgment to remain a portion of the Turkish Empire. 3. That Turkey and Greece ought to be informed by the Powers of this resolution. 4. That if either Turkey or Greece persistently refuse, when required, to withdraw their naval and military forces from the island, the Powers should impose their decision by force upon the State so refusing."

I wish to draw attention to the words "when required." It does not follow that, certainly in the case of Turkey, all the troops can be withdrawn immediately. Mere questions of police would prevent such a result as that. On the other hand, it is evident that eventually, at all events, the withdrawal of the Turkish troops is a necessary condition of administrative autonomy, and, therefore, the Turkish troops will ultimately have to be withdrawn, except so far as they may be kept—I am not anticipating the judgment of the Powers—except so far as they may be kept, as in the case of Samos, and, for many years, in the case of Servia, simply as an indication of sovereignty. On that I do not wish at all to anticipate the judgment of the Powers, but for all its effective purposes and for all influence upon the Government or the daily life of the inhabitants the Turkish troops ultimately will evidently have to be withdrawn when automony is established. The Greek troops, I imagine, will be required by the Powers to withdraw at an earlier date. I have nothing further to state, because, though I believe, after much intercommunication, that this is the course which the Powers all desire to take, I cannot go further until I know upon each point of detail what their decision is; that is one of the necessary consequences of acting in concert. But, of course, if these principles which we have ventured to lay down are recognised by them, as I believe they will be, as those which animate their policy, it is not possible that the present state of things in Crete can indefinitely continue. [Cheers.] There is no other matter which I have to state. I am sorry that I cannot carry my information as far as the question of my noble Friend, but it is evident that we must advance by steps, and the steps are necessarily measured by the assent which will follow from the consultation of the Powers. ["Hear!"]

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY: The statement of the noble Marquess is one naturally of great gravity to the situation of affairs in Crete and all the conditions which surround the question; and the noble Marquess, therefore, will not be greatly surprised if I wish to reserve any observations which I may wish to make until I have had time to consider the matter. ["Hear, hear!"]

House adjourned at Half-past Four o'clock, till To-morrow, a Quarter-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 25th February 1897.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY BILL.

On the Motion that this Bill be read a Second time,

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean) said he did not propose to divide the House upon the Motion, but to state briefly the reasons why the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants opposed the Bill, with a view to going to a Division if necessary on Tuesday next, when it had been arranged that an Instruction to the Committee on the Bill should be moved. The clauses of the Bill to which the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants objected were 37 and 38, Clause 37 being the Savings Bank clause and Clause 38 being similar to a clause inserted in the North British Railway Bill, the Second Reading of which the House had already passed. With regard to the latter clause, he understood that the Great Northern Railway Company were willing to insert into their clause a somewhat similar amendment to that which the North British Company consented to insert into their clause. As to the Savings Bank clause, the House had already allowed some other railway companies to establish savings banks of this kind, but there were many persons who entertained strong objections to the course which the House had taken, perhaps without sufficient consideration. In the Tyne Act of 1890 the then Chairman of Committees introduced very carefully-guarded clauses with regard to the accounts of those societies and their management. Those clauses had since been introduced into an Act promoted by the London County Council, and if it were deemed necessary to guard the rights of the men in the case of public bodies like the Tyne Commissioners and the London County Council, surely it was even more necessary to do so in the case of private companies. He was of opinion that the carefully guarded clauses introduced by the right hon. Gentleman should become for the future statutory clauses to be introduced in all measures of this kind. The general objection of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants to the Savings Bank clause was one which was worthy of brief consideration by the House. The men stated that they had no desire to invest their savings with the company, because they objected to their employers being in a position to obtain knowledge of what they deemed to be their own private business. The men also pointed out the bearing which that knowledge might have upon the rate of wages and upon strikes in certain circumstances. Personally he did not like those savings banks clauses in railway Bills. They were not the object or purpose of a railway Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] Railway companies came to Parliament for statutory powers to take land, and not to be made provident societies or savings banks in relation to the people in their employ. He should not divide the House against the Second Reading of the Bill, because he admitted that the principle, having been sanctioned in previous Acts of Parliament, it might not be quite fair to a particular company to divide against a general Bill of theirs upon grounds which applied only to clauses. He did not at all pledge himself not to divide the House on the Instruction, but it seemed to him that the Second Reading was the proper occasion to state briefly the objections he had taken to the extension of this principle, and, at all events, to put the matter in the possession of the House.

MR. JOHN ELLIS (Nottingham, Rushcliffe) said he did not rise to oppose the Second Reading of the Bill, but to make one or two observations from a somewhat different standpoint from that of the right hon. Baronet. Those who had followed the history of legislation with regard to railways would know that it had been of a very gradual but surely widening character; and whereas the object of these commercial companies in coming to Parliament in the first instance was a very simple one—that of obtaining powers to take land and charge tolls, for the transit of goods and passengers—now it had widened out into all sorts of different matters. He confessed he watched with considerable jealousy this widening of the area of legislation with regard to matters which he believed had better be left to be settled between the parties themselves. It seemed to him extremely doubtful how far the House was wise, in a particular Bill of this kind, in allowing these powers, which were not directly related to the particular object of the existence of the railway. As to the Instruction on the Paper he thought the railway companies would be wise in allowing all parties who might be legitimately affected by the Bill before the House to have a full opportunity of going before the Committee and stating their case.

*MR. F. W. FISON (York, W.R., Doncaster) thought that on this occasion the right hon. Baronet had got a rather poor case against this railway company. Two clauses only in this Bill, which was a long one of some 74 clauses, were objected to. The first of those two clauses, 37, gave the Great Northern Railway Company power to establish a savings bank. He would point out to the House that this was a purely voluntary savings bank. No single person in the employ of the Great Northern Railway Company was compelled to contribute to the bank; no condition of employment was laid down with any servant of the company that he should belong to the savings bank; no fines could be deducted from any money any servant might have in the bank, and, in fact, no deduction whatever could be made from any depositor's account in the bank. The depositors' accounts, he might mention to hon. Members, became a first charge on the undertaking after the mortgage and other debts and interest on debenture stock, and he ventured to say that, in the present condition of things and for some years to come, that was about as safe an investment as anyone could wish to have. But there was no novelty about this proposal of the company. Already some 14 railway companies possessed similar savings banks, and he rather regarded it as a reflection on the Great Northern Company that they had not sooner brought this proposal forward. From the Official Report of Friendly Societies for 1895 he found that in these 14 railway companies' banks there were, roughly speaking, 30,000 depositors, £2,200,000 deposited, and the average deposit per depositor was £75. The Registrar of Friendly Societies reported > "that these banks show an increase in the amount due to depositors, in the number of depositors, and in the average of each deposit account."

The right hon. Baronet said that many of the railway men objected to put their money into these banks. Well, they had a curious way of objecting, because he found that in 1895 there was an increase of over 25,000 in the number of depositors—["hear, hear!"]—and they put in an amount of £171,000, and the increased interest they got on the deposits was nearly £9,000. ["Hear, hear!"] He would further remind the House that the Registrar of Friendly Societies had to give an opinion upon the sub-clauses of this section, and he had it on that official's authority that the only amendments he required were unimportant verbal ones which could be inserted in Committee in the usual course. He thought the persons who might object to these savings banks were the shareholders, because the shareholders undoubtedly had an increased charge put upon them by the increased rate of interest paid to the depositors; but this Bill had been submitted to their shareholders, and had been most favourably received. He thought he knew a little more than the right hon. Baronet of what the Great Northern men thought about this matter. At King's Cross, no single objection, not a single complaint, had been received from the men in the service as to the establishment of this bank, and when last December he publicly stated at Doncaster, where there were several thousands of railway men, a large portion of whom were in the employ of the Great Northern Company, that it was contemplated by the directors to found this bank, the way the statement was received showed how thoroughly the men appreciated the action of the Board. He now turned to the Superannuation Clause, 38. The right hon. Baronet had pointed out that he would not object to this clause, because the Great Northern Railway Company were prepared to make arrangements which would not be compulsory on the men. The Great Northern Railway never intended that it should be compulsory, and he thought a moment's reflection would show that it could not be compulsory. The clause was to enable the railway servants serving under a Joint Committee of two railway companies to obtain, if they wished, the benefits of the Superannuation Fund. It was perfectly obvious that it would be impossible for one of these companies to force all the joint servants into its own Superannuation Fund. This fund was divided into two portions. There was the portion consisting of salaried officers, who were in receipt of £80 and upwards a year. In those cases the fund was compulsory. They contributed 2½ per cent. of their salaries, and the company added 2½ per cent., and they got the advantage of the 5 per cent. at accumulated compound interest. The second portion which might be said to consist of the workmen of the company, was not compulsory. No workman who received less than £80 a year was compelled to belong to the Superannuation Fund. It was purely a matter of option. They contributed one per cent. and the company added one per cent. In 1893 there were in this second class 2,627 workmen; in 1894 the number rose to 2,885; and in 1895 to 3,556, or an increase in the optional class of 35 per cent. in two years. It was perfectly true that there was a sentimental side to this Bill. It was perfectly true that they hoped, by the establishment of this bank, to bind still closer those friendly relations of their men to themselves, which had always been so prominent in this company. He was proud to say so, because he thought anything that that House could do to bring together employer and employed would best tend to the future glory of their great commercial reputation and enterprise.

Mr. ARTHUR O'CONNOR (Donegal, E.) thought this Bill was an exemplification of a very great and a growing abuse of statutory powers. A large Corporation such as the Great Northern Railway Company obtained exceptional privileges and advantages for the purchase of land and for a monopoly of the carrying trade upon certain conditions, and these conditions this railway company, like many other railway companies, had systematically and lightly disregarded. Among these conditions one of the most important was that, having obtained certain powers to carry out works, they should complete those works within a limited period; that having obtained rights over certain property they should exercise those rights and satisfy the owners of the property. By the non-fulfilment of these conditions the service of the public was neglected, and the interests of owners and occupiers seriously injured. This he had described as a gross and growing abuse of powers granted by Parliament, and he took the opportunity offered to point out to the House the injustice such Bills as this often inflicted. As far back as 1892, in a Committee upstairs, Sir H. Oakley, the general manager of this company, informed the Members that the suburban traffic to the City had been the trouble of their lives, and that they had been in the throes of suggestion for the last year or more. He said the company were carrying the public very badly indeed, that the trains were overcrowded every night and morning, and they could not help it; the difficulty of dealing with this suburban traffic was a burden on the minds of the managers. This was perfectly true in 1892, and it was a great deal more true now, and anybody who travelled on the line by the morning and evening trains could testify that the condition of things was perfectly disgraceful. In compartments constructed to carry ten persons there were to be found from 12 to 20 persons crowded together, and this, not only in the third, but in the first class carriages. It was not a question of getting a seat on this part of the Great Northern line, but every morning and evening it was simply a struggle for standing room in any form and in any place. In the year 1883, the suburban traffic on the line was reported to be 14 millions of passengers annually. In 1886 the total had gone up to 17 millions, and in 1891 it was 22½ millions, and it had been increasing ever since. Lord Colville, who was Chairman of the company in 1894, said that further provision would have to be made for the conveyance of the enormous suburban traffic, increasing at the rate of a million passengers a year. On these representations the Great Northern Company in 1894 obtained from Parliament very considerable powers to purchase land and to raise new capital for the construction of new lines, especially in the neighbourhood just north of London, in the district called Finsbury Park. They had widened the line in part, but still the traffic had to pass through, as it were, the neck of the bottle, and each year passed without further work being estimated for. They had given notice to occupiers that they were liable to be bought up at any moment, and yet, through 1894, 1895, and 1896 this company had done nothing. The present Chairman of the company, at a meeting held in the present year, stated that the suburban traffic was increasing at the rate of 1½ million passengers a year; and from month to month the difficulty of dealing with this traffic increased. And yet this company, having raised the capital it had power to raise, and having the money in hand for two years, had not moved a single stone to carry out the work it stipulated to complete in three years. The company had not done its duty to the public and not even to its own shareholders; it had inflicted grievous injury on owners and occupiers of property, who had all this time a sort of sword of Damocles suspended over them in the shape of a Schedule, and could not deal with their property, for, of course, no one would deal with it when there was the possibility of the company stepping in and taking possession. The shareholders, too, had good reason to complain, but with these he was not now concerned, his complaint was, that companies having obtained exceptional powers neglected to carry out their work within the stipulated time, and at the end of the time came to Parliament again, as the Great Northern Company did now, for an extension of time for work which they had had ample time for completing, but with which they had made no advance since 1894. It was no use attempting to divide the House on this matter, and he did not propose to do so, but he seized the opportunity to point out the grievous injustice many of these Bills covered, often not properly brought to light in Committee rooms upstairs.

MR. CHARLES MURDOCH (Reading) said he did not think the objection could be fairly urged against this Bill that it was a widening of the scope of Railway Bills, and certainly the Savings Bank Clause was not new. Such banks had been established by other companies, and clauses to this effect inserted in Bills. The reason for the clause was that the directors wished the security of those investing should be as good as could be, and it was necessary, therefore, to place before preference and ordinary stock interest, payment of the money deposited in the savings bank. Why the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants should raise objection he could not understand. His hon. Friend (Mr. Fison), had very clearly put before the House the advantages that would accrue to railway servants. As to the objection raised by the last speaker that year after year railway companies came to Parliament for powers to acquire land and did not complete work, it must be borne in mind that these great works were extremely difficult to carry out. Some of the work had been done between King's Cross and Finsbury Park, and anyone who travelled over that part of the line would recognise how heavy and costly the work was. He could not admit the logic of the hon. Member who, admitting the necessity for the work, yet objected to the Bill for the purpose of carrying out the work.

MR. ARTHUR O'CONNOR said he had pointed out that the company had had the money for years, but allowed the time to lapse without attempting to complete the work.

MR. MURDOCH said the hon. Member had mentioned the date 1894, and it could not be expected that works of this extensive nature could be executed in the short space of 2½ years.

MR. ARTHUR O'CONNOR remarked they were not begun.

MR. MURDOCH said a beginning had been made, but the work had to be divided into sections, and the section to which the hon. Member's remarks referred would be the next work to be undertaken.

MR. G. C. T. BARTLEY (Islington, N.) said the section of the line to which reference had been made was within his constituency. He urged the company to proceed with their work with all possible dispatch. Two and a-half years might not be a long period in the history of a railway company, but it was a fairly long period for ordinary mortals to suffer from the extreme inconvenience to which passengers were subjected by the overcrowding on the line and at the stations near Finsbury Park. He was a little surprised to hear the remark from the other side that it was not the business or object of a railway company to look after its servants and see that they had facilities for thrift and other means of improving their position. It seemed to him in these days that the putting in of a clause of this kind for the promotion of thrift and better habits on the part of the working classes ought to be one of the highest aims of great employers of labour. Railway companies had enormous advantages given them, as they had such large staffs of workmen; and surely the House ought to encourage them in every possible way to provide for the sickness and old age of the workmen in their employment.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs) asked whether, in the event of a workman being dismissed for his connection with a strike, he would receive any benefit from the savings bank?

*Mr. FISON: Yes, certainly.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE inquired if there was any statutory obligation to that effect. A second question was, Would a man who was dismissed for his association with a strike receive any benefit at all from the provident society connected with the Great Northern Railway, to which he might have contributed liberally for years?

*Mr. FISON: Does the hon. Member mean the Superannuation Fund?

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE: Yes.

*Mr. FISON said there was a rule in connection with the Superannuation Fund by which a member practically got back his money. As to whether there was a statutory obligation he was afraid he could not answer.

Bill read a Second time, and committed.

Mr. G. C. T. Bartley.

MIDLAND AND GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAYS JOINT COMMITTEE BILL.

Mr. HARRY FOSTER (Suffolk, Lowestoft) moved—

> "That the Report of the Examiners, that the Standing Orders in relation to the said Bill had been complied with, be referred back to the Examiners, with instructions to report whether Standing Orders 4, 30, and 33 have been complied with so far as the common lands known as Gunton Denes and Lowestoft Denes are affected by the Bill."

The hon. Member said the Motion was somewhat unusual, but not absolutely without precedent, and if it lacked precedent it would be because the action which had led to the necessity for the Motion was without precedent also. That House, very properly, was exceedingly jealous of any interference with open spaces or common rights, and in the Standing Orders had laid down express injunctions as to the course to be followed by the promoters of a Bill when they proposed to interfere with common rights. Standing Order No. 4 required that where, by any Bill, it was proposed to take any right to any common or commonable land, an advertisement should appear in The London Gazette stating the fact that it was proposed to interfere with those rights of the public, and also the estimated quantity of such land proposed to be so taken. That requirement was obviously for the purpose of putting people on inquiry, and giving notice to the public that rights were to be affected. Standing Order No. 30 also required that there should be deposited, in any case where commonable land or common lands were to be taken, plans and sections, and a book of reference in the Private Bill Office, showing exactly what land was to be taken. By Standing Order 33 it was required that, where such land was taken, notice should be given to the Home Office and a copy of the Bill deposited there, in order that the Home Office might call the attention of the Board of Agriculture to the matter, who were required to report to the House with regard to common rights, and might give notice generally to others interested in the preservation of common rights. The Bill in question was for the construction of a line of railway from Yarmouth to Lowestoft, and the plans deposited disclosed, for the first time, the fact that the proposed line was to come across what were known as the Gunton Denes and the Lowestoft Denes, both of which places were public recreation grounds, which, from time immemorial, had been common land and commonable land, on which there had been a right to pasture cattle exercised for centuries, and which was exercised at the present day. Part of these lands were acquired by the Corporation of Lowestoft in 1890, and in 1891 they were expressly acquired for the purpose of being used by and dedicated to the public for ever, the Corporation being trustees of the public. None of the Standing Orders he had indicated had been complied with. The Bill did not contain one single word, from the first clause to the last, disclosing the fact that common land or commonable land was to be interfered with. No plans had been deposited with the Private Bill Office disclosing that fact, and no notice had been given to the Home Office or the Board of Agriculture. He was told that the promoters of the Bill contended that the lands were not common lands, and that was their reason for not having complied with the Standing Orders. In reply to that contention he would say that, in 1890, the Corporation of Lowestoft applied to the Local Government Board for permission to acquire these lands, and also for enlarging the Borough of Lowestoft, in order to take them in. In their application to the Local Government Board the Corporation stated that one of the most attractive features to Lowestoft had been the proximity to Gunton Cliffs and Gunton Denes, which had been always unenclosed and open to the public, and over which both the inhabitants of and visitors to Lowestoft had, from time immemorial, availed themselves of the privilege of recreation; and it was of the utmost importance that at least the Denes should be perpetually preserved as an open space for the benefit of the public. Upon that express statement the Local Government Board held an inquiry, when evidence was given to show there was a right of pasturage, together with other common rights. The necessary sanction was therefore given for the purchase by the Corporation of that part of Gunton Denes for the use of the public. The solicitor to the Commons Preservation Society assured him that the terms of the conveyance conveying the land to the Corporation established the fact that this was common or commonable land within the meaning of the Standing Order. In the year 1891 the Corporation of Lowestoft desired to acquire Lowestoft Denes, and in connection with that Mr. J. J. Colman, formerly a Member of that House, agreed to give £750 towards the purchase, provided the lands were dedicated to the use of the public for ever. The deed conveying the lands expressly set forth that they were to be for ever kept and used as a public recreation or pleasure ground. He had a communication, dated no later than the previous day, from the Clerk to the Borough and County Justices, a gentleman who was a solicitor, in which he said that Lowestoft and Gunton Denes had been places open and free to the public from time immemorial; and he enclosed a document which, in a very few hours, left for that purpose, had been signed by 14 or 15 persons, who had exercised the rights of free pasturage on these lands for many years. He had in his hand a statement, furnished by the Commons Preservation Society, which showed that, so long ago as the time of Queen Elizabeth, there existed a record to the effect that these were commons or pasture lands. If that were so, and if the Bill did not comply with the Standing Orders, he asked the House to send this reference down to the Examiners—who were in no way to blame—so that they could report upon the matter. He submitted that the Examiners should have an opportunity of deciding whether these were common lands or not, and that those who represented the popular rights should be able to appear before them. He was asked in somewhat official quarters why he was not satisfied to let this Bill be read a Second time, and then the objectors could have a locus standi before the Committee. His constituents were deeply interested in this matter, and it would be a gross injustice to put them to the expense of summoning witnesses and instructing counsel, when after all it might be found that the Standing Orders had not been complied with. He believed he had shown that the Bill did not comply with three Standing Orders to which the House attached the greatest importance. He was told that the House might be asked to suspend the Standing Orders in this case. He should like to have the verdict of the House challenged. The House had shown an increasing desire to help local bodies to preserve open spaces for the public, and he should be surprised if, in a case like this, it stultified itself by suspending the Standing Orders.

SIR BENJAMIN STONE (Birmingham) seconded the Motion.

SIR FREDERICK MAPPIN (York, W.R., Hallamshire), in opposing the Motion, said the House would be adopting an unusual course in referring the Bill back to the Examiners. The hon. Member who moved the Motion had made a number of statements which it was impossible for the House to consider. The House would have confidence in the Select Committee to which the Bill would be referred. That Committee would consider all those matters which the time of the House ought not to be occupied with, and he hoped the House would reject the Motion. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.) said railway companies cut lines across commons whenever they could. If the hon. Member for Lowestoft pressed his Motion to a Division he should certainly support him.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS (Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, Cumberland, Penrith) said the matter was not quite so simple as the hon. Member for Lowestoft put it before the House. It was really a difficult matter. He seemed to assume that there was not the least doubt that the places he had mentioned were commons. He had sought such information as he could obtain on the point, and the information given to him by the promoters was that they were not commons. The Corporation of Lowestoft, who would have a large interest in the matter, denied in toto that there were any commonable rights over these places. The Board of Agriculture had made a Report on the Bill. They referred to other commons mentioned, but no mention of these places was made. Not satisfied with this, he communicated further with the Board of Agriculture, and had received from them a letter stating that they had no evidence whatever to show that either of these places were commons, or that commonable rights existed over them. He did not say whether such rights existed or not. That was surely a question of law which neither he nor the hon. Member could decide, and he was perfectly certain the Examiners would not be able to decide it, because they could not do so. He was satisfied that the promoters of the Bill acted in good faith. They had satisfied him that they took steps to ascertain whether the places referred to were commons. At Lowestoft they were informed by those in authority that they were spaces open to the public but belonging to the Corporation, and were public property in that sense, but there were no commonable rights over them. The hon. Member for Lowestoft had asked the House to do what had never been done before, viz., to refer the matter back to the Examiners. The Examiners were not proper persons to decide a delicate and difficult point of law such as would be involved. Supposing the Examiners decided that these lands were commons, and then reported to the House that the Standing Orders had not been complied with? The matter would have to go before the Standing Orders Committee, who would have to consider whether in this case the Standing Orders might or might not properly be dispensed with. That would be a rather roundabout way of arriving at the decision the hon. Member wished the House to arrive at. On the other hand, he ran the risk of the Examiners deciding that the lands were not a common, and that there was, therefore, no obligation on the promoters of the Bill to comply with the Standing Orders. He himself hoped that in these circumstances the House would not take the unusual step of sending the Bill back to the Examiners. The clients of the hon. Member had presented a Petition against this Bill, in which they raised this very point. That Petition would be heard before the Committee if the Bill should go before it, and he had the authority of the promoters to say that if the Commons Preservation Society would present a Petition the promoters would not object to their locus standi, and they would doubtless argue the point out whether these lands were commons or not. The Bill was an omnibus Bill. It did not deal with this subject only, but with the construction of a railway at King's Lynn, the creating of a dock at Yarmouth, and of other works, and if the Examiners found that the Standing Order had not been complied with, the whole Bill would be killed—which would be hard on the promoters—just because of a mistake, into which they might easily have fallen, and because they had not complied with the Standing Orders in respect of two small pieces of land.

MR. J. W. MELLOR (York, W.R., Sowerby) said he hoped the House would take the advice just given by the Chairman of Ways and Means. It was advice that any Chairman of Ways and Means would give—that this Bill should go to a Select Committee in the ordinary way. The contention of the hon. Member for Lowestoft involved a delicate and difficult question of law—if there was anything in it at all. How could the House or the Examiners of Private Bills decide such a question? The Examiners had not to decide questions of law. All they had to do was to see whether the Standing Orders had been complied with on the information before them. The natural and only tribunal to try the question involved in this Motion was the ordinary Select Committee, to whom all such Bills as this were referred. He could see no reason why this Motion should be carried.

MR. HARRY FOSTER said he would read to the right hon. Gentleman Standing Order 141. [The hon. Member then read the Order.]

MR. MELLOR thought the hon. Gentleman did not quite understand the meaning of the Standing Order. The Committee would not inquire as to whether the Standing Order had been complied with, but into the question of law as to whether these were common lands or not. He would point out also that the hon. Gentleman would gain nothing even if he carried this Motion; as, if the Bill were sent back to the Examiners, and they reported that there had been non-compliance with the Standing Orders, the promoters of the Bill would go before the Committee on Standing Orders, and, in the case of such an important Bill as this, the Standing Orders Committee would probably suspend the Standing Orders as to which non-compliance was reported. He believed his right hon. Friend was perfectly right in saying that this was the first time that a Motion such as this had been put before the House.

MR. HARRY FOSTER said that, after the statement which had been made and the advice tendered to him, he would ask the leave of the House to withdraw the Motion.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

QUESTIONS.

RICHMOND PARK.

MR. E. BOULNOIS (Marylebone, E.): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether he is aware that a very numerously and influentially signed Petition has been presented to the London County Council for the opening of the Clarence Lanes as an additional carriage way entrance to Richmond Park, and whether he will again urge upon the London County Council and the Wandsworth Board of Works the necessity for opening these additional approaches to Richmond Park so much needed by the inhabitants of London; and whether he will render the assistance promised in the Correspondence ordered by the House to be printed 31st August 1895?

THE FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS (Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS, Kent, St. Augustine's): I was not aware of the presentation of a Petition to the London County Council on this subject. Though I am most anxious to see this roadway made, and am quite ready to give the assistance promised in 1895, I cannot undertake, having regard to the result of previous communications, to press the matter again on the County Council and the Wandsworth Board of Works.

TRUSTEES SAVINGS BANKS (SCOTLAND).

SIR JOHN LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is cognisant of the practice of the principal Trustees Savings Banks in Scotland in publishing lists of persons having dormant accounts and long unclaimed balances, and of the large measure of success attending such publication in securing the payment of such balances to the rightful claimants; and whether he will call for a Report on the methods adopted by the Scottish Savings Banks in this connection with a view to its being brought under the consideration of Parliament?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Sir MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, Bristol, W.): I understand that the Trustees of the Edinburgh Savings Bank exhibit in their bank offices a list of the names of persons whose accounts have not been dealt with for ten years or more; and that the Trustees of the Dundee Savings Bank—of which the hon. Member is a manager—prepared a similar list in 1895, which has since been advertised in The People's Journal. There may be one or two other instances, but, so far as I am aware, very few Trustees Savings Banks have done so. Trustees of savings banks continue liable for money deposited with them without limit of time, and I am not satisfied that it would be desirable to impose on the trustees the duty of preparing and publishing such lists, which could only be done at considerable trouble and expense.

TELEGRAPH FACILITIES (DRINAGH, CO. CORK).

MR. JAMES GILHOOLY (Cork Co., W.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether his attention has been directed to the great want of a telegraph station at Drinagh, county Cork; and whether he proposes to supply it?

*THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. HANBURY, Preston): The Postmaster General has not received any application for the establishment of a telegraph office at Drinagh. He will, however, be happy to make inquiry on the subject, and will communicate with the hon. Member.

PRISON VISITING COMMITTEES.

MR. E. H. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether the Prison Commissioners for Scotland will give in their annual reports in future a return of the visits paid to each prison by the Visiting Committee, in a form similar to that which has for many years been given as regards Irish prisons, and which the Home Secretary has recently promised to give in future as regards English prisons?

*THE LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. GRAHAM MURRAY, Buteshire): The Prison Commissioners will be glad to furnish in their future annual reports the information desired by the hon. Member.

NEUTRALS IN TIME OF WAR.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken in fulfilment of their obligation under the Treaty of Washington of May 1871, relative to the Alabama claims, to bring to the knowledge of other Maritime Powers, and to invite those Powers to accede to, the three Rules of the Treaty which provide that a neutral Government is bound to use due diligence to prevent the fitting out within its jurisdiction of any vessel which it has reasonable ground to believe is intended to cruise against a Power with which it is at peace, and also to prevent the departure from its jurisdiction of any vessel intended to cruise, such vessel having been specially adapted in whole or in part within such jurisdiction to warlike use; secondly, not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other, or for the purpose of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or men; and, thirdly, to exercise due diligence in its own ports and waters to prevent any violation of the foregoing obligations and duties; whether, during the 25 years that have elapsed since the signature of the Treaty, any Maritime Power has acceded to these Rules; whether they are now binding on any countries except Great Britain and the United States, and as between those two countries only; and whether he will lay upon the Table any correspondence that may have passed between Her Majesty's Government and the Governments of the other Maritime Powers with reference to this matter?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. G. CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): In June 1871, Her Majesty's Government submitted to the Government of the United States a draft Note in which it was proposed to invite the Maritime Powers to accede to these rules. A correspondence took place which was laid before Parliament in 1874, showing the divergence between the views entertained by the two Governments as to the terms of reference to the two Powers and as to the precise meaning of the rules. The correspondence was renewed in 1876, but led to no result, and no invitation has therefore been issued to the Maritime Powers to accede to the rules in question. The 1876 correspondence was published in the United States, and I can show the hon. Member a copy if he desires to see it.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Does the 1876 correspondence embrace any with any other Maritime Power besides the United States?

MR. CURZON: No, Sir, this correspondence was between ourselves and the United States Government.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Is it the fact that these rules are not binding on any other country except Great Britain and the United States, and as between those two countries only?

MR. CURZON: Yes, Sir, that is so.

STATUTES (QUEEN'S PRINTERS).

SIR STAFFORD NORTHCOTE, (Exeter): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury if he is aware that the Queen's Printers are unable to supply printed copies of certain Acts of Parliament of last century's date; and that, consequently, persons requiring copies of such Acts are compelled either to procure manuscript copies, or to purchase them from a firm of law booksellers, in either case at considerable expense; and whether the Queen's Printers are required by any contract to supply, on demand, copies of all Acts of Parliament; and, if not, if he will consider the propriety of securing, by a clause in any future contract, that copies of all Statutes shall be obtainable at a fixed and reasonable price.

*__MR. HANBURY__: Since 1887 the Controller of the Stationery Office has been the Queen's Printer for Acts of Parliament, Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, who were the printers up to 1887, retained the entire stock of old Acts, and are bound by contract to supply them on the old terms until that stock is exhausted. If any Public and General Act more than ten years old has been sold out, the Controller of the Stationery Office reprints it as soon as a demand for it is received, and sells at the cheap rate at which other Acts printed by the Government are now sold.

TRUNK TELEPHONE LINE.

MR. J. W. CROMBIE (Kincardineshire): On behalf of the hon. Member for East Aberdeen (Mr. T. R. BUCHANAN), I beg to ask the rsght hon. Gentleman the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether it is the intention of the Post Office that, although the trunk telephone line from Aberdeen to Elgin is to be laid through the coast towns on the Aberdeenshire and Banffshire coasts, there shall be no facilities for telephone communication between these towns?

*__MR. HANBURY__: That is not the intention. The proposed line will afford trunk telephone facilities at Peterhead, Banff, Elgin, and Inverness. Fraserburgh being in the Peterhead area, it will rest with the National Telephone Company to connect that town with the trunk centre at Peterhead. Similarly it will rest with the Company to connect the Macduff and Lossiemouth Telephone Exchanges with the Banff and Elgin trunk centres respectively. The Postmaster General is informed that it is the intention of the Company to make these connections.

BANKRUPTCY COURT (IRELAND).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN, (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy in Ireland in 1896 submitted to the Lord Chancellor for his approval an Order enabling the official assignees of the Court of Bankruptcy to be appointed as official assignees and receivers and to other appointments; and, if so, what are these other appointments. Has any correspondence passed between the official assignees of the Court of Bankruptcy and the Judges of that Court, and between them and the Lord Chancellor, and between the Lord Chancellor and the Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy, or any other and what other Judges, or between the officials of the Court of Bankruptcy upon the subject; have any communications passed between the Lord Chancellor and the Chambers of Commerce; and, if so, what was the nature of such communications; and what were the words of the proposed Order as first submitted by the Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy to the Lord Chancellor?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central): The Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy were some time ago in communication with the Lord Chancellor on the subject of the proposed Order, but it would not be in accordance with practice to publish such communications. Communications on the subject of the proposed Order have also been addressed to the Lord Chancellor by Chambers of Commerce and other public bodies, but nothing further has been done by the Lord Chancellor and the Judges in respect of the making of the Order. The proposed Order, and the public correspondence in reference to it, have all been published in the Press, and are known to every one who is interested in the matter.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL CONTRACTS (IRELAND).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary for Ireland whether governors (other than religious orders) of industrial schools in Ireland are required by law to advertise for tenders before entering into contracts for the supply of all goods required for those institutions; how many industrial schools are under lay managers in Ireland; where are they situate; and do the managers of those schools advertise for tenders; and is the Press allowed to be present when the contracts are under discussion; if not, will he see that in the interest of the ratepayers all contracts are advertised, and that the Press shall be free to report the proceedings of all meetings, and especially when contracts are under discussion?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No distinction is drawn in the general regulations relating to industrial schools in Ireland between schools under lay and clerical management, respectively. There are nine Protestant and two Roman Catholic schools under lay management, and the remaining sixty schools are, I believe, under the management of Roman Catholic religious orders. The hon. Member will find further particulars as to the location of these schools in the annual report of the Inspector presented to Parliament. It has not been the practice, so far as I am aware, to admit the Press to be present at the proceedings of the managers of such schools, and I am not aware of any legal provision requiring either that the deliberations of the managers should be open to the Press, or that tenders for supplies shall be invited by public advertisement.

HORSE-BREEDING (IRELAND).

COLONEL McCALMONT (Antrim, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Congested Districts Board have recently acquired a number of thoroughbred and hackney mares, which are located at the Chantilly Stud Farm, near Dublin; with what object are they there; and, what benefit do the inhabitants of the congested districts derive from them?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The Congested Districts Board have not recently acquired any hackney mares, but they have purchased two thoroughbred mares, which are placed at the Chantilly Stud Farm for breeding purposes. The intention is to use their offspring in order to improve the breed of horses in congested districts.

LIBERIA (BRITISH TRADE).

SIR GEORGE BADEN-POWELL (Liverpool, Kirkdale): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether any definite agreement has been come to with the Government of the Republic of Liberia as to any increase in the number of ports of entry and in facilities for British trade; and what arrangement has been come to in regard to the recent cases of firing on British vessels by the Liberian gunboat?

MR. CURZON: The Governor of Sierra Leone, who is also Her Majesty's Consul for Liberia, visited Monrovia recently, and discussed the question of increased trading facilities with the Republic. Steps have since been taken with regard to the issue of licences to trade with ports of non-entry. He also received assurances that British vessels should not be fired upon, and orders have been issued by the Liberian Government to that effect.

SOLENT (ARTILLERY FIRING).

SIR GEORGE BADEN-POWELL: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the Report of the Inquiry respecting the proposed Artillery by-laws for Spithead and the Solent has yet been sent in and considered; and, whether a copy thereof can be laid upon the Table before any further decision is arrived at by the Government?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. RITCHIE, Croydon): Yes, Sir, the report of the Inquiry held by Sir George Nares as regards the proposed Artillery by-laws for Spithead and the Solent has been received. A copy of it was sent to the War Office for their consideration, and the Board of Trade have not at present approved of the by-laws. The Report is of a confidential nature, and, as at present advised, I do not think that a copy can be properly laid on the Table.

PETTY SESSIONS COURTS (IRELAND).

MR. MACALEESE (Monaghan, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he will introduce a Bill during the present Session of Parliament to prevent Grand Juries in Ireland from allowing Petty Sessions Courts to be used as Orange Lodges?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No, Sir, it will be time enough to think of such a Measure when any reason for it has been shown.

JURYMEN'S EXPENSES (IRELAND).

MR. MACALEESE: I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland if he could undertake to bring about such a change in the law as would provide that the hotel expenses and cost of travelling of common jurors, in attendance at Assizes and Quarter Sessions Courts in Ireland, should be borne by the Imperial Exchequer?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. J. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.): The question of the payment of Jurors is one which must, I think, be dealt with in a general Measure applicable to the three Kingdoms, if dealt with at all. I cannot, therefore, give the undertaking asked for by the hon. Member.

MAGISTRATES (IRELAND).

MR. MACALEESE: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) has any magistrate, or have any magistrates, been relieved of the Commission of the Peace within recent years in Ireland for adjudicating outside certain prescribed areas in the counties for which they held their appointment; (2) what were the names of such magistrates and for what counties did they hold their Commissions; and (3) will he have the regulation rescinded which prevents certain magistrates from exercising jurisdiction except in prescribed areas of the counties for which they hold their Commissions?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No public advantage would be gained by giving the information indicated in the first two paragraphs of this Question, and as to the third paragraph, the reply is in the negative.

EDUCATIONAL ENDOWMENTS (IRELAND).

COLONEL SAUNDERSON (Armagh, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the great dissatisfaction existing amongst the Protestant population in Ireland in consequence of the acceptance by the Government of the Bill of the hon. Member for Louth, affecting existing Educational Endowments; and, what course the Government propose to take regarding the Bill?

MR. E. CARSON (Dublin University): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the Resolution passed by the Archbishops and Bishops of the Church of Ireland, deprecating the changes proposed in the law regulating the Educational Endowment Commission; and, what steps the Government propose to take in relation to such proposed changes?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I am aware that much dissatisfaction has been excited among Protestants in Ireland in connection with the Bill of the hon. Member for North Louth—a feeling which I cannot help thinking is, for the most part, due to a misconception of the views of the Government upon the subject. While not opposing the Second Reading of the Bill, I indicated that it could not be allowed to pass without extensive alterations. The question whether it is possible to effect the changes which we consider necessary by means of Amendments to the Bill appears doubtful, and is now under consideration. Under these circumstances, perhaps, my hon. and gallant Friend will postpone the last part of his question, relating to the course the Government propose to take, for a few days.

EVICTED FARM (WESTPORT).

Colonel SAUNDERSON: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that a man, named Scanlon, was fired at twice at Westport on the 21st inst., for taking an evicted farm; and that a meeting was held recently in the neighbourhood, at which Mr. W. O'Brien held up land grabbers to public odium; and what steps the Government are taking to prevent such teaching bearing further fruit?

Mr. MICHAEL DAVITT (Mayo, S.): I would ask the right hon. Gentleman before he answers that Question whether it is the fact that the village where the firing is alleged to have taken place is 40 miles distant from the place Mr. William O'Brien made his speech at?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I do not think this Question refers to that village at all. Two shots were fired at a distance of about 80 yards from the house of Peter Scahill, to whom this Question presumably refers, on the night of the 14th inst. There is no evidence, however, to show that they were fired at Scahill. Scahill is in occupation of an evicted farm in the district of Westport and county of Mayo. A meeting was held at Cahir, 40 miles away, in the same county, some days previously, at which Mr. O'Brien used language of the nature indicated. The police have taken, and will continue to take, whatever steps seem necessary to protect Scahill and other persons who, in the exercise of their legal rights, take and occupy farms from which the former tenants have been evicted.

SLAVERY IN ZANZIBAR.

Mr. THOMAS BAYLEY (Derbyshire, Chesterfield): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs when he will lay upon the Table the correspondence giving Mr. Hardinge the instructions of the Government in fulfilment of their undertaking to abolish the legal status of slavery in the island of Zanzibar?

Mr. CURZON: The instructions will be laid in due course, but I cannot at the present moment name a date.

OYSTER CULTURE.

Mr. HENNIKER HEATON (Canterbury): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is aware that, owing to the publication by the Local Government Board of a Report on Cholera, and of another Report on Oyster Culture in Relation to Disease, public confidence in the wholesomeness of oysters has been so much impaired that the annual consumption of oysters has fallen off to the extent of three-fourths, and a large number of the fishing poulalation have been reduced to distress; whether he has observed that the reports alluded to condemn only a few small oyster layings round the coasts of England, while many of the chief layings, including the whole of those on the coast of Kent, were declared free from contamination; whether he is aware that the Kentish layings thus pronounced free from disease are more extensive than all those in the rest of the Kingdom put together; and whether he is aware that they have suffered from the lack of demand equally with the polluted layings; whether, with a view to restore public confidence in a valuable article of diet and assist the fishing population, he will recommend the appointment of inspectors of layings, and also of all shops and stalls for the sale of oysters, authorised to enforce such conditions of sanitation as may effectually safeguard the public against disease; whether he is aware that foreign oysters are frequently introduced into this country from polluted layings, and that the only instance of enteric fever in an epidemic form arising in England from oysters was traced to the eating of Dutch oysters; and whether he will therefore recommend that it shall be made a penal offence to sell oysters brought from foreign layings without declaring their origin at the time of sale and without plainly marking such origin?

MR. RITCHIE: I have little doubt that the reports referred to have, to some extent, impaired the confidence of the public in the wholesomeness of oysters, but I venture to think that my hon. Friend overestimates the decrease in their consumption. I am aware that, whilst only a certain number of beds are condemned, others have suffered from the reduction in demand. The trade has brought the matter to the notice of my right hon. colleague the President of the Local Government Board, whose province it is to deal with questions affecting the public health; but if it should be found that the Board of Trade can take any useful action in the matter, I shall be ready to give careful consideration to any proposals which may be laid before me. As at present advised I do not think that the marking of foreign oysters —[laughter]—would be either feasible or an efficient remedy.

AGRICULTURAL IMPROVEMENTS (IRELAND).

MR. GILHOOLY: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether any alteration has taken place since the passing of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, with regard to advances for works of agricultural improvement, pursuant to section 31; whether a tenant farmer, whose poor law valuation is £7, can now obtain a loan; whether every tenant farmer, whose poor law valuation is £7 and upwards, having sufficient security to offer, can obtain an advance by way of loan to the amount of five times his poor law valuation, and if there has been a new departure, what reason can he assign for it?

*MR. HANBURY: Originally the minimum loan was £100 (reduced to £50 in 1883), and the maximum equal to five times the poor law valuation. Since 1892 the minimum has been reduced to £35, and the maximum fixed at three times the poor law valuation or judicial rent, if no collateral security is given, or five times if collateral security is forthcoming. The alteration was shown, by the experience of the first decade during which the Act was in operation, to be necessary in order to avoid undue risk to the Exchequer. It follows that a tenant whose valuation is £7 only cannot obtain a loan on any terms for less than £35. If he can give collateral security he may obtain a loan for £35, which is five times his valuation or judicial rent. The hon. Member will find information on the point on pages 16 and 17 of the Board of Works report for the year 1894-95.

MR. GILHOOLY said he would call attention to the subject on the Estimates.

METROPOLITAN POLICE CLOTHING.

SIR LEWIS McIVER (Edinburgh, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, with reference to favourable replies given by him to similar questions last Session, whether he has been able to make arrangements for an issue of light clothing to the Metropolitan Police for use in the summer months?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool): Yes, Sir, such arrangements have been made.

LICENSING SESSIONS (BALLYBOT).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that County Court Judge Kisby threatened to report Mr. William Adams, J.P., to the Lord Chancellor for voting at the Licensing Sessions at Ballybot in October last; whether Mr. Adams was within his right in voting at those Sessions; and whether Judge Kisby was justified in publicly reprimanding him?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Mr. Adams is a Justice of the Peace residing at Portadown, and, so far as Judge Kisby was aware, had not been in the habit of attending Ballybot Sessions. He appeared, however, at these Sessions on the 6th October last, and Judge Kisby animadverted on the growing habit of Justices going to Licensing Sessions outside the division in which their Petty Sessions districts are situated, for the purpose of voting in licensing cases. The learned Judge was clearly within his rights in commenting upon a practice which is evidently undesirable, and the matter is now under the consideration of the Lord Chancellor.

ORDNANCE STORE DEPARTMENT.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office what number of men are employed in the Ordnance Store Department who receive less than 20s. a week; and, how many men there are in the Ordnance Factories who receive less than 24s. a week?

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): The number of men at present employed in the Army Ordnance Department who receive less than 20s. a week is 1,291. In the Ordnance factories those who receive less than 24s. a week number 1,393. Of these 229 have also pensions; and a large number are young men or men of short service in the factories.

MARINE INSURANCE POLICIES (STAMP DUTY.)

SIR GEORGE BADEN-POWELL: I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he has received several memorials from commercial and underwriting associations, pointing out the burdensome character of the existing rate of stamp duties on marine insurance policies; (2) whether the present minimum rate of duty on a marine policy is 3d. per cent. while the duty on any other form of policies on property is 1d. per policy, irrespective of the amount insured; and (3) whether action can be taken towards assimilating the duty on marine policies to that of fire policies to the great relief of the British commercial community?

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: The answer to the first question is, Yes. The present minimum rate of duty on a marine policy is one penny on all policies where the premium amounts to 2s. 6d. or less per cent. of the sum insured. The question of reducing the duty above this point is under my consideration, but the suggestion of the hon. Member would involve a considerable sacrifice of revenue, and I can make no promise with regard to it.

LEE-METFORD RIFLE (MANCHESTER VOLUNTEERS).

SIR WILLIAM HOULDSWORTH (Manchester, N.W.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War when the Lee-Metford rifle will be received by the Manchester Volunteers?

*MR. BRODRICK: The Manchester Volunteers will be supplied with the Lee-Metford rifle during the next financial year, and as soon as possible after the 1st November next.

VACCINATION ACT (IRELAND).

MR. J. C. FLYNN (Cork, N.): On behalf of the hon. Member for Galway (Mr. J. PINKERTON), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if the Local Government Board (Ireland) can compel Poor Law Guardians to put into practice the compulsory clause of the Vaccination Act?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The Local Government Board have power to pass any regulations they think fit to prevent the spread of dangerous infectious diseases, such as small-pox, and thus to compel compliance with the Vaccination laws. No Boards of Guardians in Ireland have, I may add, refused to do their duty in this respect.

IRISH MAILS.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether there is a Treasury Minute, bearing the date 19th October 1855, referring to the conveyance of passengers by Irish mail trains between London and Holyhead; and whether he has any objection to give the terms of the Minute or lay it upon the Table of the House?

*MR. HANBURY: Yes, Sir, there is such a Treasury Minute. It deals with a Private Act of 1855 which was passed for the express purpose of improving the passenger as well as the postal communication between England and Ireland, and it therefore stands on a different footing from an ordinary Treasury Minute dealing with postal communications only. It has already been laid before Parliament and was printed as House of Commons Paper No. 27 of the year 1856.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOL BILLS.

MR. J. BRIGG (York, W. R., Keighley): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education, if, in the definitions of the Voluntary School, the expression "Voluntary School" may be taken to include the evening classes as well as the day classes which exist in public elementary day schools?

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University): A Voluntary School is defined to be a day school. A day school would not mean an evening class. [Laughter.]

LETTERS FOR SIBERIA.

MR. J. COLVILLE (Lanark, N.E.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that many letters and papers dispatched from this country to Siberia never reach their destination; and if so, whether he can give any explanation regarding this, or hold out any prospect of improvement in this direction for the future?

MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General is not aware of the fact alleged in the Question, but, if the hon. Member will send to the Post Office particulars of any cases which may have occurred, a communication on the subject will be addressed to the Russian Post Office.

HIGH SHERIFF (CARRICKFERGUS).

MR. D. KILBRIDE (Galway, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he is aware that Captain Higginson, who was appointed for 1897 high sheriff for the county of the town of Carrickfergus, refuses to act; whether any, and if so, what proceedings have been instituted by the Attorney General in the matter; under what authority can a citizen in Ireland be compelled to accept an office which frequently involves considerable loss of time and money; and if he will give the name and address of the person now discharging the duties belonging to the office of high sheriff in Carrickfergus?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Captain Higginson has refused to serve. Proceedings by criminal information have been instituted against him at the suit of the Attorney General. It has long been established that any person who, having been appointed Sheriff, refuses to serve, is guilty of a misdemeanour. A gentleman named Hutchinson was proceeded against similarly for a like refusal in the year 1893 by the late Government. The Sheriff of last year, Mr. Wilson, is bound to discharge the duties of the office till his successor has entered upon his duties.

LAND COMMISSION (IRELAND).

MR. KILBRIDE: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Return granted to the hon. Member for South Down in connection with the Land Commissioners has been prepared, and whether he can say when it will be circulated?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Every effort is being made to complete the preparation of the Return referred to without unnecessary delay, and it will be laid on the Table as soon as I receive it.

TREASON FELONY PRISONERS.

MR. M. DAVITT: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received a petition signed by 9,000 citizens of Johannesburg, asking for the release of the few remaining Irish political prisoners; and if, in obedience to the appeal made by so large a number in that city, he can see his way to recommend the liberation of these men during this jubilee year of Her Majesty's reign?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: I have received a petition to the effect mentioned, signed by a large number of residents in Johannesburg and the South African Republic generally, but I am afraid my answer must be that I have nothing to add to my recent statements in the House on this subject.

INDIAN MINTS.

SIR HENRY MEYSEY-THOMPSON (Stafford, Handsworth): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether any coins have been struck at the Indian Mints either for the Government or anyone else since the date when the privilege of getting rupees coined was withdrawn from the public?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, Middlesex, Ealing): The only coins which have been struck at the Indian Mints since June 1893 (with the exception of the coinage of silver in transit at that time) are (1) silver coins representing fractions of the rupee, to the value of Rx.504,624; (2) copper coins for the Indian Government, for native States, for the British East Africa Company, and for the Straits and Ceylon Governments; and (3) British dollars, for Eastern trade, at the request of the Colonial Office.

BRISLEY (NORFOLK) PARISH COUNCIL.

Mr. FREDERICK WILSON (Norfolk Mid): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether it is proposed to hold an official inquiry in respect to the application of the Brisley (Norfolk) Parish Council for a loan of £50 for a new burial ground, notwithstanding that the Norfolk County Council has already held an inquiry in the village and consented to the loan, while the parish meeting has unanimously approved the scheme, and the owners and occupiers within 100 yards of the proposed site have given their written consents; whether the cost of a further inquiry will absorb a large proportion of the £50 to be borrowed; and, whether, under these circumstances, the cost of further investigation will be borne by the parish?

The PRESIDENT of the LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. Henry Chaplin, Lincolnshire, Sleaford): It is the practice of the Local Government Board in the case of applications for sanction to loans for new burial grounds to direct an inquiry by one of their inspectors, as it is necessary that the proposal should be considered from a sanitary point of view, and especially with reference to the possible effect as regards adjacent sources of water supply of the use of the site for burial purposes. On the latter ground there appears to be exceptional reasons for holding the inquiry, although the amount proposed to be borrowed is but small. The Board in such cases arrange that the inquiry shall be held when an inspector can conveniently visit the place in connection with the holding of other inquiries, so that the expense of a separate journey from London may be avoided.

LOAN FUND SOCIETIES (IRELAND).

Mr. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.): On behalf of the hon. Member for South Donegal (Mr. J. Swift MacNeill), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he will make further inquiries into the system of converting renewals into new loans which prevails in the Ballyshannon (County Donegal) Loan Fund Society's office; whether, notwithstanding the information supplied by the clerk at Ballyshannon to the Loan Fund Board, it is the custom for a police pensioner, who is or was a committee man or trustee of the said society, to attend and lend the money to the borrower as he enters the office, and take it from him as he emerges therefrom; whether, in view of the illegalities practised by such societies, such a state of affairs will be allowed to continue; and, whether he will order a further inquiry on oath into the working of the Ballyshannon Loan Fund Society?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: I have twice endeavoured to obtain from the clerk of the Ballyshannon Loan Fund Society a satisfactory explanation of the alleged practices complained of in this Question, but without success. The only positive statement I can gather from his reports is that no loans have been renewed by the society since the 25th July last. The whole matter is now, however, receiving the consideration of the Loan Fund Board, who propose to direct their inspector to proceed forthwith to Ballyshannon and inquire into the irregularities referred to.

TRUCK ACT (FINES).

Mr. S. WOODS (Essex, Walthamstow): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is aware that prior to the passing of the Truck Act last year, a workman could recover from an employer fines deducted from wages, and whether the recovery of fines of a similar character under the Act of 1896, after such fines have been posted up, is impossible; whether he is aware that while the Act of 1896 provides for the punishment of employers who make illegal fines, and also compels the production of copies of contracts in respect to fines in Clause 6 of the Act, there is no provision for jurisdiction on railways by inspectors, the power being given only to inspectors of factories and mines; and, whether, under these circumstances, he will make adequate provision for the proper protection of railway employees?

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: The state of the law prior to the passing of the Truck Act was, so far as I was able to ascertain, the exact contrary of that suggested in the Question. On coming to the Home Office I consulted the highest legal authorities on the point, and was advised by them that a deduction from wages in respect of fines was not only, as had been decided by a series of cases in the Courts ranging over 30 years, not an offence against the Truck Acts, but was not even recoverable by the workman in the civil Courts. The law was fully explained in the memorandum on the subject which I laid upon the Table of the House last year, and to which I would refer the hon. Member. The statements in that memorandum were not controverted while the present Act was under discussion, or, as far as I am aware, since. Under the present Act it is now possible within six months to recover by civil proceedings so much of any fine as the Court may hold to be unreasonable. I am quite aware that the jurisdiction of the inspectors of factories and mines does not extend to railways or to many other employments. I have now under my consideration the lists of fines proposed by the companies.

BRITISH TROOPS IN INDIA (HEALTH).

MR. ROBERT CAMERON (Durham, Houghton-le-Spring): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India if he will state what are the terms of the reference to the Departmental Committee now sitting on the subject of venereal disease among British troops in India; whether the evidence taken by the Committee will be circulated as soon as complete; and, whether the House will be afforded an opportunity of discussing the question before any action is taken by the Imperial or the Indian Governments?

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: The terms of reference were as follows:—

> "To examine the official returns of venereal disease among British troops stationed in India, and to report what changes, if any, have taken place during recent years in the prevalence of such disease and in its character and intensity; also, to obtain and report any information which may be available with regard to the presence of venereal disease and its character and intensity among foreign armies."

The report is now under my consideration, and will be published. The evidence on which it is founded being almost entirely documentary, has not been separately recorded, but is embodied or referred to in the Report. I am at present unable to say what course may be taken by Her Majesty's Government; but, undoubtedly, the House will have an opportunity of discussing any decision we may arrive at.

BRITISH UITLANDER POPULATION, TRANSVAAL.

SIR ELLIS ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether the Transvaal Volksraad have passed a Law making the High Court of the Transvaal subject to resolutions of the Volksraad, and placing the Judges under the Boer Executive; and, if so, what steps Her Majesty's Government propose to take to secure impartial justice and the protection of Law for the British Uitlander population?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): I understand that such a Law as the hon. Member describes has been introduced into the Volksraad, but I have no information that it has been passed. In any event, the protection of British subjects in the South African Republic is secured by the Convention, which Her Majesty's Government have declared their intention to maintain in its integrity.

ARMENIA.

MR. JAMES BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the attention of Her Majesty's Government has been called to a statement reported to have been made by the French Minister for Foreign Affairs in the French Chamber on 22nd February, that in November 1895 when the Powers were deliberating on the course to be pursued towards the Sultan with reference to the massacres in Armenia, England pronounced for pacific means; whether Her Majesty's Government accept that statement as correct; and whether if it is correct, he will inform the House in what Dispatch laid before Parliament such a decision of Her Majesty's Government is stated or referred to?

*MR. CURZON: M. Hanotaux's actual words were that "England did not think fit to have recourse to other than pacific measures." This statement, which appears to be a general version on the part of the French Minister for Foreign Affairs of the attitude of Her Majesty's Government in the autumn of 1895, is not contained in any Dispatch.

HOLLOWAY PRISON (SELINA, LADY SCOTT).

MR. PICKERSGILL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has given permission to Dr. Bond, in conjunction with the medical officer of Holloway Prison, to examine a prisoner named Selina, Lady Scott, with a view to reporting to him upon the state of Lady Scott's health; and, if so, upon what grounds has this permission been given?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: It is the case that Lady Scott has been seen by Dr. Bond. As I have stated in the House on several occasions, the visiting committee have very large powers of granting visits in the case of first-class misdemeanants; and when the application that Dr. Bond might visit Lady Scott was received by the Prison Commissioners, it was referred by them to the committee, who allowed the visit. I am of opinion, however, that professional visits of this nature do not come within the rules, and I have given directions that all such applications in future shall be referred to me for my decision.

MISSION TO KING MENELIK.

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the Government have decided to send a Special Mission to King Menelik; and, if so, what are the objects of this mission?

*MR. CURZON: The mission is sent to assure King Menelik of our friendly intentions, to endeavour to promote amicable political and commercial relations, and to settle certain questions which have arisen between the British authorities in the Somali Coast Protectorate and the Abyssinian Governor of Harrar.

MR. J. M. MACLEAN (Cardiff): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will attach a representative of British commercial interests to the political and military mission they are sending to the court of King Menelik?

*MR. CURZON: It will not be possible on this occasion to send any special representative of British commercial interests with the mission. But Mr. Rodd will receive instructions to pay particular attention to those interests in his communications with the Abyssinian Court.

SALISBURY PLAIN.

MR. CHAS. COLSTON (Gloucester, Thornbury): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury what steps the Government propose to take in connection with the purchase of land on Salisbury Plain for Military purposes, for the protection of ancient monuments?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): If there are monuments of interest on the land proposed to be bought they will be carefully preserved by the Government.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS.

MR. G. LAMBERT (Devon, South Molton): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury if he can say when a Bill will be introduced by the Government to amend the Law relating to agricultural holdings?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I am afraid that in the present condition of public business I could give no answer to the hon. Gentleman on the point.

CRETE.

MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether it is true, as stated in the Dispatch of Colonel Vassos, that Turkish troops sallied from Canea to attack the advanced positions of the insurgents or to defend positions held by Turks; and, whether this was done by the orders or with the approval of the representatives of the Powers at Canea?

MR. F. S. STEVENSON (Suffolk, Eye) also asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in view of the fact that the Powers made arrangements to prevent an attack upon Canea, what steps they took to prevent a sally of the Turkish troops from that town for the purpose of attacking the Cretan position?

*MR. CURZON: According to our information, no sally from the town took place.

MR. STEVENSON asked the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs who gave the signal for the bombardment of the Cretan position by the combined fleet of the Powers.

*MR. CURZON: I answered this Question on Tuesday.

Mr. STEVENSON: The right hon. Gentleman was then unable to state who gave the signal. He said he had no information.

*Mr. CURZON: I beg pardon. I said I believed the signal was always given by the senior Naval officer, who in this case was the Italian Admiral.

General Sir HENRY HAVELOCK-ALLAN (Durham, S.E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government, with a view to the earlier cessation of hostilities in Crete, will give orders to the British Fleet pending reply from the Five Powers to the Circular Note addressed to them by Lord Salisbury, to prevent the landing in Crete of provisions for the Greek forces and the Cretan insurgents, which provisions, equally with munitions of war, cannot fail to prolong the duration of the struggle?

*Mr. CURZON: The British Admiral having instructions to act in concert with the other Naval commanders, no separate orders can be sent to him to act in independence of his colleagues.

Mr. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the Government have received any confirmation of the telegram that owing to the encouraging effect of the bombardment of the Cretan position by the allied squadron on Sunday last, the Turkish cannon were firing upon the Christians both on the Suda and on the Galata side of Akrotiri; whether it is a fact thas the outposts of the Greek army in camp at Platania were also fired upon repeatedly by the Turks, and that they (the Greeks) did not return the fire; and whether he will state whether the instructions issued to the British Admiral in command orders the prevention by bombardment of the advance of Cretan Christians, but allow the Turkish troops and Mohammedan irregulars to continue without interference warlike operations against the Cretan insurgents and the Greek army.

Mr. H. J. WILSON (York, W.R., Holmfirth): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the attention of Her Majesty's Government has been called to the statements to the effect that the encouraging effect of Sunday's event upon the Turks is already visible, and that both on the Suda Bay side and on the Galata side of Akrotiri the Turkish cannon have been busily firing upon the Christians, who had not replied, fearing lest they should be shelled by the foreign warships; and whether Her Majesty's Government will forthwith send orders to the Consul General and the Naval officers that the Turkish officers must be warned to desist from these operations, and that the English fleet will take steps to prevent by force any further attack by Turks upon Christian positions?

Mr. DILLON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the Turkish cannon, both on the Suda and Galata side of Akrotiri, have been busily firing on the Christians since Sunday, the Christians not replying fearing lest they should be shelled by the Foreign war ships?

*Mr. CURZON: The only information that we possess with reference to the points raised in these three Questions is to the effect that throughout Monday desultory firing continued to the south of the town, and that yesterday fighting was going on on both sides of Suda Bay. It is clear that this information applies to both combatants.

Mr. H. J. WILSON: The right hon. Gentleman has not replied to the latter part of my Question.

*Mr. CURZON: Well, Sir, I have already replied to it in answer to another Question. So far as we know, these operations have not taken place.

Mr. CHANNING: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether representations have been made by the Greek Minister in this country protesting against the action of the fleet in shelling the Cretan positions, and conveying the substance of the resolution adopted by the Greek Chamber to the effect that a protest be sent to the Powers concerned against the bombarding of Christians as an act unparalleled in the history of the world; and what reply has been given to the Greek Minister?

*Mr. CURZON: No such communication has been received.

Mr. D. F. GODDARD (Ipswich): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether his attention has been called to the statement that the Turks opened a brisk fire on the Cretans while they were picking up their dead and wounded; and what steps have been taken to prevent a recurrence of such a practice?

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the statement is true that, immediately after the British ships had ceased firing on the Cretans, and as the Cretans were picking up their dead and wounded, the Turks at the nearest outposts opened a brisk fire, to which the Cretans, disheartened by the fire of the warships, did not reply?

*MR. CURZON: So far as our information goes the statement is incorrect. No wounded were seen.

MR. DILLON: The question is whether, after the British ships ceased firing, the Turkish troops opened fire on the Greeks while they were carrying away their wounded?

*MR. CURZON: As I have already said, we have received no information that there were any wounded. ["Hear, hear," and laughter.]

MR. DILLON: Is it not a fact that the admirals offered to send on shore medical officers to attend the wounded? [Cheers.]

*MR. CURZON: It is perfectly true, but the Greek commander would not let them go. [Cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Because there were no wounded.

SIR ELLIS ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government and the Governments of the other Great Powers have decided to send the armed European force of 300 men necessary, in the opinion of the Consuls of Italy, Russia, and England, to save from massacre 3,000 Mussulmans now beleaguered at Kaudamos and Selinos?

*MR. CURZON: No reply has yet been received to a telegram of inquiry which was addressed to the British admiral on the subject, but we know that on the 23rd the admirals were concerting measures for the relief of the beleaguered districts.

MR. H. LABOUCHERE (Northampton): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (1) whether he can inform the House what is the distance between Canea and the Cretan village bombarded by the fleets of the Great Powers; (2) whether any Turkish vessel joined in that bombardment; (3) whether any Turkish vessel fired on the insurgents before or after that bombardment; and (4) whether any Turkish forces have moved from the towns occupied by the Great Powers in Crete since that occupation, and have attacked outside these towns the Cretan forces?

*MR. CURZON: So far as we can gather, the position taken up by the insurgents on the heights commanding the town must have been between one and two miles from the walls of the latter. We have no reason to believe that the statements in paragraphs 2 and 3 are correct. In answer to paragraph 4, no troops, as I have previously said, advanced from the town, nor have the Turks advanced beyond their former outposts.

MR. CHANNING: Is the right hon. Gentleman in a position to state whether the insurgents have artillery which can command the town?

*MR. CURZON: I think so. It was from the fear that they were going to plant that artillery in a position to command the town that the action of the fleets took place. [Cheers.]

MR. BRYCE: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Turkish transports, carrying Turkish troops from one part of the coast of Crete to another, have been escorted by British ships of war?

*MR. CURZON: We have no information to that effect.

MR. BRYCE: As I put this Question down last Tuesday—[cheers]—and as we have still received no information, I give notice that I shall repeat the Question. [Cheers.]

MR. FLYNN: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether, on Monday and Tuesday last, the Turkish cannon on the Suda and Galata side of Akrotiri fired upon the Christian troops, who did not reply for fear of being shelled by the warships of the Powers; and whether a protest has been sent by the Cretan Christian troops to the Foreign admirals complaining of such action?

MR. DILLON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether a formal protest has been received by the Foreign admirals from the insurgents; and whether, in that protest, the insurgents state that they are afraid to reply to the Turkish fire for fear of being annihilated by the Christian guns, and that on Sunday the Turks were aggressors in firing.

*Mr. CURZON: We have not yet received a reply to inquiries that have been made on the first point. The second question is identical with No. 55 standing in the name of the hon. Member for East Mayo. We know nothing of any such protest.

Mr. FLYNN: I shall put the Question again To-morrow.

Mr. DILLON: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether on Sunday several shells were thrown into the gardens of the Convent of the Prophet Elias, and three women, of whom one was a nun, were wounded; and whether the Government can yet state how many were killed and wounded by the fire of the ships?

*Mr. CURZON: The only information we have on the first point is that the insurgents had taken up a position at Prophet Elias, and that the fire of the squadron obliged them to haul down their flag. We do not know how many were killed or wounded, the Greek Commodore having declined to allow medical officers from the fleet to make inquiry on the spot. No wounded, however, were seen.

Mr. DILLON: I wish to ask the right hon. Gentleman whether the admirals took any steps to inform themselves as to whether there were women in the convent before they opened fire, and what period of notice they gave before the guns opened fire? [Cheers.]

*Mr. CURZON: I do not think it is at all certain that the convent was fired on at all—[cheers]—and if I may judge of the accuracy of this statement by that of many others proceeding from the newspapers which I am called upon to comment on, I should say that it was, on the whole, probably inaccurate.

Mr. DILLON: I respectfully ask the right hon. Gentleman to make inquiries, as the statement is taken from the Correspondent of The Times at Canea. [Cheers.]

Dr. TANNER (Cork Co., Mid): May I ask whether it is not the fact that even if the medical officers were not absolutely consulted—

*Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order. If the hon. Member continues to interrupt the business of the House I shall be compelled to request him to leave the House for the remainder of the sitting. [Cheers.]

Dr. TANNER: Quite right. Certainly. I would sooner leave it than be in it.

Mr. CHANNING: What steps have the Government taken to ascertain the accuracy of a statement made by The Times Correspondent and other persons?

*Mr. CURZON: It is quite impossible for Her Majesty's Government to be telegraphing out every five minutes of the day to test the accuracy or the inaccuracy of the various statements emanating from foreign correspondents that appear in the newspapers of the United Kingdom. [Cheers.]

Mr. THOMAS BAYLEY: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the Government have had any official Report from the British Admiral in Cretan waters of what took place on Sunday last?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: All the information at the disposal of the Government from the Admiral has already been given to the House in answer to questions addressed to my right hon. Friend the Under Secretary. I have nothing to add.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENT.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: The Prime Minister, in another place, in answer to a Question, has made a statement on behalf of the Government in regard to the policy in Crete, and, although no Question has been addressed to me, I propose to make an identical statement to this House if they will permit me. We have recommended to our allies that the following policy should be adopted:—

> "(1) That the establishment of administrative autonomy in Crete is, in our judgment, a necessary condition to the termination of the international occupation; (2) that, subject to the above provision, Crete ought, in our judgment, to remain a portion of the Turkish Empire; (3) that Turkey and Greece ought to be informed by the Powers of the above resolution; and (4) that if either Turkey or Greece persistently refuse, when required, to withdraw their naval and military forces from the island, the Powers should impose their decision by force upon the State so refusing."

We have received no official information that these views are shared by all our allies; but we have every reason to believe that they are. [Cheers.]

*Sir WILLIAM HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.): I am sure that the House will feel the extreme gravity of the announcement made by the right hon. Gentleman, affecting, as it does, the relations of this country, not only at present, but in future, with all the Powers of Europe, with the Government of Turkey, and with the Government of Greece, especially in the last paragraph relating to the employment of force. The House ought to address itself to this question with due deliberation, and we ought to have time to consider the bearing of the statement made by Her Majesty's Government, and not enter upon it without consideration. At the same time I am sure that the Government will feel, and the House will feel, that we ought to have an opportunity of properly asking for further explanations with reference to the policy of Her Majesty's Government. [Cheers.] I am quite sure that that is a view in which Her Majesty's Government will concur, and therefore I hope that the right hon. Gentleman will intimate his willingness to enter into arrangements, which may be made according to the convenience of the House, for an early discussion of this matter, with a view to further explanations on behalf of Her Majesty's Government. I would venture to suggest that To-morrow may be a convenient day. [An hon. Member: "That is Friday."]

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: The appeal which has been made by the right hon. Gentleman must, of course, be considered favourably by Her Majesty's Government, having regard to the quarter from which the appeal comes. But I would remind the right hon. Gentleman that we have already had two adjournments on the subject of Crete; and that if this appeal is merely for the purpose of eliciting information and having a desultory discussion, strict limits of time ought to be placed on any Debate which may be raised. ["Hear, hear!"] Of course, if the right hon. Gentleman desires to move a Vote of Censure upon the Government, that is an entirely different matter, and I should not desire to burke any suggestion that might be necessary under such circumstances. I should be glad to consider with the right hon. Gentleman what course ought to be pursued, but I say at once that I do not think that To-morrow would be a convenient day for it, as it would interfere with the Friday Rule, and in addition to that I think that it would be specially inconvenient at present that the time for discussing the Supplementary Estimates, which are very pressing, should be unduly cut short. [Cheers.]

*Sir W. HARCOURT: Certainly it would not be consistent with the views I have presented that we should desire at present and be prepared to move a Vote of Censure upon Her Majesty's Government. What we are asking for is an explanation to the House and the country of the policy which the Government are pursuing, and which, I understand, the other Powers of Europe are pursuing. It is quite obvious that the discussion and explanation should take place at the earliest possible moment, and we do not require at this time anything beyond explanations from Her Majesty's Government. But I would still suggest to the right hon. Gentleman that, if there are to be these explanations on the part of the Government, it would be inconvenient to postpone them for several days—inconvenient to the Government, inconvenient to the country, and inconvenient with reference to the negotiations that are going on. After all, the Supplementary Estimates might be taken upon another day. The sooner this question is taken out of public rumour by authoritative statements on the part of the Government of a much fuller description than that we have to-night, the better it will be for all parties concerned. ["Hear, hear!"]

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I may say, in answer to the right hon. Gentleman, that I think we have done our best by so far departing from ordinary diplomatic traditions as to make this statement of our views before receiving full and formal assent of those views from our colleagues. I think that it would be a pity if the discussion should take place as early as to-morrow, before that assent has been received. We shall be in a far better position to discuss the matter at a later date. I, therefore, still adhere to the view that a later date would be better.

*Sir W. HARCOURT: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman whether he will say Monday? [Cries of "No."]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: That must, of course, depend upon the state of the negotiations, but I shall be glad to communicate with the right hon. Gentleman on the subject.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman what is meant by the expression "administrative autonomy"? Does he mean that the people of Crete are to have the power to make their laws, or are they to be subject to the control of the Turkish Government?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Well, Sir, there are plenty of instances of autonomy in the Turkish Empire already. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.]

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS BILL.

Order for Committee read.

The following Notices of Motion stood upon the Paper:—

MR. LAMBERT: To move—

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert Clauses in the Bill to provide that the schoolrooms in schools that receive an aid grant, on such occasions as do not interfere with the educational purposes of the schools, and under the condition of payment of all reasonable expenses by the conveners of the meeting should be at the disposal of the inhabitants of the district in which such school is situated for the purpose of holding public meetings."

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH: To move—

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert Clauses in the Bill to provide that in schools receiving aid grant no teacher shall be required to perform any extraneous duty, that is to say, any duty other than those of teaching in the school and instructing the pupil teachers therein."

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH: To move—

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert Clauses in the Bill to provide that in school districts where there is no Board School it shall not be required as a condition of any pupil teacher being appointed in a public elementary school in such districts that such pupil teacher shall be or not be a member of any particular religious denomination, or shall attend or abstain from attending any particular place of religious worship."

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE: To move—

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert Clauses in the Bill with a view to making provision for insuring adequate representation of local authorities or parents on the management of the schools in receipt of the aid grant."

MR. SYDNEY GEDGE: To move—

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to enable the managers of Voluntary Schools to contract with School Boards for the supply of the education required by the Education Code to such children and on such terms as to payment, inspection, representation or otherwise as may be agreed between them."

MR. CHANNING: To move—

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert Clauses in the Bill to create elective authorities in districts where there is no School Board, to prepare schemes from time to time for the apportionment of the aid grant, and to give power to School Boards to prepare such schemes for their districts."

MR. SPEAKER: There are several Instructions to the Committee on this Bill on the Order Paper. The first is in the name of the hon. Member for South Molton (Mr. Lambert). It introduces a subject that appears to me to be foreign to the subjects dealt with in the Bill, and on that ground it is out of order. The next Instruction stands in the name of the hon. Member for Anglesey (Mr. Ellis Griffith). That proposes to provide that as a condition for receiving the grant no teacher in a Voluntary School shall be required to perform any extraneous—i.e., non-educational—duty. Such a proposal would be in order as an Amendment to the Bill, and therefore it is out of order as an Instruction. The next Instruction which stands upon the Paper is also in the name of the hon. Member for Anglesey, and proposes to make provision for the absence of religious tests for pupil teachers in Voluntary Schools. That appears to me to enter upon matter which is foreign to the whole scope of the Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] The Bill is one for affording relief to Voluntary Schools. The term "Voluntary Schools" is substantially convertible with the term "denominational schools," and to give an Instruction to a Committee on a Bill for the relief of Voluntary Schools to undenominationalise them would be not only foreign to, but contrary to, the whole scope of the Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] The next Instruction stands in the name of the hon. Member for Carnarvon (Mr. Lloyd-George). He proposes that the Committee should have power to insert clauses in the Bill for making provision for insuring adequate representation of local authorities or parents on the management of schools in receipt of the aid grant. That appears to me to be in order as an Instruction. The Bill proposes that certain associations representative of the managers of the schools associated together should be the machinery for distributing the grant in aid, and the Instruction proposes to alter and amend the constitution of these managing bodies. As this is a very large proposal, which only bears indirectly on one of the subjects of the Bill, and as it raises a new principle not hitherto brought under the consideration of the House, it cannot be entertained without an Instruction. The next Instruction stands in the name of the hon. Member for Walsall (Mr. Gedge). It proposes to enable the managers of Voluntary Schools to contract with School Boards for the supply of the education required by the Education Code to such children and on such terms as to payment, inspection, representation or otherwise, as many be agreed between them. That does not relate, it appears to me, either to the relief of Voluntary Schools or to the distribution of the grant in aid. Whether it is a matter that requires legislation or not I do not know, but if it does require legislation it will have to be done by a separate Bill. The next Instruction stands in the name of the hon. Member for Northamptonshire (Mr. Channing). That Instruction in effect proposes to destroy altogether the existing form of management of Voluntary Schools, and to set up in its place elected authorities in districts where there is no School Board. It also proposes to give powers to the School Boards, with which this Bill is not concerned, to prepare schemes for their districts. Both branches appear to me to be outside of the scope of the Bill and out of order. Therefore the only Instruction which is in order is that of the hon. Member for Carnarvon.

Mr. LEONARD COURTNEY (Cornwall, Bodmin) asked as a point of order whether it would be competent without an Instruction to move an Amendment in Committee proposing to add some representative element to the existing managing body of a Voluntary School in order to make that school eligible to receive the grant.

*Mr. SPEAKER: Such an Amendment would require an Instruction, and the Instruction standing in the name of the hon. Member for Carnarvon covers the case.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs) moved:—

> "That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert Clauses in the Bill with a view to making provision for insuring adequate representation of local authorities or parents on the management of the schools in receipt of the aid grant."

He said his object in moving the Instruction was to enable the Committee to provide for some form of popular representation on the management of schools which received a grant in aid. The figures before the House showed that a large percentage of the income of Voluntary Schools was derived from public funds. He contended that upon the broad principle that representation should follow taxation, which was ingrained to such an extent in the British nation, a certain amount of public control in the management of these schools should be given. In the year 1870 the bulk of the financial support of these schools was derived from local sources, and under the Act of 1870 the principle was recognised that Voluntary Schools should find, at any rate, one half of their incomes locally. That was changed in 1876, when the 17s. 6d. limit was fixed. In 1891 there was a further change made by the addition of the 10s. grant, and now it was proposed to abolish the 17s. 6d. limit altogether, and to give an additional grant of 5s. from the Exchequer. So that, practically, it would be possible in future for a school to derive the whole of its income from public sources, without any provision whatever from public control. ["Hear, hear!"] How that worked in certain cases was best shown by illustrations. In the parish of Llandwrog in Carnarvonshire there were nothing but Voluntary Schools. The grants to the schools in that parish amounted in the aggregate to £264, and the subscriptions and endowments to £21; that was the amount of voluntary support was something like 1-14th of the total income of the schools. Four-fifths of the children who attended the schools were children of Nonconformist parents, and the schools being Church schools, their parents had no voice in their management, and no Nonconformist child had a chance of being promoted to the position of a pupil teacher. These children were compelled to attend the schools, and if the Nonconformist parents attempted to set up another school or to get a School Board, under which their children would get equal treatment, it would be open to the Education Department to say that the ground was already covered. He submitted that that state of things was exceedingly unfair. [" Hear, hear! "] He would go to another parish in the same county—Criccieth. There there was a School Board, and probably four-fifths of the population were Nonconformists. There was a Churchman on the Board, the headmaster was a Churchman, and one or two of the teachers were Churchmen also. Here was a case in which a School Board treated Churchmen in exactly the same way as it treated Nonconformists, and yet that parish was not to receive a penny of relief, though it would have to contribute to perpetuate the unfairness which it declined to imitate. [" Hear, hear! "] He would take another School Board district with Voluntary Schools side by side with the Board Schools. In Liverpool, two-thirds of the children attended Voluntary Schools and about one-third attended Board Schools. The grants to the Voluntary Schools amounted to £70,000, the fees to £11,000, and the subscriptions and endowments to £10,600. Thus the subscriptions amounted to something like one-ninth of the total income. [" Hear, hear! "] The parents contributed more than the subscribers, and yet they had no voice in the management of the schools. The subscribers who only contributed one-ninth of the income got the whole of the control, while the taxpayers and parents, who contributed eight-ninths got no voice in the control. [" Hear, hear! "] It might be said that one-third and two-thirds fairly represented the division of opinion in Liverpool, and that the Nonconformists had put their schools under the control of the School Board; but that was not so, for he believed that three-fourths of the members of the Liverpool School Board were denominationalists, so that the result was that all the schools in Liverpool were controlled by the denominationalists. He maintained that that was absolutely unfair. But he commended this Instruction to the House, on the ground of efficiency also. He contended that it would conduce to the increase of efficiency. There were Board Schools with popular control, and Voluntary Schools with no management at all, except that of the clergyman. [" No, no! "] He knew subscribers had nominally a voice in the management, but practically it was left entirely in the hands of the clergyman. [" Hear, hear! "] He would compare the work of the two systems. The grants earned by Board Schools were considerably larger, and that would be seen if the House would deduct from the average grant the amount which did not depend at all on merit. He found that the Board Schools earned 6s. 11½d. per head, and the Voluntary Schools 5s. 5¾d.; so that the Board Schools, who were subject to popular control were superior, so far as the grant earned was concerned. But he maintained that their education was more efficient. The managers of Board Schools were selected on the ground of some peculiar qualification, and if at the end of three years it was shown that they were not capable or competent the ratepayers of the district could dismiss them. That was not so in the case of the managers of Voluntary Schools. They were not selected on the ground of efficiency. They might be efficient or they might not. The fact that a man was a clergyman was not necessarily a qualification for managing a school. Clergymen were not, as a rule, very capable administrators; they were not men of the world, not men of affairs. Therefore, he thought that, as school managers, their ranks ought to be supplemented by men who were men of the world, who knew something about business, and who had an insight into human nature. If six or seven men were elected by the ratepayers on account of their peculiar qualifications for the position, they would collectively make good one another's deficiencies. As long as they continued to make the clergy practically the sole managers of the Voluntary Schools they would find that teachers were selected for other reasons than that of educational fitness. At present a teacher who was a good organist, or was likely to make a good lay preacher, stood a far better chance of appointment than one who was a much more capable educationist but who had not those other extraneous qualifications. It was natural that, when a clergyman had to select between two such men, he should choose the man who would serve the interests of the church best. The present system tempted him to do it, and it ought to be changed, for the most important element in the success of a school was the appointment of a good teacher. If a body of lay managers were appointed, even if they were Churchmen, they would, he believed, control the action of the clergy in respect of these appointments; and so teachers would be chosen for their educational competency, and not for other reasons. By increasing the circle of control they would also widen the circle of school subscribers. The greater the control given to the general public the greater would be the number of the subscribers, and the result of that would be greater educational efficiency. When it was argued that Board Schools were better schools than Voluntary Schools, hon. Members opposite always replied that more money was spent upon the former. That was true; and he maintained that any system which would bring in more money in subscriptions for Voluntary Schools must result in greater educational efficiency, and therefore was desirable from the point of view of the supporters of denominational schools themselves. One way, then, to achieve that result was by enabling local authorities to appoint representatives upon the managing bodies, for that would increase the general interest taken in the schools. But as a rule, the clergy tried to keep the whole management in their own hands. [Ministerial cries of "No!" and "Hear, hear!"] Then, why did they object to parental control? Either they objected to control from the outside or they did not; but if they did not, why should hon. Members opposite oppose this Instruction? What he and his Friends said was, that as long as the taxpayers of the country contributed five-sixths of the income of the Voluntary Schools they were certainly entitled to some share in the management of those schools. On these grounds he begged to move the Instruction standing in his name. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. COURTENAY WARNER (Staffordshire, Lichfield) seconded the Motion. He did not agree that complete control over Voluntary Schools ought to be given to an elected body, but he did hold that the people who paid for these schools ought to have some share in the management of them. There was no doubt that enormous advantages would accrue to these schools if there were one or two elected managers on their boards of management. The educational efficiency of the schools would be greater, and the subscriptions would probably increase, because there would be an extension of the interest taken in these institutions. He had taken considerable pains to ascertain the views of different denominations in his constituency on this subject, and he found that, although the Roman Catholics objected strongly, and naturally, to the exercise of complete control over their schools by elected bodies, objection was very seldom expressed by them to the presence of one elected member on a board. He should not himself object if the power of election were restricted to the parents of the children attending a school. He believed that the presence of even one elected manager would inspire confidence, and render a school ten times more popular than it was before. They often found distrust among the people of any institution over which there was no popular control. At present the accounts of most of the Voluntary Schools were not submitted to the people of the district, so as to enable them to make their voice heard respecting them. If the people were represented by even one elected manager it would give them confidence and a feeling of security that the money subscribed for a school was being properly spent. The school would become much more popular, and parents would be more inclined to send their children to it. By making this slight concession hon. Members opposite would not only reduce the opposition to this Bill, but would strengthen the position of the Church of England by increasing the popularity of Voluntary Schools. If the people gained greater confidence in these schools more Dissenters' children might be expected to go to them than went to them now.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): The hon. Member who moved this

Instruction based his Motion upon two grounds—first, on the abstract right to have representation wherever there was taxation, and, secondly, on the ground of expediency—at the same time endeavouring to show that the alteration of the kind he proposes would add to the efficiency of the Voluntary Schools. In so far as the hon. Member's first argument is concerned, I think he must himself feel that this much quoted maxim has very little application to the particular case to which he ventured to apply it. [Cheers.] Because the public Exchequer contributes money to the Voluntary Schools, what right do those who live in the same parish gain to obtain representation on the board of the Voluntary Schools? The two propositions have no congruity; they have no relevancy one to the other; and by no logical process can they be deduced one from the other. Parents in most cases contribute nothing to the Voluntary Schools. There are a certain number of cases in the north where fees are still paid voluntarily for the most part by the parents, but over the larger part of the country, as a matter of fact, education is free, and parents no more than the rest of the ratepayers of the district are called upon to contribute one farthing to the maintenance of the schools. My hon. Friend the Member for the Cambridge University, who spoke on the first night of the introduction of the Bill, put the whole argument in a nutshell when he reminded the House that the contribution from the rates was a good reason for giving ratepayers control, and that contribution from taxes was a good reason for giving the representatives of the taxpayers control, but that contribution from taxes gave no right to the ratepayers and contributions from the rates gave no right to the general taxpayers. That is the whole philosophy so far as the first branch of the hon. Member's argument is concerned. The hon. Member left in absolute vagueness the particular form of control which, if this Instruction were passed, he would desire to see. He expressed at intervals a personal preference towards ratepayers' control, but he interspersed with those expressions of personal predilection the statement that he and his Friends would be content with parental control. I do not think it would be possible to argue those two kinds of control on their merits and detail until we know which of the two kinds the hon. Member desires to see introduced. I shall not go into any general discussion on the question, but I may say that I am informed by those more intimately cognisant with the Education Acts than I can pretend to be, that while they never discourage parental control, their observation to its effects does not lead them to believe that any results of great magnitude to the benefit of the schools have accrued in any special cases where that system has been tried. I deal next with the second branch of the hon. Member's argument—that of efficiency. The hon. Member appeared to be of opinion that one immediate result of giving local control over the Voluntary Schools would be that voluntary subscriptions would largely increase. [Opposition cheers.] A more amazing conclusion from such premises surely was never advanced in the House of Commons. [Cheers.] Persons have been found to contribute the necessary funds for building a school and the funds for aiding in support of the school solely on the ground that the school belonged to the denomination of which they were members, and is it to be supposed that their liberality would be stimulated by handing the school over by hypothesis to certain Members of the Opposite Party? The hon. Member moves from one control to another as it suits the particular argument with which he deals; but let us take parental control. He gave us the instance of a parish within his personal knowledge, and said, "What a monstrous thing that the parents have no control over the schools." The hon. Member went on to explain that four-fifths of the parents were Nonconformists, and his desire is to hand over the control of the school to the management of parents, four-fifths of whom do not belong to the denomination which has built the school or to the denomination which supports it.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE: I expressly disclaimed that, I said that parents ought to have a voice in the management but could not claim the complete control.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I do not understand the hon. Member's view. He wants to establish such a constitution of the school, situated as the school described, that the parents shall always take one side, but always be outvoted. ["No, no!"] Are they to have control or not? [Cheers.] If they are not to have control, they are a kind of official Opposition who are never allowed to become a Government. [Laughter.] If, on the other hand, they belong to a minority which may become a majority, what amount of denominational control of the school are they to have? There is no answer to the dilemma in which the hon. Member is placed. If the hon. Member carried out his own principles to their logical conclusions and gave to the parents or the ratepayers complete control over the schools—["No, no!"]—the dominating control—["No!"]—then you do want them to be in a permanent minority? [Laughter.] I cannot conceive machinery less calculated either to promote the efficiency or increase the amount of subscriptions, or bring that harmony into parochial life which the hon. Member would desire to promote. The hon. Member contrasted the efficiency of the two systems, and, by a method of calculation which he did not fully explain, he made out that the Board Schools in the country earned what he called a merit grant—a phrase not known to the Education Code—of a substantial amount per head over the merit grant earned by Voluntary Schools. I do not know what is meant by "merit grant." The phrase was in the Code at one time, but it has disappeared. I am perfectly ready to admit that if you take the Board Schools all over the country and the Voluntary Schools all over the country you will probably find in the Board Schools a higher amount of grant earned than in the Voluntary Schools. It follows probably from two reasons. In the first place, in the country districts the Voluntary School system predominates, and in the towns as well as in the country the Board Schools have behind them the resources of the rates, and the Voluntary Schools have behind them no such resources. Is it not absurd to say that the comparative inefficiency of the Voluntary Schools is due to their management when its real cause stands in such plain characters that anyone can read it? [Cheers.] I do not know that it is necessary to discuss at any greater length the particular merits or demerits of the vague proposal before us. There is in truth an initial objection to the acceptance of this Instruction, the force of which the House will see. We have not brought forward this Bill, and have not pretended to do so, as one dealing with all the difficulties of our present educational system in England. We have not included all the subjects we think ought to be dealt with. We have deliberately, and from the beginning, said that this is not a complete but an incomplete instalment. [Cheers.] We have learned from experience, and in bringing forward this Bill we avowed it to be limited in scope and, because limited, therefore imperfect. Our limitation has been largely dwelt upon in the earlier stages of our Debates—namely, that it excludes poor Board Schools. That cannot be referred to now at any length; and I plainly say that if we are to assent to the scope of this Bill being widened I should prefer to enlarge it in order to include poor School Board districts rather than give "ample room and verge enough" to discuss any possible or probable schemes in the management of Voluntary Schools. I do not believe that the House could touch with advantage the management of Voluntary Schools without there being the very greatest danger of destroying their voluntary character altogether. [Cheers.] I observe that those who are most anxious to deal with the constitution of the Voluntary Schools are those who make no secret whatever of approximating the constitution as far as they can to Board Schools, squeezing them out of existence altogether. The avowed policy of hon. Members is not one which is pretended to benefit the Voluntary Schools. I beg the House not to assent to this Instruction, because I am convinced that the only path of safety which lies before us is to rigidly limit this Bill to the single subject with which it purports to deal. [Cheers.] For these reasons I hope the House will, without any undue delay, refuse to admit the proposed Instruction.

MR. A. H. DYKE ACLAND (York, W.R., Rotherham) could not help expressing great regret that the right hon. Gentleman should not have seen his way to accept this Instruction. The right hon. Gentleman complained that the proposal was vague, but it was not the business of the Opposition at that moment to produce minute schemes in detail. Their business was to convince the House of Commons that this subject, being one of deep interest to the great mass of country parishes and many populous districts, ought not to be shut out from being debated. Considering that they were going to discuss a Bill which grants £620,000 to the Voluntary Schools, he thought the Leader of the House might be generous enough to allow the matter to be discussed. The hon. Gentleman, speaking of the speech of the hon. Member for Carnarvon Boroughs, said that it was, from the local government point of view, an almost ridiculous proposal, but the right hon. Gentleman himself spoke as if he had a very imperfect knowledge of our country parishes, and the situation he predicted might almost be described as grotesque. Was it not known that even if a single person joined a body like the managers of Church schools he might be of great service, not only to the parents, not only to the inhabitants of the parish themselves, but to the clerical managers of the schools? ["Hear, hear!"] If the right hon. Gentleman would not take it from him, he might take it from letters of clergymen which appeared in The Times last year. In one of these letters a well-known clergyman suggested that > "Parish Council meetings should have power under the new Bill to appoint a representative on the committee of managers of every elementary school in their respective parishes," and said that this

> "would afford a real security against abuse and unfairness which, to say the least, are always possible, as things now are, in the relations of manager and teacher, teacher and parent, Churchman and Dissenter."

The other clergyman, speaking of Nonconformists, said,

> "Put one of those suspicious persons on the management and he will be able to tell his friends that his suspicions are all a myth," and he ended his letter by saying, "Churchmen are strong enough to be generous." ["Hear, hear!"] What said Lord Northbrook on this question? He was chairman of his County Council, he knew local life well, and surely what he said deserved attention. The noble Lord said that if additional State aid was given to Voluntary Schools,

> "it will be right that some representative element should be introduced into their committees of management. In country parishes the Parish Council or parish meeting might nominate, or the parents of the children might elect, a proportion of the committee."

Those were the very words of the Instruction. [Cheers.] Lord Cross's Commission—which included a principal member of the present Government, Cardinal Manning, the Duke of Norfolk, Lord Harrowby, Canon Gregory, and the junior Member for Oxford University—dealt with this question. First of all they spoke about the managers, and they observed—

> "There are a large number of schools in which the management practically falls into the hands of a single manager—most frequently the clergyman of the parish."

And again—

> "We would insist, however, upon the importance of Voluntary Schools being placed under a board of management."

[Cheers.] Would the right hon. Gentleman admit that into the Bill? Would he give them the opportunity of having a Board? And then what did Lord Cross's Commission say?—

> "So long as the parents are not a preponderating element, we should be glad to see them represented on the committee of management."

[Cheers.] That was what they asked for. Apparently the Government were not going to concede even the opportunity of discussing that now. ["Hear, hear!"] It was all very well to say "Hear, hear," but in many agricultural districts, as Conservative Members opposite knew, this was not a popular thing to do. [Cheers.] As to the distinction the First Lord of the Treasury made about rates and taxes, although the right hon. Gentleman might put the whole philosophy of the question in a sentence, he was not sure, after all, that was the main point at issue. But even if it were, what would the right hon. Gentleman say about the grants in aid of County Councils? Would those grants in aid from the taxes have been made—indeed, were many of them made—until they had set up representative bodies to whom they could intrust money? The House had already recognised the principle, and they were only asking the House to take one very humble step, which would injure nobody, in the same direction. He appealed to Scottish Members, who were so proud of their system, to take one single step with them in the direction of the Scottish system. The Government would boast, no doubt, later on of what they had done for the Wesleyan and British Voluntary Schools, but let them not suppose that the managers of those schools were with the Government in the action they proposed to take that night. They were all of them in favour of some genuine concession towards real representation upon the Voluntary Schools.

MR. VICARY GIBBS (Herts, St. Albans) asked on what grounds the right hon. Gentleman made his last statement?

MR. ACLAND replied that he would read an extract from a memorial by Lord Salisbury on the subject. Lord Salisbury said:—

> "There should be no increased grant of public funds, either from the local rates or from the Imperial taxes, to denominational schools unless that increased grant is accompanied by adequate and representative public management."

["Hear, hear!"] There was a large body of opinion in favour of the principle for which he was contending, including the Royal Commission appointed by the Conservative Government in 1885. He appealed to hon. Gentlemen on the other side, including the First Lord of the Treasury, who believed in the value of the Scottish system—in which the principle in question largely prevailed—to take one step forward with the view of developing a similar system in England. ["Hear, hear!"] They had already gone some way in this direction in connection with our local charities. On the management of many of those charities in rural districts the people were represented, and he ventured to say the effect of adopting the principle had been to the advantage of the charities and their administration, for public confidence in the management had been thereby secured. ["Hear, hear!"] Moreover, there was the case of the endowed schools. Forty years ago numbers of them were managed in the closest possible manner, by clerical managers, or purely self-nominated bodies. The Charity Commissioners, however, who could not be charged with being a Radical body, had decided, with regard to the great mass of endowed schools in town and country, to place representatives of the local authorities on the Boards of Management. ["Hear, hear!"] Yet, for some extraordinary reason, they were told by hon. Gentlemen opposite that they were to adopt a totally different principle when the education of the poor was concerned. ["Hear, hear!"] He hoped the majority of the House would not adopt the narrow view of the matter which had been taken by the First Lord of the Treasury; he hoped so in the interests of education, in the interest of a more peaceful and reasonable management of the Voluntary Schools, and in the interest of arriving at a settlement of this important question, which would not injure but strengthen the Church Schools. ["Hear, hear!"] The present Archbishop of Canterbury, who was a member, and perhaps the most prominent member of the Schools Inquiry Commission, in 1868 said—and he quoted the words because they lay at the very root of the matter—

> "The real force of the endowed schools must come from the people. Every arrangement which fostered the interest of the people in the schools, which taught the people to look to the schools as their own, and which encouraged them to take a share in the management, would do at least as much service as the wisest advice and the most skilful administration."

["Hear, hear!"] Those words were as applicable now to the Voluntary Schools as they were to the middle-class schools when spoken, and he contended that they would never succeed in making the Voluntary Schools in the country districts popular until local representatives of the people were admitted to the Boards of Management. ["Hear, hear!"] By adopting this course, and admitting the parents to a share of responsibility in the well-being of the schools, he repeated that the interests of education and the schools alike would be served and strengthened—["hear, hear"]—and from this point of view he still hoped that the House would assent to the Instruction which had been moved. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. CHARLES SEELY (Lincoln) opposed the Instruction on the ground that, as the ratepayers contributed no portion of the money that maintained the Voluntary Schools, they had no right to participate in their management. Then it was urged that the people of a locality were entitled to representation on the schools as taxpayers. Now, hon. Members who had any knowledge of the practical working of those schools would probably agree with him in thinking that in many cases the public control already possessed by the Education Department over the schools was greater than it should be in proportion to the amount of money the Department provided for the maintenance of the schools; and for his own part he thought it would be to the advantage of education if, in some respects, the control of the Department was diminished rather than increased. [" Hear, hear!"] Consequently there was public control from the point of view of the general taxpayer. [" Hear, hear!"] Then there was the contention for parental control. He objected here to the use of the word "control," and to the idea which underlaid it. The right hon. Gentleman who had spoken used the word "representation," for he saw the point of the objection to the word control. Well, if hon. Gentlemen opposite did not want control in this connection why did they put it in the Instruction?

[Several HON. MEMBERS: The word is not in the Instruction. [" Hear, hear!" and laughter.]

MR. SEELY looked at the Instruction, and said he begged hon. Members' pardon. The word, as had been stated, was not in the Instruction. He had been misled by the tone of the speech of the hon. Member who moved it. [Laughter.] But though he objected to the idea of control, he should be glad if some means could be devised by which parents in villages and rural districts where there were only Voluntary Schools could more easily obtain access to the managers of the schools—for instance, by which they could go before the managing committee and state any grievance they entertained. [" Hear, hear!"] After all, the means of simplifying the removal of grievances was not an unimportant consideration. [" Hear, hear!"] One of the greatest grievances in connection with this matter was the position of the Voluntary Schools and of the subscribers to them. There were Voluntary Schools in School Board districts, and there were Voluntary Schools in districts where there were no Board Schools. That in the School Board districts the subscribers to the Voluntary Schools had also to pay fully the School Board rates was a grave injustice. [" Hear, hear!"] Last year the Government, by means of the Agricultural Rating Bill, gave back to the ratepayers in agricultural districts where there were Board Schools half the school rates, and he thought it would be only fair that an equivalent grant should be made to the Voluntary Schools in districts where there were no Board Schools. [" Hear, hear!"] For those reasons he held that it was the duty of the Government to do what it could to remove the serious grievances under which the subscribers to Voluntary Schools laboured, especially as no one could have watched the Debates on the Bills both of last year and this year without perceiving a desire on the part of hon. Members opposite to hinder the passing of any Measure which might benefit the Voluntary Schools. much as he should like to see some attempt made to give the parents of the children a voice in the management of the school, but realising the great practical difficulty there was in carrying it out by a legal enactment, though it would be easy enough to carry it out voluntarily, he should vote against the Instruction. There was the added reason that hon. Gentlemen opposite would, if the proposal were adopted, use it as a means of accomplishing their avowed object, which was to assimilate the Voluntary system with the School Board system. He should be very glad if any simple way could be devised of carrying out some of the objects sought to be secured by the Instruction, but he thought the questions of immediately assisting the Voluntary Schools and of taking away the grievances under which they and their subscribers suffered were of greater and more pressing importance than the proposal now before the House. He hoped the mothers of England, who were the persons who felt the pinch most, would realise that the reason they had not got put into the Bill a provision giving them the right to put their grievances before the management, was the factious opposition of hon. Gentlemen opposite.

*MR. ALBERT SPICER (Monmouth Boroughs) said they must all sympathise with the hon. Gentleman who had just sat down. His heart seemed to be with them, but for Party reasons he did not feel able to vote with them. The First Lord of the Treasury seemed to think that he had disposed of the abstract justice of their contention by the assertion that national funds should be subject to national control, and that local funds should be subject to local control. But it seemed to him there was one great difference in the present Measure. If the

First Lord of the Treasury had brought in a Bill which provided that this extra grant to the Voluntary Schools should be at the disposal of the Education Department, which was subject to the control of Parliament, he would have been inclined to agree with the right hon. Gentleman, but he had not done that.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: The hon. Gentleman is quite mistaken. The control rests with the Education Department.

*MR. SPICER said that if these associations, on the importance of which the right hon. Gentleman laid so much stress, were likely to promote the efficiency of the schools, they had a very close connection with control, and if the ultimate settlement with regard to the terms of the associations was to be with the Education Department he maintained that the right hon. Gentleman had not been consistent with the principle he had supported. The right hon. Gentleman also said that it would not be likely to promote the efficiency of a school if a minority of Nonconformists were part of the managing body. He would remind the right hon. Gentleman that after all a minority might do a great deal to prevent injustice, in forming public opinion, and the opinion of their colleagues, and in bringing them to see that suggestions made by the minority, which were fair, might reasonably be accepted. As a Nonconformist he should be perfectly satisfied with many of the Voluntary Schools if only there was a minority; if, at any rate, the parents of the children attending them were allowed to elect a certain proportion of the Managing Committee, and if they could once get away from what none of them on either side of the House liked in the present system—the one-man management. He also put in a claim for the justice of this Instruction. There was one sentence in the Schools Inquiry Committee of 1868 to which he should like to refer. They remarked that they hoped for a good deal

> "from an intelligent interest of the people in the cause of education; there might be many failures and mistakes, but the end would be corrections and improvements."

The experience of the last 25 years in the cause of education had shown how much was done by popular control. A large number of new men and women had been brought into the public service, and the work they had done in the cause of education had been of enormous advantage to the country as a whole. A system that had had that effect justified in saying that, in the interests of the Voluntary Schools and in the interests of education itself, they could not do a better thing than, in connection with this Bill, to give some measure of representative and popular control to those schools. He did not think they could do a better thing for the nation than to see that the elementary education of the country was the very best they could give. Artificial systems might be all very well, but they did not get over the difficulty. If the future generation were sent into the world with a sound elementary education he ventured to think that England would be able to hold its own in competition with the nations of the world much better than by any artificial system they might be able to devise. They knew what other nations were doing in the matter. He was reading only the other day an observation by a leading Swiss manufacturer, who said,

> "We know in this feeble country nearly the whole of the people will start life burdened with poverty but we are determined that they shall not start life burdened with ignorance also."

Whether they looked at the matter in the interests of the Voluntary Schools themselves, or from the standpoint of education, he did not believe they could do a greater service than to give to the schools some measure of control. He hoped the day was not far distant when the Scotch system, which acknowledged denominational teaching, but gave popular control, would be the system in this country. [Cheers.] The right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury, in his closing speech on the Second Reading, referred to that subject, and all he would say as a Free Churchman was that he would heartily welcome that system. After all, Churchmen and Nonconformists had got to live together and to work together; they did not always want to be clawing at each other, and surely if they devoted themselves to the matter in a right spirit it ought not to be incapable of solution that they should find a system, which should be really helpful to the education of the country and the interests of the nation.

*Mr. ALFRED HOPKINSON (Wilts, Cricklade) said the Instruction was open to two very serious objections, and apparently to two only. In the first place, it might open the door to a large number of amendments, and possibly might imperil the passage of—not this Bill, for that was absolutely impossible—but the passage of another Bill which had been promised, and in which he, with many of his hon. Friends, took great interest—the Bill in regard to necessitous Board Schools. [" Hear, hear ! "] That was an objection of procedure mainly, and it could, of course, be met. If this Bill, which the Government had undertaken to pass in pursuance of election pledges, was obstructed, recourse could be had to the Closure to carry it through its several stages. But another objection arose on the use in the Instruction of the word " adequate." If that word was to have any meaning at all, it might mean that the management of Voluntary Schools was to be handed over to a majority of representatives of parents or local authorities, which, of course, would be unjust. This objection might be met by the omission of the word " adequate," and he suggested to the Government that with this objectionable word removed they might accept the Instruction. [" Hear, hear ! "] There was a strong feeling in the country that there ought to be associated with large grants of public money some element of popular representation in the administration. He was anxious that these schools should work well and successfully, with as little friction as possible, and an element of this kind on the management would, he believed, greatly assist that result. He knew a case—it was in what might be called an " obscure village," but it was a typical case. It was a Church School in a village where the majority of the people were Nonconformists. The school was admirably managed without any difficulty, and this was in a great measure due to the fact that the board of management associated with themselves voluntarily a certain number of Nonconformists. [" Hear, hear ! "] He knew another case where the Voluntary Schools worked admirably and there was no desire for a School Board because the clergyman associated with himself people fairly representative of other views than his own, and the management was harmoniously conducted. He objected altogether to the idea that a body of Nonconformists would necessarily be a permanent opposition, or that as a matter of practice on all questions the Churchmen would be found on one side and the Nonconformists on the other. It would be far more likely that, supposing there to be such a case as was said to have arisen at Willesden, where the managers dismissed a master because he did not go to a particular church, there a representative element would probably have been successful in enforcing a more reasonable view. He entirely objected to making this representative element the majority on the governing body ; that would not be fair, and, whatever system he might prefer, certainly he should insist on Voluntary Schools having fair treatment. Though supporting the Bill, as he did, he was in favour of the main principle of the Instruction, and wished very much, sharing the opinion that prevailed among large masses of people in the country, that the Bill recognised that principle. He could not, however, support the Motion while the word " adequate " remained in it, as it might mean to give absolute control to the representative element. Take that word out, and the principle of the Instruction might be the means of great practical benefit in the effective management of Voluntary Schools, and he should be disposed to vote for the Motion. He would be glad to see the Government treat this matter as one open for Parliamentary discussion and decision. Frequently Members found themselves in the position that where they were strongly in favour of a proposition, their action would be open to misconstruction if they voted against the Government. With perfect agreement with the Government in their general policy, he did on this subsidiary point wish very much that it were left open, or, better still, that the Government would accept the principle of the Instruction. [" Hear, hear ! "]

Mr. GEORGE LAMBERT (Devon, South Molton) said two speeches in favour of the present proposal had been made from the other side of the House by supporters of Voluntary Schools, and, while in one case the hon. Member was prepared to vote in acordance with his opinion, in the other he was not. The hon. Gentleman who said he was misled by the terms of the Instruction must have really been misled by the speech of his own Leader, for the First Lord of the Treasury had read into the proposal the word "control," which really formed no part of it. The Education Department, he said, had control over Voluntary Schools, but in discussion of the Bill of last year the Vice President of the Council said the overburdened Department could not exercise proper control over all the details of management. What right, said the Leader of the House, had the ratepayers to be represented on the management of a Voluntary School because the taxpayer contributed to the maintenance? but what right, he would ask, had the clergyman of a parish to exercise, as in many instances he did, sole and absolute control over the money supplied by the taxpayers. In what country in the world could it be shown that the clergy were the best educationalists? It was admitted that the clergy were not good men of business; would it not, then, be of the greatest advantage to a clergyman to have the assistance of a few business men in his parish? He represented a constituency in which were a very large number of Nonconformists, and they had no representation on the management of schools their taxes did so much to maintain in their midst. The Leader of the House seemed to think that if four-fifths of the population of a parish were Nonconformists, yet there was no grievance.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said he distinctly stated this was one of the inequalities of the existing system.

MR. LAMBERT said then why not bring in a Bill to remove the inequality. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not know how to take that cheer from the right hon. Gentleman. Let him follow the advice of his own supporters. In the constituency of South Molton Nonconformists were compelled to send their children to schools on the management of which they had not the least influence. It would increase the efficiency of Voluntary Schools to have this outside element introduced, he was certain it would in no way injure these schools, and as an educationalist he had no desire whatever to injure the schools. He supported the Instruction in the full belief that to adopt it would increase the efficiency of the schools and would remove that inequality which was admitted to exist. It would be for the benefit of Voluntary Schools that the principle of the Instruction should be embodied in the Bill. Nonconformists had a very great grievance in regard to the appointment of teachers. Over the doors of the Voluntary Schools of the country might be written the words, "No Nonconformist need apply here for the position of teacher." He claimed for Nonconformists the right to participate in the teaching work, and a share in the amount the State granted for teaching purposes. He could not but think that the Bill had less the interests of education in view than the interests of a proselytising church. If not this, why not accept the principle of proper representation on the management?

VISCOUNT CRANBORNE (Rochester) observed that, while he had a good deal of sympathy with what had been said as to the rights of parents, he should vote most heartily against this Instruction. He would submit to the House that a great deal of the discussion was beside the point. This was not a Bill for regulating the management of Voluntary Schools, but it was a Bill of a much smaller kind. The right hon. Member for Rotherham spoke of it as a great settlement. It was not a settlement at all, as everybody must know. It was a matter very much smaller than that, having nothing whatever to do with the management of the school, the whole object being to pay certain sums of money—[Opposition cheers]—which were to be administered under certain conditions which the representatives of the taxpayer, through the Education Minister, were to lay down, and that money was to be paid to the Voluntary Schools in order that the people of this country who believed in Voluntary Schools should not suffer for that belief. ["Hear, hear!"] It was clear that the local body, who under the control of the Education Department, would have most to say to the distribution of the money would be the associations, and if that was the case surely any representation there should be should be on the boards of association, who would have the management of the money, and not on the management of the schools. Was it seriously proposed that parents should be represented on the boards of associations. It would be perfectly impossible to arrange clauses by which parents themselves should be represented on the associations. He next came to the ratepayer, and he must say that of all the absurd proposals, the one that they should have a representation of the ratepayers without a contribution from them was the most absurd. ["Hear, hear!"] His hon. Friend who had recently spoken from that side of the House had said the Bill was quite certain to pass, but he ventured to say if a proposal was made that there should be direct control by the ratepayer without contribution from the ratepayer the Measure would not pass. ["Hear, hear!"] Under certain conditions he would accept the ratepayers' representation on these associations. Give the Voluntary Schools the share of the rates they were entitled to in all justice and they would willingly accept representation on the boards of the associations. ["Hear!"] But this was only an interim Bill; and dealing with an interim Bill, and waiting for the ultimate settlement which they knew must come, they should resist with all their power the idea of representation of ratepayers upon the associations when there was no contributions from the ratepayers. ["Hear, hear!"] Let them have representation with taxation but not representation without taxation. If the House once passed this Instruction, a tremendous field for controversy would be opened up. He hoped for that reason, because of the enormous complications which it would involve in the conduct of the Bill, and because it was a Bill, not for the management of schools, but for the distribution of money in the case of Voluntary Schools which required it, that the House would, by a large majority, refuse to accept the Instruction. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. LAWSON WALTON (Leeds, S.) observed that the noble Lord had given three reasons for voting against these Instructions. Those three reasons struck any friend of the public voice in the control of the public education of the country as somewhat strange, both in principle and in the mode in which the noble Lord had conveyed them to the House. His first remark was, that the Bill provided for an increased grant towards the popular education of the country, which was conducted through the machinery of the Voluntary Schools. It was not a Bill, said the noble Lord, for effecting further and better arrangements for the management of these schools. The ground of the objection of the Opposition to the Bill in its present form was, that it was a provision for increasing financial support without provision for further more effective popular representation. The argument which would induce the noble Lord to vote against the Instruction was an argument which would induce Members on the Opposition side to most strongly support it. The second reason the noble Lord had given was, that the money was not to be paid to the schools. It was to find its way to these associations, but the beneficiaries were to receive this money in such driblets as the voluntary associations might choose to dispense funds which passed through their hands. Surely if the money was to be applied to the schools the necessities of the school were to be considered in the application of the funds. The noble Lord's third argument was, that he wished to retain the right of concession of popular control as the terms of a bargain which he offered. He acknowledged the justice of the concession; he acknowledged that some measure of controlling the government of a school established for popular interests and maintained by popular funds ought to be made.

VISCOUNT CRANBORNE: No; I said nothing of the kind.

MR. WALTON: He said, "We will concede that when you give us direct access to the rates, and do not leave us to Imperial grants for educational purposes." There were two arguments in favour of this proposal which had not yet been met. How did this proposal stand as regarded principle? Could there be, on any ground of principle, an objection to the principle that, in the case of a school—although voluntary in its origin and in its feature of primary control—which was popular in its character and operation, which was the only school in the district, and maintained largely by public funds, they should ensure for public opinion some representation in the control of that institution? The answer given them was, that the institution had connected itself with the Church of England as a denominational body. But the noble Lord would be the first to insist that the Church of England, though denominational in its character, was a national institution; that its members were members of that institution because they were citizens of this country, and that every inhabitant of these villages, by the theory of the law and constitution, was a member of the church which had established that school for the purpose of popular education, and had, by virtue of that constructive membership, in relation to his citizenship some title to a voice in the management of that institution. Therefore, on principle, he asked the House to say there was every reason why an institution, national in its character and popular in its operations, should have some provision for popular representation in regard to its control. On the ground of expediency, what answer was there to the argument used by his hon. and learned Friend the Member for Dorset? In the interest of expediency, surely the friends of Voluntary Schools should consult public opinion in regard to their management. He knew of no mode by which the suspicion of clerical influence could be more effectively disarmed, or the beneficial influence of the schools could be better secured, that by insuring some measure of popular representation in their management, which would enlist the enthusiasm of the people in whose districts they existed and excite their interest and render the operations of the schools in the future more beneficent in the interests of education and to the advantage of the districts in which they were established. Until they heard some objection to the Instruction on the ground of principle or expediency, they on that side of the House would feel that they were right—notwithstanding the danger to which it was said the passing of the Measure, about which they were not enthusiastic, might be exposed—in supporting the Instruction and asking the House to accept it. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR ALBERT ROLLIT (Islington, S.) said, as a strong supporter of the Bill on grounds both of private faith and educational economy, he desired to say a few words, not controversially, and least of all of theological controversy, but from the standpoint of education and in the real interests of the Voluntary Schools. The principle of the Instruction seemed to commend itself to almost all parts of the House, and the objections raised related chiefly to questions of procedure and to verbal modifications. In supporting the Instruction he gave utterance to what he believed to be the feeling of the majority of his constituents—lay and clerical. He felt it his duty to support the principle of the Instruction last Session, and on the previous stage of the Bill, and he could not help reminding hon. Friends who objected to the Instruction that the underlying principles of the Bill of last Session, whatever else might be said of it, were of a distinctly representative character. The local authorities were made educational authorities, and, though there was to be the supervision of a central authority, the Bill was of a distinctly local representative character. The corollary of increased grants was security for good and efficient management, and this would be secured by some representation of the parents. The guidance of experience justified the adoption of the Instruction. There were many schools already in which there was representation of parents. There were many Churchmen, including dignitaries of the Church, who strongly advocated the cause of representation, and he believed that, among the most efficient schools were those in which the representative principle was brought to bear in keeping them in line with the general course of education, and modifying and keeping in check extremes which might injure denominational education. He believed that the proposal contained in the Instruction would be in the interests of education and Voluntary Schools. One great difficulty in elementary education at the present time was the want of interest of parents in the teaching and instruction of their children. He believed, judging from opportunities of observation he had had at prize-givings and the like, that the more parents were brought into direct touch with the education of the children the more would the efficiency of that education be increased, and the educational progress of the school would be greater if it were aided by sympathy in the home. He believed that the proposal contained in the Instruction would even be an advantage to each denomination. One of the desires of many denominations was to attach new members to themselves; and interest in the schools of the denomination, by attracting parents, would attach them in many cases to the denominations themselves. So, from a religious aspect, he thought the proposal would prove beneficial. What was the chief objection urged by his hon. Friend the Member for Rochester and others to the practical representation of parents? It was that this was a grant in aid from a central authority, and that the assistance was not to come from the rates. But the Bill proposed to exempt Voluntary Schools from rates. This deficiency in the rates would have to be made up by the ratepayers, who therefore would have some claim to representation. Although the amount of the deficiency in the rates might be comparatively small, it was not correct therefore to say there would be no contribution whatever from the ratepayers. Though made in the form he had indicated, the contribution carried with it some claim for representation, and as the local authority would lose by the exemption, that body had also some similar claim, and grants in aid to local authorities, though made by the State, had to be administered by the representatives of the ratepayers. He had risen to express what he believed were the views of his constituency, and certainly of the great majority of laymen there. The clergy of the Rural Deanery of Islington, at a meeting at which the subject was discussed, had also, he was informed, by a majority passed a resolution that some representation of parents was desirable in the interests of education and the Voluntary Schools. He advocated what he believed to be right in principle. Representation of parents and parishioners would keep the schools in line with the growth of education and public opinion, and enable them to carry on their work in stimulating competition with the Board Schools. He believed in the maintenance of both Board and Voluntary Schools, the maintenance of the latter of which would prevent a possible reaction against all education owing to its great cost, in which respect the Bill would help London much less than Lancashire, which he regarded as most unjust; and because he did not think the Instruction aimed adversely at Voluntary Schools, but would carry out a right principle with advantage to those schools, he should give it his hearty support.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield) said that the Member who had just spoken had displayed the liberality and independence which usually characterised his speeches, but he had made one slight mistake. He had said that there seemed to be general acquiescence in the principle involved in the Instruction, but there had been a signal exception in the speech of the Leader of the House, who had distinctly denied the right asserted by the Instruction. There had been a great contrast between the speeches of the hon. Members for Cricklade and Lincoln. Both expressed sympathy with the object of the Instruction, but the latter had a greater desire to befriend the subscribers, who could take care of themselves, than the parents, who were poor and feeble. The Leader of the House had given them, what he called, the whole philosophy of the matter, but, if so, it was but a narrow and superficial philosophy. The Instruction was based on the broad principle of expediency. This was not, as had been stated, a mere question of £ s. d., for it was one of those cases in which it could not be said that "money answereth all things." Something more was wanted to insure efficient popular education—viz., popular interest. They needed the assistance of parents, who did not at present realise their responsibility in regard to the education of their children. It had been contended that the control of the Education Department was sufficient, but the Department was too far off; it had too little local knowledge and had no popular sympathy. They heard last Session much of the rights of parents in regard to religious teaching; but the champions of those rights were now silent. If they had local representation less would be heard of the pranks of clerics in Voluntary Schools—men like the Vicar of Willesden, for instance. At present, when such clergymen were complained of in that House, they were told that the Department had no authority, and minded its own business; but, with a local representative body, there would be some one whose business it was to prevent such improprieties. If the schools were really the schools of the people, they could correct whatever might be amiss in them; while, if the schools prospered, they would have a legitimate pride in their success. He was sorry that a large number of the parents of children in elementary schools were lacking in a sense of responsibility, and he held that the parents of the children could do far more than they had yet done to assist the school managers and the School Boards to give efficient education. If the people of a locality could be made to feel that the schools were not the parson's schools but their schools, then, when anything went amiss, they would feel themselves responsible and seek to apply the remedy, while if the schools were efficient and prosperous they would feel that they had a share in the credit.

Mr. D. F. GODDARD (Ipswich) said the question was not so much to whom was this money to be paid, but whose money was it that was going to be paid. As the money would come from the taxes of the people, the people had a right to some representation on these schools. The principle of representative management was, in a sense, in the Bill, but it was there in its most objectionable form. These associations of schools were to be the means of distributing the money, and would have some kind of control over its distribution, but they could not in any sense, constitutionally or popularly, be called representative associations. The Bill set up an authority as representative which was only a sectarian authority, and they strongly objected to that as a retrograde step. The Act of 1870 recognised elementary schools of all sorts, but this Bill recognised denominational bodies as representative, and committed large sums of money to them. These bodies would become, in a sense, competitive with the elected School Boards, and so would put the School Boards to a disadvantage. So far as they could gather, the only kind of representation in the Bill was that these schools were to be subject to the approval or disapproval of the Department; but the Board Schools had to satisfy the public as well. The Bill was an anti-School Board Bill, it would injure the School Board system, and displayed an anti-local control spirit. The Estimates which came to hand that morning proposed to increase the 165 schools which received a special grant under the Act of 1870 to 400, and the grant was to be raised from £26,400 to £41,600. Was this the relief which was to balance the £620,000? [Cries of "Order!"]

*Mr. SPEAKER said the question before the House was whether adequate representation should be given, and these figures did not refer to that question.

Mr. GODDARD asked why they should not make a just and fair attempt to consult the wishes of all the parents. That could only be done by electing representatives of the parents. These schools were supported and kept in existence by public assistance. They recognised the principle of representation in endowed schools, although in that case there was not nearly so much justification for it as in the case of the elementary schools. The people were taxed for these purposes, and where there was taxation there should be representation. He would like to make one quotation from a speech of Dr. Temple's on the Report of the Royal Commission of 1888. He said:—

> "There is no security for efficiency without interested local supervision—['hear, hear']—there is no security for economy without the vigilance of those who bear the substantial burden of the cost."

That was all that they asked for.

*Mr. ERNEST GRAY (West Ham, N.) said he had very much sympathy with the Instruction before the House, and could not bring himself, knowing what he did of the Voluntary Schools of the country, to vote against it. Without any doubt many of our Voluntary Schools were as ably managed as the very best Board Schools in the country, and those were the schools where the management was of a wide and democratic character. [Opposition cheers.] Whether under trust deeds or in violation of them the managers had associated with themselves representatives of all classes of the community. Those were the schools which were upholding the credit of the Voluntary system. There were others, unhappily, where the management was very restricted in character, and others where the management was not only restricted but bad. No true friend of the Voluntary system would deny the existence of these blots on the system, or evade the opportunity of improving the bad schools. He looked upon this proposal as something more than a mere grant of money to the schools, and the setting up of a machinery to distribute that grant; he regarded it as an attempt to secure the efficiency of the Voluntary Schools—["hear, hear!"]—and he was convinced that nothing would more quickly secure the efficiency of the schools than their adequate management. No reference had been made to the fact that in many districts the single manager of the Voluntary School would gladly associate with himself others in the district. It must not be imagined that the restricted management was due to the action of the vicar or the local rector; it was in many cases in spite of the efforts made by the vicar. The fact was that those in the district, who knew that the burden of debt hung around the Voluntary School, would not associate themselves with the work of the school lest a part of the liability for the debt should rest upon them. This Bill would do something to remove that difficulty, and make it possible in such districts for persons to associate themselves with the managers as provided by the trust deeds. But there were schools in other districts—and he regretted to have to say it—of which the manager under the trust deed was but one person. There were cases in which the trust deed distinctly laid down that the local vicar was the sole manager of the school, and in which the vicar would not take any step to associate others with himself in the management of the school. [Opposition cheers.] What was happening in many parts of the country? What had happened recently? A liberal-minded vicar, a man desirous of doing the best for his school and for the children under his care, in spite of the trust deed, associated with himself many of the parents and other ratepayers in the district in the conduct of the school; but a new man had come into the district, he had sheltered himself behind the trust deed, turned his co-managers adrift, and insisted upon managing the school according to his own sweet will. [Opposition cheers.] He regretted that, while the Government were making efforts in this Bill to secure the efficiency of the Voluntary Schools, they would not take one of the very first steps essential to that efficiency—[Opposition cheers]—and make some provision for bringing up the bad Voluntary Schools to the level of the best Voluntary Schools. He admitted the difficulty in the way of incorporating clauses in the Bill by which this could be carried out. He was not sure that the terms of the Instruction were as satisfactory as personally he would wish. The object of the Instruction might be a good one, but there was more than a suspicion that the Instruction amounted to an attempt to establish a system of control over the Voluntary Schools that he, for one, was not desirous of bringing about. [Ministerial cheers.] He would not support any Amendment which would destroy the denominational character of the Voluntary Schools. ["Hear, hear!"] He was intensely desirous, in the best interests of the Voluntary Schools themselves, that the management should be as wide as possible; yet he held that the final control should rest in accord with the terms of the founder of the institution. The Instruction might be innocent enough if that was the object it sought to carry out, and the avoidance of such a word as "adequate" would have removed misconception. Unfortunately, it was not now possible to amend the Instruction, but he would suggest a method by which it seemed to him they might escape from the difficulties presented by the Instruction, and also give effect to what he believed to be the view of hon. Members on both sides of the House—namely, that the management of these schools should be made such that it would withstand all public criticism. ["Hear, hear!"] There was an Amendment on the Paper in the name of the hon. Member for the Barnstaple Division (Sir Cameron Gull), by which it was suggested that the Education Department should have, amongst other things set forth in the Bill, the power of insisting on the management being in accord with the requirements of the Education Department. It would not be possible to proceed hurriedly with Departmental schemes for bringing the management into line, but it would be possible to give the Education Department power to withhold these new grants in all cases where the management was unsatisfactory. That would in itself tempt the managers of the schools whose trust deeds provided for the management by one man, to bring up their trust deeds to the Charity Commissioners and obtain a provision for management by half-a-dozen or more persons—to popularise the management of the schools, and thus give effect to the wishes of all sections of the community, Nonconformists and Churchmen alike. That could be accomplished by amendments in Committee, and he should say that, if a representative of the Government could give them an assurance that in Committee some effort of that sort would be made, it would be an advantage rather than a disadvantage to withdraw the Instruction. To go on with the Instruction would have this result—many men, desirous of avoiding any suspicion of opposing the Bill, would vote against the Instruction. He would not risk that course, because he believed that the Instruction could be defended, if not in actual phraseology, certainly in the object it sought to achieve. [Opposition cheers.] He could not bring himself to vote against it, but he believed many would, and the result would be a decision recorded by this House against the principle embodied in this Instruction, and to have such a decision recorded would be fatal to the future efforts in this direction. [Cheers.] That was his opinion. It was not a question of what could be accomplished or what could not be accomplished under the Bill. He was not contending that the scope of the Bill should be widened indefinitely, but he asserted that the question of management was part and parcel of the Bill as it stood. ["Hear, hear!"] The Bill was to make for the efficiency of the schools, and without some reform in the management of the worst of the Voluntary Schools that efficiency could not be secured, no matter what they did either by increased grant or increased powers of the Education Department. He felt very strongly indeed that the position of the Voluntary Schools was not such as was frequently represented by those who sympathised with the Board system alone, and who detested the Voluntary system; it was not as bad as they would make it out. But it was not as good as many on the Government side of the House would have them to believe, largely because they had a strong dislike for the Board School system. There were good Voluntary Schools and bad Voluntary Schools, and he stood there as one who was intensely desirous of maintaining the Voluntary Schools as an integral part of the national system of education in this country. He felt, however, that that could not be brought about unless the bad schools were brought up to the level of the very best. Improvement in the management would accomplish that, and he therefore hoped the principle, if not the phraseology, of the Instruction would be accepted by the House. [Cheers.]

*Mr. J. W. LOGAN (Leicestershire, Harborough) supported most heartily the Instruction before the House, and did so because, although he was quite prepared to grant, under proper conditions, as much money for the purpose of education as any Government would propose to grant, he was strongly opposed to the granting of a single penny unless the local authorties or the parents had some voice in the control of the expenditure of the money. The noble Lord the Member for Rochester was under the impression that the adoption of the Instruction would delay the passing of the Bill. Personally he thought that the acceptance of the Instruction, even in a modified form, would do more to facilitate the passing of the Bill than anything else the Government could do. It was little less than monstrous that the taxpayers of the country, who found five-sixths of the money for the so-called Voluntary Schools, should not have any voice in the management of those schools, while those who found the one-fifth of the money should have the entire management and control of the schools. But he, as the representative of a large number of working men, did not look upon this question merely from the pounds, shillings and pence point of view. If by the operation of this Bill the Government deprived the working classes of the opportunity of securing the very best education for their children, they did the children a grievous harm and did an irreparable injury to the entire community. He claimed, not only in the interests of the parents and children, but of the nation, the undoubted right of every parent to have a voice in the selection of the education which was to be imparted to his children. The question of parental control was peculiarly a poor man's question, because the well-to-do people could send their children to what school they chose. It was a disgrace to us as a nation that there were to-day 8,000 villages in England in which there was only one school, and that a school dominated, in most cases, by one man, the Church parson, and that to that school the Nonconformist parent was compelled to send his child whether he liked it or not. Working men were beginning to realise what education meant. They were beginning to realise that without education their children must grow up hewers of wood and drawers of water, and, recognising the hard struggle they themselves had had, they were anxious to better the lot of their children if they could. During the last 20 years he had had a splendid object-lesson as to the absolute necessity of some control over the Voluntary Schools. In the little village in which he lived there was a Voluntary School, a school which was endowed by some pious man in the past. The endowment, he doubtless thought, would be of benefit to the community, but, instead of that, what had been the result? He knew of more than one boy who to-day was at the tail of the plough earning a miserable pittance, simply and solely because the school at which he was educated was dominated, and managed and controlled by a self-elected body. Whereas had that school been in years gone by what it was now—owing to a change made during the lifetime of the late Liberal Government—those boys would have been able, thanks to a better education, to earn a decent living. He appealed for popular control over those schools because he knew there was a strong feeling amongst the clerical managers that any kind of education would do for the poor man's child. He would quote the Colonial Secretary in support of that view. He quoted the right hon. Gentleman, not for any Party purpose, but because he expressed that view much better than it could be done by 999 out of every 1,000. The right hon. Gentleman said:—

> "The idea gains currency that a cheap education is good enough for the poor man's child, and that anything better must be reserved for his superiors. To such a cruel and insolent doctrine I object. I do not admit that education ought to be watered down and reduced and limited to the level of the poor. It is, believe me, the interest of the nation, as well as the interest of the parents and of the children, that each child, according to its natural gifts and aptitudes, should have the opportunities of the best cultivation, and that all should be stimulated and encouraged to develop the faculties with which God has gifted them, to their highest extent."

It was because he wished to see developed the natural gifts and aptitudes with which God had gifted so many of our children that he desired to see the parents of the children having some control over the schools. He could call the Vice President of the Council as a witness that that control was necessary. The right hon. Gentleman said:—

> "The labourer's children are turned out of school to scare crows at 11 years old, and often by the connivance of the School Attendance Committee officers, who are under the thumb of the farmers, at a much earlier age."

It was because he knew that the parents did not wish to have their children turned out to scare crows at 11 years of age that he wished to give the parents this control over the schools. And who refused the parents this control? It was the Church of England, which claimed to be the Church of the people, and which declared that love for it was deep-rooted in the hearts of the English people. Then, if the Church believed that love for it was deep-rooted in the hearts of the people, why did it refuse to the people this voice in the control of education? For his view, that those who found the money should have some control over the expenditure, he had the Colonial Secretary on his side, for the right hon. Gentleman said, a few years ago:—

> "The existence of sectarian schools supported by State grants, is no doubt a very serious question in itself, and one which some day or other ought to receive consideration. Whenever the time comes for its discussion I for one shall not hesitate to express my opinion that contributions of Government money, whether great or small, ought in all cases to be accompanied by some form of representative control. To my mind the spectacle of a so-called National School turned into a private preserve by clerical managers and used for exclusive purposes of politics or religion, is one which the law ought not to tolerate."

He supported the Resolution, not in the interest of any Party or in the interest of any sect, but for the sake of the children and even for the sake of the English nation as a whole, for he believed that, unless the people were provided with a thorough and practical system of primary education, many hon. Members of the House would live to see the commercial supremacy of England shaken.

On the return of Mr. SPEAKER, after the usual interval,

COLONEL MILWARD (Warwick, Stratford-on-Avon) said that he did not like to give a silent vote on this Instruction, because, on the Second Reading of the Bill, he spoke very strongly in favour of a Measure of representative management. But he could not resist the arguments of the First Lord in opposition to this Instruction. The right hon. Gentleman pointed out that the present Bill was not a final Measure; and it was evident that the Bill dealt with but a few of the educational questions which required attention. He hoped that the question of representative management would soon be brought up, but if it were introduced into the present Bill it would occupy the attention of the House for a least a week. [Opposition cries of "No!"] At present there were 40 pages of Amendments to a Bill which of itself only occupied two pages. [Cheers.] He remembered that last year, when a similar Bill was before that House, an Amendment that had been brought forward was strongly resisted by the Government on the ground that if they were to accept it they would be compelled to accept an enormous number of consequential amendments. The same objection applied to this Instruction. Therefore, although he approved of the principle of the Instruction, he intended to loyally follow his leaders. They had a long series of discussions before them, which would probably take some weeks to get through, and which would no doubt try their patience and even their tempers, and unless they loyally supported the Government it was impossible to say when they would reach the end of their labours. For his own part, he believed that the question of the representative management of these schools was ripe for decision, and in a vast number of the schools representative management had been carried out with great success. The trustee managers of the schools thought too lightly of their office, and generally looked to the clergyman of the parish for guidance. He thought that hon. Members opposite attached too much importance to parental management. He attached importance to the representative management of persons who were not necessarily connected with the Church. He believed that this question of representative management would come to the front before very long. The question before them, however, was what would happen to this Bill if this Instruction were carried? Why, it would wreck it beyond all doubt. ["Hear, hear!" and ironical cheers and laughter.] He was aware that there were many hon. Gentlemen opposite who wished well to the Voluntary Schools, but there were others who, on the contrary, were bitterly opposed to its principle, and who supported this particular Instruction with the object of defeating the Measure. What would the Government do if this Instruction were carried? Why, they would either withdraw the Bill or they would resign. ["Hear, hear!" and Opposition cries of "Oh!" and laughter.] That was the natural inference from what had fallen from the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury. For his own part he might say that he intended to vote against the Instruction, because he was not willing to risk the loss of the Bill. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. J. M. PAULTON (Durham, Bishop Auckland) said that the remarks of the hon. and gallant Gentleman who had just sat down would tend to show that hon. Members on the Government side of the House were not in the least afraid of popular representation in the management of these schools.

COLONEL MILWARD: We are not.

MR. PAULTON said that the mode in which the hon. and gallant Gentleman intended to show his approval of popular representation was by voting against this Instruction. The noble Lord opposite had said, "Do not let us have representation without taxation," but that was the standpoint of the Liberal Party also. They were to have taxation under this Bill, but they were not to have representation on the management of the schools. Hon. Members opposite alleged as their reason for voting against this Instruction, that, were they to accept it they would open the door for so much discussion that it would be impossible to pass the Bill through the House within the limits of an ordinary Session. What a confession of weakness on the part of the Government supporters that was. It was not from the Opposition side of the House that this issue had been raised. The Members of the Opposition were willing to leave things as they were or to accept equal treatment for the Board Schools. Although they had always contended that some form of popular representation on the management of the Voluntary Schools would largely add to their efficiency, and to conciliatory action which they desired to see adopted, especially in rural districts, they would not have raised the point had matters been allowed to remain as they were. The Government, however, had chosen to set up one class of schools against the other. The First Lord of the Treasury and the noble Lord had contended that, inasmuch as under the present system of free education the parents contributed nothing to the grant in aid, they had no right to representation on the management of these schools. But how about the case of schools in which fees were paid by the parents? Could it be said that in such a case the parents were not interested in the management of the schools? In his own constituency, as against 720 children attending free schools, 1,231 attended schools in which fees were paid. Surely, in that case, it could not be said that the parents did not contribute to the cost of education. He contended that under the provisions of this Bill parents would contribute to this grant as taxpayers. When the noble Lord said that ratepayers would not contribute to this grant he forgot that ratepayers were also taxpayers, and that, therefore, they ought to have a voice in the management of the schools. Whether it were the local authority or the parents who received a measure of control in this matter, he cared very little, though he would prefer that it should be the local authority, because, as had been pointed out by his hon. Friend, the Member for Rotherham, parental representation would probably involve an additional election. In an Amendment which he had put down on the Paper, and which he would not have the opportunity of moving if this Instruction was defeated, he proposed that two representatives should be appointed by the Parish Council to represent the popular element upon the management of Voluntary Schools. There was no desire in this Instruction or in any Amendment that might be put down in consequence of it, to kill the principle of denominationalism. [" Hear, hear! "] His reason for advocating such a plan as this was that, as a rule, in most districts, there was a fanatical clergyman who was determined to carry through his will in opposition to the opinions of his other parishioners; and the smallest measure of the popular element that was introduced would do a great deal to remove friction of that sort. [" Hear, hear! "] Beyond that, however, there was the broad principle for which they contended, and they held that it was a confession of weakness on the part of the Government that they would not admit that this was a subject they could afford to discuss in this Bill. [" Hear, hear! "] Whatever was the result on this Instruction, the discussion would do an enormous amount of good, for it would show the country that the Government was not willing to subject their proposals to the light of discussion in the House. [" Hear, hear! "] That remark was cheered from the other side of the House. It was a proof of what he said, for hon. Gentlemen opposite knew that discussion killed the Bill of last year. [" Hear, hear! "] For the reasons he had stated he should support the Instruction.

Mr. G. C. T. BARTLEY (Islington, N.) thought that nobody would accuse him of not being heartily in sympathy with denominational schools, as he preferred to call them. He should strongly oppose anything that would tend to the control of these schools by any representative body, for he felt that if they were subjected to the control of an elective body, the object of their existence might be rendered impossible by the introduction into the management of a majority not in sympathy with it. He for one was in no way afraid of some sort of representation in the management of those schools. [" Hear, hear! "] There was no doubt that the management of any body by one despot was a source of danger to the institution he managed. [Opposition cheers.] If the clergyman of a district was a good all-round man, whatever representation in reason was put in the management of the schools, he would still practically rule. If, on the other hand, he was not a wise man, many of his mistakes would be avoided. [" Hear, hear! "] He believed, therefore, that it would really be for the benefit of denominational schools if a limited representation were put on the management. [" Hear, hear!"] He could not see any danger in it. To his mind, the larger the interest taken in the schools in any district the more likely those schools were to be well managed, and for the Church of England to say it was afraid of having representative managers seemed to him a confession of weakness. [Opposition cheers.] The greatest benefit sometimes accrued to an institution by introducing an opponent into its management. They had only to look to Scotland to find this. There, there was a very strong religious feeling, and people were, perhaps, somewhat bigoted; still, one denomination worked harmoniously with another, and although the Roman Catholic schools were not numerous many of them were worked under a general board, and no difficulties had arisen. ["Hear, hear!"] It must, however, be clearly indicated that there must not be such a representation as would swamp the denominational element. That would be most unfair, and he was sure it would be possible to frame a scheme by which that would be prevented. They were not now discussing the details of a plan—[Opposition cheers]—they were simply considering whether they should or should not in Committee try to frame a scheme by which a limited representation could be established. The Government had a very large majority, and they could stop any sort of representation which would injure the characteristics of a school, and he, for one, should certainly vote against anything that would tend to that, because in his view denominational teaching was the backbone of education. The Instruction seemed to him to be in no sense opposed to the spirit of denominational education. On the contrary, in his judgment, it would tend very largely to do away with some of those causes of complaint and matters of irritation which arose sometimes. ["Hear, hear!"] On his side of the House, with the exception of one or two Members, notably, the noble Lord the Member for Rochester, nearly every Member had said he was strongly in favour of some sort of representation, but gave other reasons for voting against the Instruction. It was argued that this Instruction would open the door to a certain number of Amendments, and having been a Member of the House for a number of years, he knew that that was a practical objection; but when they came to consider the great scheme of renewing the power of Voluntary Schools and giving them large financial assistance he did not think it was at all desirable that a Government, with so large a majority, should hesitate to do what was right simply because of that difficulty. ["Hear, hear!"] Some hon. Members had expressed the fear that the adoption of the Instruction would lead to the loss of the Bill. That was out of the question. In fact, he believed that the Bill would pass all the more easily if, by granting this principle of representation, they removed a grievance that rankled in the bosoms of many persons. He should himself prefer to delete the word "adequate" from the Instruction, but it was not a point of very great importance, and Members on his side of the House could take the word as meaning adequate in their sense. He thought that one representative member out of four or five members of the Board would fully meet the necessities of the case. The change would be extremely popular, and would be likely to strengthen the Church of England. He regretted, therefore, that the Government would not consent to this Instruction, for which he should himself certainly vote. [Opposition cheers.]

Mr. CHARLES MORLEY (Brecknock) said that public management ought always to accompany the expenditure of public money. The Instruction suggested two alternative courses—the representation of local authorities or the representation of the parents. He much preferred the former, because he could not subscribe to the claims that had been put forward on behalf of the parents. If the parents in some cases paid fees they need not do so. The payment was optional, and therefore did not constitute a claim to representation. If education had been made compulsory solely in the interests of the children, it would not be unreasonable to give the parents control under that education; but they knew that when the Liberal Party advocated Free Education they did so mainly on the ground that education had been made compulsory, not only in the interests of the children, but also very largely for the benefit of the State, and the argument was that it was not unreasonable to ask the State to pay that which was for its own benefit. The First Lord of the Treasury had said that the Voluntary School buildings had been paid for by the generous contributions of Churchmen in the past, whose object it was to maintain the distinctive teaching of their Church. That he thought was open to qualification. It was quite possible to believe that these generous Churchmen were animated, not only by a desire to promote the teaching of their Church, but also by a desire to promote the efficiency of our national system of education. Then, when the first Government grant of £20,000 was made to the British and Foreign School Society and the National School Society it was distinctly stated that the money was not to be spent on the education of the children, but in school buildings. Therefore, these buildings had not been erected exclusively by generous Churchmen. A not inconsiderable portion of them had been erected at the cost of the nation. It was strange that the members of the richest Church in the world were unable or unwilling to support their own schools. There had been in the past, and there were no doubt now, very generous supporters of Church Schools, but the position in which these schools found themselves to-day was largely due to the fact that the generosity and liberality of the few could not compensate for the indifference and apathy of the many. Three-fourths or four-fifths of the cost of the maintenance of these schools the public contributed, and yet the public had no control over them. That was not a just arrangement, and he should therefore vote for an Instruction which sought to place these public elementary schools, which were so largely supported out of public money, under some local control.

COLONEL SANDYS (Lancashire, Bootle) thought that the Instruction was one deserving support, and he regretted that the Government would not embody its principle in the Bill. [Opposition cheers.] The Government were asking them to vote the taxes of the people for the education of the rising generation and at the same time refused to grant to the taxpayers the right of representation in consideration of the money so voted. In the circumstances he must go into the Lobby with the Mover of the Instruction. [Opposition cheers.] He regretted greatly having to do so, but it was with him a question of supporting a principle. It was one of the constitutional maxims of this country that representation and taxation should go together; we had decided that our institutions should be representative, and he did not see why that principle should not be applied to the education of the country. It was his fixed impression that a clerical despot was the least suitable of men to exercise absolute control over a school or other institution. [Opposition cheers.] He was very glad that the word "adequate" had been allowed to remain in the Instruction, because if there was to be representation it ought to be sufficient and not illusory. There were about 22,000 clergy of the Church of England, and of these between 6,000 and 7,000 were known to be members of clerical secret societies. [Cries of "No!" and Opposition cheers.] He could give the names if necessary, and in the circumstances he certainly held public control to be necessary.

MR. T. P. WHITTAKER (York, W.R., Spen Valley) congratulated the two last speakers upon the Ministerial side of the House upon the fact that they were going to Vote in favour of the Instruction of which they approved. Other Gentlemen opposite had admitted that some form of popular representation would be just and reasonable, and even necessary; and had these proceeded to hunt about for excuses for not voting for this proposal? They had defended the principle, and then condemned the method of carrying it out. It was the old Tory cry of "not thus and not now." Why did not hon. Gentlemen who agreed with this principle, but disagreed with the method, draft an Instruction themselves? A good deal had been said about the word "adequate," and there had been an attempt to read into the word a meaning that it did not bear. "Adequate" did not necessarily mean a majority. It was for the House to decide what amount of representation would be adequate, and as hon. Members opposite were in a large majority they could determine themselves what would be a due representation. All that the supporters of the Instruction urged was, that the representation should be adequate to insure religious liberty and an efficient system of education in the Voluntary Schools; and he thought that a reasonable minority of representation would be sufficient to secure that. They would make a great mistake if they applied the phrase, "taxation and representation." too literally and individually, because they did not act upon the principle in this country. The elections of Members of Parliament, for example, were by persons who were never tested as to whether they paid taxation or not. These electors voted because they were ratepayers, and therefore it was clear that they did not recognise, in this case, the principle of representation and taxation with the strictness which hon. Members suggested should be applied. The reason for desiring local representation was, that the parents were compelled to send their children to those denominational schools. In his own constituency Nonconformist children who were demanding free education were being forced into Roman Catholic schools; and this was a serious grievance. He therefore thought that this was an additional reason for asking that the parents and the ratepayers should have some voice in the management of those schools. The question of local control was a village and small town question. Where there were School Boards the parents had a choice for their children; but where there were no Board Schools ought the parents to be compelled to accept the minimum of education that would satisfy the Department? He thought not. The parents and the inhabitants were entitled to claim that there should be a thoroughly efficient system of education, and the only way was to give the people in the locality a voice in the control of the schools. In thousands of parishes there were only the denominational schools at which the children could attend, but if local representation on the management were allowed this would modify the intolerance which existed with regard to those schools. He did not suggest that there should be a controlling voice in the election of the teacher, but a small minority of representation would have an influential voice in it. Their aim would be to prevent inequality and injustice and proselytising, and to secure comfort in the schools for the children of Dissenting parents, as well as to secure a chance for Dissenting pupil teachers in those schools. It was said that the people desired denominational education. If that was the case, then why did the Government fear to give the people a voice in the management of the schools? Representation on these schools would undoubtedly secure efficiency, because the local representatives would vote against teachers having imposed upon them the outside duties of playing organs in the churches; this would mean, therefore, more efficient teachers in those schools. Denominationalists claimed the sole local management because they provided the local funds, and they refused the ratepayers and parents a representation because they did not directly find any funds. But many places to-day found very little money. Some large towns only found 2s., 2s. 3d., and 2s. 6d. per head of the children, and the money so provided was not more than enough to pay the cost and maintenance of the buildings, as they were used for denominational purposes outside the purposes of education. The buildings were used for Sunday schools and for meetings in connection with the church. The Instruction would thus remove one great objection to the denominational system, while it would help the Voluntary Schools to get subscriptions.

MAJOR RASCH (Essex, S.E.) thought that there was a great deal in the views urged by the hon. Member for the Carnarvon Boroughs. ["Hear, hear!"] In the populous districts of Tilbury and the valley of the Thames, which he represented, those views were certainly supported. [Opposition cheers.] He would not attempt to criticise the proposals of the Government; he was not an expert in these matters, and he was not a fanatical enthusiast on the subject of education. [Laughter.] It had been said that Members on the Ministerial Benches were casting about how to vote with the Government. That was not a difficulty which appalled him at all. He should not follow the hon. Member for the Carnarvon Boroughs, because one must draw the line somewhere. [Loud laughter.] But, on the other hand, he had not the slightest intention of voting against him —[Opposition cheers]—because to do so would be in opposition to the convictions of the men he represented and the opinions which he held himself.

*MR. J. H. YOXALL (Nottingham, W.) regretted that the Leader of the House did not make his statement at the end of the Debate instead of at the beginning, because, having regard to the sympathy which had been expressed on his own side in favour of the Amendment, the decision of the Government might have been different. [Ironical cheer by the FIRST LORD of the TREASURY.] He hoped that even now it was not too late for the right hon. Gentleman to change his mind. ["Hear, hear!"] The desire on both sides of the House to have efficient management given to the Voluntary Schools obtained very widely outside the House as well. For the last four or five years in parish after parish, month after month, there had been held meetings of protest and indignation against what had been called the "unbeneficent despotism of the vicar in charge of the parish schools." The time would come when more than what was asked for now would be required. The wise course would be, instead of thus foolishly bolstering up the Voluntary system in an undemocratic way, to accept the olive branch which was held out to-night. Experience had shown what good representative management had done for the Voluntary Schools, and as to the argument that to admit the Instruction would be to open the door to innumerable Amendments, he submitted that precisely the opposite effect would be produced. The right hon. Gentleman said rate-aid postulates ratepayers' control, and State-aid State control. That was logical and cogent in the domain of argument, but what about the domain of fact? If it was urged that State-aid postulates State control, then they must go on to say that the State control must be as efficient as the ratepayers' control. That was notoriously not the case. The control of the ratepayers extended to the buildings, to the appointment of teachers, to the dismissal of teachers, to the use and finance of the school—it covered the whole ground, and included many things of which the Education Department took, and could take, no cognisance whatever, unless it put one of its agents on the committee of every school in the country. What was asked for could be done without damaging in the least the denominational character of Voluntary Schools.

MR. BRYNMOR JONES (Swansea Boroughs) supported the Instruction, in the first place because in his view the representation of local authorities upon the governing bodies of schools was proved by the experience of all those who had been concerned either in secondary or primary education, to have a highly beneficial effect. He spoke with knowledge and experience, derived not from English counties, but from his acquaintance with education in Wales and Monmouthshire. In the University of Wales, the three colleges, the intermediate schools, and the central board for intermediate education, local authorities had proper and adequate representation, and he did not believe there was a single gentleman in the House who would not say that the whole working of the Welsh system had been greatly assisted by the representation of public authorities on the governing bodies. He could not see why, in regard to Voluntary Schools, the Leader of the House should refuse some representation to the local authorities or the general community on the associations proposed to be created under this Bill.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I did not refuse, but I did refuse to consider it in this Bill.

MR. BRYNMOR JONES inferred from that interruption that the right hon. Gentleman now, having heard all the speeches, accepted the principle of the Instruction.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: That is exactly what I said six hours ago.

MR. BRYNMOR JONES asked why, if so, there should be any difficulty in carrying out the principles in the passage of this Bill through the House. He found that by Clause 3 associations of schools were to be constituted in such manner, and in such areas, and with such governing bodies representative of the managers, as were approved by the Education Department. Why could not the right hon. Gentleman, after what he had said, assent to the Instruction moved, and then try to devise some scheme of management by which its terms might be carried out? ["Hear, hear!"] He supported the Instruction because also the Voluntary Schools were, in his judgment, public institutions supported mainly out of the public funds. ["Hear, hear!"] He assented to the proposition that originally the schools were started in the interests of one denomination, and for the sake of argument he would not say that that fact should be ignored, but he still maintained that substantially the Voluntary Schools were public institutions, supported chiefly by public money.

["Hear, hear!"] The subscriptions to the Voluntary Schools were a very small amount compared with the sum received from the Imperial Exchequer. During the last few years the Voluntary Schools in Cardiff had been receiving about £6,550 annually, and if the present Bill were carried they would receive £1,030 a year more from the State; while, on the other hand, the Voluntary subscriptions given by Church people to the schools amounted to about £700 only. ["Hear, hear!"] This had been going on for many years, and he contended that the time had now come, especially when so large an additional grant was to be made, when the schools should be managed, not in the interests of a particular denomination, but in the interests of the community at large. ["Hear, hear!"] The other day he was reading a lecture by a man whose name he was sure the Leader of the House would respect—Professor T. H. Green, of Oxford—and, speaking in a lecture as far back as 1878, he said, referring to this question, that it must never be forgotten that if the grant were to come to the Voluntary Schools from year to year, there must come a time when the interests of the community in the schools would become so great, and the claims of the State on the schools so great, that all private interests would disappear, and when the State might justly and rightly come forward and declare that the schools must henceforth be managed in the interests of the community generally. ["Hear, hear!"] Moreover, even in the interests of the classes directly concerned in the Voluntary system, it was expedient that some change should be made from the present system of clerical management. Those classes were three in number—the members of the Church, the parents, and the teachers. It was the general opinion that the schools, especially in the rural districts, were too much under clerical control, and Churchmen themselves admitted that it would be to the advantage of the schools and of education if the laity were now admitted to a larger share in the management of the schools. ["Hear, hear!"] As to the case of the parents, his observations on this point would refer more particularly to Wales, on the people of which the existing system bore very unjustly. ["Hear, hear!"] It was well known that Nonconformists largely outnumbered Churchmen in Wales, and that, notwithstanding, there were many places in which the only school was a Voluntary or Church School, managed almost wholly by the local clergyman. Surely hon. Members opposite, who assumed to be so anxious about the consciences of the parents, must perceive how hard in many cases this state of things must bear on the Welsh Nonconformist; and he was confident that if in such cases one or two Nonconformists were permitted to take part in the management of the school it would tend not only to the harmony of the parish but to the efficiency of the school. ["Hear, hear!"] The case of the teachers under the present system was perhaps the hardest of all. They were practically civil servants, and were paid out of the public funds, and yet they were placed entirely at the mercy of those of a particular denomination to whom the school belonged. This was neither fair nor expedient, and ought to be prevented. Hon. Members opposite had practically admitted that, in the interests of education, a case had been made out for some alteration in the management of the Voluntary Schools if this further grant was to be made. The Bill, through the provision relating to the association of schools, gave the Government an easy opportunity of introducing such changes in the management of the schools as the Instruction proposed, and he thought they would act most unwisely in the interests of the schools themselves if they rejected it. He was curious to learn, after the articles he had read, what the Vice President of the Council had to say in this matter. Personally he should be utterly astonished if that right hon. Gentleman did not see his way to follow the hon. Member for Islington in his firm and consistent demand for some representation of the community upon these Voluntary bodies.

SIR EDWARD CLARKE (Plymouth) who was received with loud cheers, said that, as one supporting this Bill with all his heart and desiring to see it carried, and as one who felt that the Government had done the right thing in the decision they had come to, and that they would have imperilled the Bill by throwing open the discussion to those questions which were raised by the Instruction, he thought it was time to say a few words. [Opposition cheers.] He understood the meaning of those cheers, and would refer to them in a moment. He would say that if the Government had taken a different course, and by accepting this Instruction had enlarged the area of the Bill, had practically added to it a supplementary Bill, or added the opportunities, at all events, for discussing a supplementary Bill—["hear, hear!"]—they would not only have suffered in the time that would have been expended in the discussion of those matters, but would have met with a resolute resistance from a great many of their own supporters. [Cheers and counter cheers.] He understood the meaning of that cheer. It was a repetition, in another form, of the observation made in both of the speeches from the other side they had just listened to with regard to the number of Members on the Ministerial side of the House who had spoken in sympathy with the Instruction, and who had expressed their intention of either voting for it or of not voting at all. The number of those speeches was deceiving hon. Gentlemen opposite, and would produce an absolutely false impression outside unless that impression were corrected. [Cheers and counter cheers.] When a Bill like this, to which a very large majority of the House had pledged itself—the most popular Bill, so far as Members on that side of the House were concerned, that they could be called upon to support in the House—was under discussion, and when certain Members on that side of the House, for different reasons, felt bound to separate themselves from the Government and to refuse to listen to the exhortation and the appeal made by the First Lord of the Treasury, it was necessary for them, for their own position with their constituents, to give some explanation of the vote they were going to give. Hon. Members opposite had had the gratification of listening to a series of speeches that evening from hon. Members on that side of the House when they might have had three or four times as many—[cheers]—from men who felt quite as strongly upon this question, and who thought, as he did, that the Government had taken the right course. [Cheers.] With regard to this Instruction, it was not a matter which he thought needed discussion in detail, because the objection of the Government to it was not founded upon the consideration of the results of any possible legislation that might follow if it were adopted, but was founded upon the necessity of going straight through with this Bill as it was—[loud cheers]—in order to carry out the great object to which they were pledged, and which the whole of their supporters desired them to accomplish. There were two classes of representation suggested by the Instruction. With regard to the representation of the ratepayers on the managing bodies of Voluntary Schools, he saw no excuse for the proposal whatever. ["Hear, hear!"] If a Voluntary School, conducted by those who belonged to the creed in connection with which it was founded, was doing efficient work, was giving good education as tested by the inspectors of the Education Department, it was entitled to be paid a share of this grant, and there was no excuse for desiring to thrust the ratepayers' representatives upon its managing body. ["Hear, hear!"] With regard to the representation of the parents, they heard read out, by one of the hon. Members for Islington, a Resolution which was arrived at by the clergy in the rural deanery of Islington declaring that it was desirable to have a representation of the parents upon the managing bodies. Perhaps in their case it was, and if that were so, let them have it. ["Hear, hear!"] They could have it to-morrow without any interference from the House—[cheers]—and in very many cases throughout the country, especially in the rural districts, the clergyman did associate with himself, to the great advantage of the school—[Opposition cheers]—and to the great relief of his own anxiety and work, managers who assisted him in the conduct of that school, and, in some cases, represented the parents. But that system, good as it had proved in many cases, was not applicable in all. ["Hear, hear!"] Schools in town and country differed very largely in their circumstances, and he was thinking now of great schools in London. There was a school in a parish in which he was greatly interested with some 600 or 800 children. To frame a legislative proposal for enabling the parents of the children to elect representatives on the managing body of that school, for defining what parents should be allowed to vote, what notice of meeting there should be in order that they should be called together, and whether any decision was to be made as to the length of time a child had been at school in order to enable a parent to vote, and so on—all these matters would be extremely complex as subjects of legislation—["hear, hear!"]—and he was quite satisfied, with regard to the school he was now thinking of, that, after their most elaborate legislation had provided for them a means of selecting the managers for that school, it would be found practically waste paper, considering the sort of locality in which the school was situated and the class of persons from whom these children came. ["Hear, hear!"] If this Instruction had been carried he should have resisted, as far as he possibly could, any insistence upon the ratepayers' representation upon the managing committees of Voluntary Schools, and he was sure that when the House came to frame legislation for enabling parents to elect persons on those committees they would have found it far more complex and far more full of difficulties than had been thought by his hon. Friends who had been talking so lightly of the acceptance of this principle. [Cheers.] But really the point was this. The Instruction endeavoured to fix upon the Government the duty of dealing with a separate portion of the Bill. If the Instruction were adopted he did not know if the Government would consider it their duty to propose provisions on this matter, but somebody would have to propose a series of clauses constituting quite a second part of the Bill, and his hon. Friends who had been so lightly lending themselves to this ingenious attempt to defeat the Bill altogether—["No, no!" and cheers]—would find that they had deprived the Government of a very large portion of Parliamentary time which it was proposed to devote to other very useful purposes after this Bill was disposed of. ["Hear, hear!"] Several Members had talked of the different aspects in which this question might be viewed, and several Members had said, and he assumed it was the popular attitude to take, that they looked at it from an educational point of view. That was, of course, the right way to look at it; that was the way he looked at it. He was convinced that the best service they could do to the cause of education in the country was to pass the Bill as it stood —[cheers]—and so to give to Voluntary Schools that relief which they had long needed and which had been promised by the Unionist Party. [Cheers.] Much had been said about the necessity of making schools efficient, and, of course, everyone desired to make schools efficient; but the repeated demands of the Education Department had been raised to such an extent, and the burden on Voluntary Schools was so great, that they were struggling for existence in many parts of the country. ["Hear, hear!"] What better service could they render to education than to give these schools the help they needed to save them from extinction? That was the service the Government intended. They had introduced a simple Bill, and he was glad they had expressed a resolute determination to stand by that Bill. [Cheers.] He hoped it would be seen to-morrow that his hon. Friends who had spoken in favour of the Instruction had been vindicating themselves before their own constituents—[Opposition cheers]—vindicating themselves before their constituents for a vote which they would not give if they thought it would be effective. [Ministerial cheers.] They expressed the confidence they felt, and he hoped they rightly felt that they would be beaten—[laughter]—by a substantial majority of the House; but he was quite sure there was not one of them who, if he thought his vote would have the effect of determining the Division against the Government, would not rather say he would stand by the Government and save the Bill for the advantage of Voluntary Schools than indulge in the attempt to tack on to the Bill something which would embarrass the Government and might also destroy the Bill itself. [Cheers.]

MR. LEONARD COURTNEY (Cornwall, Bodmin): My hon. and learned Friend no doubt was quite right in calling attention to the undue proportion that appeared on this side of the House of Members who are ready to support the Instruction, and the Government may be congratulated on finding an able supporter for the line of action upon which they have resolved, although my hon. and learned Friend left me at the end of his speech in doubt as to whether he opposed the Resolution on the ground of inexpediency or on the ground of principle. ["Hear, hear!"] He seemed to dwell most strongly on the inexpediency of adopting the Resolution, but now and again he repeated expressions which seemed to indicate that he opposed it root and branch, and I find that other hon. Members here have formed the same conclusion. Now, my hon. and learned Friend ended his speech with a declaration that he thought many hon. Members were going to support this Instruction who would not do so if they believed it was going to meet with success. ["Hear, hear!"] Now, I am going to support this Resolution—[Opposition cheers]—and I should do so if I thought it would succeed. ["Hear, hear!"] I should do so for this reason—that, in my opinion, it would make the prospects of the Bill as part of the educational organisation of the country better in the future. ["Hear, hear!"] It would relieve it from that partiality which does not at this moment imperil its fortunes, but which will be remembered against it, and which may perhaps lead to its being reconsidered, and perhaps repudiated, by a later Parliament. ["Hear, hear!"] I do not approach this question as an enemy of Voluntary Schools, or, to speak more correctly, of denominational schools; on the contrary, I have been impressed more and more during these discussions of the justice and necessity of affording substantial aid to Voluntary Schools. Facts have been made public during these Debates that have borne this conclusion more strongly into my mind than when the Debate began. If I may explain my own position in respect to this Instruction, I may be pardoned if in order to do so I call attention to two or three facts which were mentioned at another time, and which appear to me to lead to a certain conclusion as to the policy which should be adopted by Parliament with respect to popular education in the country. We heard of a city in the north where there are 12,000 children in Voluntary Schools and 12,000 children in Board Schools, and it was said that the grant of 5s. a head in respect to the children in the Voluntary Schools of that town would be the cause of considerable resentment in the town on the ground of its injustice. ["Hear, hear!"] It came out also that the amount of £30,000 a year was raised in that city in rates for the support of Board Schools. Now half the children go to Voluntary Schools and half the ratepayers—probably in respect to payment and rateability more than half—are in favour of the Voluntary system: yet the conclusion from the facts is this—that for years past £15,000 a year have been drawn from ratepayers who repudiate Board Schools in order to support those schools. Now is that a conclusion which can be maintained in the future? ["Hear, hear!"] Can it be said for a moment that a system under which half the population is taxed to maintain a system of education they repudiate is one that can endure? Is it to be supposed that this will be consonant to feelings of justice, and that it will continue to be tolerated? ["Hear, hear!"] I am certain it will not be, and the answer in the present Bill, as I conceive it, is that this payment of £3,000 a year to Voluntary Schools is but a sort of hush money to cover up injustice suffered by the friends of Voluntary Schools in the past. I, therefore, approach this Bill, and especially this Resolution, with the view that you must do something to correct the injustice which prevails, that something must come in the way of substantial allowance to Voluntary Schools in the future. I believe that the noble Lord the Member for Rochester, who on this one point is in agreement with me, agrees that funds must come from the same source in support of both classes, and justice will be recognised in carrying out this policy. Now, what is the deduction from this illustration? It appears to me that it illustrates the conclusions—first, that support given to Voluntary Schools in the future rests on the fact that the parents of half the children, or of those who are found in these schools, desire the maintenance of these schools. The second deduction is that the community at large cannot exercise that control over these schools which would destroy their essential character without interfering with the justice which requires the allowance to be made to the schools. The control has to satisfy two conditions—first, that it shall not prejudice the essential character of the schools; and, next, that it shall secure the desires and wishes of the parents who send their children to these schools. Let me observe that this apology for our defence of the Bill does not at all apply to those parishes, which abound in the country, where there is a Voluntary School and nothing else. Nobody in a parish of that kind can complain that a ratepayer as a ratepayer is supporting a school of which he does not approve. There is no rate levied in opposition to his wishes, but inasmuch as in the course of circumstances we know that in these country parishes there are found many schools which exist because they do exist, we are justified in respect of these schools in asking for some control, some representation in their management which shall satisfy the local demand, as well as that other representation which is due to the parents from the strength of whose preference alone these schools in other places exist. [Opposition cheers.] Therefore I am entirely in favour of the Instruction, which carries out and which rests upon the very principle of our action, because it justifies it, if it justifies it at all, on the ground that parents desire the school; and yet the Government shrink from the suggestion that parents should have a voice in the management of the schools. [Cheers.] What are the reasons against the introduction of this kind of element in the management? My right hon. Friend at the head of the Government, who, I understood by an interjection of his a little while ago, was not opposed in principle to the present Instruction— [Opposition cheers]—

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: If my right hon. Friend misrepresents me, I must interrupt him. I distinctly stated in the speech I made six hours ago the main objection the Government had to this Instruction, and it is an insuperable objection, in face of which we shall certainly drop the Bill if the Amendment be carried. [Cheers and counter cheers.] That objection is that the Bill is restricted in its scope, and it would not be legitimate to add a new Bill to it by the Instruction which it is proposed we should carry. [Ministerial cheers.]

*MR. COURTNEY: I will deal with that main and insuperable objection presently. But, meanwhile, is or is not the right hon. Gentleman in favour of the principle of the Instruction? [Opposition cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: When the Instruction is embodied in a Bill, and brought before the House for discussion, I will give an opinion upon it. [Ironical Opposition cheers.] But, so long as we do not know in which at least of 20 different forms the Instruction is to be embodied, I surely may be absolved from giving an opinion upon any one of them. [Ministerial cheers.]

*MR. COURTNEY: Then my right hon. Friend will not give us an opinion. [Cheers.] I do not complain of that, but I thought that he did, with some warmth, make an observation just now, when the hon. Member for Swansea was speaking, to the effect that six hours ago he had expressed his concurrence in that principle. [Opposition cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: My right hon. Friend cannot have caught what I said.

*MR. COURTNEY: I understood the right hon. Gentleman to oppose the Instruction, grounding his opposition upon the principle which he borrowed from the phrase of the hon. Member for Cambridge University, that local support requires local control, and Imperial support requires Imperial control. [Cheers.] That appears to have captured a great many minds, but it is one of those catch phrases which turn upon a play of words, and if you examine them narrowly there is little or nothing in them. [Cheers.] Surely the principle and nature of the control or management which we are going to introduce into the system of schools, whether maintained out of local or Imperial taxation, must depend upon an examination of the expediency or inexpediency in itself of the control which we are going to introduce. You cannot manage elementary schools all over the country from Whitehall, even if you desire it. That was admitted last year, and it remains true now. ["Hear, hear!"] You must, if you want efficient control, get the assistance of local control as well as central. ["Hear, hear!"] It is said there are other difficulties. There is the difficulty that the Instruction goes too far. There has been talk of "adequate" representation, and although it is suggested that "adequate" might be dropped, you, Sir, observed that that cannot be done because that is an alteration of the Instruction without notice. Of course, that is a perfectly true principle. An Instruction cannot be moved without notice, and an alteration which added to its force could not be moved. But an alteration which diminished its force, narrowed its scope, restricted its application, can, I believe, be moved at any time. [Cheers.] The omission of the word "adequate," I believe, might be held to enlarge the scope, and would clearly leave it in an indefinite shape. We might have a more than adequate representation. But I do not think anyone would suggest the ludicrous Amendment that we should put in "a less than adequate representation," and the ingenuity of man is not beyond framing some kind of Amendment which might bring this Instruction within the range approved by some of my hon. Friends, and which yet should not be open to the censure that it was a breach of order. Possibly we might amend the Instruction by speaking of minority representation, which would satisfy the demand made on the other side, and, at the same time, secure the preponderance of the present management which is desired. ["Hear, hear!"] After all, in assenting to this Instruction you assent to nothing. It is not a legislative enactment, and you are only going so far as to enable the Committee to consider the matter of putting parents upon the school committee at all. Then comes this insuperable objection upon which my right hon. Friend relies, and which my hon. and learned Friend here magnified in his very ingenious speech. That insuperable objection is, that if you really did adopt this Instruction you would open a floodgate of Amendments which would sweep away the whole Bill. That is the objection upon which reliance has been placed. How far is that insuperable objection sound? My hon. and learned Friend pictured to himself a Committee of the House devising a scheme of representation of parents and of ratepayers, and he asks, Should the parent who has got children in the school at a particular date be of the electors, or should they be parents who had children there a certain time, and how, he inquired, should they vote and when? Hon. Gentlemen must know well enough that this House would never go into all the details of the machinery involved by this Instruction. That machinery would be framed by the Education Department. ["Hear, hear!"] It would be that Department, and not this House, who would determine how the parents and the ratepayers should be represented on the management of the schools. To suppose that this House would deal with all these details is a mere figment of the imagination. ["Hear, hear!"] I cannot understand how any different view of the matter can be taken by anyone who is conversant with the history of our educational legislation. ["Hear, hear!"] Hon. Members sitting on this side of the House have declared that they are in favour of the principle of this Instruction, and that they only oppose the Instruction because of the amount of discussion it would leave open in Committee, and because, in their opinion, the Bill would perish under the weight of the new matter which would be imported into that discussion. But let me ask—Would it have been impossible to have entered into some Parliamentary understanding in reference to this subject? [Opposition cheers and Ministerial ironical cheers and laughter.] Some hon. Members laugh at that suggestion—why, Parliamentary understandings form part of the ordinary machinery for facilitating the business of this House. I think that a Parliamentary understanding might have easily been arrived at earlier in the evening, or, indeed, before the Debate commenced, whereby this discussion might have been kept within very narrow limits. [Opposition cheers.] In my opinion such a Parliamentary understanding would have saved the time of the House instead of wasting it. ["Hear, hear!"] I will end as I began. I shall support the Instruction, because I believe that by adopting it we should improve the Bill and should have afforded the Committee an opportunity of improving the educational organisation of the country. [Opposition cheers.] We may have—and I hope we shall have—a supplementary Bill; but even such a Measure, unless it includes the principle of this Instruction, will not be satisfactory. In conclusion, I may say that I believe that we should have saved time instead of losing it, if the right hon. Gentleman had had the courage to have accepted this Instruction, which I believe would operate in the interests of the education of the country, and in those of the Voluntary Schools. [Opposition cheers.]

*SIR HENRY FOWLER (Wolverhampton) said that he was certainly surprised that no occupant of the Treasury Bench should have thought it necessary to rise and answer the powerful speech of the right hon. Gentleman who had just sat down. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not really know whether the new mode of conducting Debates in that House was that the Government Front Bench was to preserve silence in all cases after the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury had spoken, in order to prevent criticism and to prevent the opinions expressed by their supporters from being carried into effect in the Division Lobby. The speeches which had been delivered from the other side of the House, with perhaps one or two exceptions, were practically in support of the principle of the Instruction, and he must again express his surprise that no notice whatever should have been taken by the Government of those speeches. He was sorry that so much stress should have been laid upon the length of this Debate, which, no doubt, was considerable. [Ironical cheers from the Government Benches.] He quite understood the meaning of that cheer and the misconstruction of his words. ["Hear, hear!"] He thought, however, that a question of this magnitude deserved a reasonable amount of consideration. He denied the right of the strongest Government to say that that House must register their decrees, and that that House must do as they told them. ["Hear, hear!"] They would see by-and-by whether that was a successful mode of conducting the business of that House. [Cheers.] No doubt the Government were influenced in the line they were taking in this matter from what had fallen from certain of their supporters. One hon. and gallant Member opposite had spoken strongly in favour of the principle of this Instruction, but had said that, notwithstanding that fact, he felt it to be his duty to support the Government and to vote against the Instruction. The Government, however, had unfortunately, as he thought, announced that they regarded this question as a vital one, and the independent Conservative Party had determined to fight it upon strict Party lines, instead of looking at it from the point of view as to what would be the best for the educational interests of the country. ["Hear, hear!"] Upon what were they going to divide that night—or, at all events, at the conclusion of this Debate? They were not going to divide upon any question of machinery, not upon any question involving the right of parents or of ratepayers to take a part in the management of these schools, but whether the Committee was to have an opportunity of considering whether the scheme embodied in this Instruction was or was not a feasible one. ["Hear, hear!"] The only opposition to that proposition which could be justified, was the opposition of hon. Members who took the view of the hon. and learned Member for Plymouth—namely, the opposition to the principle. He was in a state of perfect confusion as to what was the meaning and attitude of the First Lord of the Treasury. [Laughter.] He told them just now that what he said then was what he said six hours ago. What did the right hon. Gentleman say six hours ago? He then opposed, upon principle, upon the merits, parental control and ratepaying control. ["Hear, hear!"] What did he say about parental control? He ridiculed the thing as impossible, and asked the question, "Why should parents have control?" He said they contributed nothing, he said they got their education absolutely free, and he asked what right they had to interfere in the management of the schools.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Hear, hear. [Opposition laughter.] I do not know whether the right hon. Gentleman listened to my speech—

*SIR H. FOWLER: Oh, every syllable of it. [Laughter.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I never called parental control the worst thing; what I said was that it had been tried, and that, in the opinion of the Department, in the places where it had been tried the success had not been very marked.

*SIR H. FOWLER said the right hon. Gentleman would not question his accuracy in saying that he asked this question, Why should parents—

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: "What right?"

*SIR H. FOWLER said the right hon. Gentleman asked the question, "What right had parents to have control?" He would tell him what right they had. They had the right given them by the fact that in 8,000 parishes of this country they had no choice as to the school; they must either send their children to the school appointed, or be sent themselves to prison —[cheers]—and of every 1s. that was spent in that school 9d. came out of the public funds, to which those parents contributed in the shape of taxes. He contended that that constituted a moral right that they should have some voice in the management of the schools, and some means of seeing that those securities which the Legislature had provided for the protection of their children's rights should be fully and adequately carried out. [" Hear, hear ! "] The right hon. Gentleman then asked what right had the ratepayers, and told them that the whole philosophy of the case was contained in one syllogism, which was practically this—every expenditure of public money from the rates was controlled by the ratepayers, every expenditure of public money from the taxes was controlled by the House of Commons; this was an expenditure from the taxes, therefore the control of the House of Commons was sufficient. He denied the major premiss of that syllogism, and he thought his right hon. Friend who had just sat down had disposed of it, in theory, completely. But he would venture to remind the House that it was already disposed of in practice. It was perfectly true that in large branches of public expenditure, such as the Army or Navy, the control of the expenditure was in the hands of the Minister who was responsible to the House, and the House exercised a direct control in that matter; but there was a large class of expenditure which the House delegated to local authorities because it was of a local character. He would give the familiar illustration of the police. He would be a very bold man who should propose that the police of this country should be controlled in that House through the means of the Home Secretary, and the local authorities deprived of all power, because one half of the cost of the police was voted by the House. [" Hear, hear ! "] The House adopted the same principle with reference to technical education, and, in the case of the whole system of grants in aid of local taxation out of the general taxation of the country, the House of Commons voted large sums for local purposes, the administration of which was left in the hands of the local authorities. The right hon. Gentleman might say that that was the philosophy of the transaction, but he himself did not think that it represented the true relations between that House and public expenditure. If they were to put the entire control of a denominational school into the hands of the representative body they would make it a Board School—they would destroy its denominational character, and he would say candidly that that would be unjust and unfair. [" Hear, hear ! "] But what they asked for was a representation upon that body. The right hon. Gentleman had said :—

> " You admit you are a minority, as a minority you would always be outvoted ; what, then, is the good of being upon that body ? "

That not only struck at the root of the representation of minorities, but it struck at the very principle of free constitutional Government. The House of Commons did not exist simply to carry out the views of majorities, although of course in the end the majority triumphed. The right hon. Gentleman had not been a Member of that House for 20 years, and sat on both sides of the House, above the Gangway and below the Gangway, without knowing the enormous influence which even weak and despised minorities could exercise. [Cheers.] He could remember the right hon. Gentleman with a very small number of comrades—[laughter]—one of whom was the representative of the Committee of Council in that House—[cheers]—he could remember that gallant body facing with undaunted courage a majority as large as that of the present Government, and far more united. [Loud Opposition cheers.] That minority was not powerless. Its opponents were beaten, though, if the right hon. Gentleman would pardon him for saying so, he took five years to beat them. [The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY : " No, no ! "] He did not wish to minimise the power of a minority—[laughter]—he was arguing rather against the proposition that a minority was a superfluity. Now, when his hon. Friend the Member for Carnarvon stated that a great many schools were in the hands of the clergyman, and the clergyman alone, there were some very indignant sounds of dissent, but the Report of the Conservative majority of the Royal Commission showed that one of the grievances of the Voluntary Schools was that in a large number of cases there was but one practical manager, and that manager was the clergyman. [" Hear, hear! "] He did not intend to say anything disrespectful of the clergyman quâ clergyman, but he asserted that, even if there were no representation of the ratepayers and parents to be considered, it was not in the public interest that one man should have the control of the education of a parish and have the control of a large sum of public money. [Cheers.] In the interest of education it was right that the House of Commons should insist that there should be a certain number of managers, and that those managers should be jointly responsible. Let them suppose that even if there was only one man representing the ratepayers or the parents—what did that man do? He threw the light of public opinion—[" hear, hear! "]—upon the working of the institution. [Cheers.] Things were said and done now which would not be said and done if that light were thrown upon the proceedings of the board of management. It might be asked, " What do you want; do you want to interfere with the denominational character of the schools?" No, they did not. The law would not allow them to do so. A denominational school must be carried on according to the trust on which it was founded. They wanted to secure what the Education Department, in consequence of the overpowering multiplicity of details, could not secure—they wanted to secure that not only this 5s. additional grant, but all grants spent in a school, should be fairly and honourably and honestly spent in the promotion of education—[cheers]—that there should not be extravagance, that there should not be parsimony, that there should not be injustice. Was that not a matter worthy of public discussion? There was no question of the local agitator as the noble Lord the Member for Rochester seemed to imagine there was. The local agitator was an individual of whom they heard a great deal when the Parish Council Bill was passing through the House, but they had never heard of him since. They had seen in the Parish Councils a union of all classes to promote the working of the Act, and if a representative of the ratepayers or parents were appointed in this case he would be found working with the other members of the Board of Management to do the best for the school. He came back to the question of the 8,000 parishes. He believed hon. Gentlemen opposite recognised fairly the fact that in those 8,000 parishes there was no choice of schools. He knew it to be true that Nonconformist children were forced by law into Roman Catholic schools. He did not think the noble Lord the Member for Rochester would like the law to force Anglican children into Nonconformist Schools. [" Hear, hear! "] He did not at the present moment complain of that state of things, but he maintained that they were entitled to exceptional and special consideration in consequence of that state of things. What did they ask? They asked that the conscience clause should be fairly and fully fulfilled in all its bearings. [VISCOUNT CRANBORNE: " It is; " and hon. MEMBERS: " No, it is not! "] The noble Lord said with truth, yesterday, that there was a small number of clergymen who were guilty of outrageous conduct in reference to the burial of the dead. Men who would be guilty of outrageous and intolerable bigotry with reference to the burial of the dead would not shrink from being guilty of the same thing with respect to the education of children. [Cheers.] He did not say that there was a general evasion of the Conscience Clause. But there were reported to the heads of the various bodies of Nonconformists a sufficient number of cases of evasion, and that made a grievance which ought to be removed. [Cheers.] There was such a thing as breaking the conscience clause in the spirit as well as in the letter. [Cheers.] It was against that they wished to protect the children. [Cheers.] It might be said that nothing was done in those schools which the law prohibited; that children were taught nothing to which their parents objected; but there were various little details of the management of a school which might be made, on the one hand, an honourable fulfilment, or, on the other hand, a dishonourable fulfilment of the conditions of the law. [Cheers.] Hon. Members who were acquainted with the great Secondary Schools of the country knew that boys attending them were not put to any disadvantage on account of the religious opinions of their parents; that there was no head master who could not carry out fully and completely the religious instruction he had to give without treating any boy unjustly. But that state of things did not prevail in the Voluntary Schools—[cheers]—and if they had on the management of those schools representatives of the parents or of the public to see that the Conscience Clause was fairly worked, it would remove a great deal of friction that at present impaired the results of our primary system of education. It was said that the Voluntary Schools were popular schools, that parents desired them and would have them. Surely they would be made more popular still if the parents had representation on their management? Surely, if they were linked with popular representation they would obtain an element of strength they did not now possess. [Cheers.] The hon. Member for the Warwick Division made a powerful speech in favour of the very thing against which he proposed to vote. The hon. Member declared that the doctrine of popular representation was always well received at diocesan meetings, and that the friends of the Voluntary Schools were not frightened by it. But the hon. Member had been put under pressure. [Cheers and laughter.]

COLONEL MILWARD: I beg the right hon. Gentleman's pardon, I am not put under pressure of any kind whatever. [Laughter and cheers.] I acknowledge the value, the extraordinary value, of the schools having popular representation, but I say the time is not yet come to apply it to the Voluntary Schools.

*SIR HENRY FOWLER said the hon. Gentleman had said in the course of his speech that, if this Instruction were carried, the Government would drop the Bill or resign —[cheers]—and that he therefore would not be a party to turning out the Government. [Ministerial cheers.] He did not quarrel with the hon. Gentleman's party loyalty. But had it come to this—that this great Government, with its unprecedented majority and with those European difficulties which they said, and rightly said, were of such supreme importance at the present moment, were prepared—unless their followers were ready to help them in preventing a discussion of the principle of representation—to throw up their offices and say, "We resign the Government of the country"? [Cheers.] The leaders of the great Tory party had at all events the courage of their convictions. They objected to popular representation. But their supporters could not go to the country and say they were in favour of popular representation. [Cheers.] Many hon. Members opposite had said they would vote against the Instruction because they were afraid the Government would resign. If Liberals had said such things what scornful denunciation would have been heaped upon them by the First Lord of the Treasury. [Cheers.] The right hon. Gentleman talked about time being wanted. This was only the 25th of February; the Session had hardly commenced. Was the Government reduced to such a state of Parliamentary impotency that with a majority of 150 behind them they could not carry a five-clause Bill if there were added to it one of the two more provisions that were likely to lead to some controversy? [Cheers.] But then, how many more Bills were they going to have? There was the Bill for the Board Schools, the Bill for Secondary Education; there was to be a Scotch Bill, and there was to be an Irish Bill. They should bring in a strong Bill and carry it. [AN HON. MEMBER: "A long Bill?"] He sat there for 30 nights with a small majority behind him, and they carried their Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] When they were half through with their Bill they were told to cut it in half and they would carry it. They refused to drop a line of it, and they carried it with their poor majority of 30 or 40. [Cheers.] Let the Government tell the country the real reason—namely, that they disliked this popular representation, and that they believed it would be injurious to Denominational Schools. [Cheers.]

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL (Sir ROBERT FINLAY, Inverness Burghs), who rose amid cries of "Gorst," said that the Government had brought in this Bill, and they meant to carry it. The right hon. Gentleman evinced a great disposition to take the management of the Bill out of the hands of the Government, but the Government preferred to retain the management of their own Measure. The right hon. Gentleman said they were at the beginning of a long Debate, and the experience of that evening had enabled them to judge that that was the case. As to the references to the speeches on that side of the House, there were many Gentlemen who would have expressed themselves strongly against this Instruction, but they had abstained from doing that—[cheers and counter cheers]—because by speaking they would be playing into the hands of the Opposition. ["Hear, hear!"] How long the Debate would be if the Instruction were carried he shrank from calculating. There was one touch of humour in the speech of the Member for Nottingham when he spoke of this Instruction as "the olive branch." An olive branch! It was an Instruction which would destroy the Bill. [VOICES: "Why?"] The Opposition were under no illusions with regard to that, and he could wish that some of his hon. Friends were as clear-sighted as the hon. Gentlemen opposite. He was afraid that one or two of his hon. Friends had been under an illusion, and that in airing their views they had been unconsciously playing into the hands of those who wished to destroy the Bill. The terms of the Instruction which he read showed what their object was. The Instruction referred to representation of parents. He would admit that, by voluntary arrangement, in many cases it might be very desirable to have associated with the clergyman and the other managers those who had the confidence of the parents. But would anyone who considered the question seriously say that it was possible to put into the form of an Act of Parliament a provision that such a fluctuating body as the parents of the children should, by election, be represented on the Board of Management?

MR. HERBERT LEWIS: It is done already in Wales.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL: Yes, by arrangement.

MR. HERBERT LEWIS: No, by scheme.

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL said that it was not done with reference to elementary schools. When the right hon. Member for Bodmin said that it was a figment of the imagination to suppose there was any difficulty in providing for this representation, he was allowing his own imagination to run away with him. [Cheers.] What would be the crop of Amendments which would spring up if such an attempt were made in the Bill? ["Hear, hear!"] The Instruction proceeded to say that there should be representation of local authorities. In many cases this worked admirably, no doubt. That independent gentlemen, resident in the locality, should voluntarily associate themselves with the management of the schools was one thing; but it was quite another thing to say that under the compulsion of the Education Department, acting under Parliamentary instructions, the local authorities were to put representatives on the Boards of Management. Voluntary association often worked admirably; but he was quite convinced that compulsory power given to the local authorities would have an effect the very opposite to that desired by all friends of Voluntary Schools. [Cheers.] It would produce intolerable friction. [Cheers.] The subscriptions to the schools came from the subscribers; the local authorities contributed nothing, and on what principle were they to have the right to representation? He believed that support from the rates would draw after it local control; and he was quite certain that, with any sense of justice, representation of local authorities must draw after it support from the rates. To give representation without support from the rates was a proposition totally inadmissible. [Cheers.] Reference had been made to the vagueness of the Instruction, and he would call attention to its insidious character. There was to be adequate representation of local authorities. What was to be regarded as "adequate representation"? The House was now told that it was representation which would always leave the local authority in the minority. But how long would that last? [Cheers.] Once the principle of compulsory representation admitted, how long would it be before there was a demand that the local authority should have the controlling voice? It was said that there was now abuse of the Conscience Clause. How could that be remedied unless the local authority had the controlling voice as to the appointment and dismissal of teachers? [Cries of "Public opinion."] Public opinion at present controlled these schools. [Cheers and loud cries of "No."] They were carried on under local scrutiny and under the pressure of local public opinion. [Cries of "No" and ironical laughter.] It was very easy to parade in the House a few very exceptional cases of things done which all regretted; but on the whole the management of the Voluntary Schools was carried on in the light of day and in a manner approved of by the public opinion of the House of Commons. [Cheers and cries of "No."]

MR. A. J. MUNDELLA (Sheffield, Brightside): What is the case in Scotland? [Cheers.]

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL said that surely the right hon. Gentleman knew that the School Boards in Scotland had the control of the schools, and contributed out of the rates for their support. If the right hon. Gentleman wished to apply the lessons he had learnt north of the Tweed let him apply them in their entirety. [Cheers.] Now, he would not add to the length of the Debate by elaborating arguments which might be adduced. He had endeavoured to deal with the salient points put forward and emphasised by the right hon. Member for Wolverhampton. He would only, in conclusion, call the attention of the House to the fact that this Instruction was one which, if adopted, would have the effect of wrecking the Bill. But of its being adopted there was not the slightest chance. [Cheers.] Hon. Gentlemen opposite might say that the Instruction was to be thrown out by votes. But he believed that if time permitted of every one of his hon. Friends speaking in the Debate, they would find it would be thrown out, not merely by votes, but by the vastly preponderating opinion of the whole House. [Cheers.]

MR. JOHN BRIGG (York, W.R., Keighley) said they had listened to no speech in the Debate with more respect than that of the hon. Member for North Islington, in which he urged the House to adopt the principle of the Instruction, leaving to be decided later how it could best be carried out. The difficulties which had been raised as to carrying out the Instruction had been fully met by Members on both sides of the House. There should be popular control of the Voluntary Schools, the management of which was often now anything but what it should be. Better managers were needed. It had been shown conclusively that Board Schools were always willing and able to earn 1s. per head more than Voluntary Schools. Although money was useful in the management of the schools, it was, after all, a question of school management, and for this better provision should be made.

MR. H. J. WILSON (Yorks, W.R., Holmfirth) remarked that stress had been laid on the fact that in 8,000 parishes in this country there was absolutely no choice for parents in the matter of schools. That was a very moderate statement of the case. Where was there adequate choice? Let them have plenty of room in the Board Schools, and let them see, then, how they would be filled up. In many cases there was no choice whatever. He had been for many years a Member of the School Board for Sheffield, and he had had to sit on the Appeal Committee, before which the question had been raised again and again, Where were the parents to send their children? and he had been obliged to tell parents that they must send them to Roman Catholic schools, because there was nowhere else to send them. Here was an opportunity of ascertaining whether denominational schools were really as popular with the people as hon. Gentlemen opposite averred. But this very moderate proposal that there should be a minority representation of the ratepayers or parents, or of both, was scorned and rejected by the Party opposite. The right hon. Member for Bodmin had tried to extract from the First Lord of the Treasury what was his true position in relation to this matter; but he had failed, in spite of his ingenuity. From the Solicitor General's speech, however, there could be no doubt that the occupants of the Ministerial Bench had a rooted objection to the representation of the parents. The hon. and learned Gentleman seemed to think that parents who were compelled to send their children to Voluntary Schools were persons of no importance.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL: No; I said that the representation of parents was an admirable thing, and could be effected by arrangement, but that to pass a law making it compulsory was impracticable, and would result in mischief. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. H. J. WILSON thought that when the hon. and learned Gentleman said that he must have been laughing in his sleeve. Reasonable clerical managers might very possibly welcome the assistance of parents; but how about the cases where they were not reasonable—cases where the parents desired representation and the clergy would not let them have it? They all knew of glaring cases of mismanagement and tyranny and violation of the Conscience Clause. If they referred to such cases in that House, they were at once called upon by hon. Members opposite to give names; but those hon. Members knew quite well that if the names were given, the unhappy victims of clerical tyranny would be made to suffer still more in the future than in the past. Hon. Members of that House had a free choice in regard to their children's schools, but poor people, not only in the 8,000 villages which had been mentioned but in many large towns as well, had no choice at all; and when it was proposed to give them a little representation the Government declared that the idea could not be entertained for a single moment. Right hon. Gentlemen opposite would find that they would be asked in the country how it was that at elections they expressed so much confidence in the people, but when in power refused to grant them any modicum of representation. [Cries of "Oh!" and "Hear, hear!"] The very moderate proposal of the Opposition was scorned and rejected by the Government—[cries of "Divide!" and "Order!"]—who seemed to think that the parents of the children were of no importance.

The First Lord of the Treasury and Mr. J. Morley rose simultaneously. The former having given way,

Mr. J. MORLEY (Montrose Burghs) said: I beg to move that this Debate be now adjourned. [Loud Ministerial cries of "Oh!" and cheers.]

*Mr. SPEAKER: Does any Gentleman second the Motion?

Sir W. HARCOURT: Yes, Sir, I rise to second it. [Renewed interruption and cheers.]

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I hope the two right hon. Gentlemen who have associated themselves in so unusual a manner with this Motion—[cheers]—will not think of pressing it upon the House. We have now been discussing this Instruction for a whole night. Two right hon. Gentlemen have spoken from the Front Bench opposite, and two Gentlemen have also spoken from this Front Bench, and, according to the ordinary procedure of the House, had a third Gentleman desired to address us from the Front Opposition Bench he would have risen after my hon. and learned Friend the Solicitor General had spoken, and would have replied to his speech. I never in my whole Parliamentary experience—[cheers]—recollect a course being taken like that which the right hon. Gentlemen opposite have thought fit to take to-night. It is not in accordance with our ordinary practice. I do not like even to suggest that it was done in order unduly to prolong Debate—[cheers]—but, had that been the object which right hon. Gentlemen had in view, I do not know that there was any other course which they could have pursued. A similar Instruction to the one we are now discussing was moved on a somewhat similar ocasion, when my right hon. Friend the Member for the Dartford Division brought in his Bill for free education. It was then said that a grant of 10s. per child—not 5s.—supplied a proper occasion for dealing with the question of popular control. That was an occasion absolutely parallel to the present, and one night was thought sufficient by universal consent for dealing with the Amendment; and I confess I could not be a party to an attempt to prolong the present discussion. [Loud cheers.]

*Mr. JOHN ELLIS (Nottingham, Rushcliffe), who spoke amid Ministerial cries of "Divide," said he could give the right hon. Gentleman a good reason why the Debate should be adjourned—on the ground of ordinary Parliamentary procedure, to quote the expression just made use of by the Leader of the House. The House had not heard a word from the Vice President of the Council—["Oh, oh!" and cheers]—and he said they might search "Hansard" through in vain when a great Education Bill had been before the House to find that the Vice President of the Council, who was the Minister responsible to the House—[cheers]—had never been allowed to open his mouth. [Cheers.]

Mr. C. P. SCOTT (Lancashire, Leigh), who also spoke amid loud cries of "Divide" and interruption, said the more this question was discussed the more the country would be roused to a sense of its importance. [Cheers.] Why had the House been threatened on this occasion with the resignation of the Government? [Ironical laughter.] Was it not because the First Lord of the Treasury knew that he could not trust his supporters? [Cheers and laughter.] They had seen no more remarkable demonstration than that which took place that evening on the other side of the House. It had even taken the Opposition by surprise.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY rose just before midnight and claimed to move, "That the Question be now put." [Ministerial cheers.]

Question put, "That the Question be now put."

The House divided: — Ayes, 284; Noes, 133.

The announcement of the figures was received with Ministerial cheers.

Division List—No. 48—appended.

AYES.

Allhusen, Augustus Henry Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Arnold-Forster, Hugh O.
Ashmead-Bartlett, Sir Ellis
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Baden-Powell, Sir Geo. Smyth
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Baillie, James E. B. (Inverness)
Balcarres, Lord
Baldwin, Alfred
Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r)
Balfour, Gerald William (Leeds)
Banbury, Frederick George
Barry, A. H. Smith- (Hunts.)
Barry, Francis Tress (Windsor)
Bartley, George, C. T.
Bass, Hamar
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt. Hon. Sir M. H. (Bristol)
Beach, W. W. Bramston (Hants)
Beckett, Ernest William
Begg, Ferdinand Faithfull
Bemrose, Henry Howe
Bentinck, Lord Henry C.
Bethell, Captain
Biddulph, Michael
Bigham, John Charles
Bigwood, James
Bond, Edward
Bonsor, Henry Cosmo Orme
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith-
Bousfield, William Robert
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brown, Alexander H.
Bucknill, Thomas Townsend
Bullard, Sir Harry
Butcher, John George
Campbell, James A.
Carew, James Laurence
Carlile, William Walter
Carson, Edward
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbyshire)
Cecil, Lord Hugh
Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Birm.)
Chamberlain, J. Austen (Worc'r)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Charrington, Spencer
Clare, Octavius Leigh
Clarke, Sir Edward (Plymouth)
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Sir John Charles Ready
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Compton, Lord Alwyne (Beds.)
Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
Cooke, C. W. Radcliffe (Heref'd)
Courtney, Rt. Hon. Leonard H.
Cranborne, Viscount
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Cross, Herb. Shepherd (Bolton)
Curzon, Rt. Hn. G. N. (Lanc. S. W.)
Curzon, Viscount (Bucks.)
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Darling, Charles John
Davenport, W. Bromley-
Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P.
Dixon-Hartland, Sir Fred. Dixon

Donkin, Richard Sim
Dorington, Sir John Edward
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Doxford, William Theodore
Drucker, A.
Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
Dyke, Rt.Hon. Sir William Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Fardell, Thomas George
Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn Edward
Fergusson, Rt.Hn.Sir J.(Mancr.)
Field, Admiral (Eastbourne)
Fielden, Thomas
Finch, George H.
Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir R. U. Penrose
Flannery, Fortescue
Fletcher, Sir Henry
Flower, Ernest
Folkestone, Viscount
Forster, Henry William
Foster, Colonel (Lancaster)
Foster, Harry S. (Suffolk)
Fry, Lewis
Galloway, William Johnson
Garfit, William
Gedge, Sydney
Gibbs, Hn. A. G. H. (City of Lond.)
Gibbs, Hon. Vicary (St. Albans)
Gilliat, John Saunders
Godson, Augustus Frederick
Goldsworthy, Major-General
Gordon, John Edward
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Rt. Hn. G. J. (St. G'rg's)
Goschen, George J. (Sussex)
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Green, Walford D. (Wednesb'ry)
Gretton, John
Greville, Captain
Gull, Sir Cameron
Halsey, Thomas Frederick
Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord Geo.
Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm.
Hardy, Laurence
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Havelock-Allan, General Sir H.
Heath, James
Heaton, John Henniker
Hermon-Hodge, Robert Trotter
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Hill, Rt. Hn. Lord Arthur (Down)
Hoare, Edw. Brodie (Hampstead)
Hoare, Samuel (Norwich)
Hobhouse, Henry
Holland, Hon. Lionel Raleigh
Hopkinson, Alfred
Hornby, William Henry
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Houston, R. P.
Howard, Joseph
Howell, William Tudor
Hozier, James Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. Grice-
Hutton, John (Yorks. N.R.)
Isaacson, Frederick Wootton
Jebb, Richard Claverhouse

Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
Jenkins, Sir John Jones
Jessel, Captain Herbert Merton
Johnston, William (Belfast)
Johnstone, John H. (Sussex)
Jolliffe, Hon. H. George
Kemp, George
Kennaway, Rt. Hon. Sir John H.
Kenrick, William
Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
Kimber, Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Lees
Knox, Edmund Francis Vesey
Lafone, Alfred
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverpool)
Lea, Sir Thomas (Londonderry)
Lecky, William Edward H.
Lees, Elliott (Birkenhead)
Legh, Hon. Thomas W. (Lanc.)
Leigh-Bennett, Henry Currie
Leighton, Stanley
Llewelyn, Sir Dillwyn-(Swans'a)
Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A.R. (Essex)
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. Charles W. (Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hn. Walter (Liverpool)
Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
Lorne, Marquess of
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas-Shadwell, William
Lyttelton, Hon. Alfred
Macaleese, Daniel
Macdona, John Cumming
Maclean, James Mackenzie
Maclure, John William
McCalmont, Col. J. (Antrim E.)
M'Hugh, E. (Armagh, S.)
McIver, Sir Lewis
McKillop, James
Malcolm, Ian
Maple, Sir John Blundell
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
Milbank, Powlett Charles John
Milton, Viscount
Milward, Colonel Victor
Monckton, Edward Philip
Monk, Charles James
Montagu, Hon. J. Scott (Hants)
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
More, Robert Jasper
Morgan, Hn. Fred. (Monm'thsh.)
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, Walter
Mount, William George
Muntz, Philip A.
Murdoch, Charles Townshend
Murray, Rt. Hn. A. Grah'm (Bute)
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Myers, William Henry
Nicol, Donald Ninian
Northcote, Hon. Sir H. Stafford
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Connor, Arthur (Donegal)
O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrens
Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
Parkes, Ebenezer
Parnell, John Howard
Pease, Arthur (Darlington)
Penn, John
Pierpoint, Robert
Platt-Higgins, Frederick

Plunkett, Hon. Horace Curzon
Pollock, Harry Frederick
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Purvis, Robert
Rankin, James
Rasch, Major Frederic Carne
Rentoul, James Alexander
Richards, Henry Charles
Richardson, Thomas
Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
Ritchie, Rt. Hon. Chas. Thomson
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Round, James
Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
Russell, Sir George (Berksh.)
Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
Rutherford, John
Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
Saunderson, Col. Edw. James
Savory, Sir Joseph
Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
Seely, Charles Hilton
Seton-Karr, Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
Simeon, Sir Barrington
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Smith, Abel (Herts)
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Stanley, Lord (Lancs.)
Stanley, Edw. Jas. (Somerset)
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Strauss, Arthur
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Talbot, John G. (Oxford Univ.)
Taylor, Francis
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Wm. Edw. Murray
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. Howard
Warde, Lt.-Col. C. E. (Kent)
Warkworth, Lord
Webster, Sir R. E. (Isle of Wight)
Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon-
Whiteley, George (Stockport)
Whiteley, H. (Ashton-under-L.)
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Col. R. (Dorset)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Willox, John Archibald
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wilson, J. W. (Worc'shire, N.)
Wodehouse, Edmond R. (Bath)
Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart-
Wyndham, George
Wyvill, Marmaduke D'Arcy
Yerburgh, Robert Armstrong
Younger, William

TELLERS FOR THE AYES, Sir William Walrond and Mr. Anstruther.

NOES.

Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Acland, Rt. Hon. A. H. Dyke
Allan, William (Gateshead)
Allen, Wm. (Newc. under Lyme)
Allison, Robert Andrew
Arch, Joseph
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Atherley-Jones, L.
Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire)
Baker, Sir John
Barlow, John Emmott
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Birrell, Augustine
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Brigg, John
Broadhurst, Henry
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Burns, John
Burt, Thomas
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Robert
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Carmichael, Sir T. D. Gibson-
Causton, Richard Knight
Cawley, Frederick
Channing, Francis Allston
Clough, Walter Owen
Colville, John
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Cozens-Hardy, Herbert Hardy
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, M. Vaughan- (Cardigan)
Davies, W. Rees- (Pembrokesh.)
Davitt, Michael
Dixon, George
Doughty, George
Dunn, Sir William
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hn. Sir H. (Wol'tn)
Fowler, Matthew (Durham)
Gilhooly, James
Gladstone, Rt. Hn. Herbert John
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Gourley, Sir Edward Temperley
Griffith, Ellis J.
Haldane, Richard Burdon
Harcourt, Rt. Hon. Sir William
Harrison, Charles
Harwood George
Hayne, Rt. Hon. Charles Seale-
Hazell, Walter
Hogan, James Francis
Holburn, J. G.
Horniman, Frederick John
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Jacoby, James Alfred
Jameson, Major J. Eustace
Johnson-Ferguson, Jabez Edw.
Jones, David Brynmor (Swansea)
Jones, William (Carnarvonshire)
Kilbride, Denis
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cumb'land)
Leng, Sir John
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lockwood, Sir Frank (York)
Logan, John William
Luttrell, Hugh Fownes
M'Hugh, Patrick A. (Leitrim)
McKenna, Reginald
McLaren, Charles Benjamin
McLeod, John
Maden, John Henry
Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Morley, Charles (Breconshire)
Morley, Rt. Hn. John (Montrose)
Mundella, Rt. Hn. Anthony John
Norton, Captain Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
Oldroyd, Mark
Owen, Thomas
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
Perks, Robert William
Pickersgill, Edward Hare
Pirie, Captain Duncan Vernon
Price, Robert John
Priestley, Briggs (Yorks.)
Provand, Andrew Dryburgh
Randell, David
Reckitt, Harold James
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, Hon. James (East Kerry)
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Schwann, Charles E.
Scott, Charles Prestwich
Shaw, Charles Edw. (Stafford)
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Souttar, Robinson
Spicer, Albert
Stanhope, Hon. Philip J.
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Edward
Thomas, Abel (Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas, Alfred (Glamorgan, E.)
Wallace, Robert (Perth)
Walton, John Lawson
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wayman, Thomas
Wedderburn, Sir William
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, John Carvell (Notts.)
Wills, Sir William Henry
Wilson, Frederick W. (Norfolk)
Wilson, Henry J. (York, W.R.)
Wilson, John (Govan)
Woodall, William
Woodhouse, Sir J.T. (Hud'rsf'ld)
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE NOES, Mr. Thomas Ellis and Mr. McArthur

Question put accordingly, "That the Debate be now adjourned."

The House divided:—Ayes, 133; Noes, 283.—(Division List—No. 49—appended).

AYES.

Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Acland, Rt. Hon. A. H. Dyke
Allan, William (Gateshead)
Allen, Wm. (Newc. under Lyme)
Allison, Robert Andrew
Arch, Joseph
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Atherley-Jones, L.
Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire)
Baker, Sir John
Barlow, John Emmott
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Birrell, Augustine
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Brigg, John
Broadhurst, Henry
Brunner, Sir John Tomlinson
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Burns, John
Burt, Thomas
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Robert (Durham)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Carmichael, Sir T. D. Gibson-
Causton, Richard Knight
Cawley, Frederick
Channing, Francis Allston
Clough, Walter Owen
Colville, John
Condon, Thomas Joseph
Cozens-Hardy, Herbert Hardy

Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, M.Vaughan-(Cardigan)
Davies, W. Rees- (Pembrokesh.)
Davitt, Michael
Dixon, George
Doughty, George
Dunn, Sir William
Ellis, John Edward (Notts)
Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Foster, Sir Walter (Derby Co.)
Fowler,Rt. Hon.Sir H. (Wol'tn)
Fowler, Matthew (Durham)
Gilhooly, James
Gladstone,Rt. Hn. Herbert John
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Gourley Sir Edward Temperley
Griffith, Ellis J.
Haldane, Richard Burdon
Harcourt, Rt. Hon. Sir William
Harrison, Charles
Harwood, George
Hayne, Rt. Hon. Charles Seale-
Hazell, Walter
Holburn, J. G.
Horniman, Frederick John
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Jacoby, James Alfred
Jameson, Major J. Eustace
Johnson-Ferguson, Jabez Edw.
Jones,David Brynmor(Swansea)
Jones, William (Carnarvonsh.)
Kilbride, Denis
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Lawson,SirWilfrid(Cumb'land)
Leng, Sir John
Lloyd-George, David
Lockwood, Sir Frank (York)
Logan, John William
Luttrell, Hugh Fownes
McKenna, Reginald
McLaren, Charles Benjamin
McLeod, John
Maden, John Henry
Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Morley, Charles (Breconshire)
Morley,Rt.Hon.John (Montrose)
Mundella, Rt.Hn.Anthony John
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
O'Connor, T. P. (Liverpool)
Oldroyd, Mark
Owen, Thomas
Parnell, John Howard
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
Perks, Robert William
Pickersgill, Edward Hare
Pirie, Captain Duncan Vernon
Price, Robert John
Priestley, Briggs (Yorks.)
Provand, Andrew Dryburgh
Randell, David
Reckitt, Harold James
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs.)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche,Hon. James (East Kerry)
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Schwann, Charles E.
Scott, Charles Prestwich
Shaw, Charles Edw. (Stafford)
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Souttar, Robinson
Spicer, Albert
Stanhope, Hon. Philip J.
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Edward
Thomas, Abel (Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas, Alfred (Glamorgan,E.)
Wallace, Robert (Perth)
Walton, John Lawson
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wayman, Thomas
Wedderburn, Sir William
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, John Carvell (Notts)
Wills, Sir William Henry
Wilson, Frederick W. (Norfolk)
Wilson, Henry J. (York, W.R.)
Wilson, John (Govan)
Woodall, William
Woodhouse,SirJ.T(Hudd'rsf'ld)
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES, Mr. Thomas Ellis and Mr. McArthur

NOES.

Allhusen,Augustus Henry Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Arnold-Forster, Hugh O.
Ashmead-Bartlett, Sir Ellis
Atkinson, Rt. Hon. John
Baden-Powell, Sir Geo. Smyth
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Baillie, James E. B. (Inverness)
Balcarres, Lord
Baldwin, Alfred
Balfour,Rt. Hon.A. J.(Manch'r)
Balfour, Gerald William(Leeds)
Banbury, Frederick George
Barry, A. H. Smith- (Hunts.)
Barry, Francis Tress (Windsor)
Bartley, George C. T.
Bass, Hamar
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach,Rt.Hn. Sir M.H. (Bristol)
Beach,W.W. Bramston (Hants.)
Beckett, Ernest William
Begg, Ferdinand Faithfull
Bemrose, Henry Howe
Bentinck, Lord Henry C.
Bethell, Commander
Biddulph, Michael
Bigham, John Charles
Bigwood, James
Bond, Edward
Bonsor, Henry Cosmo Orme
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith-
Bousfield, William Robert
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brown, Alexander H.
Bucknill, Thomas Townsend
Bullard, Sir Harry
Butcher, John George
Campbell, James A.
Carew, James Laurence
Carlile, William Walter
Carson, Edward
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs.)
Cavendish,V.C.W. (Derbyshire)
Cecil, Lord Hugh
Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
Chamberlain, Rt. Hon.J. (Birm.)
Chamberlain,J.Austen,(Worc'r)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Charrington, Spencer
Clare, Octavius Leigh
Clarke, Sir Edward (Plymouth)
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Sir John Charles Ready
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Compton, Lord Alwyne (Beds.)
Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
Cooke, C. W. Radcliffe (Heref'd)
Courtney, Rt. Hon. Leonard H.
Cranbourne, Viscount
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Cross, Herb. Shepherd (Bolton)
Curzon,Rt.Hn.G.N.(Lanc.S.W.)
Curzon, Viscount (Bucks)
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Darling, Charles John
Davenport, W. Bromley
Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P.
Dixon-Hartland,SirFred. Dixon
Dorington, Sir John Edward
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Doxford, William Theodore
Drucker, A.
Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
Dyke, Rt. Hon.SirWilliam Hart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Fardell, Thomas George
Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn Edward
Fergusson,Rt.Hn.SirJ. (Manch.)
Field, Admiral (Eastbourne)
Fielden, Thomas
Finch, George H.
Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir R. U. Penrose
Flannery, Fortescue
Fletcher, Sir Henry
Flower, Ernest
Folkestone, Viscount
Forster, Henry William
Foster, Colonel (Lancaster)
Foster, Harry S. (Suffolk)
Fry, Lewis
Galloway, William Johnson
Garfit, William
Gedge, Sydney
Gibbs,Hn.A.G.H.(City of Lond.
Gibbs, Hon.Vicary (St. Albans)

Gilliat, John Saunders
Godson, Augustus Frederick
Goldsworthy, Major-General
Gordon, John Edward
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goschen, Rt. Hon. G. J. (St. G'rg's)
Goschen, George J. (Sussex)
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Gray, Ernest (West Ham)
Green, Walford D. (Wednesb'ry)
Gretton, John
Greville, Captain
Gull, Sir Cameron
Halsey, Thomas Frederick
Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord Geo.
Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm.
Hardy, Laurence
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Havelock-Allan, General Sir H.
Heath, James
Heaton, John Henniker
Hermon-Hodge, Robert Trotter
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Hill, Rt. Hon. Ld. Arthur (Down)
Hoare, Edw. Brodie (Hampstead)
Hoare, Samuel (Norwich)
Hobhouse, Henry
Holland, Hon. Lionel Raleigh
Hopkinson, Alfred
Hornby, William Henry
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Houston, R. P.
Howard, Joseph
Howell, William Tudor
Hozier, James Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. Grice-
Hutton, John (Yorks, N.R.)
Isaacson, Frederick Wootton
Jebb, Richard Claverhouse
Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
Jenkins, Sir John Jones
Jessel, Captain Herbert Merton
Johnston, William (Belfast)
Johnstone, John H. (Sussex)
Jolliffe, Hon. H. George
Kemp, George
Kennaway, Rt. Hon. Sir John H.
Kenrick, William
Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
Kimber, Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Lees
Knox, Edmund Francis Vesey
Lafone, Alfred
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverpool)
Lea, Sir Thomas (Londonderry)
Lecky, William Edward H.
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Legh, Hon. Thomas W. (Lanc.)
Leigh-Bennett, Henry Currie
Leighton, Stanley
Llewelyn, Sir Dillwyn-(Swans'a)
Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A. R. (Essex)
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long, Col. Charles W. (Evesham)
Long, Rt. Hn. Walter (Liverpool)
Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
Lorne, Marquess of
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas-Shadwell, William
Lyttelton, Hon. Alfred
Macaleese, Daniel
Macdona, John Cumming
Maclean, James Mackenzie
Maclure, John William
McCalmont, Col. J. (Antrim, E.)
M'Hugh, E. (Armagh, S.)
McIver, Sir Lewis
McKillop, James
Malcolm, Ian
Maple, Sir John Blundell
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
Milbank, Powlett Charles John
Milton, Viscount
Milward, Colonel Victor
Monckton, Edward Philip
Monk, Charles James
Montagu, Hon. J. Scott (Hants.)
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
More, Robert Jasper
Morgan, Hn. Fred. (Monm'thsh.)
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, Walter
Mount, William George
Muntz, Philip A.
Murdoch, Charles Townshend
Murray, Rt. Hn. A. Graham (Bute)
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Myers, William Henry
Nicol, Donald Ninian
Northcote, Hon. Sir H. Stafford
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Connor, Arthur (Donegal)
O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrens
Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
Parkes, Ebenezer
Pease, Arthur (Darlington)
Penn, John
Pierpoint, Robert
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plunkett, Hon. Horace Curzon
Pollock, Harry Frederick
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Purvis, Robert
Rankin, James
Rasch, Major Frederic Carne
Rentoul, James Alexander
Richards, Henry Charles
Richardson, Thomas
Ridley, Rt. Hon. Sir Matthew W.
Ritchie, Rt. Hon. Chas. Thomson
Rollit, Sir Albert Kaye
Round, James
Russell, Gen. F. S. (Cheltenham)
Russell, Sir George (Berksh.)
Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
Rutherford, John
Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
Saunderson, Col. Edw. James
Savory, Sir Joseph
Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
Seely, Charles Hilton
Seton-Karr, Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
Simeon, Sir Barrington
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Smith, Abel (Herts.)
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Stanley, Lord (Lancs.)
Stanley, Edw. Jas. (Somerset)
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Strauss, Arthur
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Talbot, Lord E. (Chichester)
Talbot, John G. (Oxford Univ.)
Taylor, Francis
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Wm. Edw. Murray
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. Howard
Warde, Lt.-Col. C. E. (Kent)
Warkworth, Lord
Webster, Sir R. E. (I. of W.)
Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon-
Whiteley, George (Stockport)
Whiteley, H. (Ashton-under-L.)
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Willox, John Archibald
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wilson, J. W. (Worc'sh. N.)
Wodehouse, Edmond R. (Bath)
Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart-
Wyndham, George
Wyvill, Marmaduke D'Arcy
Yerburgh, Robert Armstrong
Younger, William

TELLERS FOR THE NOES, Sir William Walrond and Mr. Anstruther.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY claimed, "That the Original Question be now put."

Original Question put accordingly,

"That it be an Instruction to the Committee that they have power to insert Clauses in the Bill with a view to making provision for insuring adequate representation of local authorities or parents on the management of the schools in receipt of the aid grant."—(Mr. Lloyd-George.)

The House divided:—Ayes, 134; Noes, 270.—(Division List—No. 50—appended.)

AYES.

Abraham, William (Rhondda)
Acland, Rt. Hon. A. H. Dyke
Allan, William (Gateshead)
Allen, W. (Newc.-under-Lyme.)
Allison, Robert Andrew
Arch, Joseph
Ashton, Thomas Gair
Atherley-Jones, L.
Austin, Sir John (Yorkshire)
Baker, Sir John
Barlow, John Emmott
Bartley, George C. T.
Bayley, Thomas (Derbyshire)
Beaumont, Wentworth C. B.
Birrell, Augustine
Bolton, Thomas Dolling
Brigg, John
Broadhurst, Henry
Brunner, Sir John Thomas
Bryce, Rt. Hon. James
Burns, John
Burt, Thomas
Buxton, Sydney Charles
Caldwell, James
Cameron, Robert (Durham)
Campbell-Bannerman, Sir H.
Carmichael, Sir T. D. Gibson-
Causton, Richard Knight
Cawley, Frederick
Channing, Francis Allston
Clough, Walter Owen
Colville, John
Courtney, Rt. Hon. Leonard H.
Cozens-Hardy, Herbert Hardy
Cross, Alexander (Glasgow)
Dalziel, James Henry
Davies, M. Vaughan-(Cardigan)
Davies, W. Rees- (Pembrokesh.)
Davitt, Michael
Dilke, Rt. Hon. Sir Charles
Dixon, George
Doughty, George
Dunn, Sir William
Ellis, John Edward (Notts.)
Evans, Samuel T. (Glamorgan)
Ferguson, R. C. Munro (Leith)
Foster, Sir W. (Derby Co.)
Fowler, Rt. Hn. Sir H. (Wol'h'tn)
Fowler, Matthew (Durham)
Gladstone, Rt. Hn. Herbert John
Goddard, Daniel Ford
Gourley, Sir Edward Temperley
Griffith, Ellis J.
Haldane, Richard Burdon
Harcourt, Rt. Hon. Sir William
Harrison, Charles
Harwood, George
Hayne, Rt. Hon. Charles Seale-
Hazell, Walter
Holburn, J. G.
Horniman, Frederick John
Humphreys-Owen, Arthur C.
Hutton, Alfred E. (Morley)
Jacoby, James Alfred
Johnson-Ferguson, Jabez Edw.
Jones, David Brynmor (Swansea)
Jones, William (Carnarvonshire)
Kilbride, Denis
Kitson, Sir James
Labouchere, Henry
Lambert, George
Lawson, Sir Wilfrid (Cumb.)
Lea, Sir Thomas (Londonderry)
Leng, Sir John
Lewis, John Herbert
Lloyd-George, David
Lockwood, Sir Frank (York)
Logan, John William
Luttrell, Hugh Fownes
McKenna, Reginald
McLaren, Charles Benjamin
McLeod, John
Maden, John Henry
Morgan, J. Lloyd (Carmarthen)
Morley, Charles (Breconshire)
Morley, Rt. Hon. John (Montrose
Mundella, Rt. Hon Anthony John
Norton, Capt. Cecil William
Nussey, Thomas Willans
Oldroyd, Mark
Owen, Thomas
Paulton, James Mellor
Pease, Joseph A. (Northumb.)
Perks, Robert William
Pickersgill, Edward Hare
Pirie, Captain Duncan Vernon
Price, Robert John
Priestley, Briggs (Yorks)
Provand, Andrew Dryburgh
Randell, David
Reckitt, Harold James
Rickett, J. Compton
Roberts, John Bryn (Eifion)
Roberts, John H. (Denbighs)
Robson, William Snowdon
Roche, Hon. James (East Kerry)
Rollit, Sir Albert K.
Sandys, Lieut.-Col. Thos. Myles
Schwann, Charles E.
Scott, Charles (Prestwich)
Shaw, Charles Edw. (Stafford)
Smith, Samuel (Flint)
Souttar, Robinson
Spicer, Albert
Stanhope, Hon. Philip J.
Stevenson, Francis S.
Strachey, Edward
Thomas, Abel (Carmarthen, E.)
Thomas, Alfred (Glamorgan, E.)
Wallace, Robert (Perth)
Walton, John Lawson
Warner, Thomas Courtenay T.
Wayman, Thomas
Wedderburn, Sir William
Whittaker, Thomas Palmer
Williams, John Carvell (Notts.)
Wills, Sir William Henry
Wilson, Frederick W. (Norfolk)
Wilson, Henry J. (York, W.R.)
Wilson, John (Falkirk)
Wilson, John (Govan)
Woodall, William
Woodhouse, Sir J. T. (Hudd'rsf'ld.
Yoxall, James Henry

TELLERS FOR THE AYES, Mr. Thomas Ellis and Mr. McArthur.

NOES.

Allhusen, Augustus Henry Eden
Allsopp, Hon. George
Arnold-Forster, Hugh O.
Ashmead-Bartlett, Sir Ellis
Atkinson, Right Hon. John
Baden-Powell, Sir Geo. Smyth
Bagot, Capt. Josceline FitzRoy
Baillie, James E. B. (Inverness)
Balcarres, Lord
Baldwin, Alfred
Balfour, Rt. Hon. A. J. (Manch'r)
Balfour, Gerald William (Leeds)
Banbury, Frederick George
Barry, A. H. Smith-(Hunts.)
Barry, Francis Tress (Windsor)
Bass, Hamar
Bathurst, Hon. Allen Benjamin
Beach, Rt. Hn. Sir M. H. (Brstl)
Beach, W. W. Bramston (Hants)
Beckett, Ernest William
Begg, Ferdinand Faithfull
Bemrose, Henry Howe
Bentinck, Lord Henry C.
Bethell, Commander
Biddulph, Michael
Bigham, John Charles
Bigwood, James
Bond, Edward
Bonsor, Henry Cosmo Orme
Boscawen, Arthur Griffith-
Bousfield, William Robert
Brassey, Albert
Brodrick, Rt. Hon. St. John
Brown, Alexander H.
Bucknill, Thomas Townsend
Bullard, Sir Harry
Butcher, John George
Campbell, James A.
Carew, James Laurence
Carlile, William Walter
Carson, Edward
Cavendish, R. F. (N. Lancs)
Cavendish, V. C. W. (Derbyshire)
Cecil, Lord Hugh
Chaloner, Captain R. G. W.
Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. (Birm.)
Chamberlain, J. Austen (Worc'r)
Chaplin, Rt. Hon. Henry
Charrington, Spencer
Clare, Octavius Leigh
Clarke, Sir Edward (Plymouth)
Cochrane, Hon. Thos. H. A. E.
Cohen, Benjamin Louis
Collings, Rt. Hon. Jesse
Colomb, Sir John Charles Ready
Colston, Chas. Edw. H. Athole
Compton, Lord Alwyne (Beds)

Cook, Fred. Lucas (Lambeth)
Cooke, C.W. Radcliffe (Heref'd)
Cranborne, Viscount
Cripps, Charles Alfred
Cross, Herb. Shepherd (Bolton)
Curzon,Rt.Hn.G.N.(Lanc.S.W.)
Curzon, Viscount (Bucks)
Dalrymple, Sir Charles
Darling, Charles John
Davenport, W. Bromley-
Dickson-Poynder, Sir John P.
Dixon-Hartland, Sir F. Dixon
Dorington, Sir John Edward
Douglas, Rt. Hon. A. Akers-
Doxford, William Theodore
Drucker, A.
Duncombe, Hon. Hubert V.
Dyke, Rt. Hon.Sir WilliamHart
Egerton, Hon. A. de Tatton
Fardell, Thomas George
Fellowes, Hon. Ailwyn Edward
Fergusson, Rt.Hn. SirJ.(Manc.)
Field, Admiral (Eastbourne
Fielden, Thomas
Finch, George H.
Finlay, Sir Robert Bannatyne
Fisher, William Hayes
Fison, Frederick William
FitzGerald, Sir R. U. Penrose
Flannery, Fortescue
Fletcher, Sir Henry
Flower, Ernest
Folkestone, Viscount
Forster, Henry William
Foster, Colonel (Lancaster)
Foster, Harry S. (Suffolk)
Galloway, William Johnson
Garfit, William
Gedge, Sydney
Gibbs, Hn.A.G.H.(City of Lond.
Gibbs, Hon. Vicary (St. Albans)
Gilliat, John Saunders
Godson, Augustus Frederick
Goldsworthy, Major-General
Gordon, John Edward
Gorst, Rt. Hon. Sir John Eldon
Goschen,Rt.Hn.G.J.(St.G'rg's)
Goschen, George J. (Sussex)
Goulding, Edward Alfred
Graham, Henry Robert
Green,Walford D. (Wednesb'ry)
Gretton, John
Greville, Captain
Gull, Sir Cameron
Halsey, Thomas Frederick
Hamilton, Rt. Hon. Lord Geo.
Hanbury, Rt. Hon. Robert Wm.
Hardy, Laurence
Hare, Thomas Leigh
Haslett, Sir James Horner
Havelock-Allan, General Sir H.
Heath, James
Heaton, John Henniker
Hermon-Hodge, Robert Trotter
Hickman, Sir Alfred
Hill,Rt.Hn.Lord Arthur(Down)
Hoare,Edw.Brodie (Hampstead)
Hoare, Samuel (Norwich)
Holland, Hon. Lionel Raleigh
Hornby, William Henry
Houldsworth, Sir Wm. Henry
Houston, R. P.
Howard, Joseph
Howell, William Tudor
Hozier, James Henry Cecil
Hudson, George Bickersteth
Hutchinson, Capt. G. W. Grice-
Hutton, John (Yorks, N.R.)
Isaacson, Frederick Wootton
Jebb, Richard Claverhouse
Jeffreys, Arthur Frederick
Jenkins, Sir John Jones
Jessel, Captain Herbert Merton
Johnston, William (Belfast)
Johnstone, John H. (Sussex)
Jolliffe, Hon. H. George
Kemp, George
Kennaway,Rt. Hon. Sir John H.
Kenrick, William
Kenyon-Slaney, Col. William
Kimber, Henry
King, Sir Henry Seymour
Knowles, Lees
Knox, Edmund Francis Vesey
Lafone, Alfred
Laurie, Lieut.-General
Lawrence, Wm. F. (Liverpool)
Lecky, William Edward H.
Lees, Sir Elliott (Birkenhead)
Legh, Hon. Thomas W. (Lanc.)
Leigh-Bennett, Henry Currie
Leighton, Stanley
Llewelyn,Sir Dillwyn- (Swns'a)
Lockwood, Lt.-Col. A.R. (Essex)
Loder, Gerald Walter Erskine
Long,Col. CharlesW. (Evesham)
Long,Rt. Hn.Walter(Liverpool)
Lopes, Henry Yarde Buller
Lorne, Marquess of
Loyd, Archie Kirkman
Lucas-Shadwell, William
Macaleese, Daniel
Macdona, John Cumming
Maclean, James Mackenzie
Maclure, John William
McCalmont, Col. J.(Antrim, E.)
M'Hugh, E. (Armagh, S.)
McIver, Sir Lewis
McKillop, James
Malcolm, Ian
Maple, Sir John Blundell
Meysey-Thompson, Sir H. M.
Milbank, Powlett Charles John
Milton, Viscount
Milward, Colonel Victor
Monckton, Edward Philip
Monk, Charles James
Montagu, Hon. J. Scott (Hants)
Moon, Edward Robert Pacy
More, Robert Jasper
Morgan,Hn. Fred. (Monm'thsh.)
Morrell, George Herbert
Morrison, Walter
Mount, William George
Muntz, Philip A.
Murdoch, Charles Townshend
Murray,Rt.Hn.A.Graham (Bute
Murray, Charles J. (Coventry)
Myers, William Henry
Nicol, Donald Ninian
Northcote, Hon. Sir H.Stafford
O'Brien, Patrick (Kilkenny)
O'Connor, Arthur (Donegal)
O'Neill, Hon. Robert Torrens
Orr-Ewing, Charles Lindsay
Parkes, Ebenezer
Parnell, John Howard
Pease, Arthur (Darlington)
Penn, John
Pierpoint, Robert
Platt-Higgins, Frederick
Plunkett, Hon. Horace Curzon
Pollock, Harry Frederick
Powell, Sir Francis Sharp
Purvis, Robert
Rankin, James
Rentoul, James Alexander
Richards, Henry Charles
Richardson, Thomas
Ridley,Rt.Hon.Sir Matthew W.
Ritchie, Rt.Hon. Chas. Thomson
Round, James
Russell, Gen. F.S. (Cheltenham)
Russell, Sir George (Berkshire)
Russell, T. W. (Tyrone)
Rutherford, John
Samuel, Harry S. (Limehouse)
Saunderson, Col. Ewd. James
Savory, Sir Joseph
Scoble, Sir Andrew Richard
Seely, Charles Hilton
Seton-Karr, Henry
Sharpe, William Edward T.
Sidebotham, J. W. (Cheshire)
Simeon, Sir Barrington
Sinclair, Louis (Romford)
Skewes-Cox, Thomas
Smith, Abel (Herts.)
Smith, Abel H. (Christchurch)
Smith, Hon. W. F. D. (Strand)
Stanley, Lord (Lancs.)
Stanley, Edwd. Jas. (Somerset)
Stock, James Henry
Stone, Sir Benjamin
Strauss, Arthur
Strutt, Hon. Charles Hedley
Sturt, Hon. Humphry Napier
Sullivan, Donal (Westmeath)
Talbot Lord E. (Chichester)
Talbot, John G. (Oxford Univ.)
Taylor, Francis
Thornton, Percy M.
Tollemache, Henry James
Tomlinson, Wm. Edw. Murray
Tritton, Charles Ernest
Valentia, Viscount
Vincent, Col. Sir C. E. Howard
Ward, Lt.-Col. C. E. (Kent)
Warkworth, Lord
Webster, SirR.E.(Isle of Wight)
Welby, Lieut.-Col. A. C. E.
Wentworth, Bruce C. Vernon-
Whiteley, George (Stockport)
Whiteley, H. (Ashton-under-L.)
Whitmore, Charles Algernon
Williams, Colonel R. (Dorset)
Willoughby de Eresby, Lord
Willox, John Archibald
Wodehouse, Edmond R. (Bath)
Wortley, Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart-
Wyndham, George
Wyvill, Marmaduke D'Arcy
Yerburgh, Thomas Armstrong

TELLERS FOR THE NOES, Sir William Walrond and Mr. Anstruther.

Bill considered in Committee.

Clause 1,—

Committee report Progress; to sit again upon Monday next.

MILITARY WORKS (MONEY) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

PUBLIC HEALTH (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [5th February] further adjourned till Thursday next.

LAW OF EVIDENCE (CRIMINAL CASES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (ALDERSHOT AND FARNBOROUGH) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

BERRIEW SCHOOL BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

MILITARY LANDS ACT (1892) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

TRUSTS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Committee deferred till Tuesday next.

OLD AGE PROVIDENT PENSIONS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday, 17th June.

OUTDOOR PROVIDENT RELIEF BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday, 17th June.

TRUCK ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday, 12th March.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Standing Committee on Trade, etc. [17th February] further adjourned till Monday next.

ARCHDEACONRY OF LONDON (ADDITIONAL ENDOWMENTS) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [24th February] further adjourned till Wednesday next.

LABOURERS COTTAGES (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

ESTATES TAIL BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS (FAIR WAGES RESOLUTION).

Select Committee appointed to consider the working of the Fair Wages Resolution of February 1891, and its administration by the various Government Departments.

The Committee was accordingly nominated of—Mr. Allison, Mr. Austin, Mr. Banbury, Mr. Broadhurst, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Sydney Buxton, Sir Charles Dilke, Sir Arthur Forwood, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Maclean, Mr. Morrison, Sir Matthew White Ridley, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. Parker Smith, and Mr. Powell-Williams.

Ordered, That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers, and records.

Ordered, That Five be the quorum.—(Sir William Walrond.)

House adjourned at a Quarter before One o'Clock

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday, 26th February 1897.

SINCLAIR'S DIVORCE BILL.

Petition of Alfred Low Sinclair, of Holyhill, Strabane, County Tyrone, a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Indian Staff Corps, praying for leave to present a Bill: Considered (according to Order): Counsel called in: Moved that leave be given to present the said Bill; agreed to.

A Bill to dissolve the marriage of Alfred Low Sinclair, of Holyhill, Strabane, County Tyrone, a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Indian Staff Corps, with Isabella Sinclair, his wife, and to enable him to marry again, and for other purposes presented accordingly; Read 1ª; and to be read 2ª on Monday, the 28th of June next; the usual orders made.

EARL OF KINGSTON.

Petition of Henry Edwyn Earl of Kingston, in the Peerage of Ireland, claiming a right to vote at the elections of Representative Peers for Ireland. Read, and referred to the Lord Chancellor to consider and report thereupon to the House.

POST OFFICE CONSOLIDATION BILL [H.L.]

Referred to the Joint Committee on Statute Law Revision and Consolidation Bills; and a message ordered to be sent to the Commons to acquaint them therewith.

House adjourned at Half-past Four o'clock, to Monday next, a Quarter before Eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 26th February 1897.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

EAST LONDON WATER BILL.

On the Motion for the Second Reading of this Bill,

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) said he did not intend to oppose the Bill in any way, because it was essential that the company should have the powers they sought to carry out the projected works. But he felt constrained to express the regret which he believed the ratepayers of London felt that the question of the water supply of the metropolis was being dealt with piecemeal, thus involving great additional trouble and expense. It had been understood that the Government were prepared to deal with the whole question last Session, and that, not having done so, they would have introduced a Bill this Session. But it was evident that they did not intend to legislate on the matter. Under the circumstances, as representing an East End constituency, he should support the Second Reading, and he was glad to learn that the company had come to a satisfactory agreement with regard to land.

Bill read a Second time.

MR. J. M. PAULTON (Durham, Bishop Auckland) moved—

> "That it be an Instruction to the Committee to whom the East London Water Bill is referred that, having regard to the Resolution of this House of March 12, 1896, they do insert such provisions in the Bill as will insure the acquisition by the local authority of such a suitable area of open space as, in the judgment of the Committee ought fairly to be substituted for the common rights proposed to be extinguished under the Bill."

He remarked that he thought he was justified in moving the Instruction on two considerations—the protection of important public interests, and the fact that those interests could be protected without interfering with the purpose of the Bill. The Bill was introduced to enable the East London Water Company to obtain powers for acquiring certain lands in the neighbourhood of Tottenham to construct a new storage reservoir. Those lands, much of which was common land, were situated in the Lea Valley, and were in the midst of a growing population, and this made it all the more desirable that regard should be had to the preservation of open spaces. Last year the House not only rejected a Bill for the enclosure of certain common lands, but, on his Motion, unanimously passed a resolution declaring that they were not prepared to entertain any proposal for the enclosure of common lands within the metropolitan area. By this Instruction he sought to maintain the principle then laid down by Parliament. The circumstances in this case admitted of the view that these particular lands were required, and were especially suitable, for the purposes demanded by the company. The public interests involved would not suffer by the substitution of other land to be given by way of exchange for the common rights which were thus extinguished. The Board of Agriculture, in the excellent report they had made on this Bill, had said that, in their opinion, an amount of land equal in extent to the common land proposed to be taken under the Bill should be given by the promoters in substitution. Under the special circumstances of this case, he did not go so far as that, and his Instruction left it to the judgment of the Committee to say what, in their opinion, would be a fair and sufficient equivalent in the way of an open space in substitution for the common land to be taken. It was important to observe that this land should be acquired by the promoters and handed over to the local authority, who had long been desirous to acquire land for this purpose in this particular district. The promoters of the Bill had met them in a fair and reasonable spirit. They had in that spirit agreed to accept this Instruction; and he therefore did not offer any opposition to the Second Reading of the Bill, because the Instruction really carried out the object he had in view. He confidently believed that the result would be not only to maintain a very important principle of public policy, but to confer on the inhabitants of Tottenham a lasting benefit which they had long desired.

Mr. J. M. Paulton.

Colonel LOCKWOOD (Essex, Epping) said that, though this company still believed that the Government would bring in a Bill dealing with the water question, they thought, with the scarcity of water which occurred last year, they would not lose an hour in presenting a Bill to enable them to increase their storage. With regard to the common rights that must be extinguished by the taking of the site for their new reservoir, they were extremely anxious to provide an area for the commoners to replace them. They confidently left it to the Committee to state what should be done, and the company would endeavour to meet them in the most equitable and fair way. He had no doubt whatever that there would be no difficulty in providing such lands as could recompense the commoners for the rights they had given up.

Mr. JAMES BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.) said he had heard with the greatest pleasure of the arrangement made by which the company agreed to accept the Instruction. This question was one which used to cause a good deal of difference in that House. Some 12 or 15 years ago or more, when railway companies especially, and, to some extent, water companies also, were entitled to acquire common land, conflicts used to frequently arise in that House. In 1883 or 1884 a plan was devised, by which companies applying for power to take common land should be bound by an Instruction such as this to substitute land of an equal extent or equally well situated, so as to provide adequate compensation to the people of the neighbourhood for the land taken away. He believed that, although that was adopted in certain Bills, it had not been so in all cases, though he did not know why. He was all the more pleased that the principle should be revived on this occasion, and that the reasonable desires of his hon. Friend, acting on behalf of the commoners and of the people of Tottenham, should have been met in so frank and liberal a spirit by the company. He hoped that, now this principle had been revived, it would pass into a precedent, and that they would have it generally accepted that, where common land might be taken for a purpose of public utility, those who took it should be bound to have regard to the interests of the commoners and to provide equal land or equal convenience for the purposes of the community.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

LEWES ASSIZES (CONVICTION FOR FRAUD).

Mr. E. H. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, with regard to the fact that on the conviction at Lewes Assizes of a woman named Manning, on a charge of obtaining money by false pretences, a communication was received from the Home Office asking that the Court should be informed of a large number of warrants relating to other charges in different parts of the country which were out against the prisoner, so that they might be taken into consideration by the judge in aggravation of sentence, will he explain what steps does he propose to take in order to obtain the withdrawal of these warrants, or to prevent the execution of them when the woman comes out of prison, so that she may not be twice punished for the same offences?

The SECRETARY of STATE for the HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir Matthew White Ridley, Lancashire, Blackpool): I entirely repudiate the construction which the hon. Member puts upon the Home Office action in this case. The object of the communication, which was sent out in pursuance of a policy that is not a new one, and has been well considered and was recently discussed with Her Majesty's Judges, was in the interests of the prisoner, that, as far as possible, the various offences of the same kind committed by her might be taken into account at one time, and her repeated rearrest at the prison gates might be avoided. Having since learned that the Court, in passing sentence, took into consideration the fact that there were these other offences, I have informed the police authorities concerned that such was the case. I have no power, of course, to prevent the execution of the warrants for the other offences, but I have generally found that the steps which have been taken in the present case are effectual for the purpose of preventing repeated prosecutions for what is practically the same offence, and I hope they will be equally effectual in this case also. I should not hesitate, however, if I were satisfied that the prisoner was being punished twice for the same offence, in recommending the exercise of the prerogative of the Crown.

Mr. PICKERSGILL asked, with regard to the Instruction to which the right hon. Gentleman had referred, as it apparently sanctioned the practice of allowing hearsay evidence against a prisoner after conviction, so that it might be taken into consideration by a Judge in aggravation of sentence, if a copy of the Instruction would be laid on the Table?

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said he had issued the circular with the view of relieving prisoners who were convicted from being, after sentence, again arrested for actually the same offence. It was really in the interest, not against the interest, of prisoners. He did not know that he could do more.

Mr. PICKERSGILL pressed the right hon. Gentleman to lay a copy of the circular on the Table.

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said the circular had been sent all round to all the authorities, and he did not see there would be any advantage in laying a copy on the Table.

Mr. PICKERSGILL asked, would the right hon. Gentleman send him a copy?

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY had not the slightest objection to do so.

LAND COMMISSION (IRELAND).

Mr. D. MACALEESE (Monaghan, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he can state when the decisions will be given in the land cases before the Sub-Commission Court which sat at Lisnaskea, County Fermanagh, on 8th November, 1896?

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds Central): I am informed by the Land Commission that the decision referred to in the Question will be announced at an early date.

Mr. D. SULLIVAN (Westmeath, S.): On behalf of the hon. Member for Carlow (Mr. John Hammond), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland when the Land Commissioners will visit Carlow to hear land cases there?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: All the cases listed up to November in this county were disposed of recently, and the number of applications now pending from the county are comparatively few. A sitting will be arranged at as early a date as possible, having regard to the claims of other counties where more cases and of older date are pending.

MR. C. J. ENGLEDOW (Kildare, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can now state if the Land Commission has been able to fix a day for the holding of a Court in County Kildare for the fixing of fair rents?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: A Sub-Commission Court will hold a sitting in this county on the 23rd March.

MR. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.): Might I ask the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary to the Treasury whether he will consent to postpone Vote 17 for the Irish Land Commission until the Return which has been frequently promised in relation to the new Commissioners is given to the House? He will notice that in that Vote there is an item of £11,337 for the additional Commissioners.

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. R. W. HANBURY, Preston): No, Sir. I do not think there will be any necessity for that. Any explanation which the hon. Gentleman requires can be given on the Vote.

MR. DILLON: Might I point out that the right hon. Gentleman cannot give the explanation, because the information is in the form of an elaborate Return, giving the qualifications for each of the new appointments?

WATER TRUSTEES.

MR. MACALEESE: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department the number and names of such Water Boards in the three kingdoms as are elected by the ratepayers for the sole and exclusive discharge of the office and duty of Water Trustees?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: So far as I have been able to ascertain, there is only one such Board in the United Kingdom, namely the Belfast City and District Water Commissioners. There are several Boards for the sole and exclusive discharge of the duty mentioned, which are elected by local authorities, and I shall be happy to supply the hon. Member with a list of these if he wishes to have it.

VOLUNTEER CADET CORPS.

GENERAL LAURIE (Pembroke and Haverfordwest): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he can state the strength of cadet corps attached to Volunteer battalions which attended regular training and inspection during the past year; whether he is aware that these cadet corps receive no Government assistance other than the loan of unserviceable Martini-Henry rifles; that their officers only hold honorary rank and have no official status; that their services do not bring any financial assistance to their corps; that these corps are maintained at an annual expense to the members composing them of from 25s. to 35s. per head; and that when they go into camp at Aldershot or other military stations to learn their duties alongside regular troops, with whom they take their full share at field days, they incur a further expense of from 21s. to 25s.; and whether he would be prepared to consider, and if possible bring forward, proposals in next year's Estimates for recognising these corps in some substantial manner, as for instance by allowing the officers to hold commissions with substantive rank and with full grant for efficiency, and granting to non-commissioned officers and privates the authorised proficiency allowance as issued to effective Volunteers, and by requiring a special Report and establishing a high standard of efficiency, so that these corps could be looked on as very valuable educational institutions for furnishing officers and non-commissioned officers to the service Volunteer battalions?

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): 4,321 cadets appeared at inspection in 1896. These cadet corps consist of school boys under 17 years of age. To treat them as suggested in the Question would involve a heavy annual expenditure, which is not recommended by the military authorities, although the Secretary of State fully appreciates the value of these juvenile corps as feeders for the Volunteers as the boys grow up.

"ALABAMA" CLAIMS.

Mr GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (1) whether Her Majesty's Government are aware that a sum of 8,000,000 dollars, out of the 15,500,000 awarded in 1872 by the Geneva Tribunal on the Alabama claims, to be paid by Great Britain to the United States as damages, is still in the hands of the United States Government undistributed to any claimants for compensation in respect of the acts of the Alabama, Florida, and Shenandoah; and (2) whether there is any prospect of the United States Government offering to repay to Great Britain the amount remaining unclaimed after all claims for compensation have been satisfied?

*The UNDER SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. G. Curzon, Lancashire, Southport): A similar Question was answered on February 17, 1891, by Mr. W. H. Smith, then First Lord of the Treasury, as follows:—"It was believed from accounts which had been published in the United States that a certain portion of the sum paid by Great Britain to the United States under the award of the tribunal of arbitration at Geneva still remained in the hands of the United States Government. It would be contrary to the engagements taken by this country in the Treaty of Washington of 1871 that Her Majesty's Government should request the return of this sum."

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: May I call the right hon. Gentleman's attention to the second paragraph of my Question? I do not suggest that Her Majesty's Government should make the request, but ask whether there is any prospect of the United States Government offering it. Can the right hon. Gentleman answer that?

*Mr. CURZON: No, Sir; I cannot speak for the United States Government. [Laughter.]

PRISON OFFICERS.

Lord BALCARRES (Lancashire, Chorley): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is aware that, with the exception of clerks, all ranks of established prison officers including the storekeepers who give their whole time to the service, are provided with quarters or receive an allowance in lieu; and whether he can see his way to redress the inequality between the clerks and the other officers?

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: Yes, Sir, I am quite aware of this. The conditions of service of the prison clerks have always been considered separately from those of the prison officers strictly so-called, and their scale of pay has been fixed and from time to time revised with full knowledge of the fact that they were not provided with quarters or an allowance in lieu. I cannot admit that there is any such inequality as is suggested in the Question, nor am I prepared, in view of certain improvements which have recently been made in the pay and prospects of these officers, to make any recommendation on the point.

DRUNKENNESS (GLASGOW).

Mr. JOHN WILSON (Lanark, Govan): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate (1) whether his attention has been directed to the fact that while 18,572 persons were arrested as drunk and incapable, and many thousands more were arrested for being drunk and disorderly in the City of Glasgow during the year 1895, only two publicans were summoned for contravening the terms of their licences which render them liable for supplying intoxicated persons or permitting drunkenness on their premises; and (2) whether he will call the attention of the Magistrates of Glasgow and of the Chief Constable of that city to the extraordinary and striking discrepancy between the number of persons summoned for the two classes of offences named which are admittedly closely connected?

*The LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. Graham Murray, Buteshire): I must point out to the hon. Member that for the purposes of his Question a publican is in breach of his certificate only if within his house he permits a breach of the peace or riotous or disorderly conduct, or supplies excisable liquor to persons who are in a state of intoxication. I must refer the hon. Member to my previous answer that there can be no normal numerical relation between the two classes of offenders, and therefore no just inference to be drawn from their respective numbers. I cannot undertake to do as desired in the last paragraph of the Question, as I do not admit that the numbers referred to are in any way related in a legal or criminal sense.

SOLENT AND CLYDE (ARTILLERY FIRING).

Mr. D. NICOL (Argyll): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if he has received the Report of the Board of Trade Inquiry respecting the regulation of artillery practice in the Solent and on the Clyde, and, if he has, whether he can communicate same to the House?

*Mr. BRODRICK: The Reports on the Bye-laws both for the Solent and the Clyde are at present under consideration. I cannot yet make any statement as to them.

BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH (CONFIRMATION OF ELECTION).

Mr. BRYN ROBERTS (Carnarvonshire, Eifion): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his attention has been called to a statement in The Manchester Guardian of the 23rd instant, that the Vicar-General of the Province of Canterbury, in the recent proceedings at Bow Church on the confirmation of the election of the Bishop of Peterborough, omitted the decree to proceed, by which a public acknowledgment is made that the confirmation of the Bishop proceeds in obedience to the command of Our Sovereign Lady the Queen; whether such omission was made; and, if so, what was the reason of such omission, and what is its effect on the validity or otherwise of the confirmation; and whether the public acknowledgment of the supremacy of the Crown made in the decree to proceed can be omitted or altered without an alteration of the law?

Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: Yes, I have seen the statement, and am informed by the Vicar-General that it is correct. The forms which are used at the confirmation of a Bishop, and of which the decree to proceed forms part, should certainly not be altered without proper authority, and but for a momentary inadvertence, as I understand, would have been strictly followed in the present case. They have never, however, received statutory sanction. I am informed that the omission of the decree will not affect the validity of the confirmation. The proceedings are based throughout on an acknowledgment of the Royal supremacy.

RURAL POSTMEN (IRELAND).

Captain DONELAN (Cork, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether, in view of the fact that rural postmen in England who use their own bicycles are granted an allowance of 4s. a week, a similar consideration will be extended to rural postmen in Ireland?

Mr. HANBURY: Rural postmen in England or in Ireland who are required to use a cycle in the performance of their official duties are granted an allowance of 4s. a week. But there are a number of men who obtain permission to use their own cycles on posts which are laid down as foot posts, and in such cases no allowance is granted. The treatment of the postmen is the same whether in England or Ireland.

PUBLIC WORKS LOANS (IRELAND).

Mr. VESEY KNOX (Londonderry): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his attention has been called to the great hardship caused to various local authorities in Ireland, and especially to the Listowel Guardians, by the rigid application of Section 6 of the Public Works Loans Act, 1892, which exacts one shilling in the pound as receivers' fees on any instalment more than a month overdue; whether there is any similar provision affecting English local authorities; whether he is aware that, in the case of the Seed Potatoes Supply (Ireland) Act, 1895, the rule has worked with exceptional harshness owing to the fact that the loans were repayable by two instalments only, and the amount to be repaid at one time has consequently been proportionately large, while the money has had to be recovered by the local authorities, who in 1895 were unable through poverty and the failure of the potato crop to procure seed; and whether he will consult the Irish Law Officers as to whether Section 6 is applicable to the case, having regard to the words of Section 3 of the Act of 1895, which directs that the interest on the loan, or as much of it as is for the time being not repaid, shall be at the lowest rate fixed by the Treasury for interest on local loans in Ireland, and shall be paid out of the Church Fund?

Mr. HANBURY: Section 6 of the Public Works Loans Act, 1892, imposes a payment of 1s. in the pound as Receiver's fees (not interest) on instalments of loans not paid within 31 days of the date on which repayment is due. It applies to any Board of Works loan created after the passing of that Act, and therefore, of course, to the seed loans made under the Act of 1895. With knowledge of that fact, Parliament in 1895 required these seed loans to be repayable by two instalments. Interest on the loans is one thing and Receiver's fees are another; but there is a special necessity for imposing these Receiver's fees in the case of seed loans. The local authority does not pay interest on the loans—that being paid out of the Irish Church Fund—and it would, therefore, have little inducement to repay the instalments unless this penalty were imposed. There is no similar provision affecting local authorities in England, because, speaking generally, similar difficulty is not found in obtaining repayments in this country. On the other hand, I know of no class of loans in England in which the local authorities bear no charge for interest, as is the case with these seed loans.

Mr. E. CARSON (Dublin University) asked if the Treasury had any power to remit any portion of these Receiver's fees?

Mr. HANBURY said that he was not aware that they had.

Mr. KNOX asked, having regard to the fact that this provision was not fully understood, if the Government would reconsider the question of enforcing these fines?

Mr. HANBURY said in every case due warning was given to the local authorities that they should pay in 31 days.

Mr. J. C. FLYNN (Cork, N.) asked was the right hon. Gentleman aware that these charges in some instances amounted to an interest of 60 per cent. on the loan?

Mr. HANBURY said it was not interest at all; it was a charge for collecting instalments overdue.

BOGUS TELEGRAMS (IRELAND).

Mr. KNOX: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that a bogus telegram was twice delivered to Rev. D. Humphreys, P.P., Killenaule, on 4th February, purporting in the first case to have been sent from Clonmel, and in the second to have been sent from Clogheen; that the postmaster at Killenaule stated that he re-delivered the telegram as coming from Clogheen, in consequence of an inquiry made over the wires to Clonmel; that the officer in charge of the telegraph at Clonmel states that no telegram was sent thence, and no inquiry as to a telegram made from Killenaule on that day; and that the postmaster at Clogheen refuses all information; and whether the Postmaster General will direct an inquiry into this matter, with a view to discovering whether any postal official was responsible for giving this annoyance?

Mr. HANBURY: I can only answer the hon. Member's Question in part, as the matter to which it relates is under investigation in Ireland, and the facts are only partly known in London. It appears, however, that the telegram referred to was delivered to the Rev. D. Humphreys through an unfortunate error in telegraphing his name instead of that of the actual addressee. It is not known in London how the error occurred. The circumstances under which two copies of the telegram were delivered to Mr. Humphreys are as yet unknown, but a full explanation shall be sent to that gentleman on this point, and also as regards the refusal of the postmaster of Clogheen to furnish information. The cost of any telegrams sent by Mr. Humphreys in consequence of the mistake will be refunded to him.

NATIONAL TEACHERS' FUND (IRELAND).

Mr. KNOX: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury whether the Report on the Irish Teachers' Pension Fund will be ready in time for the discussion on the Supplementary Estimate, Clause 6, Vote 7; and whether the sum to be voted will make the fund actuarially solvent, having regard to the claims of existing teachers to pensions on the present scale, and also to the liabilities likely to be incurred in respect to future teachers on the same scale?

MR. HANBURY: The Report cannot be circulated in time, but I shall be prepared to state the substance of it in discussing the Estimate. The Report will be in Members' hands before the discussion of the Estimate for 1897-8. The sum now asked for forms part of a scheme which, I believe, will restore the solvency of the fund, after providing for all its liabilities to present and future teachers.

CONVENT AND MONASTERY SCHOOLS (IRELAND).

MR. KNOX: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland how it is proposed to distribute the £12,600 to be voted by Supplementary Estimate to the convent and monastery schools, as representing their share of the arrears of the Irish fee grant?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The amount will be distributed to the capitation convent and monastery schools in proportion to the average daily attendance of pupils (over three and under 15 years of age) for each of the years concerned.

BRENNAN, JOHN (LATE 41ST REGT.).

MR. JAMES O'KELLY (Roscommon, N.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether his attention has been called to a Resolution passed unanimously by the Boyle Board of Guardians, in which they ask the Government to take into consideration the case of John Brennan, late 41st Regiment of Foot, who was wounded at Sebastopol, and attended by Dr. Reid in the hospital at Balaclava; and whether he will inquire into the circumstances of the case, and provide a remedy?

*MR. BRODRICK: The Resolution of the Boyle Board of Guardians was received two days ago, and will be duly considered.

CULLENAGH MOUNTAIN, COUNTY TIPPERARY.

MR. T. J. CONDON (Tipperary, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the attention of the Irish Government has been called to the excitement caused in the County Tipperary by an attempt of Lord Lismore to enclose Cullenagh Mountain, and forcibly interfere with the rights on the mountain exercised from time immemorial by the tenants on the Lismore estate; and whether, having regard to the danger thus threatened to the public peace, the Government will take steps to prevent this interference with old established rights of the tenants, either by refusing police assistance in turning sheep and cattle off the mountain, or by introducing a short Act amending the Land Law Act, 1896, section 9, by giving to the tenant the right of election at any time, whether he will or will not exercise the easement previously enjoyed by him by the permission of the landlord as of right during a statutory term?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: It appears that for a number of years past Lord Lismore let this mountain to his tenants for the grazing of their sheep at the rate of 8d. per head per annum, and that recently notices were served on the tenants that in March next the grazing would be taken up on behalf of the landlord. The service of these notices has been followed by several outrages, of which I would mention two, namely the malicious killing of eleven sheep the property of Lady Charteris in November last—the motive for this outrage being that some sheep had been sold by her to Lord Lismore—and the malicious destruction on the 18th instant of about 1,400 yards of wire fencing and wooden posts, which had been erected by Lord Lismore on the mountain referred to. The question of the ownership of the mountain or of the alleged rights of the tenants, is not one in which the Government can intervene, but they are bound to preserve the peace and prevent any breaches of the law, and this duty they will perform in any eventuality. It is not the intention of the Government to legislate in the direction suggested.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: Can the right hon. Gentleman say how long these grazing rights had existed?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No, Sir, I have no information upon that point.

DARDANELLES.

MR. BRYN ROBERTS: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether, in or about November 1895, one of the Great Powers of Europe made a proposal to Great Britain, in conjunction with the other Great Powers, to enter the Dardanelles and to seize the Sultan; if so, what reply did Her Majesty's Government make to the proposal?

*MR. CURZON: No such proposal was made to Her Majesty's Government.

MR. BRYCE: Do I understand the right hon. Gentleman to say that the statement in the Question, which is taken from the speech of M. Hanotaux, is in fact incorrect?

*MR. CURZON: No, Sir, I have been asked here whether a proposal has been made to Her Majesty's Government, and that is the question I have answered. I do not understand that M. Hanotaux said anything about a proposal to Her Majesty's Government.

MR. BRYCE: Perhaps it would be beter to put another question to clear the matter up.

MR. BRYN ROBERTS: Was not part of the proposal made to Her Majesty's Government to enter the Dardanelles?

*MR. CURZON: I cannot bisect the proposal. No proposal of the kind was made to Her Majesty's Government. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. BRYN ROBERTS: The right hon. Gentleman's answer is ambiguous. ["Oh, oh!"] He says he cannot bisect the proposal, but at the same time says that no such proposal was made. I wish to ask him whether a proposal to enter the Dardanelles by force was made to Her Majesty's Government?

*MR. CURZON: I have nothing to add to the answer I have already given. [Ministerial cheers.]

MR. BRYN ROBERTS intimated that he should repeat the Question.

LIGHTHOUSES (RED SEA).

MR. HENNIKER HEATON (Canterbury): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs what is the cause of delay in erecting lighthouses in the Red Sea, particularly at Mocha, and also Abu Ail, on the island of Jebel Tier?

*MR. CURZON: Funds have already been provided by the Egyptian Government for the construction of these lights, but, as the proposed sites are within Turkish territory, it will be necessary to make arrangements on the subject with the Porte. Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople is in communication with his colleagues as to the nature of the representations which should be addressed to the Porte on behalf of the maritime States who are interested in the subject.

REFORM PRISONERS (PRETORIA).

MR. J. M. MACLEAN (Cardiff): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if Mr. Sampson and Mr. Davies are still kept in prison at Pretoria; and if he will explain the reasons for the continued delay in the circulation of the Papers relating to their case, which were laid upon the Table more than a week ago?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): So far as I am aware, Mr. Sampson and Mr. Davies are still in prison at Pretoria. The delay in issuing the Papers has arisen from the necessity of a reference to South Africa in connection with one of the documents.

MR. MACLEAN: Can the right hon. Gentleman say when the Papers are likely to be circulated?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: No, Sir, I cannot. I am in the hands of other people.

FOREIGN PATENTS.

MR. C. E. SCHWANN (Manchester, N.): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether, in view of the fact that Section 22 of the Patent Act of 1883 does not specify any time within which a foreign patentee must work a patent taken out by him in this country, or grant licences in default of working it, and the scale upon which he must work is not fixed, and in view of the great differences of opinion which exist as to the English method of granting patents as compared with the American system, would he consider the desirability of appointing a Select Committee of this House to examine the question and report, with a view to the making of such changes in the Patent Laws as might be shown to be equitable and practicable?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. C. T. RITCHIE, Croydon): The hon. Member proposes to open up the working of the whole of the Patent Laws in the investigation which he asks the Committee to undertake. Until it is proved by experience that Section 22 of the Act is insufficient to effect the working of patents taken out by foreigners in this country, I am not prepared to support a Motion for a Select Committee.

FISHING PIERS (IRELAND).

MAJOR JAMESON (Clare, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he is aware that though a grant is made out of Imperial Funds for Fishing Piers in Scotland there is no similar grant in Ireland; and whether he will consider the possibility of making a similar provision in Ireland, and extending the same to Kilrush, Liscannor, and Carrigaholt, in County Clare?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: It appears from the Estimates that a sum of £3,000 is provided for Fishery Piers in Scotland in the next financial year. The hon. Member does not appear to be aware of the fact that very large sums of money have already been expended on the construction of such piers in Ireland under various Acts of Parliament, and that, as regards two of the piers specially named in the Question, namely, Liscannor and Carrigaholt, sums amounting to £5,184 and £13,761 respectively, have been expended. It has not been the practice in recent years to provide in the Estimates for additional expenditure on piers in Ireland, generally, but of course the Government have always been prepared to inquire into any applications made to them and to consider each case upon its own merits.

MAJOR JAMESON: Will the right hon. Gentleman say whether this expenditure is out of Irish funds, and not out of Imperial funds?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No, Sir; the hon. and gallant Member is mistaken. It is out of Imperial funds that these charges are paid.

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPERS (IRELAND).

MAJOR JAMESON: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade why the memorial of the Irish lighthouse keepers on the subject of their grievances in the matter of pay and pension, etc., to the Board of Commissioners of Irish Lights has been kept for two years without an answer?

MR. RITCHIE: I understand that the Commissioners of Irish Lights deferred the consideration of the memorial of the lighthouse keepers pending the Report of the Committee on the Mercantile Marine Fund, but that the Commissioners are now considering the matter.

MAJOR JAMESON: Does not the right hon. Gentleman consider that two years is too long a time for this investigation?

[No reply was given.]

JAMESON RAID (CAPE INQUIRY).

MR. BRYN ROBERTS: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether, in view of the interest taken in the British South Africa Company Inquiry, he will lay the Report of and Evidence taken before the Select Committee of the Parliament of Cape Colony with reference to the raid into the Transvaal upon the Table of the House?

MR. CHAMBERLAIN: It is my intention to lay the Report and Evidence mentioned on the Table of the House. In fact, the Committee have requested me to do so, but some time must elapse before it can be delivered, as it is a very lengthy document.

CRETE.

MR. CHANNING (Northampton, E.): On behalf of the hon. Member for the Eye Division (Mr. F. S. STEVENSON), I beg to ask the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether the Foreign Vice Consuls at Retimo have sent a dispatch to the Consuls at Canea to the effect that the protraction of the present situation would entail grave consequences, that the Turks desire the re-establishment of order, and declare that they are ready to accept annexation to Greece?

MR. CURZON: No, Sir; no information has been received to that effect.

MR. FLYNN: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether on Monday and Tuesday last the Turkish cannon on the Suda and Galata side of Akrotiri fired upon the Christian troops, who did not reply for fear of being shelled by the warships of the Powers; and whether a protest has been sent by the Cretan Christian troops to the foreign Admirals complaining of such action?

*Mr. CURZON: The following telegram has been received from Her Majesty's Consul at Canea:—

"No fire has been exchanged between Greek and Turkish troops on the western front since Sunday. On southern front Christians and Mussulmans had some desultory skirmishing. On Monday and Tuesday the insurgents were firing against Suda arsenal, and on Monday and Wednesday against Fort Izzedin. Turks replied with very few rifle shots and two or three shells towards village of Tsikalaria. Statement of newspaper correspondents that Turks fired shells on villages of Korakies Akrotiri without provocation disagrees with information of Colonel Chermside and British Arsenal."

I may, perhaps, be allowed at the same time, with reference to many questions which have been asked during the last few days in regard to alleged sallies from Canea, to read the folowing telegram which has also been received from Sir A. Biliotti:—

"Two companies, about 300 men, Turkish troops garrisoned during last four months Voukoulies to afford protection to the Turkish emigrants, who returned to their village in that commune; their block-house was destroyed by Greek regular artillery; the garrison sallied out at night, but was afterwards surrounded. Major and many killed, over 100 taken prisoners, about 80 found their way back; no sortie was made from Canea in connection with Voukoulies affair; the only offensive operation undertaken by the Turks was driving the insurgents from the heights dominating Halepa on the 14th of February."

Mr. CHANNING: Will the right hon. Gentleman state whether the operations in connection with this Turkish fort, which he states is several miles from Canea, were not the operations which led to the cannonading of the insurgent position by the allied fleet?

*Mr. CURZON: No, Sir; the hon. Gentleman is quite incorrect in his geography. Voukoulies Fort, about which I have just been reading, is considerably to the west and a little to the south-west of Canea. The operations of the insurgents against which the firing of the fleets was directed the other day were to the east and a little to the south-east of Canea, many miles from Voukoulies.

Sir E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall): I wish to ask the right hon. Gentleman if he can state whether the 3,000 Mussulmans besieged at Kandanos and Selinos have been relieved, or what is their fate?

*Mr. CURZON: I have had no notice of the Question, but as I anticipated that the hon. Gentleman would very legitimately ask it, I have brought the information. We have received the following telegram from the British Admiral:—

"The armistice at Selinos will last three days longer, till then no danger. Austrian ship gone there, am sending one as soon as can be spared. Have been consulting with colleagues plan of operations with a view of relieving beleaguered Mahomedans in other districts."

Sir E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: On that answer, may I ask whether that applies to the two beleaguered forces at Kandanos and Selinos, as it will be remembered that there were 2,000 Mussulmans in one place and 1,000 in the other?

*Mr. CURZON: Yes, Sir. Selinos is a port on the coast from which Kandanos, in the interior, is, as I understand, separated by a range of mountains, and the operations for relief which may be directed on behalf of the one will apply to the other. ["Hear, hear!"]

SUPPLY (NAVAL ESTIMATES).

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES asked the First Lord of the Treasury when the First Lord of the Admiralty would make his statement with regard to the Navy, and upon what Vote?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.) replied that there had been an idea that his right hon. Friend would make his statement on Monday with the Speaker in the Chair, and that the Debate would then be adjourned. That was the course pursued last year, but on consultation with his right hon. Friend he had come to the conclusion that the statement should be made after the Speaker had left the Chair.

Mr. JOHN MORLEY (Montrose Burghs): When?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: On Friday.

POLICE AND SANITARY REGULATIONS.

Ordered, That the Committee of Selection do appoint a Committee, not exceeding Nine Members, to whom shall be committed all Private Bills promoted by municipal and other local authorities, by which it is proposed to create powers relating to Police and Sanitary Regulations which deviate from, or are in extension of, or are repugnant to, the general law.

Ordered, That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers, and records.

Ordered, That Three be the quorum of the Committee.

Ordered, That it be an Instruction to the Committee in their Report, under Standing Orders 150 and 173A, to state their reasons for granting any powers in conflict with, deviation from, or excess of the general law.

Ordered, That it be an Instruction to the Committee not to insert in any Bill referred to them any provision which is already in force in the district to which the Bill applies under any public Act, or which might be put in force by adopting the provisions of any adoptive Act.

Ordered, That in the case of Bills reported from the Committee, Three clear days shall intervene between the date when the Report of the Committee is circulated with the Votes and the consideration of the Bill.—(Mr. Jesse Collings.)

LONDON WATER COMPANIES AMALGAMATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred from Wednesday next till Wednesday 10th March.

MOTIONS.

SOLICITORS (IRELAND).

Bill to amend and consolidate the Laws relating to Solicitors and to the service of indentured apprentices in Ireland, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Carson, Mr. Hemphill, and Mr. O'Neill; presented, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Wednesday next, and to be printed.—[Bill 145.]

APPOINTMENT OF HIGH SHERIFFS (IRELAND).

Bill to relieve persons required to serve in the office of High Sheriff in Ireland, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Carson, Colonel Saunderson, Mr. Horace Plunkett, Mr. John Redmond, and Sir R. Penrose FitzGerald; presented, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Wednesday next, and to be printed.—[Bill 146.]

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

SUPPLY.

Considered in Committee.

[The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, in the Chair.]

NAVY (SUPPLEMENTARY) ESTIMATES, 1896-7.

1. £507,000, Navy (Supplementary).

MR. VESEY KNOX (Londonderry) said this large Supplementary Vote amounted to an extraordinary Budget like the extraordinary Budgets of some Continental States, and surely the House was entitled to some explanation of it. He would like to know why £116,000 more was wanted for coal.

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. W. E. MACARTNEY, Antrim, S.) replied that, owing to the exceptional circumstances of the current year, it had been necessary to keep a larger number of ships in commission than were provided for when the Estimates were framed. This accounted for the additional expenditure in coal and maintenance stores. It was also considered advisable, owing to the increased activity in the shipping industry in private yards and the large number of private orders which were being placed, to take advantage of a rising market in the interests of the economical administration of the service and "place" the Government orders as early as possible. It had been necessary to accelerate the completion of guns under construction, and the supply of ammunition that they might be ready for certain classes of ships, the building of which was being hastened. The £100 asked for on account of works, buildings, and repairs was merely a formal sum placed in the Estimate to bring under the notice of the House the magnitude of the work to be undertaken, which included the reconstruction of a jetty at Devonport, and foundations for 100-ton sheers, dredging, etc., in order to provide accommodation for large battleships, the total estimated cost being £20,000. No money would be spent on these objects during the current year.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis) said it was a remarkable thing that one-quarter of the amount originally asked for was being spent in coal. He presumed this was largely due to the state of affairs in the East, and the employment of more troops on active service than was contemplated. If so it might be possible to raise the whole of the Eastern question on this Estimate. [Laughter.] A Member who objected to the employment of Her Majesty's coal against the Greeks or the Christians in Crete might discuss the entire action of the Government in the matter. He presumed that the increase of £30,000 for guns related to the supply of wire guns. [Mr. MACARTNEY signified assent.] He was glad of it. He would be glad to see more money spent on these splendid armaments, which he believed were the finest that could be used by any navy in the world.

MR. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.), while admitting that the circumstances of the last 18 months had been exceptional, thought a fuller explanation should be given why so large a sum was wanted for coal. If it were possible and convenient to vote such sums as these on Supplementary or other Estimates, why were they asked to vote for enormous loan Bills?

MR. E. J. C. MORTON (Devonport) said that last year they specifically voted about half a million for harbour accommodation and purposes connected with Devonport Dockyard. That being so, why were they now asked for £100?

MR. MACARTNEY said the work had been considerably altered since the attention of the House was first directed to it, and it had been necessary to make provision for the larger class of battleships which could not get into the Keyham basin. In order to facilitate that it would be necessary to construct a new jetty. The Estimates had been revised, and amounted to a very much larger sum than was originally designed. In compliance with a rule of the Treasury, the nominal sum of £100 had been put in the Supplementary Estimate in order to call the attention of Parliament to the total estimated cost. The works which were to be carried out before the end of the current year would be provided for out of savings on Vote 10.

MR. MORTON asked whether the sum of about half a million, which was specially voted last year for the current year, had already been expended?

MR. MACARTNEY: No, it has not already been expended.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee) said he was not surprised that hon. Members should have had some difficulty in understanding the exact position. As he understood it this was a new work of magnitude, and the Admiralty could not be allowed by the Treasury to spend money on it until it had been brought to the notice of Parliament and submitted to their approval. By means of the item of £100, the Admiralty would be enabled at the beginning of the financial year, before Vote 10 had been reached, to pay for the work out of the ordinary proceeds. What was specified here, however, but a series of works which did not seem to be connected necessarily with one another? His hon. Friend asked for some explanation in connection with this item and the Loan Act of last year. The Naval Loan Act of last year contained an item for harbours and approaches, which as far as he could gather was for Devonport. That was work which might be within the scope of the Naval Loan Act, but this was an extra item, the necessity for which had been discovered since. The amount would come on when the Navy Estimates were prepared. He did not know when they were to see the Navy Estimates.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover Square): Tuesday.

MR. DILLON said he thought the Secretary to the Admiralty had very clearly exemplified the enormous inconvenience of this double method of expenditure by loan and yearly Estimates. It was easy to carry out such works by the annual Votes instead of having recourse to the enormous loan Bills that had been passed during the last few years. The Secretary to the Admiralty could hardly claim to have carried out the Regulation of the Treasury. The Supplementary Estimate had only been circulated that morning, and, so far from the Treasury Rule being carried out, it was proposed to take the Vote in silence without a word of explanation.

MR. MORTON asked why the sum of half a million voted last year had not been expended.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY said that the £500,000 in the Loan Bill was intended to be spent over several years. That was for definite and specific works, and was not an annual Vote. This was a work of magnitude, but it did not enter into the general scheme; it was a separate work, and it would be contrary to Parliamentary procedure that any portion of the loan fund should be given for this particular item.

MR. KNOX reminded the Committee that the Secretary to the Admiralty stated that the rule was that as soon as any work was contemplated, even though it was not to be done in the present financial year, there was to be a separate Estimate for it.

MR. MACARTNEY: No, I never said that.

MR. KNOX said that, as he understood the matter, the whole of this £20,000, or at least a large part of it, was going to be spent in the present financial year, and he thought the Committee ought to be informed how much it was proposed to spend in the course of the present financial year.

MR. MACARTNEY said the work would be proceeded with with all due dispatch; but as the weather might interfere with its progress he could not say how much would be spent on it during the current financial year.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON: I presume there will be an Estimate.

MR. MACARTNEY: Of course there will.

MR. KNOX said that, on the principle the Under Secretary to the Admiralty had now laid down, there should never be an Estimate, because the weather might upset all calculations. He noticed that, under Sub-head B., for Metals and Metal Articles, the original Estimate was £1,149,000, and the revised Estimate £1,419,000. He understood that the Admiralty, apprehending a rise in pig iron, had laid in a larger stock of metals and metal articles than was required for the work in hand for the financial year. The Admiralty had, in fact, speculated in "metal futures." He did not object to reasonable speculation by the Department, but he thought the Committee should be told whether there had been a profit or a loss on the transaction.

MR. MACARTNEY said the metals and metal articles intended for ships in the course of construction had run short, and a large stock of these materials had been ordered. There could be no doubt as to the benefit that had accrued to the Department by the buying of these stocks.

Vote agreed to.

2. £5,775 13s., Naval Defence Act, 1889 (Excess Expenditure), 1896-7.

MR. KNOX said he should like to know how much of the original £10,000,000 for the construction of vessels, to which this vote was supplementary, had been spent in the dockyards of the north of Ireland?

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS (Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, Cumberland, Penrith): Order, order! The discussion of that subject is not in order on this vote.

MR. KNOX said he understood that this sum of £5,775 13s. was supplementary to an original sum of £10,000,000 for naval construction. He therefore submitted that it was a fair question to ask how much of that £10,000,000 had been spent in the Irish shipbuilding yards? He knew that, when the money was voted in 1889, one of the Irish yards, that of Derry, was decided to be fit for this work, and he would like to know whether any work had been given to it?

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I do not think that question can be properly raised.

MR. KNOX said, if that were so, he was in doubt what question could be raised except the small financial question of excess. Was he to understand that in all cases like this, if the total amount raised had been exhausted and the Department concerned came to the House for a supplementary Estimate, they were not obliged to explain to the House on what works the excess had been incurred?

MR. GIBSON BOWLES desired to know how it was there was any excess at all? Was it in consequence of non-efficient specifications having been sent by the Department to the contractors, of new demands made by the Department on the contractors during the progress of the work?

MR. DILLON said it was bad enough for the House to be asked to vote these large sums in a Loans Bill without being asked to increase the amounts by supplementary Estimates. It ought to be the policy of the Departments which get these large audits to keep within the margin, so that if they had not a surplus remaining after the completion of the work they would not, at least, have to ask the House for a supplementary Estimate to make up the deficiency.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON said he believed that this was the last time the Naval Defence Act of 1889 would appear on the Estimates.

MR. MACARTNEY: Yes.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON said the Naval Defence Act had now reached its final stage, and he thought it was a matter for congratulation that the original Estimate of £10,000,000 for that great work had only been exceeded by £500,000. Considering that the work had been in progress for seven years under three successive Boards of Admiralty, the fact that so small a sum as £500,000 was required to complete it reflected the greatest credit on the officials concerned, either in the preparation of the Estimate or in the carrying out of the work. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. KNOX said the remarks of the hon. Member for Dundee were in part a laudation of his own administration. He should like to hear something on the subject from the hon. Gentleman at present in charge.

MR. MACARTNEY said he should have thought, after what had been said by the hon. Member for Dundee, that it was unnecessary for him to say anything further about the Naval Defence Act. Close on 22½ millions sterling had been issued under the Act. The money was devoted to three purposes. For the first, which involved ten millions, there was an excess expenditure of £5,775 13s., for which the sanction of the Committee was now asked. For the second, involving close on ten millions, there was an expenditure less than the Estimate of £2,000; and for the third, for which 2½ millions were asked, there was an expenditure less than the Estimate of £20,000. So that in the first case only was there a slight excess over the estimated expenditure.

MR. DILLON: What has become of the money in the cases where the expenditure was below the Estimate?

MR. MACARTNEY: It had to be surrendered to the new Sinking Fund.

Vote agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICES AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS (SUPPLEMENTARY) ESTIMATES, 1896-7.

CLASS I.

3. £7,000, Supplementary, Public Buildings, Great Britain.—Agreed to.

CLASS II.

4. £1,000, Supplementary, Colonial Office.—Agreed to.

5. £40, Supplementary, the Mint, including Coinage.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES suggested that some alteration should be made in the sizes of the half-sovereign and the farthing, to prevent the laitter from being passed for the former; and also that every coin should bear its denomination on its face.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Sir MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, Bristol, W.) said the Mint proposed to try whether it was not possible to secure that the colour of the farthing should be in the first place entirely different from the colour of the half-sovereign. ["Hear, hear!"]

Vote agreed to.

6. £25,000, Supplementary, Stationery and Printing.

MR. KNOX asked whether anything had been done with regard to the Fair Wages Committee, presided over by the hon. Member for East Donegal, and also whether the complaints of the printing operatives of Ireland in regard to the Queen's printers, Dublin, had been attended to.

*THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. R. W. HANBURY, Preston) said the Committee presided over by the hon. Member for East Donegal only dealt with the wages paid in the stationery department. The new Committee that was now sitting would deal with all the Government departments. Whenever any tenders were now invited for Government contracts the Fair Wages Resolution of the House was brought more prominently under the eyes of those who tendered than hitherto, and the Treasury took care that the Resolution was strictly carried out by all contractors. That applied to Ireland as well as to England. Questions were raised before the former Committee as to the printing in Ireland connected with boards of guardians, in which it appeared the Resolution was not carried out; but, of course, these were not Government contracts.

Vote agreed to.

7. £80, Supplementary, Lunacy Commission, Scotland.—Agreed to.

CLASS III.

8. £17,500, Supplementary, Law Charges.—Agreed to.

9. £2,000, Supplementary, Supreme Court of Judicature.—Agreed to.

10. £10, Supplementary, County Courts.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs) said he found on referring to the original Estimate that there was an increased expenditure in connection with the levying of processes in County Courts. He desired to know whether that was distributed over all the country, or was it to be ascribed to special circumstances arising in particular localities?

MR. HANBURY said that, though he was not responsible for the Vote, he could give the hon. Member the information he desired. The charges were very varied, and only a small portion of the Vote was connected with the Welsh question.

Vote agreed to.

11. £2,030, Supplementary, Register House, Edinburgh.

MR. J. H. DALZIEL (Kirkcaldy Burghs) said that for a long time the clerks employed in this office had had a deep-seated grievance with regard to their scale of pay as compared with that in the offices in London and Dublin. There was a discussion on this question two years ago, and he should like to know whether the Government had considered the matter.

*MR. HANBURY said that, as to all Second Division clerks, the scale was the same throughout the United Kingdom; but with regard to all other officials, the scale varied according to the cost of living in the town concerned. But, although the rate in Edinburgh might differ from that in London and Dublin, he had not been able to satisfy himself, having regard to the comparative cost of living in the different towns, that any injustice was done.

Vote agreed to.

12. Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a Supplementary sum not exceeding £12,938 be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Salaries and Expenses of the Office of the Irish Land Commission."

MR. DENIS KILBRIDE (Galway, N.) said that some time ago the Chief Secretary promised a Return with regard to the recent appointments of temporary Sub-Commissioners. The hon. Member for East Mayo had asked the Government to postpone the Vote until the Return was in the hands of hon. Members; but, very unreasonably, the Government had refused this request. As it was, the Committee was asked to vote this money in the dark. They knew nothing about the persons appointed, and he protested against the Vote being taken in these circumstances. It was not a question whether the gentlemen appointed belonged to one Party or another; but they ought to have a practical knowledge of the work they were called on to perform, and they ought to understand all about the value of land. He moved to reduce the Vote by £5,000.

MR. DILLON said that he could not understand why the Government had refused to postpone this Vote until the Return was available. The Chief Secretary very well knew that these new appointments of assistant lay commissioners had given the greatest dissatisfaction in Ireland, and especially in Ulster among the Unionist tenant farmers. He did not state his personal views, because he knew nothing at all of the gentlemen appointed, except their names. He protested against the action of the Government in forcing this Vote on before the Return was issued; and he was only expressing the views of the constituents of the Attorney General for Ireland and of the Ulster farmers generally. The appointments had been condemned at meetings of both parties and at united meetings.

MR. EDWARD CARSON (Dublin University) said that the appointments of the new assistant lay Commissioners had given great dissatisfaction among the landowners. These new Sub-Commissioners were reducing rents at enormous rates, without giving any reasons for the reductions. Were they appointed by the day or by the year, and did their appointments depend on the number of cases which came in? Were they paid the same salaries as the quasi-permanent Commissioners, or were they paid smaller salaries which would not be so likely to attract men of independence? The appointment of these temporary Sub-Commissioners might be a necessity, but it was a deplorable necessity. He joined with hon. Gentlemen opposite in expressing great anxiety to see the qualifications of these gentlemen, about whom strange stories were told from time to time. There ought to be an opportunity given of going into the matter fully.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (MR. GERALD BALFOUR, Leeds, Central) thought that it would have been more convenient if the hon. Member for North Galway and the hon. Member for East Mayo had raised this question in reference to the appointment of these Sub-Commissioners when the Estimates for the next financial year came on for discussion, by which time the Return would have been made and the matter might have been fully gone into. The unfortunate Chief Secretary for Ireland had to make some 40 or 50 of these appointments, and, no matter how conscientiously those appointments were made, they were necessarily subject to considerable criticism. He could assure the hon. Members opposite that he had spared no trouble in making these appointments in order to select the best men for the positions, and he should be sorry to say how much of his time had been occupied in interviewing the hundreds of gentlemen who had applied for the appointments. Complaint had been made that comparatively few of those who had been appointed were acquainted with the Ulster custom. It must, however, be remembered that a large proportion of the new appointments were in reality reappointments of Gentlemen who had previously held such posts, and who, therefore, were well acquainted with the Ulster custom. The figures before him showed that out of the 44 new appointments 25 were reappointments, 17 of whom were from Ulster or who had experience of fixing rents in Ulster. Of the 19 new appointments seven were from Ulster. This was exclusive of those who already held their posts when the present Government came into office. In answer to a question from one of the hon. Gentlemen opposite, he had to say that the appointments were for a year with the exception of four, whom he might term "emergency men"—[ironical cheers and laughter from the Nationalist Benches]—who were appointed by the day. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. JAMES LOWTHER (Kent, Thanet) said that the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary took credit for having made so many reappointments of these Sub-Commissioners, but those were the men who were old hands at cutting down rents, and he should have thought that that was a good ground for never employing them again. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.] What had occurred in Ireland during the last few months justified the doubts that had been expressed as to the justice of the legislation of last year. ["Hear, hear!"]

COLONEL SAUNDERSON (Armagh, N.) said that the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary for Ireland had drawn a moving picture of the mental sufferings he had undergone in making these appointments. But if the right hon. Gentleman suffered so deeply under this infliction, he should like to ask what the feelings of the Irish landlords must have been when they knew that the right hon. Gentleman was engaged in Dublin Castle in appointing to the offices of Sub-Commissioners some 40 gentlemen, whose one and only object would be the further reduction of rents? In Ireland at the present moment, as far as he knew, the only qualification necessary for a Sub-Commissioner, who probably knew nothing about agriculture, was that he should be able to go to a farm, look at it, and, hearing that the rent had been reduced on a former occasion some 20 or 25 per cent., make a further reduction of 35, 40, and sometimes 50 per cent. The result, therefore would be that in some cases the rent would be reduced altogether by about 70 per cent. The House would see that at the present moment a system of absolute and deliberate confiscation was being adopted. The House, therefore, would understand that the Irish landlords looked with some suspicion upon the appointment of these Sub-Commissioners, who would have to decide whether they and their families should be allowed to remain in Ireland or be turned out of the country. He knew that the Government had expressed their opinion that a final settlement of the Irish Land Question could only be arrived at when the dual ownership ceased to be, and when the time arrived when public money would buy out the present landlords in order to put new landlords in their place. There was, of course, a cheap and easy way for the British Exchequer to settle the Irish Land Question, namely, by appointing a lot of Sub-Commissioners who were to understand that their appointments would depend upon the influx of Irish tenants into their Courts, and who, having received more or less their cue from the Government, the Sub-Commissioners would proceed to reduce the rents by 40, 50, 60, and sometimes by 70 per cent. In that case the Irish landlord who had no margin to live on would be an easy man to deal with. That might be an admirable plan, and might commend itself to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and to his right hon. Friends the Chief Secretary and the Leader of the House, who thought that this was a final and happy solution of the Irish Land Question. But the House could not suppose that such a policy could commend itself to the Irish landlords. The recent action of the Land Commissioners in Ireland was to his mind absolutely inexplicable. Without giving any reasons at all they had reduced rents 40, 50, and even 70 per cent. ["Hear, hear!"] The Irish landlord was now in this happy position. He knew that at any time some of these gentlemen might come down and hold a Court, and he had not the least idea as to whether, when they had performed their functions, he would have a penny left to pay his passage out of Ireland. Was this realised by the House of Commons? The Irish landlords were a class who did not deserve this sweeping condemnation at the hands of Her Majesty's Government. ["Hear, hear!"] Their position was one against which the good sense and sense of justice of the House must in the end prevail. He did not object to the Vote, but he appealed to Her Majesty's Government to see whether they could not in some way create in Ireland a court presided over by men whose position would be permanent, and not dependent upon the fact that their decisions might bring an influx of new tenants into their Courts. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR (Liverpool, Scotland) said the Chief Secretary was bound to appoint these Commissioners by the law of the country, and he was sure the hon. and gallant Gentleman would not wish the head of a department to be guilty of an illegality. He had never heard of reductions of 60 or 70 per cent. being made by the Commissioners, and he would ask the hon. and gallant Gentleman whether it was not a fact that the tenants of Ulster, including his own constituents, were up in arms against the decisions of the Commissioners?

Colonel SAUNDERSON: That is only natural to an Irishman. [Laughter.]

Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR supposed it was natural for a tenant to expect a large reduction and for a landlord to resent it, but when the hon. and gallant Gentleman spoke of the dissatisfaction among landlords it was just as well that the Committee should know that the dissatisfaction of the tenants with the insufficiency of the reductions was practically universal. ["Hear, hear!"] Agitation, disturbance, legislation, and the Sub-Commissioners had on the whole produced smaller reductions in Ireland than had voluntary arrangements in England.

Mr. CARSON: Can the hon. Gentleman say whether the interests in farms in Ireland sell for a larger sum than they do in England?

Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR said that had nothing to do with the matter, and there could be no comparison of the sort because of the simple and fundamental fact that all the improvements were made by the tenant in Ireland and by the landlord, speaking generally, in England. The hon. and gallant Gentleman seemed to think there was something odious and repulsive in the system of payment by the day of gentlemen employed in the important work of reducing rents in Ireland, but he would suggest that hon. Gentlemen opposite should join in the movement general among tenants in Ulster for allowing the compulsory purchase of his land by the tenant, and they would very soon get rid of these Sub-Commissioners. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member for the Isle of Thanet had said that the Sub-Commissioners had acquired the name of Sub-Confiscators.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER said that the person who suggested that name to him was the late Lord Cairns.

MR. T. P. O'CONNOR said it would remain in the minds of the Irish people a very delicate historical question whether the title of founder of the Land League should be given to his hon. Friend near him or to the right hon. Gentleman whose occupation of the office of Chief Secretary was one of the chief causes of its foundation. [Cheers and laughter.]

MR. J. C. FLYNN (Cork Co., W.) said that, taking the whole of the revision of rents by the Sub-Commissioners down to last year, the average reductions were only 21·5 per cent., whereas voluntary reductions of 40, 50, and even 60 per cent., or three times as much, had been given in England. It was not only unfair but most unreasonable for the representatives of the landed interest to come down to the House and condemn the reductions given by the Sub-Commissioners. He feared that speeches like that of the hon. and gallant Member for Armagh might have an intimidating effect upon the Assistant Sub-Commissioners, who were liable to be dismissed at any moment.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR observed that in almost every case the appointment was for a year at least.

MR. FLYNN said that, at any rate, these gentlemen desired to retain their posts, and premature attacks upon them were greatly to be deprecated. The Return showing their qualifications ought to be supplied as soon as possible.

MR. J. A. RENTOUL (Down, E.) said that he was in possession of a good deal of information concerning the Commissioners who had been appointed, and he had reason to believe that the selection had been very well made. One gentleman had been appointed from his own division, having been recommended by himself, by the hon. Member for North Down, who was closely connected with the landlord interest, by the Marquess of Londonderry, and all the leading landlords of the division, and by the tenant farmers of the district, 200 of whom signed a memorial in his favour. He believed that when the qualifications of these Commissioners were submitted to the House it would be found that there was nothing to say against the appointments.

MAJOR JAMESON (Clare, W.) hoped the Chief Secretary would consent to postpone the Vote. At present the Committee were without information about the qualifications of these gentlemen. They could not tell whether the appointments were good, as the hon. Member for East Down averred, or whether they were bad, as the hon. and gallant Member for North Armagh declared.

COLONEL SAUNDERSON explained that all he had said was that nothing was known about them.

MAJOR JAMESON, referring to the Chief Secretary's statement that 17 out of 24 gentlemen appointed had knowledge of Ulster, asked for how long they had been in that province.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR replied that they were either natives of Ulster, or had had experience in valuing land there.

MR. SMITH-BARRY (Hunts, Huntingdon) said that if hon. Members opposite went to a division he should vote with them, as a protest against the way in which the Commissioners had done their work. If they proceeded as they had begun, a very large number of landlords must inevitably be ruined. These Commissioners were given no instructions to guide them in fixing rents. It was supposed that they had regard to the prices obtainable for agricultural produce, but, as a matter of fact, rents were being reduced at a rate entirely unwarranted by the prices prevailing in recent years. Upon what grounds had these enormous and unjustifiable reductions been made? The prices given for tenant right were increasing every day. The more the rent was cut down the higher, apparently, became the value of the tenant right. There was no analogy between the case of England and that of Ireland. Would they find a man in England ready to give a large sum of money for the right of taking a farm in Cambridgeshire, Wiltshire, Essex, or any of the other distressed counties? The hon. Member for the Scotland Division of Liverpool had referred to tenants' improvements, but the highest prices paid for tenant right were paid in cases where there was grass land, and where there were no improvements at all. The existing state of affairs in regard to rent reduction was unsatisfactory and unjust, and must be reconsidered by Parliament if the landlords of Ireland were not to be reduced to absolute ruin.

Question put, "That a sum not exceeding £7,938 be granted for the said Service."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 91; Noes, 188.—(Division List No. 51.)

Original Question put, and agreed to.

CLASS IV.

13. Motion made, and Question proposed,

"That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £153,044, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for Public Education in England and Wales."

*MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.) wished to draw attention to the amount assigned to School Boards under Section 97 of the Education Act. The amount was £19,680. It seemed to him that that sum was inadequate to meet the undertaking given to School Boards by the Education Department under the Circular of 1881. According to a Return obtained by the right hon. Member for Rotherham, the total amount due last year to School Boards in the country under Section 97 was in England £27,523, and in Wales £7,192, making a total of £34,715. The Vote passed last year for this item was only £26,400. That left a deficit to be made good by Supplementary Estimate of £8,315 on the year. The Circular of the Department of 1881 gave an undertaking to School Boards that they should be entitled to a grant under Section 97, not only for the current year, but also for the year immediately preceding. He found that the amount of unclaimed grant for last year under the Section in question was, in England £10,388, and in Wales £4,334, or rather more than half the grant due in the Principality. The total of unclaimed grants for last year, therefore, was £14,722. The payment, therefore, of these grants for the second year, under the Circular, together with the deficit of £8,315 on last year, made up a total of nearly £4,000 greater than appeared in the Supplementary Estimate. That was the first point on which he wished for an explanation. Then there was the further point—that the amount of unclaimed grant was a minimum amount. It was probable that other School Boards had come on the list for these grants, so that the amount might be still greater. It had been the policy of the Department to keep the School Boards directly concerned in the dark about it. The subject, he might say here, was not at all one of a party character, for successive Vice Presidents of the Council of both parties had pursued the same course. No information was given to those necessitous School Boards that they were entitled to claim the money. He contended that Section 97 of the Act imposed no time limit whatever in respect to this grant. According to the wording of that section, any School Board which could establish the fact that a 3d. rate on their assessment would not produce 7s. 6d. per head of the children in average attendance, was entitled to the grant to have that amount made up, and as the section laid down no time limit the Boards could claim it for any past year. Since the matter was discussed last year a good many claims had been sent in to the Department based upon this view of Section 97, and the Department were asked to take the question into consideration. The Vice President dealt with it in a frank spirit last Session, and admitted that the circular of 1881 did not constitute a statutory bar to the claims for arrears—that if a School Board could show a legal claim the circular would be of no value to set aside that claim. Well, a number of those claims having been sent in, the Department consulted the Law Officers of the Crown, and afterwards addressed a letter to the School Boards informing them that the Law Officers had advised the Department that such claims "should not be entertained." Very considerable importance might attach to the wording of that legal opinion, and he invited the Vice President to give the Committee some further explanation as to its precise meaning. He was placed at some disadvantage by the discussion taking place on that day, because he had a question on the Paper next week, asking the right hon. Gentleman for some explanation of a case relating to a particular School Board, the Sutton-in-Ashfield Board, in which the terms of the Circular of 1881 were set aside by the Department, and in which the Department assigned to the Board in question, not only the amount due under the section for the current year, and for the school year immediately preceding, but also the arrears for a third year. In this instance, therefore, the Department admitted the principle and the right of claim by the School Board. In the particular case to which he referred, the School Board, as he understood, became aware of their ability to make the claim under Section 97. They sent in their claim for arrears, and, as he was informed, the officials of the Education Department replied that the circular of 1881 barred all such claims, and that, therefore, the Department was not legally in a position to entertain any claim except that for the current year. The School Board thereupon drew the attention of the Department to the wording of the Act, and to their position as a necessitous School Board. A deputation from the Board then waited on the Department at Whitehall in 1885. And, finally, the Department said that, after considering the case, they would admit the arrears claim of the Board for a third year, the three years being 1883, 1884, and 1885. Now the matter was one of importance to a large number of people in many parts of the country. The total amount of such arrears claimed by the poor School Boards concerned was not small, and, supposing the opinion given by the Law Officers of the Crown was not so clear and decided as to constitute an absolute bar to the claims, he thought those School Boards were entitled, as a matter of right, to the generous consideration of the Department. ["Hear, hear!"] They had been practically kept in the dark, as he had said, with respect to the claims, and there was a large sum now fairly due to them. Even if the claims for arrears could not be recognised by the Department in view of the opinion expressed by the Law Officers, still he urged that the position of the School Board in question constituted, under the circumstances, a strong reason for the Department dealing with them in a broad and generous spirit. ["Hear, hear!"] He had quoted one instance in which the Department had recognised the claim for the arrears, and he saw no reason why the same consideration could not be extended to School Boards in many other necessitous districts. He begged to move the reduction which stood in his name.

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University) said that the promises contained in the circular of 1881 would be fulfilled to the letter, and every Board School would receive the amount to which it was entitled. The hon. Member seemed to think that the Estimate of £19,680 would prove to be too small to meet the claims of the School Boards, but he would point out that the Estimates had been carefully prepared by officials of experience, and it was believed that the sum asked for would meet all such claims as would mature and become payable before March 31 next, and that was all they had to do in those Supplementary Estimates. With regard to arrears, that was not a question for him, but rather for the House of Commons and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Committee of Council had no jurisdiction at all. The Committee of Council had intrusted to them by Parliament certain sums of money, and they were bound to pay them according to law. When they were in doubt as to the payments they ought to make, they fortified themselves with the opinion of the legal advisers of the Government. In this particular matter the Committee of Council had consulted the Law Officers of the Crown, and, as the result of the advice which they had received, they came to the decision that they could not entertain applications from necessitous Board Schools for grants beyond the current year and the preceding year. Of course, if the Chancellor of the Exchequer saw fit to put on the Estimates a sum of money for paying all the arrears, it would be the duty of the Committee of Council to make the payments accordingly; but, as the case now stood, they were not able to pay out of the sums voted for the current year more than the grant for the current year and the arrears for the year preceding.

The right hon. Member referred to the case of the School Board of Sutton-in-Ashfield, where two years' arrears were paid. He thought that must have been a payment made by a Liberal Government, because he did not think such a payment was ever made in his time. If the hon. Member would put a Question down for next week, he would answer it, and if there were any particular reasons why Sutton-in-Ashfield was treated different to other places, he should be glad to give him an explanation. So far as the Government was at present advised, while they would fulfil to the letter the engagements of 1881, and while they would ask Parliament in the coming year for sufficient provision to meet the case of all School Boards which applied for the arrears to which under the circular of 1881 they were entitled, they considered that the provision which was now being asked for was ample to fulfil those obligations, and he hoped, therefore, the Committee would vote that sum.

Mr. HERBERT LEWIS (Flint Boroughs) said the statement of the right hon. Gentleman that this was a question for the House of Commons and the Chancellor of the Exchequer was a most important one. He would venture to ask the House to consider it very carefully, because it affected the interests of a very large number of Boards of the poorest character all over the country. He certainly thought this was a case in which sentiments of equity ought to prevail, and if the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown precluded the Committee of Council from dealing with this matter according to an equitable view of the case, then the House of Commons, as the right hon. Gentleman had himself said, could take the matter into its own hands. He could not believe that the Government would, at a time like the present, refuse such a reasonable request as was now made. He felt a special interest in this question, because a very large proportion of these arrears were, unfortunately, due to the School Boards in Wales. He trusted the right hon. Gentleman would, on that ground, bring the weight of his influence to bear on the Chancellor of the Exchequer in order to have these grants made. If the Government declined to take this course, he hoped the House would take an independent view of the matter.

Mr. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) said he was sorry to hear the somewhat uncompromising line which the Vice President had taken up in this matter, because he was sure there was no desire on either side of the House to make any party capital out of the subject. He hoped that the Vice President would, on looking at this matter more carefully, see his way to make some suggestion to the House by which these poor districts might be able to claim the money to which they were unquestionably legally entitled. He understood the position the Vice President took up was that the Law Officers had advised that the claims beyond the current year and the year before were not legal. He could not say, judging by the terms of the circular letter, that the opinion expressed by the Law Officers was a very strong one, and he thought that, considering that public attention had been drawn to the matter, and that there were now a considerable number of these claims, they might fairly ask the Vice President to give his further and special attention to it, and see if the decision the Law Officers had arrived at might not be modified or altered. If it was not modified or altered, then they might press the Vice President to see whether, by legislation, or in some other way, he could not come to some just and satisfactory solution of this matter. If the arrears were paid beyond the current year and the past year in one case, it was done either legally or illegally. He could not think for a moment that a Vice President, whether he was a Conservative or Liberal Vice President, would commit an injustice, and if it was an illegality, it ought not to be permitted. It must be assumed that the Committee of Council, since they took legal advice, acted in a proper and legal manner; but if they were able, in the case of a single school, to give arrears beyond the past year, then it was clear that, under certain circumstances, they could do so in other cases. If, when the Vice-President came to consider the matter, he found that in one case arrears had been granted, that would go far to destroy the value of the legal opinion on the ratepayers' claim. The right hon. Gentleman would, he hoped, deal with this matter in a just, and even generous, spirit. The point of the case was, that it was not brought to the knowledge of these districts that they were entitled to this money, and there ought not to be any legal quibble in the way of their obtaining the grant.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield) did not think the Education Department came out very handsomely in the discussion of this question. It appeared that the School Board were entitled to the money from the Education Department, but were kept in ignorance of the fact, and when, later, the Boards made the discovery, the Department said that, though the ratepayers of a few years ago were entitled to receive it, the ratepayers of the present day were not. The facts being what they were, and especially if the statement made in regard to the school at Sutton-in-Ashfield was correct, then the Department might well strain a point in favour of the schools. He hoped that two assurances would be forthcoming, first, that the Sutton-in-Ashfield case would be inquired into, and, if the facts in regard to it had been correctly stated, a similar course would now be pursued; and secondly, that in coming legislative proposals on behalf of Board Schools this matter would be satisfactorily dealt with. He did not think it was becoming in a great Department to do anything which bore the appearance of sharp practice, and this term might, he thought, be applied to the way in which this matter had been dealt with.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE said the Committee had been told that an opinion had been given by the law officials, but the right hon. Gentleman did not convey to the Committee the exact terms of that opinion, and this, he thought, should be done. The question was, whether School Boards were entitled to these arrears or not, and upon this the Committee were entitled to some guidance. He called the attention of the Committee to the section under which the claim was made. When a School Board satisfied the Education Department that certain conditions obtained, such School Board was to be entitled to this particular grant. Thus the legal claim was established; and, he supposed, a School Board could, within the year, sue the Department or the Treasury for the amount. Was that so or not? The words were specific—"shall be entitled"—and if it was a legal obligation at all on the part of the Treasury or the Education Department, then, certainly two years was not the limit of the claim, the Statute of Limitations allowed six years. No statute imposed a limit of two years. The Committee were entitled to know what specifically was the opinion given by the legal advisers of the Department. It was not a case of a claim against the Crown by a litigant; it was the claim of a certain district to a certain sum of money under a statute, and in such a case, and on the public service, the Committee should know exactly what the opinion was. It might save the locality from indulging in litigation against a powerful Department, having at command the resources of the State. Such litigation might be crushing on a locality in which, perhaps, a shilling rate meant only a few hundred pounds. In the public interest he asked the right hon. Gentleman if he was prepared to lay the opinion of the Law Officers on the Table?

SIR J. GORST could not undertake to lay on the Table the opinion of the Law Officers. It was the universal custom, as he knew, having been a Law Officer himself, not to make these opinions public. Why it should be he did not know. In other countries it was not so. In the United States he believed the opinions of law officers were published. In this country it was never done; and it was not for him to act counter to the universal custom.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS (Glamorgan, Mid), on looking at the section of the Act, did not come to the conclusion at which the Law Officers arrived. Notwithstanding that precedents were against the publication of Law Officers' opinions, the Committee were entitled to ask the grounds upon which the opinion was given. It was plain that the proviso had been tacked on in Committee, and did not touch the first part of the section at all. There was nothing in the proviso to imply any limitation for any term of years. He invited the right hon. Gentleman to inform the Committee what his view of the section was, just as if there had been no Law Officers' opinion. The right hon. Gentleman had in view the interest of the Committee of Council, and he was perfectly certain the Committee of Council and the right hon. Gentleman would desire to pay these arrears, if allowed to do so by law. At the present time especially he should think they would be anxious to do so, for they were proposing to assist some classes of schools to a surprising degree. He did not think that the universal practice prevented the right hon. Gentleman from stating the grounds on which the opinion of the Law Officers was given. They constantly gave legal opinions to Members, but perhaps they were on a different footing to opinions given to the Government. There must be some remedy for the recovery of these arrears; the limitation of the recovery must be clearly expressed or necessarily implied from the provisions of the Act itself. The reason he asked the right hon. Gentleman to state his opinion was, that he believed the proper form for a School Board to adopt for recovery would be by Petition of Right to the Crown; and, no doubt, a School Board would be guided, in a large measure, by the opinion of the right hon. Gentleman.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES suggested that the Vice President of the Committee of Council should take the opinion of all his colleagues on the point, and call them together to give it. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.]

Mr. H. J. WILSON (York, W.R., Holmfirth) pointed out that, though the ratepayers changed, the School Board was a continuing body. He hoped the Attorney General would tell them why it should be lawful to recover one year's arrears and be illegal to go beyond it.

Mr. COURTENAY WARNER (Stafford, Lichfield) said there had been a hard case at Tamworth, where the School Board lost one year's arrears through the Education Department not making up its mind. When the Board tried to recover it subsequently they found they could not do so.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir Richard Webster, Isle of Wight) said that during the time he had had the privilege of holding the office he did there had not been the slightest difference of opinion as to the production of the opinions of the Law Officers. Under no circumstances had they been produced unless it was thought some public purpose would be served. He had heard Mr. Gladstone on more than one occasion refuse to produce the opinions of his Law Officers, and it would be absolutely impossible for the Law Officers to fulfil their duty of advising the Government in confidential matters if their opinions could be produced. The Vice President of the Council had been a Law Officer himself and knew what was the rule. Coming to the other point raised, no one could read Section 97 without coming to the distinct opinion that it was intended that the grants should be annual grants in respect of annual expenditure, and that School Boards could not be allowed to claim several years' arrears which, for their convenience, they had accumulated. The condition as "to the satisfaction of the Education Department" was intended to enable the Department to make reasonable and proper rules and enable School Boards to show that contributions to proper annual charges only were being asked for.

*Mr. CHANNING asked whether the Circular of the Education Department in 1881, promising a second year's arrears, was not a departure from the legal doctrine which the Attorney General had laid down?

The ATTORNEY GENERAL said he had carefully considered the Circular referred to. Prior to December 1881, there was not the strictness in regard to the matter that there ought to have been, and the Department, in the reasonable and proper exercise of its rights, laid down the Regulations which had been in force ever since.

*Mr. CHANNING submitted that there was no insuperable difficulty in the way of the Department issuing a Circular tomorrow, saying that owing to the circumstances they would consider the arrears not only for the immediately preceding year, but for the two or three previous years. The intention of Parliament clearly was that poor districts should have these sums of money allotted to them for the provision of school buildings, clearing off the sinking funds, and meeting all the necessities of education. There was a poor village in his own divison where agricultural land had been going down in value, while the school rate had grown up to 1s. 11d. in the pound. That School Board had been for many years past entitled to receive this amount, but was not aware of it. It seemed to him that, whatever might be the legal position, there was the strongest moral claim on the part of such a Board to have those arrears considered, as it was clearly the intention of Parliament that these sums should be given from year to year.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS explained to the Attorney General (who had been absent during the hon. Member's previous speech) that he had not questioned any opinion which had been given by the Law Officers of the Crown, but had asked what were the grounds for that opinion, as the matter did not seem quite clear from doubt. He would point out that the section appeared to divide itself into two distinct parts. The first part dealt with the conditions of the annual Parliamentary grant, and it did not appear to have any connection with the second part, which was in the nature of a proviso, and as to which he hazarded the opinion that it had been tacked on in Committee. The Attorney General said that only one year was recoverable here. He would ask the hon. and learned Gentleman this question: assume the Estimates were prepared for the year 1895-96, that would only contemplate a state of things up to the 31st March 1896. The school year for 1895-96 would be from September 1895 to September 1896. What was the date within which the School Board might claim the year's account if it should be limited to one year? Were they to be allowed to have another year from September 1896. If only one year was recoverable, was it recoverable at any time?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL replied that all schools did not end their year on the 29th September, and it did not matter in the least whether the financial year of a school ended then, or on the 31st December, or on the 31st March. What was asked for by the Department was an account under the section in respect of the year, and which was recoverable, for the purpose of the Estimates. The Circular was issued in regard to the 29th September accounts, and provided that the account was a fair estimate for the year ending September 29 in any particular year. Then it could be made the subject of a claim for the purpose of the succeeding year's Estimate, and it was that which the Department had no doubt in view when they said they would allow a period of, practically speakng, another year, for the actual account to be made up; although the two years—the school year and the financial year—did not terminate on the same date, for practical purposes they would be treated as so doing, and the fact that the educational year ended on the 29th September created no difficulty. The Circular was to direct how the claims for the twelve months should be made up, and that was its only effect. The reason that difficulty had arisen was because there had been attempts to bring into the scheme for the one year the expenses or allowances which might have been claimed in past years.

Question put, "That a sum, not exceeding £153,034, be granted for the said Service."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 42; Noes, 140.—(Division List, No. 52.)

Original Question put, and agreed to.

14. £10,000, Supplementary, Science and Art Department for the United Kingdom.—Agreed to.

15. £650, Supplementary, British Museum.—Agreed to.

16. £327, Supplementary, National Portrait Gallery.—Agreed to.

17. £20,110, Supplementary, Public Education, Ireland.—Agreed to.

MR. KNOX said he did not wish to raise any of the contentious questions, but item J, he thought, required some explanation. So far as he understood the matter the Government seemed to have arrived at a satisfactory settlement of a question which had occupied a good deal of their time last Session and part of this. But he thought it would be satisfactory if the Secretary to the Treasury would explain what the settlement was, as it evidently required serious consideration before they could discuss it.

*MR. HANBURY said this was only part of the whole contribution, which was about £108,000, including the payment to the Teachers' Pension Fund on another Vote. The whole sum was in respect of the arrears of the grant for the last four or five years, based on a capitation fee of 10s. The reason why the £12,600 in item J had been detached from the £95,000, which was to go towards the Teachers' Pension Fund, was that the convent and monastery schools had got no interest in the Teachers' Pension Fund, and it would be hardly fair to deprive them of their share of the arrears. The arrears in the case of all other schools interested in the Pension Fund would be devoted to putting that Fund on a sound footing.

Mr. KNOX asked if the Secretary to the Treasury could state whether or not the Pension Fund at present would be actuarially sufficient for the claims of existing teachers, because if the teachers understood that it was not sufficient to meet the claims of existing teachers it would modify their feeling as to the disposition of that money.

*Mr. HANBURY said he did not think he should be able to reply to the hon. Member on the present Vote, because the matter he had referred to was on a separate Vote, dealing with all the teachers who were not teachers in monastic schools.

Mr. KNOX thought it was not an unsatisfactory thing that they should have been able, by knocking somewhat repeatedly at the door of the Treasury, to extract something like £100,000, and hoped it was a foretaste of the other things which they were going to get by similar procedure.

Vote agreed to.

Class V.

18. £23,670, Supplementary, Diplomatic and Consular Services.

*Sir CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean) said he should not attempt to debate questions of policy, but some portion of the Vote related to the reception of Li Hung Chang, who came to this country last year in a capacity that was somewhat undefined. There was an impression that his visit was likely to have some influence which would be beneficial to this country in their dealings with China and questions of the China trade. He believed that impression had proved to be entirely erroneous. He desired to know whether on the Foreign Office Vote any statement would be made with regard to the Government's policy in connection with recent treaties and negotiations in China. The prestige of this country in that part of the world had apparently received a considerable blow, and he thought an opportunity should be afforded of debating that question, and questions connected with the present position of Korea, and other matters.

*The UNDER SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. George Curzon, Lancashire, Southport) said that, on the point regarding Li Hung Chang raised by the right hon. Baronet, it was not correct to say that he occupied an undefined position when he visited this country. He came here as a Special Envoy with special letters of credence from the Emperor of China to the Queen, and, whatever may have been the impression entertained in some quarters as to the benefits which might accrue to our trade in China from his visit, he did come for the purpose of laying specific proposals before Her Majesty's Government. The right hon. Baronet asked whether an opportunity would not be given at a later stage, perhaps on the Foreign Office Vote, of hearing something as to the Government's policy in the Far East. He thought that was a most reasonable demand, and he did not think the Secretary of State would have any other desire whatever than to comply with it. If no other opportunity occurred in the course of the next few weeks, the hon. Member for the Ecclesall division of Sheffield had got a Motion down at an early date for a discussion on the policy of the Government in that part of the world. But, if that opportunity did not occur, he did not think there would be any objection whatever to a statement being made, when the Foreign Office Vote came on, as to what was going on in that part of the world, and what were the views of the Government. The proposals made by Li Hung Chang were merely trading proposals.

Mr. HENRY LABOUCHERE (Northampton) thought they should have had a Blue-book upon this question. Vague statements which appeared in the newspayers were not sufficient, and as the question was urgent at the present moment, they ought to have adequate information. Surely sufficient time had elapsed. There was an item of £1,000 under the head "Manica Boundary." That was a boundary between some of the South Africa Chartered Company's possessions which was due to a war which took place between the Company and, practically, the Portuguese. If there was to be a boundary the Company ought to pay for it.

*MR. CURZON thought the hon. Member was mistaken, as this was territory administered by the British Crown. A treaty was signed in 1891 between Great Britain and the Portuguese as to the frontier of their possessions in that part of Africa, and the delimitation consequent upon that treaty was then begun. There was disagreement between the two parties' Commissioners, and the dispute was referred to arbitration. The arbitration resulted very decidedly in our favour.

Vote agreed to.

19. £36,700, Supplementary, British Protectorates in Uganda and Central and East Africa.

*SIR C. DILKE said this was money to cover the cost of operations in two wars which had taken place on the coast. As he had done on previous occasions, he protested against the Foreign Office carrying on wars of this description. Mr. Harding, and the other excellent Foreign Office clerks, were not the people to carry on these wars; in fact, the sooner the Foreign Office got out of this East African territory and handed it over to the Colonial Office the better for all concerned.

MR. HENRY LABOUCHERE asked what quid pro quo we got for the expenditure of £36,700? One of his strong objections to the expenditure of such large sums of money in Africa was that, not only was it unjust, but that we did not get anything for it. Could the Under Secretary show the Committee that in meal or malt we had got £30,000 or even £500 worth for our money?

*MR. CURZON said the object of the expenditure had been very clearly explained in a Blue-book laid before Parliament. What we had gained was the pacification of the Zanzibar Protectorate which we had assumed. Disturbances arose owing to the hostile attitude of important Arab chiefs, and in consequence a regiment was sent from India. The operations conducted were entirely successful, and now throughout that long strip of maritime territory over which we exercised supremacy and which we were governing there was perfect peace and tranquillity.

MR. LABOUCHERE said he should not divide the Committee, as the money had been spent, but he objected to the expenditure of a shilling of British money in establishing peace and tranquillity in any part of Africa. [A laugh.]

Vote agreed to.

20. £14,980, Supplementary, Colonial Services, including South Africa.

MR. DALZIEL asked for an explanation of the expenditure of £1,000, consequent on the transfer of buildings in Norfolk Island to the Government of New South Wales.

MR. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.) asked whether the Colonial Secretary would give some information as to the second item, one relating to the Transvaal?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.) said the condition of things in Norfolk Island had got as bad as it could. There was practically no proper administration of justice, and it was absolutely necessary to make a change. It was the opinion of the Government that it would be very much better that this dependency should be governed by New South Wales. The Government of New South Wales expressed their readiness to undertake the government, but, when doing so, represented that the administrative buildings had been allowed to get into a terrible state of repair. £1,000 was granted for the repairs, but he believed the expenses had been more than was calculated. The change which had taken place was apparently entirely satisfactory. The late British Agent stood in rather a different position. No archives were kept and there were no means of dealing properly with the business of the office. It was an arrangement made under totally different circumstances, before the post became of the great importance that it was at present. ["Hear, hear!"] When the new Agent was appointed it was necessary to provide him with a new residence. It was found that no house suitable could be obtained on lease, and it was necessary to purchase a house and make additions to it. When it was remembered that house property in Pretoria was, he thought, more expensive than in the West-end of London, he believed it would be felt that on the whole they had done the best they could. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. BUXTON expressed his satisfaction as to what had been done with regard to Norfolk Island and the way in which the transfer had been carried out.

Vote agreed to.

21. £1,200, Supplementary, Slave Trade Services.

Mr. DALZIEL asked for information as to the suppression of slavery in Zanzibar.

*Sir C. DILKE said there could be no doubt there had been a large increase in the shipping of slaves to the island.

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS thought that a discussion on slavery on this item, which was very limited, would be out of order.

Mr. DALZIEL said, in view of the fact that the late Government had been subjected to a vote of censure on this Question, he thought they ought to know whether anything had been done, or, at least, how soon the Government would make a statement on the subject. Would it be on the Foreign Office Vote?

Mr. CURZON thought that would be the proper course to pursue.

Vote agreed to.

22. £16,304, Treasury Chest Fund.

Mr. T. LOUGH asked for an explanation of this somewhat mysterious item.

*Mr. HANBURY explained that the deficiency chiefly arose in connection with one local Treasury Chest, and this was due to the quarterly rating of the Mexican dollar.

Vote agreed to.

Class VI.

23. £30,151, Supplementary, Trustee Savings Bank and Friendly Societies Deficiency.

Mr. G. C. T. BARTLEY (Islington, N.) thought this was a very important matter, and he regretted that the Chancellor of the Exchequer was not there to explain to them this very important new departure in connection with Savings Banks. For the first time a deficiency was shown, and it was necessary, in his opinion, for the Government to have some distinct policy. (The Chancellor of the Exchequer having come in.) He hoped they should have some idea given them of what the policy of the Government was to be. It was obvious that after giving 2½ per cent. there was absolutely no margin.

Mr. WALTER HAZELL (Leicester) hoped the Government would look carefully into the matter. Some extension might be made of the limits within which savings banks funds could be invested, and everything possible done to encourage the habits of thrift of the people.

Mr. LOUGH remarked that on the third item there was a considerable increase in the Estimate for the deficiency for friendly societies and savings banks.

*The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the reason of the Vote was that the annual interest arising from sums invested was less than the interest paid to depositors and the expenses of management of the banks. The sums invested at the present rate at which Government securities had to be purchased, obviously produced a very low rate of interest indeed. Consols and other securities of the kind to which the investments of these banks were limited by law, stood at a very high rate last year, and consequently the profits of the banks fell in proportion. He had been asked to make a statement of policy. Last year he saw what was coming, and he had brought forward this Vote rather earlier than usual in order that the attention of the House of Commons might be directed to the matter. ["Hear!"] This was the first time it had been necessary to ask Parliament to subsidise the Post Office Savings Banks, and it clearly amounted to this—that the Government were paying depositors in those banks a higher rate of interest for their money than that money could really earn. That was not a thing which could continue. [Cheers.] He did not believe that depositors themselves would desire to receive from the State what he must call a kind of charity. He admitted that these banks were of the greatest value to the community; but it was not necessary to their value that they should pay more interest than they could earn. The public were induced to invest in Post Office Savings Banks far more by the sense of security given than by the particular rate of interest paid on their money. ["Hear, hear!"] When he was asked whether he could suggest an extension of the limits at present imposed on investments by the banks, he was bound to say that he saw great difficulties in the matter. It must be remembered that the State was liable for this money, and it would be a very dangerous thing for the State to receive this enormous sum from depositors to whom it was actually liable and then invest the money in securities of a more or less speculative nature on which great losses might be suffered. Under the present law the investments were confined to securities guaranteed by the State, and he should be most reluctant to make a change in that direction. He did not wish to say anything more at present, because he had not made up his mind as to what was to be done in a matter which was full of difficulties and was of great importance. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not wish to move in the matter one single day sooner than was necessary. So long as the present rate of interest could be maintained he wished to maintain it; but he must warn the Committee that the time was rapidly coming when it must be considered whether it might not be necessary, perhaps not in all but in some cases, to reduce the present rate of interest. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. T. P. WHITTAKER (York, W.R., Spen Valley) asked how the deficiency was arrived at? Was account taken of the redemption of Consols, which were now selling at 113 and which were liable to be redeemed at 100?

*THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER said that if the hon. Member would look at the Returns annually presented, he would find full particulars.

MR. BARTLEY explained that really the amount of interest paid varied very fractionally for most depositors, whether the rate were ½ per cent. higher or lower. The security was the great point. It was not necessary to consider the larger deposits, up to £200. A very large number of the deposits were of £5, £6, and £7, and in those cases it was obvious that the reduction of the interest by ½ per cent. would only mean to each depositor a difference of a fraction of a farthing a week. It would be a bad thing if it were to get about that a large Parliamentary Vote was necessary to balance the bank's accounts. As to enlarging the scope of investments, whatever security was permitted would be practically guaranteed by the State, its price would at once rise to the price of Consols, and the object of the Government would thereby be frustrated. There was no alternative to reducing the rate of interest. He had had long experience of a penny bank, in which the rate of interest had recently to be reduced; and no ill-effects to the popularity of the institution resulted.

MR. LOUGH hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer would consider very carefully before he changed the rate of interest. While the Parliamentary grant was so small, it would be a pity to disturb a system which was of such value to the poor people; and there might be reason to think that the deficiency would not be permanent.

Vote agreed to.

24. £95,434, Teachers' Pension Fund, Ireland.

MR. J. H. YOXALL (Nottingham, W.) asked from what sources this money was to be drawn? Was it money due to the Irish schools, and, if so, had care been taken to ascertain whether the teachers who were entitled to these arrears were quite satisfied with the proposal to place the money in the Irish Teachers' Pension Fund? He was glad that something was being done to strengthen the Fund, but regretted that nothing had been done to redeem the promise to establish a similar fund for England and Scotland.

MR. FLYNN said that the Committee ought to know exactly the position of the fund. If there was a deficiency, it was not due to any fault of the teachers, but to a miscalculation on the part of the Treasury in 1885. The fund was started out of the Irish Church Fund, and in 1885 there was a valuation, when a surplus of £196,000 was declared. This was an important question for the teachers, as no male teacher was allowed to draw from the fund until he had given 40 years of service, and then he only received £6 a year. The Irish Teachers' Pension Fund ought not to suffer because the Treasury had made a mistake.

MR. DALZIEL said he wished to ask the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary to the Treasury from what sources the money necessary to place this Fund upon a sound financial basis was to come?

*Mr. HANBURY said that originally a large proportion of the Fund was derived from the Irish Church Fund. Owing to a miscalculation with regard to the Fund, arising out of an actuarial mistake, there was a large deficit in the amount of the Fund, and the Treasury felt themselves morally bound to do their best to make good that deficiency, and, therefore, it was that this £95,000 was now asked for. With regard to the actual position of the Fund, he was sorry to have to state that it was insolvent to the extent of a million and a quarter. That deficiency they had to face, and they were now endeavouring to put the Fund in a solvent position. The arrangement which they now asked the House to agree to was that this sum of £95,000 should be voted in respect of a readjustment of School Grants during the last three or four years, while a certain sum would be deducted from the teachers' salaries. By means of an additional sum to be derived from an annual Vote of that House, the whole of the amount necessary to make up the deficiency would be obtained, and the Fund would be restored to a position of solvency. With regard to the question which had been put to him by the hon. Member for West Nottingham, as to whether the Irish Teachers had been consulted before this arrangement was adopted, all he could say was that the National Education Commissioners in Ireland were perfectly satisfied with what the Government proposed to do in the matter.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES said that, from the statement which the Secretary to the Treasury had just made, it appeared that the Committee were asked to vote this sum of £95,000 in order to make good a deficiency which had been made by an actuary of the Treasury. In that case they must take it that the Treasury themselves were to blame in this matter.

*Mr. HANBURY said that the mistake occurred some years ago.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES said that might be so, but the principle remained the same. He thought that actuaries never made mistakes, and that they were regarded as being infallible in the accuracy of their calculations. It was clear that in this instance the Treasury actuary had not been infallible, and, therefore, the Treasury themselves were responsible. The truth was that the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary to the Treasury came down to that House and asked, not for a Supplementary Vote, but for a bill of indemnity on behalf of the Treasury. He recollected the time when the right hon. Gentleman sat on the other side of the House, and if this matter had been brought forward at that time he could scarcely say what might not have happened. The right hon. Gentleman would then probably have moved the adjournment of the House in order to call attention to it as a matter of urgency, and perhaps have followed that up by a Motion for the impeachment of the Ministry. [Laughter.] Without going to that extent, however, he thought that the Committee were entitled to have the whole matter cleared up.

*Mr. YOXALL said that he was not quite satisfied with the explanation which the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary to the Treasury had given the Committee in relation to this subject. He could not admit that these payments ought to come out of the arrears of the Fee Grants, neither could he admit that nothing was due to the Irish Teachers. He hoped that as the Treasury was to be generous to the Irish Teachers' Pension Fund, provided that the money did not come out of the arrears of the Irish Fee Grant, the Treasury would also be just to teachers in England and Wales and Scotland, by establishing a Pension Fund for them.

Vote agreed to.

Class VII.

25. £4,500, Supplementary, Temporary Commissions.

*Sir C. DILKE said that he thought that neither the Agricultural Commission nor the Commission on the Licensing Laws had done much good. With regard to the West India Commission, he thought that its attention should be directed to the question of manufacture rather than to economic questions.

Mr. J. CALDWELL (Lanark, Mid) said he desired to refer to the item for the Scottish University Commission, and to point out that the Commission ought to have expired long ago. It was a piece of absolute jobbery. The Commission was established in 1889, and had gone on ever since. Last year a Vote of £510 was obtained in the expectation that the whole thing would be wound up in a month or two, and now a Supplementary Vote for £620 was brought forward. The Commission had already cost £16,000. The reason why the Vote had been allowed to pass without remark for the last year or two was, that everybody interested expected that it would not be asked for again. He wished the Secretary to the Treasury to understand that the Scotch Members were very emphatic in this matter, and he hoped the right hon. Gentleman would take steps to bring the Commission to an end.

*MR. HANBURY said the hon. Gentleman was quite right in saying that a large sum was asked for in these Estimates, but it arose in this way. When the Estimates were framed at the beginning of the year it was expected that the work of the Commission would be completed by July 1 of last year. Unfortunately it was found that the Commission would have to sit, at any rate, till July 1 1897, owing to the great opposition offered by Lord Bute to the amalgamation of St. Andrew's University and University College, Dundee. It was necessary for the Commission to frame fresh ordinances for these two united bodies; and, meantime, it was absolutely necessary for the Commission to be continued.

Vote agreed to.

26. £16,617, Repayment to the Local Loans Fund.

In reply to Sir C. DILKE,

*MR. HANBURY said he had to defend this policy when the Bill by which these sums were written off was before the House last year, and he did not think he would be in order to go back to it. These arrears had now been written off by Act of Parliament, and the Government were bound by the Local Loans Fund Act, 1887, to bring in this Vote in order to make good the deficiency.

MR. CALDWELL was understood to complain that Scotland only got £65 out of this transaction.

Vote agreed to.

27. £20,500, International Exhibitions. Agreed to.

REVENUE DEPARTMENTS.

28. £6,800, Supplementary, Inland Revenue.

MR. WHITTAKER wished to ask for a little information as to the methods of selecting cases for prosecution adopted by the Department.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I do not see under what item the hon. Member can raise the question.

MR. WHITTAKER: The law charges for prosecutions.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: That item refers to the fees paid to counsel and solicitors. The question whether the prosecutions were properly instituted does not arise on that.

MR. WHITTAKER: There is an item for cost of prosecutions in Inland Revenue Department.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Any question relating to prosecutions which have taken place might be dealt with under this item; but a question as to the future policy of the Department as to prosecutions could not.

MR. WHITTAKER: I wish to raise a question as to the present method of prosecution.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: That is a matter which is in the discretion of the heads of the Department.

MR. WHITTAKER: Would it not arise on the amount of money incurred in prosecutions?

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I think not. The heads of the Department apply for extra money to meet the expenses of prosecutions that have taken place. The general policy of the Inland Revenue could not be discussed on that.

MR. WHITTAKER: Can I not argue that it is not fair to select some cases for prosecutions and not others?

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: No, because that is a matter within the discretion of the Department. Counsel and solicitors do not have the selection of the cases.

MR. WHITTAKER: Very well, Sir, I will raise the matter on the General Estimates.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES asked whether there had been any large addition to what he might call the Statistical Department, and any diversion of work from other Departments. Could the right hon. Gentleman give him any information that would enable him to understand what the additions to the establishment were?

*MR. HANBURY said the additions arose almost entirely from the additions that had to be made in connection with the Death Duties.

Vote agreed to.

29. £10, Supplementary, Post Office.

MR. DALZIEL asked when a Report of Lord Tweedmouth's Commission would be circulated? He wished to bring to the right hon. Gentleman's attention the great dissatisfaction that was given to some steamship companies with regard to the American Mails. There was an especially strong feeling in the Argentine with regard to the few deliveries from this country, whence letters were only received once in 10 or 14 days. Of course the best way out of this difficulty was to send the Mails by all companies.

*MR. HANBURY said that the Vote referred to the cost of the boats which carried the Mails from Holyhead to Dublin, and he did not think the Question the hon. Member had put properly arose on this Vote. He thought the Report of Lord Tweedmouth's Committee was handed in at the end of last December. It was a long Report dealing with a large variety of points, and was very complicated. It also, as hon. Members knew, dealt with questions involving very great expenditure. It had, in the first place, passed through the hands of the Post Office Authorities, whose final recommendations had only reached the Treasury a week ago. The matter had still to be dealt with by the Treasury, and in the circumstances he could hold out no hope that the Report would be presented to Parliament before three weeks or a month at the least. The Government thought that the Report ought not to be presented until the Treasury had come to a conclusion as to what ought to be done.

Chai. man of Ways and Means.

Resolutions to be reported upon Monday next; Committee to sit again upon Monday next.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT (1894) AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

SHOP ASSISTANTS (HALF-HOLIDAY) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday next.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

MUSEUMS OF THE SCIENCE AND ART DEPARTMENT.

Ordered that a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into and report upon the administration and cost of the Museums of the Science and Art Department.

Committee accordingly nominated of,—Mr. Acland, Lord Balcarres, Mr. Bartley, Mr. Bhownaggree, Mr. John Burns, Dr. Farquharson, Sir John Gorst, Mr. Ernest Gray, Sir Henry Howorth, Mr. Kenrick, Mr. Herbert Lewis, Mr. Platt-Higgins, Sir Francis Powell, Mr. Donal Sullivan, and Mr. Yoxall.

Ordered, That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers, and records.

Ordered, That five be the quorum.—[Sir William Walrond.]

House adjourned at Five minutes after Nine o'clock till Monday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 1st March 1897.

REPRESENTATIVE PEER FOR IRELAND. (LORD FARNHAM.)

Report made from the Lord Chancellor, that the right of Somerset Henry Maxwell, Baron Farnham, to vote at the elections of Representative Peers for Ireland has been established to the satisfaction of the Lord Chancellor; read, and ordered to lie on the Table.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

CHRISTCHURCH INCLOSURE ALLOTMENTS BILL.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Lord Halsbury), moved "That this Bill be now read a Second time."

Lord HOBHOUSE moved to leave out all the words after "That," and to insert

> "having regard to the policy of Parliament as declared by the Commons Act, 1876, especially with respect to fuel allotments, this House is not prepared to pass a Private Bill in order to enable the sale and inclosure of fuel allotments contrary to such policy."

His Lordship said that he made the Motion entirely on public grounds, and in support of the policy which was fixed in 1876, after a great deal of fluctuation. It was not necessary to enter into minute detail as to the early history of those lands. They formed part of a much larger tract of open land, which in 1802 was the subject of an Enclosure Act. By that Act the Commissioners were directed to award to the Lords of the Manors so much land as they considered proper for a turf common for certain described cottages, and the Lord of the Manor was to hold the land awarded to him in trust for the occupiers, for the time being, of the cottages as a turf common—that was to say, as fuel allotments. In pursuance of that order the Commissioners set out to the lord of the manor in the case in question 425 acres, about five acres a cottage, the maximum they were empowered to set out. The present lord of the manor was Sir George Meyrick; he was the owner of the soil as a trust common, but in trust for the occupiers of the cottages. The number of cottages had decreased to about 53 at the present time, and oddly enough, the acreage had decreased in almost exact proportion as the cottages. Railways had taken a small portion of the land, and the Corporation of Bournemouth had taken about 50 acres for a cemetery. The same public body had taken about 100 acres for a park, but this was taken in accordance with the Act, and to be kept as open ground. The result was that there were now left about 260 acres of open land, and that land it was proposed to sell, and, of course, to enclose. The policy laid down by the Legislature was clear enough. The views held in regard to the subject of enclosures had, as their Lordships knew, undergone very considerable alteration, and it was now maintained that the public—the people of the neighbourhood—had an interest in those questions of land enclosure, and that whenever it was necessary to come to the Legislature for extraordinary powers beyond the law, in order to enclose any common land, Parliament would have regard to those public interests, and particularly to those of the cottagers and others living in the neighbourhood. Those views found expression in the Commons Act of 1876, which laid down general principles, and also principles as regarded fuel allotments. The earlier part of the Act summed up the provisions of former Acts down to the year 1868, and showed that in determining upon enclosure regard was to be had to the health, comfort, and convenience of the local public, and in order to insure that the enclosures would be a benefit to the neighbourhood as well as to private interests, it directed the Inclosure Commissioners to make inquiries with that view. Then, as to fuel allotments, Section 19 of the Act recited that fuel allotments for the poor had, by words under the Inclosure Act prior to 1845, been set out and vested in divers persons as trustees. Except in regard to the words "for the poor," which were not in the Act, the present case was precisely similar. The Act of 1876 enacted that it should not be lawful to authorise the use of any such fuel allotments for any purposes other than those declared by the Act of Parliament, and this involved a direct contravention of what the Bill under consideration sought to do. The words "the same as hereinafter mentioned" in the Act, referred to a power given to the Charity Commissioners to take fuel allotments as gardens or recreation grounds, and to make schemes for their administration accordingly. That seemed to him directly in the teeth of this proposal. Directions were given to the Inclosure Commissioners, and to the Charity Commissioners, and to the Board of Agriculture, which had succeeded the Inclosure Commissioners, not to allow the sale or inclosure of fuel allotments. In 1893 the same principles were affirmed. In that year the inclosures, under the Statute of Merton, were forbidden, except with the assent of the Board of Agriculture; and in considering whether it should give assent or not the Board was directed to have regard to the considerations laid down in the Act of 1876, and he thought that those enactments laid down a standard from which the House ought not lightly to depart. The only distinction he could understand —he did not know it was taken or not— between the case before the House and the case mentioned in the Act of 1876 was that the Act mentioned allotments for the poor. Can it be conceived that, if it was forbidden to aid the poor by turning the fuel allotments into something more valuable, it ever was intended that the rates should be aided by turning their fuel allotments into something more valuable? If the distinction were taken, that eliminated the question of charity altogether, and referred them to the general principles that the inclosure must be for the benefit of the neighbourhood and the public. No doubt the Bill came here under the sanction of the Court of Chancery; but, he asked, in whose interest was that sanction given? The Court of Chancery had jurisdiction to administer the settled estate of Sir George Meyrick, and it had jurisdiction to administer charitable trusts generally. But it had no jurisdiction to order an inclosure or sale of fuel allotments, and it was on that ground that this Bill came before the House. He took it that the Court's orders were excellent for those subjects under which it had jurisdiction, but the neighbours were not heard before the Court, the public were not heard, and, in all probability, not a single thought had been given to those interests. Their safeguard lay in this, that it was necessary to come here for the sale and inclosure of the lands. He did not doubt the omnipotence of Parliament. This and the other House might pass a Bill containing a provision quite contrary to anything that had been previously laid down by the Legislature, and he did not doubt there were instances in which it would be quite proper to depart from that policy. In the case of the Bournemouth Cemetery, part of these lands were taken; there was a great public object, and the fuel rights were taken. He could not find from the Bill that any attempt was made to show that in this case the Legislature was warranted in departing from the policy it had previously laid down. Judging from the Attorney General's report, and from certain communications coming from the local bodies, which were not before the House, he maintained that the case for departing from the general policy of the law was a very weak one. What interests were to be served by this proposed sale? He perceived that the Lord of the Manor was declared entitled to half of the value. The Lord of the Manor stood in the same position as every other Lord of the Manor who asked for inclosure— certainly no better—because this particular lord had rather smaller interests than others, for he was debarred by the Act of 1802 from pasturing the land, and he could not get minerals, because the land was devoted to turbary, and he must not disturb the surface. He did not know what interest the Lord of the Manor had in the land, beyond the important one of being the owner of the soil, and the unimportant one of being entitled to a right of sporting over the surface. He supposed they would hear that this was a charitable trust. If it was a charity, of course it fell within the Act of 1876. If some distinction was taken on that ground, he asked what the charity was? It was a charity only in a technical sense, because it was a trust for the benefit of a number of persons large enough and indefinite enough to be called the public, and such public trusts were called charities. If they made the distinction that was sought to be made here they would include such a number of cases as would go very far to repeal the Act so far as it related to fuel allotments. But he observed that the nature of the charity, calling it such, was simply to cut turf over, at most, five acres of land for each cottage. If he translated that into money value, 40s. a year would be the utmost value. There was now in the Court of Chancery the sum of upwards of £7,000 accruing on behalf of the fuel rights from the 50 acres taken for the Bournemouth Cemetery, and that alone, if it were divided amongst the 53, would yield an income considerably larger than anything they or their predecessors could possibly have had in fuel rights. He noticed that the increase contemplated was not for the objects of the Act of 1802. It was declared to be devoted indefinitely to general charitable purposes, and a scheme was to be made in which these particular objects were to have due regard shown to them. They would, therefore, have this result; not only were the lands to be diverted from the uses to which they were devoted by the Act of 1802 and the other general Acts, but they were to be diverted, he did not know to what extent, to certain uses—they did not know what uses. They knew nothing of them but this, that they must be something entirely different from any uses that were dreamed of by those who made the arrangement of 1802. He submitted, with some confidence, that that was an extremely weak case with which anybody could come to Parliament and ask it to depart from the declared policy of the law. What had they on the other side? They had an enormous rapid increase of population and building. If he might be a witness in the case, he could say that in his early youth one used to journey by coach from Christchurch to Poole for eight miles of almost continuous open moor, and now one made the same journey through eight miles of almost continuous lines of houses, each house with its inclosure, and every here and there a dense settlement behind a fringe of houses. This absorption of open land was going on with great rapidity, and he learned from the four local bodies who were opposed to the Bill that already recreation ground was lacking, and they were desirous of securing land. He asserted that the most charitable use that could be made of the lands for the neighbourhood, for the public, even for the 53 owners or occupiers of the cottages, was to leave the lands in the present state, of which the law approved. There were no reasons for departing from the practice, while there were strong reasons for them adhering to it, and he hoped their Lordships would refuse their sanction to the Bill.

*THE LORD CHANCELLOR said this Bill was promoted under the sanction of the Attorney General. The Lord of the Manor claimed to be substantially the owner, but various persons claimed to have an interest in the land. It was necessary for the Attorney General to intervene for the protection of the charity. The matter was carried from Court to Court, and in 1892 that House decided that the Lord of the Manor had a substantial interest, but subject to rights of turbary. That was the condition of things when the Attorney General entered into negotiations with those interested for the purpose of rendering this property for all time valuable to those whom it concerned. The original settlement was made in 1782, and there were four different occasions when portions of this land had been taken for railway and other purposes, and there remained 200 out of 421 acres. The only effect of the rejection of the Bill would be that nobody would be able to make the land valuable for anything. He wished to say one word as to the public park which had been obtained for Bournemouth. The noble Lord said something about somebody getting something. He did not know to whom the allusion was made, unless it was intended as an attack on the Lord of the Manor.

LORD HOBHOUSE denied that he made any attack on the Lord of the Manor.

*THE LORD CHANCELLOR asked what was the meaning of the references to the rich and the poor? The Lord of the Manor waived his right altogether, and Bournemouth obtained a public park on very cheap terms indeed, by reason of the Lord of the Manor giving up his interest for the benefit of the public. The noble Lord suggested that the interest of the Lord of the Manor was very small indeed, but that was not so; it was 18-20ths of the whole. He did not think the suggestion quite candid. Now what was the result of what had been done? The Attorney General reported, as their Lordships knew, on all matters affecting charities, and had recommended this scheme to their Lordships as an expedient thing for the charity. His noble Friend seemed to be very much shocked at the intervention of the Attorney General in order to settle the matter. His hon. Friend spoke as if he represented some great public body, but he thought there were only 53 of the turf claimants altogether. Before the Committee everyone could be heard, and show what interest they had. The Charity Commissioners could make no claim in respect of money paid under the Act if the Bill should pass, and under the 11th Section it was provided that due regard should be shown to the claims of those who had turbary rights. He had explained only why the Attorney General had intervened. He had intervened solely on behalf of the public, and the utmost care had been taken in dealing with the allotments. He thought it would be most unusual if their Lordships rejected this Bill at that stage. One portion of the land had been in litigation so long that the law costs had swallowed up everything, and this Bill would prevent further fighting. The offer of the Lord of the Manor was a very generous one, and one which the Attorney General was very glad to accept. Under these circumstances he trusted their Lordships would not take the unusual course of rejecting a Bill of that sort on the Second Reading. Everything that had to be urged could be urged in Committee. The Attorney General, in the exercise of his great office, had recommended this as a proper arrangement to be made in the interest of the public, and he trusted the House would not set the bad example of refusing the Second Reading.

Lord HERSCHELL said if he could agree with the premiss of the noble and gallant Lord he could agree with the conclusion at which he arrived. With all respect to the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack he must say that the fallacy of his argument arose from the fact of his having mixed together two questions which were absolutely separate, namely, that which arose with regard to the portions of the land which had been sold, and that which arose with regard to that portion which remained unsold. The portion of the land which had been sold had been acquired by railway companies under their statutory powers, and by other parties, and the money which had been received for it was, of course, subject to the jurisdiction of the Courts of Law. The Amendment of the noble Lord, however, referred not to the sold portion of the land but to the unsold portion of it. He could not regard the Measure in the light that the noble and learned Lord looked at it, because it appeared to him that it dealt with a matter of public importance. If this subject were to be dealt with in a private Bill the door would be opened for numbers of such Bills being introduced with the object of contravening the avowed intentions of the Legislature with regard to these fuel allotments. In his view the Amendment of the noble Lord would not kill the Bill because it would merely operate as an Instruction to the Committee that they should strike out that part of the Bill which proposed to deal with the unsold portion of the land. By the 19th Section of the Commons Act of 1876 Parliament had said to the Inclosure Commissioners,

> "You are not to deal by way of inclosure with any land which has been appropriated to fuel allotments."

And Parliament had further said that when such fuel allotments were no longer required for that particular purpose, they were to be used as recreation grounds or for field allotments. No authority whatever was given to anyone to dispose of these allotments by way of sale, except under the powers that might be conferred by an Act of Parliament. Even those to whom fuel allotments belonged could not dispose of them by agreement between themselves. It was evidently the intention of Parliament that when the very limited user of these allotments came to an end the rights of the public in the land were to be considered, and the allotments were to be appropriated to recreation grounds if they were not required for field allotments. By this Bill it was proposed simply to sell the land and to divide the money which it realised. The argument of the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack with regard to the litigation in reference to the land and to the compromise which had been arrived at appeared to him not to apply in any way to the unsold portion of the land. The parties concerned could not legally agree among themselves to sell that which they had no right to sell. There was, of course, nothing to prevent dealing with the money that formed the proceeds of the sold portion of the land. He confessed that he could see no reason why the policy that had been laid down by the Legislature in the Act of 1876 with regard to these fuel allotments should now be set aside. In these circumstances he hoped that their Lordships would accept the noble Lord's Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES (The EARL of MORLEY) said that he would venture to say a few words to their Lordships in reference to this Measure, although, of course, he was almost afraid to touch upon the legal question which it involved after the opinions which had been expressed with regard to it by such eminent legal authorities as the noble and learned Lords who had already spoken upon it. The reason why he had not moved the Second Reading of the Bill in the ordinary course was not because he objected to the Measure, but because he felt that as it involved an important legal question he ought not to move its Second Reading. The noble and learned Lord who had just spoken had objected to the Bill on the ground that it dealt with what, in his opinion, were fuel allotments under the Commons Act of 1876. But, with all submission, he understood from the speech of the noble and learned Lord upon the Woolsack, and from the report of the Attorney General, that the whole foundation of this Bill was that it did not deal with fuel allotments under that Act.

LORD HERSCHELL said that that could hardly be the case seeing that the noble and learned Lord upon the Woolsack had made no allusion whatever to the Act of 1876.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES said that, as he understood the matter, the Court of Chancery had decided that these fuel allotments were a charitable trust, created by the Act of 1802, and could therefore only be dealt with by Parliament. The whole property, whether sold or unsold, appeared to him to be included in the compromise that had been arrived at, so it would not be right to exclude the unsold lands from the Bill. He ventured to hope that their Lordships would give a Second Reading to this Bill, because if they did not adopt that course litigation must necessarily go on and the whole value of the property whatever it might be would be swallowed up in law costs. In his opinion the Amendment, if adopted, would certainly kill the Bill, and would thus prevent the Measure from going before a Committee before whom the local authorities who were interested in the disposal of the land might be heard. For these reasons he hoped that their Lordships would reject the Amendment and would read the Bill a Second time.

*LORD THRING said that there had been no litigation and no compromise with regard to the unsold portions of this land which it was now proposed to deal with by this private Bill. The truth was that these 250 acres of land originally formed part of a large tract of waste land which was situated close to Bournemouth, and was now of the utmost possible value to that town and to the surrounding neighbourhood if kept open. In 1802 it was agreed to enclose the greater portion of this waste land and to leave these 250 acres as fuel allotments for the benefit of the poor. By this private Bill it was proposed to take power to sell the land and to hand over half of the proceeds to the Lord of the Manor, in spite of the tendency of legislation during the past 30 years. In his view that would be a most monstrous proceeding. If this Bill were not passed there would be no litigation with regard to this land. As a matter of fact no litigation was required. There was no dispute and no intricacy at all. He was sorry not to see Lord Cross in the House, for he was sure the opponents of the Bill would have his sympathy.

*THE LORD CHANCELLOR: I may inform the noble Lord that I only took possession of this Bill because Lord Cross could not be here to move the Second Reading. [Laughter.]

*LORD THRING said he was very sorry that Lord Cross was not in the House, for he had never known any Minister to take so much trouble to preserve common land. This, a private Bill, violated the express provisions of the Act of 1876 with regard to fuel allotments. That Act provided that they should not be appropriated except for the purposes of recreation grounds. It further provided that no inclosure should take place except it was determined by the authorities having jurisdiction over the inclosure of the common that it was for the benefit of the neighbourhood, it directed a local inquiry to be held by the Board of Agriculture to ascertain that fact, and, finally, even if an inclosure were made, it contained provisions for the protection of the public. In spite of all this legislation, this private Bill was brought in, without any provision for the protection of the public or of the neighbourhood, and giving one-half of the land to the Lord of the Manor. With the greatest submission to the Chairman of Committees, he contended that the Bill ought to have been disallowed as an inclosure Bill and not a private Bill. He could not conceive a Bill their Lordships ought more readily to throw out, seeing that it violated a practice that had existed for 30 years, as well as the express provisions of several statutes. He hoped their Lordships would declare that, so far as these 250 acres of land were concerned, they, at least, should be preserved for the benefit of the 60,000 people in Bournemouth and the neighbourhood.

Lord HOBHOUSE asked leave to make a brief personal explanation. His hon. and learned Friend on the Woolsack seemed to entertain the idea that he had mentioned poor people and rich people with the view to creating some prejudice. Such a thing never occurred to him. He never dreamt of it. The reason why he mentioned poor and rich was that the Act of 1876 spoke of allotments for the poor, and the particular Act under which this inclosure was made did not mention the poor.

*The LORD CHANCELLOR then put the Question as follows: The original Question was, "That this Bill be read a Second time," since which an Amendment had been moved to omit all the words after "That" in order to insert the following:—

> "Having regard to the policy of Parliament, as declared by the Commons Act 1876, especially with respect to fuel allotments, this House is not prepared to pass a Private Bill in order to enable the sale and inclosure of fuel allotments contrary to such policy."

The Question is that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question.

Lord Thring.

On Question that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Motion. The House divided:—

Contents 58
Not-Contents 24

CONTENTS.

Halsbury, L. (L. Chancellor.)
Devonshire, D. (L. President.)
Bedford, D.
Fife, D.
Bristol, M.
Hertford, M.
Lansdowne, M.
Salisbury, M.
Belmore, E.
Clarendon, E.
Dartrey, E.
de Montalt, E.
Dudley, E.
Feversham, E.
Graham, E. (D. Montrose)
Lauderdale, E.
Lucan, E.
Minto, E.
Morley, E.
Portarlington, E.
Romney, E.
Selborne, E.
Stanhope, E.
Vane, E. (M. Londonderry.)
Waldegrave, E. (Teller)
Bridport, V.
Knutsford, V.
Abinger, L.
Ampthill, L.
Bagot, L.
Balfour, L.
Bateman, L.
Chelmsford, L.
Churchill, L. (Teller)
Clinton, L.
Colchester, L.
Colville of Culross, L.
Cottesloe, L.
Fermanagh, L. (E. Erne.)
Forester, L.
Glenesk, L.
Hillingdon, L.
James, L.
Kintore, E. (E. Kintore.)
Lawrence, L.
Mendip, L. (V. Clifden.)
Monckton, L. (V. Galway.)
Northington, L. (L. Henley.)
Poltimore, L.
Ranfurly, L. (E. Ranfurly.)
Rothschild, L.
Rowton, L.
Sinclair, L.
Stewart of Garlies, L. (E. Galloway.)
Sudley, L. (E. Arran.)
Wenlock, L.
Windsor, L.
Zouche of Haryngworth, L.

NOT-CONTENTS.

Ripon, M.
Carrington, E.
Crewe, E.
Kimberley, E.
Malmesbury, E.
Spencer, E.
Stamford, E.
Strafford, E.
Oxenbridge, V.
Davey, L.
Farrer, L.
Herschell, L.
Hobhouse, L. (Teller.)
Kenry, L. (E. Dunraven and Mount-Earl.)
Kinnaird, L.
Lingen, L.
Monkswell, L. (Teller.)
Northbourne, L.
Reay, L.
Stanmore, L.
Thring, L.
Tweedmouth, L.
Wandsworth, L.
Welby, L.

Resolved in the affirmative; Bill accordingly read a Second time.

RETIREMENT OF VESTRYMEN AND AUDITORS (LONDON) BILL. [H.L.]

A Bill to amend the law relating to the retirement of vestrymen and auditors in London was presented by the Lord Monkswell; Read 1ª; to be printed.—(No. 17.)

CHURCH PATRONAGE TRANSFERS BILL. [H.L.]

A Bill to regulate the transfer of Church Patronage was presented by the Lord Archbishop of York ; Read 1ª ; and to be printed.—(No. 18.)

PARLIAMENTARY FRANCHISE (WOMEN) BILL. [H.L.]

Second Reading (which stands appointed for this day) put off to Monday next.

House adjourned at Half-past Five o'clock, till To-morrow, a Quarter past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 1st March 1897.

STANDING COMMITTEES (CHAIRMEN'S PANEL).

Sir HENRY CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN reported from the Chairmen's Panel that they had appointed Sir James Fergusson to act as Chairman of the Standing Committee for the consideration of Bills relating to law, and Courts of Justice, and Legal Procedure ; Report to lie upon the Table.

QUESTIONS.

CASUAL WARDS (METROPOLIS).

Mr. E. H. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether his attention has been called to a case heard at the Thames Police Court, on the 8th February, of one John Redmond, who having applied for admission on the previous day to the Strand Casual Ward, was told that it was full, and directed to the Rotherithe Casual Ward, a distance of three miles; on arriving there was sent on to the St. George's in the East Casual Ward, a further distance of two miles, and was thence again told to go to the Poplar Casual Ward ; whether the respective guardians of those unions, by thus sending an applicant wandering about over the Metropolis, fulfilled their statutory obligations ; and whether he will represent to the guardians the necessity to make provision for overflows, by giving direction to the relieving officer or otherwise ?

The PRESIDENT of the LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. Henry Chaplin, Lincolnshire, Sleaford) : I have caused careful inquiry to be made with regard to the statements by Redmond at the Thames Police Court, and I am satisfied that his allegations as to his being sent wandering about over the Metropolis in consequence of the casual wards being full is without foundation.

MAGISTRACY (IRELAND).

Mr. D. MACALEESE (Monaghan N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) if he is aware that Mr. John Porter-Porter, J.P., adjudicated at the Lisbellaw Petty Sessions as a magistrate in September 1896; (2) is Lisbellaw in the district mentioned in this gentleman's commission as a place where he is entitled to adjudicate as a magistrate; (3) was the occasion referred to the first upon which Mr. Porter-Porter adjudicated as a magistrate at Lisbellaw Petty Sessions, and were ten persons on trial on that occasion for alleged participation in a party riot, which took place at Tempo in August 1896; (4) is this Mr. Porter-Porter the same Mr. Porter-Porter who was deprived for a time of the commission of the peace; and (5) will the Lord Chancellor of Ireland see to it that Mr. Porter-Porter be restricted for the future in his judicial operations to the districts limned in his commission of the peace.

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds Central): The gentleman named in the question was appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the County Fermanagh for the purpose of attending the Lisbellaw Petty Sessions, and he did as a matter of fact attend these Sessions on the occasion mentioned. The reply to the fourth paragraph is in the affirmative.

WRECK (INDIAN TROOPSHIP "WARREN HASTINGS.")

*MR. PERCY THORNTON (Clapham): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether similar compensation for the loss of property will be allowed to the officers and crew wrecked in the Royal Indian marine ship Warren Hastings as that granted to the troops who were on board when the catastrophe occurred?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, Middlesex, Ealing): Compensation is admissible for loss of property by shipwreck, and will be allowed to the officers and men of the Royal Indian marine ship Warren Hastings. [Cheers.]

*MR. THORNTON: Whereas those most active in saving life suffered the most in loss of property, not having time to attend to such matters, I desire to ask a question regarding a concrete case which I can vouch for, and I believe not to be isolated. Will the hon. Gentleman give consideration to the case of Lieutenant Walter Windham, who was the first man to take a rope over the bow and reach the land, afterwards saving five lives from drowning, and being recommended for the Humane Society's medal by Commander Holland? He has lost all his property which was on the ship.

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: No doubt the exceptional conduct of Lieutenant Windham will be considered, but I do not think it would entitle him to special compensation for the loss of his property.

*MR. THORNTON: These men have lost everything they had.

CARETAKERS (IRELAND.)

MR JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state the number of tenants who have been turned into caretakers by the seventh section of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887; and, whether he can give an estimate of the number of such tenants who are now in occupation of their holdings as caretakers, and outside all benefit from the Land Law Acts?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The number of notices served throughout Ireland under Section 7 of the Act of 1887, between the date of the passing of that Act and December 31, 1896, was 58,626. There are no statistics available showing the proportion of tenants so served who were restored to their holdings either as caretakers or as tenants, nor has the Government any means at its disposal of obtaining reliable information on the subject. I may add that the number of tenants, actually evicted during the ten years ended December 31, 1896, was 14,489, and it may be assumed that in the great majority of the remaining 44,137 cases in which eviction proceedings did not follow the service of notices under Section 7 settlements were arrived at between landlord and tenant, though, as already stated, I have no means of ascertaining whether in these cases the tenants were restored as caretakers or as tenants.

MR. DILLON asked whether, where settlements were arrived at, in all cases the tenants would be shut out of their rights under the Land Act.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR said the position of the tenant in cases of settlement depended upon the agreement between landlord and tenant.

MR. DENIS KILBRIDE (Galway, N.) asked whether, where settlements had been arrived at, the tenants would not become "future tenants" and deprived of the benefit of the Land Act.

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Not necessarily. There might be an arrangement to secure the continuation of its benefits.

ADMIRALTY CONTRACTS.

SIR HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty if, in orders given out by the Admiralty, efforts have been made to insure that all goods ordered shall, as far as possible, be of British and Irish manufacture?

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. W. E. MACARTNEY, Antrim, S.): The general principle upon which the Admiralty orders are given is to take goods of British and Irish manufacture in preference to similar goods of foreign manufacture. The cases in which goods of foreign manufacture or origin are taken are extremely few in number, and limited to a certain class of articles only produced abroad or under foreign patents. The Admiralty has been successful in cultivating the manufacture in this country by British firms of some articles which had previously been produced or manufactured only in foreign countries.

Sir HOWARD VINCENT: After that satisfactory answer, may I ask the hon. Gentleman if he takes care not to be ensnared by agents of foreign firms resident in this country?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order!

TRAMORE FISHERY PIER.

Mr. P. J. POWER (Waterford, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he will direct an Inquiry to be held at Tramore, county Waterford, to ascertain whether something can be done under Clause 9 or any other clause of the Railways (Ireland) Act of last Session towards building a fishery pier at Tramore?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: There is no power under the Railways Act of 1896 to advance any money by way of grant or loan on any pier unless such pier forms part of a railway or of a scheme promoted under that Act. It appears, moreover, from a report received from the Inspectors of Fisheries, that they do not consider Tramore as of sufficient importance, from a fishery point of view, to justify the expenditure of any sum of money, even if such were available for the construction of fishery piers.

IRISH MAILS.

Mr. WILLIAM JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, if he can state the reason why the mails are still conveyed from Downpatrick to Ardglass by car and not by the railway, which was opened on 8th July 1892; and whether, on the expiration of the existing contract, if any, the mails will be conveyed by train between Ardglass and Downpatrick?

The SECRETARY to the TREASURY (Mr. R. W. Hanbury, Preston): The reason for conveying the mails from Downpatrick to Ardglass by car and not by railway is that the mails reach Ardglass by car at 7.35 a.m., while the first train does not arrive there until 9.18 a.m. If, hereafter, the Company should run for their own purposes trains at hours suitable for the mail service, the question of sending the bags by railway can be further considered; but the case is not one in which special expense would be justified in order to secure the running of trains at times when they are not required for ordinary traffic.

MONEY ORDERS (COMMISSION).

Mr. L. R. HOLLAND (Tower Hamlets, Bow and Bromley): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether his attention has been called to the hardship which will be inflicted upon members of friendly societies, accustomed to send sick pay to their members and to receive their contributions through the Post Office, by the increased commission charged on money orders of under 20s. in value; and whether he will consider the expediency of reverting to the commission of 2d. on orders under 20s. hitherto charged?

Mr. HANBURY: I must refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave on Tuesday last to the hon. Members for South Somerset and the Leominster Division of Herefordshire.

KOREA.

Sir CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (1) what is the present position of affairs in Korea; (2) whether the King is still under Russian protection; (3) whether Russian officers are engaged in drilling local troops; and (4) whether the position is consistent with the Russian pledge communicated by China to Her Majesty's Government at the time of the abandonment of Port Hamilton, and afterwards laid before Parliament.

*The UNDER SECRETARY of STATE for FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. G. Curzon, Lancashire, Southport): In answer to the first question, Her Majesty's Consul General has reported that the King left the Russian Legation and removed to his own Palace on February 20th. In answer to the third question, some of the Korean troops are, it is believed, undergoing a course of instruction by Russian officers. And in answer to the fourth question, such a proceeding does not appear to be inconsistent with the assurance given by Russia in 1886, which was a guarantee that in the future she will not take Korean territory.

MR. R. MCKENNA (Monmouth, N): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he has any information which would confirm or contradict the published reports of a Treaty between Russia and Japan relative to Korea, and particularly as to that alleged term of the Treaty, or Memorandum accompanying the Treaty, whereby Russia and Japan agree to exclude from the territory of Korea all foreign troops other than their own.

*MR. CURZON: Her Majesty's Government have been for some time past aware of the existence of an arrangement between Russia and Japan in regard to Korea. They have not had the text of the agreement, but the version published by the Russian Official Messenger, and reproduced by The Times, does not appear to bear the construction placed upon it in the Question. It declares the object of the contracting parties to be the removal of foreign troops from Korea; the reference, as the context indicates, being to the guards which Russia and Japan have up to the present date maintained at their respective legations.

BARROW DRAINAGE.

MR. D. SULLIVAN (Westmeath, S.): On behalf of the hon. Member for North Kildare (Mr. C. J. ENGLEDOW), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if the disastrous effects of the floods in the River Barrow during the last 12 months has been brought to his notice, when the low-lying portions of many of the towns on its banks were flooded, and the produce of a very large area of the adjoining lands destroyed; and whether he will consider the urgent necessity that exists for the adoption of some scheme for the drainage of that river?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Representations of the nature indicated have been made to Government, but I can only repeat what I have already stated on more than one occasion, that the evidence in the matter of the proposed drainage has been carefully looked into, with the result that I am forced to the conclusion that the cost of the work would be largely in excess of the estimate formed by the Allport Commission, and that even if the Treasury were willing to ask Parliament to provide the large sum necessary, it could probably be applied to more useful purposes in Ireland.

KING'S ROYAL RIFLE CORPS (8TH BATTALION).

MR. D. SULLIVAN: On behalf of the hon. Member for North Kildare, (Mr. ENGLEDOW), I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Officer commanding the 8th Battalion of the King's Royal Rifle Corps has sent in his resignation; and if so, in the interests of the regiment, will he recommend for the consideration of the Field Marshal Commander-in-Chief the appointment of a Commanding Officer who has formerly served in the Regular Army?

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): The Commanding Officer has resigned. It rests with the Field Marshal Commanding in Ireland to recommend a successor.

SUTTON-IN-ASHFIELD SCHOOL BOARD.

MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education whether he is aware that the Sutton-in-Ashfield School Board in 1885 made an application for arrears of grants under Section 97 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870; that the Department then replied that, owing to the Circular of 1881, they were unable to pay more than the grant for the then current year, 1885, and the preceding year, 1884; and that after further correspondence the Department received a deputation from the Board, and ultimately allowed the Board the grant for a third year, the year 1883; and whether he will lay the Correspondence and the Minutes of the interview with the deputation, and any other documents in the case, upon the Table of the House?

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University): The application of the Sutton-in-Ashfield School Board was made in December, 1884, for the grant for the year ending 29th September, 1884, and for the previous year. The School Board alleged that the accounts for the previous year had not been audited till April 1884. The application for the year ending 29th September, 1883, was twice refused, but after an interview, which took place in April, 1885, and of which no memorandum appears to have been kept, was granted. I can show the hon. Member the correspondence in which the arrears were refused, but there is no record of the reasons for which it was ultimately granted.

MR. CHANNING: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman whether he can state on what grounds the grant was given originally?

SIR J. GORST: No, Sir, I cannot state on what grounds, because the interview took place first in the year 1885, that is 12 years ago, and of that no record appears to have been kept in the office. Therefore I am in the dark as to the reason.

MR. CHANNING: I am not speaking of the interview, but of the refusal by a letter of the Department.

SIR J. GORST: I will show the hon. Member the letter if he wishes; it was a refusal on the ground that it could not be paid.

MR. H. J. WILSON (York, W.R., Holmfirth): Has the right hon. Gentleman any objection to tell the House as well as to show the correspondence?

SIR J. GORST: Not the slightest. I stated the other night that it was declined on the ground that, under the circular of 1881, the grant for 1883 could not be paid, because it was not asked for in time.

MR. CHANNING: If I move for the correspondence, will it be put on the table?

SIR J. GORST: Certainly.

NORTH ATLANTIC LOAD-LINE.

MR. JOHN BAIRD (Glasgow, Central): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether representations have been received from various shipowners and from Chambers of Commerce in Philadelphia, Boston, and elsewhere, complaining of the unfair discrimination which the operation of the Load-line Rules gives in favour of the ports of Baltimore, Newport News, and Norfolk for winter loading, and urging that all Atlantic ports north of Cape Hatteras be put on one footing; whether the Board propose to take any steps in this direction; and, whether the Board will furnish as a Parliamentary Paper all the communications which have been received from or sent to shipowners, Register Societies, Chambers of Commerce, Consuls, and others during the past three years on the subject of the winter North Atlantic Load-line?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. C.T. RITCHIE, Croydon): Yes, Sir; the Board of Trade have received representations to the effect stated by my hon. Friend, and have carefully considered them. Before approving modifications of the Load-line Rules, the Board of Trade are bound by Statute to have regard to the representations of the several approved load-line authorities, and, in this instance, those representations have not been of such a nature as to enable the Board to take any steps at present. I should have no objection to the presentation of the correspondence, provided the other parties to it agree, and I will communicate with them on the subject.

COLLISIONS AT SEA (FISHING BOATS).

MR. J. W. CROMBIE (Kincardineshire): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is aware that the requirements of Article 10, b, c, of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea (1884) have been found impracticable in the case of small fishing boats, and are not complied with; whether the recommendations of the Washington Conference (Article 9) on this subject were, at the request of the Board of Trade, left out of consideration by the Committee of 1890; and whether anything has since been done, or is now being done, to amend these Regulations?

MR. RITCHIE: I am aware that small fishing boats have sometimes experienced difficulty in complying with the requirements of the Regulations hitherto existing. But the recommendations of the Washington Conference, together with other proposals on the subject of fishing vessels' lights, have (with the concurrence of the Powers) been held over pending the settlement of the main code of Rules of the Road at Sea. Now that that code has been settled, no effort will be spared to deal with the subject to which the hon. Member refers, with a view to such amendment of the Regulations as may be found advisable.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): Will the right hon. Gentleman say whether the Board of Trade is likely to arrive at any conclusion as to the fishing vessel regulations?

MR. RITCHIE: I do not think I can add anything more to what I have said. These matters stood over with the general consent until the settlement of the main code had been concluded. That is now agreed upon.

MR. GIBSON BOWLES was understood to ask whether they would see the code of rules before they were proposed to be enforced on the fishing vessels.

MR. RITCHIE: That I cannot say.

QUEEN'S REIGN (COLONIAL TROOPS).

MR. J. F. HOGAN (Tipperary, Mid.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War, what arrangements have been made or are in contemplation for the reception and quartering of the Colonial troops visiting England in connection with the celebration of the 60th anniversary of Her Majesty's reign?

*MR. BRODRICK: Arrangements will be made, and are at present under consideration.

AMERICAN MAIL SERVICE.

MR. HOGAN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether he is aware that the British and Irish mails delivered in New York by the White Star steamer Adriatic on 23rd February were 16 days en route; what was the cause of this delay; and whether the Postal Authorities will put a stop to the practice of dispatching letters by steamers that are notoriously unable to satisfy the requirements of a fast mail service?

MR. HANBURY: No, Sir. The English, Scotch, and Irish mails were embarked on board the packet Adriatic at Queenstown, at twenty minutes to 1 p.m. on the 11th of February; and the Packet arrived in New York at half-past 3 a.m. on the 22nd, thus occupying less than 11 days on the voyage, and not 16 days as the hon. Member suggests. The cause of the delay which did take place was unusually heavy weather. The Adriatic is only used occasionally, when one of the better steamers has to be withdrawn for overhaul. Such withdrawal is expressly provided for in the Mail Contract, and as the Company are fulfilling the terms of their Contract in employing the fastest steamer belonging to them available, the Postmaster General would have no ground for taking the course suggested.

EVICTED TENANTS (IRELAND).

MR. W. ABRAHAM (Cork, N.E.): On behalf of the hon. Member for East Limerick (Mr. J. FINUCANE), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether he is aware that negotiations are proceeding upon the estate of Captain Coote, Mount Coote, county Limerick, which are confidently expected to end in the restoration of the evicted tenants on this property to their homes; (2) if he will cause inquiry to be made into the conduct of Sergeant J. O'Brien, of Kilmallock, who is trying to persuade one of the tenants named O'Connell to sell the goodwill of his holding for £150; and (3) if this police sergeant will be instructed that it is no part of his duty to interfere in any way between evicted tenants and their landlords in the matter of pending settlements?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have no knowledge of any negotiations, as alleged, between the landlord of this estate and the tenants who are out of possession. With regard to the second and third paragraphs, it appears that Sergeant O'Brien, at the request of O'Connell, an evicted tenant, spoke to the agent of the estate in O'Connell's behalf, and the result of the sergeant's mediation was that O'Connell received the sum of £150 for the goodwill of his holding, from which he was evicted upwards of 14 years ago. O'Connell has thanked the sergeant for his good offices and expressed his satisfaction at having this sum of money in his pocket. The sergeant did not exceed his duty in this case; what he did was at the instance of and with the consent of the parties, and by his action he has succeeded in bringing about a settlement which is apparently as satisfactory to all concerned as it is in the interests of peace.

Mr. W. ABRAHAM: Are we to understand that the Constabulary in Ireland are to act as mediators between landlords and evicted tenants in the matter of pending settlements?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: No, Sir, that would not naturally be part of the official duty of the constable. But when a constable has succeeded in bringing the parties together, as in this instance, I do not think he ought to be blamed.

JUDICIAL RENTS (IRELAND).

Sir THOMAS LEA (Londonderry, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the Return of Judicial Rents fixed in November last is to be taken as representing the rents fixed by the Sub-Commissioners or as the rents decided on appeal by the Head Commission; if the former, how are the results in those cases where appeals were taken to be known; if the latter, how is the variation in the rents made by the Head Commission to be ascertained; and, in view of the state of feeling in Ulster in regard to the work of the Chief Land Commission, and the fact that newspapers publish the results of their proceedings, he will take steps to allow Members to ascertain accurately what has been the result of the procedure of that Court?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The Return referred to is to be taken as representing rents fixed by the Sub-Commissioners, and not as rents fixed by the Land Commission on appeal. It does not purport to show the variation of Sub-Commission rents made by the Appeal Court. In the annual report of the Land Commission to March, 1896, page 41, such a Return, showing variation, county by county, is given for the year, and this has been the practice followed since 1881. It has not been the practice to show the variation in individual cases in Returns of the Land Commission. The results of individual appeals can be given monthly, but, as before stated, to do so will cause considerable additional trouble and expense, as the information could not be included in the present tables, but must be set forth by adding additional tables to the Returns.

Mr. JOHN MORLEY (Montrose Burghs): I should like to ask the right hon. Gentleman whether there is really any difficulty in securing a report of the results of these appeals? Surely the results are recorded, and there can be no real difficulty in adding the reports of the Sub-Commissioners. Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that there is considerable urgency in Ireland as regards these appeals?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: Certainly it would not be impossible, and, if a wish is expressed for them, I will ask the Land Commissioners to make such a Return. I may point out to the right hon. Gentleman, and I think he will appreciate the remark, that the Returns referring to appeals to the Land Commissioners would not have reference to the rents as fixed by the Sub-Commissioners in the same month. It would be probably five or six months afterwards before such Returns could be published; but, if it is pressed for, I will ask the Commissioners to give the information.

INDIAN FAMINE (GODAVERY CANAL).

Mr. R. J. PRICE (Norfolk, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether his attention has been drawn to the statement of Sir Arthur Cotton, as published in The Friend of China, that the Godavery River might at this moment be pouring rice into the famine districts of the North in immense quantities, at a nominal cost of carriage of one penny a bushel, if only the several pieces of canal in the 1,000 miles between were united, which they might be for the cost of 20 miles of railway; and whether the Indian Government will consider the advisability of shortly undertaking the necessary works?

Lord GEORGE HAMILTON: The Godavery River Navigation Works, to which the hon. Member's Question relates, were carefully considered by the Government of the Central Provinces, the Government of India, and the Secretary of State in Council in 1871, and all these authorities agreed that the works should not be proceeded with. The large expenditure involved would have been out of all proportion, not only to the prospects of traffic, but to the amount of protection from famine which the undertaking might have afforded. There is no reason to believe that the Government of India have any intention of now proceeding with the scheme.

NATIONAL SCHOOL TEACHERS' PENSIONS (IRELAND).

Mr. J. C. FLYNN (Cork, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to a resolution adopted by a committee of the National Teachers' Organisation, in which that body declines to recognise the payment of £10,000 a year to the pension fund for the benefit of future teachers as an adequate compensation for the loss of their share of the school grant; and in view of the general dissatisfaction of the National Teachers, he will represent to the Treasury the necessity of meeting the teachers' claim for the arrears of school grant.

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: This question is based on a misapprehension of the proposals of the Government. These proposals were explained last Friday by my right hon. Friend the Secretary to the Treasury; and were, I think, of a nature, that will be generally recognised as liberal.

SCOTTISH FISHERY CRUISERS.

Captain PIRIE (Aberdeen, N.): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether it would be possible to arrange that the two small cruisers, about to be ordered for the Scottish Fishery Board, shall be built in private yards in order to give Scottish shipbuilders an opportunity to tender for their construction?

Mr. JAMES BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate whether the Secretary for Scotland has yet determined to invite tenders for the two new vessels to be provided for the Scottish Fishery Board for the service of the East Coast, with a view to enabling private firms in the East Coast ports to compete; and, if so, when it is likely that an announcement regarding the sending in of such tenders will be made?

*The LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. Graham Murray, Buteshire): It is certainly the intention of the Fishery Board to invite tenders from private firms in the first instance for the larger boat, and no time will be lost in getting specifications prepared and tenders advertised for.

HAMPTON COURT GREEN.

Sir FREDERICK DIXON-HARTLAND (Middlesex, Uxbridge): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether he is aware that a large number of people, often between 10,000 and 20,000, assemble on Hampton Court Green on Sundays and Bank Holidays, and that absolutely no sanitary arrangements exist there; and whether he will make provision in his Estimates for providing such sanitary arrangements there as may be necessary?

The FIRST COMMISSIONER of WORKS (Mr. Akers-Douglas, Kent, St. Augustines): I am prepared to admit that some provision of this kind has become necessary. It is, however, too late now to deal with the matter in regard to the Estimates for 1897-98. I will promise to consider it in connection with the local authorities, with a view to proposing to the Treasury the insertion of a sum on account of the work in the following year's Estimates.

Sir F. DIXON-HARTLAND: Is the right hon. Gentleman prepared to put up some temporary shed for accommodation, because it is very necessary?

Mr. AKERS-DOUGLAS: I should wish to see the local authorities before giving such a pledge, as I am of opinion that some share in any such building should be borne by the locality.

HORSE-BREEDING (IRELAND).

Colonel McCALMONT (Antrim, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether the terms of reference to the Horse-breeding Commission in Ireland allow of any expression of opinion as to the action and working of the Congested Districts Board; (2) whether about one-fifth of the whole income of the Board and of the £6,000 voted annually by Parliament in aid of its expenses is being and has been absorbed by their horse-breeding operations, and the greater part spent in the neighbourhood of Dublin; and (3) if the Congested Districts Board misapplies its funds, what remedy has the public or the congested population for whom it holds its funds in trust?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: As regards the first paragraph of the question of my hon. and gallant Friend, it will be for the Commission to put its own interpretation upon the terms of reference. Of the total expenditure of the Congested Districts Board on all purposes to the 31st March 1896, about one-eighth was spent on horse-breeding operations, and nearly one-half of this was capital expenditure on buildings and the purchase of horses. A comparatively small portion of the outlay on horses is spent in Dublin. The sum of £5,944, provided in the current year's Estimates in aid of the Board's expenses, is appropriated to the payment of the salaries and general administrative expenses of the Board, and the clerical labour employed in connection with the horse-breeding scheme would not absorb more than £200 of this amount. As regards the last paragraph, the accounts of the Board are audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General, who, no doubt, would detect any irregularity in the event of the misapplication of the Board's funds.

MALL (CYCLISTS).

MR. WOOTTON ISAACSON (Tower Hamlets, Stepney): I beg to ask the First Commissioner of Works whether he will consider the advisability of opening this year the two avenues in The Mall, from Buckingham Palace to the Horse Guards, for cyclists, taking into consideration the small amount of traffic there?

MR. AKERS-DOUGLAS: No, Sir. I regret to say that I cannot undertake to do this. Apart from any other considerations, I would point out to my hon. Friend that these avenues are set aside as footpaths, and it would be dangerous to pedestrians and not in accordance with general law to allow cycling traffic on footways. The exclusion of foot passengers from these walks, even if practicable, would not, I feel sure, meet with general approbation.

NAVAL MANŒUVRES (REPORT).

SIR CHARLES DILKE: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty when the Report on last year's Naval Manœuvres will be published?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover-square): The narrative of the Naval Manœuvres shall be presented to Parliament, as it has been in previous years, when asked for.

CRETE.

MR. BRYCE: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Turkish transports, carrying Turkish troops from one part of the coast of Crete to another, have been escorted by British ships of war?

*MR. CURZON: Inquiry has been made of the British Admiral in Crete, and he has replied that no such incident has occurred.

MR. H. LABOUCHERE (Northampton): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (1) whether Her Majesty's Government will instruct by telegraph the Admiral commanding the British Fleet in Cretan waters to send by telegraph a full account of the international bombardment that took place on 22nd February, and a reply to the questions: Whether any Turkish vessel took part in that bombardment; whether the Turkish land forces were firing upon the Cretan position when that bombardment commenced; and how often Turkish troops have issued from Canea since the occupation of that town by the Great Powers, and have, after attacking Cretan forces, returned there; with a view to place this House in full possession of the above facts; and (2) whether the notification that has been issued by the Admirals of the Fleets of the Great Powers in Cretan waters in regard to acts of hostility taking place in sight of the foreign war vessels applies alike to Turkish and Cretan forces. The hon. Member added: Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman will say whether the Government have received the Dispatch from the Great Powers, dated February 24, the text of which appears in The Daily Chronicle to-day, and contains full details of the Note.

*Mr. CURZON: With regard to the last question, I feel bound to say that it is not supplementary to that on the Paper. I believe the Dispatch contained in The Daily Chronicle has not been received by the Government. In reply to the question on the Paper, the Admiral has been instructed to send a full report of the incidents of February 21st, but from the telegrams hitherto received, the substance of which I have communicated to the House, a sufficiently clear account of the proceedings and an answer to the main points raised in the question appear already to be in our possession. It does not appear from them that any Turkish vessel took part in the bombardment. The second question I cannot answer, because I do not understand to what Turkish land forces, or to what Cretan position, the hon. Member refers. Both parties occupy several positions and have been firing intermittently at each other for a fortnight. No Turkish troops have sallied from Canea since the occupation of that town by the Great Powers, and consequently none have returned there. The instructions to the British Admiral lay stress upon the desirability that each combatant in the island should as far as possible be prevented from aggressive action against the other, and the Admirals of the Allied Squadrons have issued a proclamation to the inhabitants announcing their intention to oppose any hostile act in presence of their ships in any part of the island.

Sir E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall): I wish to ask the right hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs a question of which I have given him private notice—namely, whether his attention has been called to a Dispatch in The Daily News this morning, in which the critical condition of the 3,000 Mussulmans at Candano and Selino is pointed out, and whether the Great Powers have been able to take any effective steps for their relief?

*Mr. CURZON: I have not seen the Dispatch to which my hon. Friend refers, but I believe it is quite right in describing the situation of those beleaguered garrisons as most critical. The information I have to give in answer to the question is this—that a squadron of four ships of the allied fleet has been sent to the towns on the coast where there are beleaguered garrisons or populations. I gather from our telegrams that an international escort is being sent to facilitate the process of relief, that two ships of the squadron have gone to Selino, and that Her Majesty's ship Scout has also proceeded to the same destination. At the same time Colonel Vassos has promised the Admirals to send a Greek officer to induce the insurgents to allow the free departure of the garrisons. ["Hear, hear!"]

Sir E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: I wish to ask the right hon. Gentleman if Her Majesty's Government has authorised the British Admiral to carry out the advice of the three Consuls that the fleet should land a force of 300 men to protect these beleaguered Mussulmans?

*Mr. CURZON: The Admiral, in concert with his colleagues, has full authority to take such steps as he thinks necessary; but of course he must be a better judge of the circumstances than we are.

Sir E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: Then he has got authority to land a force?

*Mr. CURZON: Yes.

BRITISH TROOPS IN INDIA (HEALTH)

Captain PIRIE: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India if he can give any information as to the precise date of publication of the Report of the Departmental Committee on the health of the British troops in India, which is at present under his consideration?

Lord GEORGE HAMILTON: I have nothing to add to the answers which I have already given to this Question.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD.

Mr. D. KILBRIDE (Galway, N.): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether a Bill dealing with the adulteration of food will be introduced this Session by the Government; and, if so, when; and, whether the Bill will embody the recommendations of the Committee which considered the question of food adulteration, or whether it will deal with an Amendment to the Food and Drugs Act as distinct from the Margarine Act?

MR. CHAPLIN: I am afraid that the only answer I can give to the Question of the hon. Member is this, that the introduction of a Bill dealing with the question of the adulteration of food must depend on the progress of public business. The object and provisions of the Bill will be explained when it is introduced, and I could not enter into any details of the contemplated Measure now, but I may say this—we propose to deal with the matter as a whole.

AGRICULTURAL RATE (IRELAND).

MR. KILBRIDE: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been directed to the public statement recently made by the parish priest of Sneem, County Kerry, that the agricultural rates (county cess and poor's rate) in that district are almost ten shillings in the pound valuation; and, whether, in view of this fact, the Government will reconsider the question of affording relief to the occupiers of land in Ireland on similar terms to those given last Session to the English occupier under the Agricultural Rating Act?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I am informed that the county cess and poor rate combined in this district amounted last year to nine shillings in the pound on the valuation. I have already stated that it is not the intention of the Government to introduce an Agricultural Land Rating Act for Ireland.

TELEPHONE SYSTEM.

MR. HENNIKER HEATON (Canterbury): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether his attention has been called to a letter of the late Postmaster General, Mr. Arnold Morley, to the hon. Member for Canterbury, in which the writer officially laid down the right of the Post Office to take over the telephone system of this country, without conditions in the year 1911; whether he has detailed information as to the enormous development of the National Telephone Company's system and business, of the vast increase in the amount of capital invested therein, and of the claim of the Company to receive ultimately full payment for all such expenditure and investments from the Post Office; whether he is acquainted with the presnt value of the capital invested in the Company's operations; whether he will call for an estimate of the value of such capital in the year 1911; and of the sum which will then be claimed by the Company; and, whether at an early date, he will be able to state (in order to avert misunderstanding and financial trouble) the policy of the Government on the question?

MR. HANBURY: I assume that the letter referred to is the one which was published in The Times on 9 July 1894, and which ran as follows:—

> "On the termination of the licence in December 1911, the right of the National Telephone Company to carry on telephone exchange business will cease and determine. All they will have to sell will be their plant, and even this the Government will be under no obligation to buy. Believe me yours very truly, ARNOLD MORLEY."

I have nothing to add to this statement. The Postmaster General has seen from time to time the published accounts of the business of the Company, but he is not aware that the Company have made the claim which the hon. Member describes. As Mr. Arnold Morley's letter shows, no such claim could be admitted by the Government. The Postmaster General is not acquainted with the present value of the capital invested in the Company's operations. It would clearly be useless for him to call for an estimate of its value in 1911. I hope to be able at an early date to state the Government's policy on the general question, but I may say at once that the Government has no intention of buying up the Company's business, and will, therefore, give no notice to purchase, which it has the power to do, on or before 30 June 1897.

MR. HENNIKER HEATON: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether his attention has been called to the increasing dissatisfaction with the telephone service in London, its cost, and the errors and delays by which it is attended; whether the Post Office is making any efforts to supply the public with an independent State service, characterised by greater speed, accuracy, and economy; whether the Post Office authorities have and exercise any power of compelling the National Telephone Company to improve their service in the above respects; and whether he is prepared to grant licences to companies which may be willing to afford a cheaper and better telephone service?

Mr. HANBURY: No, Sir; the Postmaster General has no reason to believe that there is an increasing dissatisfaction with the telephone service in London. The Post Office has not attempted to establish a telephone exchange system in London. The power which the Department possesses is that of licensing fresh companies or of competing itself. The question whether licences should be given is one of policy, and, as I have already said, the policy of the Government will be stated at an early date.

Mr. G. C. T. BARTLEY (Islington, N.) asked whether it was not a fact that the National Telephone Company were unable to supply persons with telephones, and kept them waiting for them sometimes for months?

Mr. HANBURY replied that the Post Office had not had any complaints to that effect.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC (ENGLAND AND IRELAND).

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether, seeing that Section 3 of an Act passed in 1855 for improving the postal and passenger communication between England and Ireland takes cognizance of the third class passengers, and fixes the weight of luggage which might be carried by them on Irish mail trains between London and Dublin viâ Holyhead, he will draw the attention of the London and North Western Railway Company to the powers vested in him by this Act, with the view of providing accommodation for third class passengers on Irish mail trains and boats between London and Dublin under the new mail contract?

Mr. HANBURY: The Act of 1855 was passed to enable the London and North Western Railway Company, the Chester and Holyhead Railway Company, and the City of Dublin Steam Packet Company to make combined arrangements for the conveyance of mails and passengers between Holyhead and Kingstown or Howth; and the provisions of the Act ceased to have any immediate operative effect when, in 1883, the Government made separate contracts with the railway and with the steam packet companies for the train and boat services respectively. I am not prepared to admit that the third section of the Act gave the Postmaster General any power to call upon the companies to provide third class accommodation for passengers; but there can be no doubt that, whatever the effect of the enactment, it does not apply to the altered circumstances which have existed since 1883. Be that as it may, the Postmaster General will use his good offices with the company in the direction indicated by the hon. Member.

NORTH EASTERN RAILWAY DISPUTE.

Sir EDWARD GOURLEY (Sunderland): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his attention has been called to the disputes which have arisen between the North Eastern Railway Company and certain classes of their employees, and which is creating serious dislocation of the trade of the districts affected; and whether he intends to inquire into the nature of the disputes, with a view to friendly mediation on the part of the Board of Trade?

Mr. RITCHIE: I am happy to state that circumstances have occurred which encourage the hope that the dispute will be settled without any mediation on my part.

CLONGOREY ESTATE (CO. KILDARE).

Mr. J. L. CAREW (Dublin, College Green): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the agreement between the trustees representing the landlord of the Clongorey Estate, County Kildare, and the tenants thereon for the purchase of their holdings, has yet been carried out; and, if not, what is the cause of the delay?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: It does not appear that any applications for advances under the Land Purchase Acts have been received by the Land Commission in respect of the estate referred to in the Question.

TELEPHONE SERVICE (SCOTLAND).

SIR WILLIAM WEDDERBURN (Banffshire): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether the Postmaster General has received memorials from Keith and other towns asking for an additional telephone line passing through Huntley, Keith, Dufftown, Craigellachie, and Aberdour; whether he is aware that on the understanding that such line would be constructed exchanges were established at various localities along this route, and that for this object wayleaves along the county roads were granted by the Upper District Committee of the Banffshire County Council; and whether he will endeavour to meet the wishes of the memorialists?

MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General has received the memorials to which the hon. Member refers. He is not aware that telephone exchanges have been established and wayleaves obtained on the understanding that an additional line passing through Huntley and the other towns mentioned would be constructed, but he will make inquiry on the subject. The exchanges have been established by the National Telephone Company, and the Postmaster General is in communication with that Company as to the arrangements for affording them trunk wire facilities. The claims of the district must, however, be considered in connection with the claims of the country generally, and with due regard to the probable revenue and expenditure.

CAHIR ESTATE (IRELAND).

MAJOR JAMESON (Clare, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether, in reference to the Cahir estate disturbances and the strong local feeling against the conduct of Mr. P. O'Dwyer, the Government would consider the advisability of bringing some pressure to bear on Mr. O'Dwyer, who is an excise officer, in order to terminate the dispute and save extra expense to the county?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I am aware that outrages have been committed in this district, and that strong local feeling exists against Mr. O'Dwyer, but Mr. O'Dwyer is acting within his legal rights, and the Government cannot intervene, as suggested in the Question.

RABIES.

MR. JAMES BIGWOOD (Middlesex, Brentford): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether his Department is now prepared to adopt the recommendation of the Departmental Committee and make a determined effort to stamp out rabies by exercising directly the powers which they already possess under the Diseases of Animals Act.

*THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. WALTER LONG, Liverpool, West Derby): There appears to me to be great force in the recommendations of the Committee to which my hon. Friend refers, and I am now engaged in the consideration of the practical questions which the adoption of those recommendations involves. I hope to be in a position to make some further announcement on the subject at no distant date.

MR. BIGWOOD: Within ten or fourteen days?

*MR. LONG: Yes, I hope so.

BEQUEST TO NATION BY LADY WALLACE.

MR. MASSEY-MAINWARING (Finsbury, Central): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the Hertford House collection of objects of art has been bequeathed to the nation by Lady Wallace, and if he can state whether there are any conditions attached to such bequest; and when he will be able to inform the House what is the decision of the Government with reference to the above collection?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): This magnificent collection has been bequeathed to the nation, but I am not able to make any further definite statement on the subject now. Perhaps my hon. Friend will put a question at some later day.

CUBA.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury (1) whether the Government have entered into communication with the United States Government, or any of the Great European Powers, concerning the disturbed state of Cuba; and (2) whether the Governments have used, or intend to use, their good offices with the other Great Powers with the object of securing independence for the people of Cuba?

Mr. CURZON: As this is a Foreign Office Question, perhaps the hon. Member will allow me to reply. The answer to the first paragraph of this question is in the negative, and to the second that Her Majesty's Government are not aware of any such intention.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN Are we to understand that although all the Powers are interesting themselves in Crete, they take no notice of the fact that in Cuba——

Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member cannot ask that.

BUCKIE—CONNECTION WITH TRUNK TELEPHONE LINES.

Sir Wm. WEDDERBURN: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury as representing the Postmaster General, whether the Postmaster General is aware that Buckie is a most important fishing centre; that, including the neighbouring villages, it has a population of about 10,000, mostly employed in the fishing industry; and that it has constant business communications with Fraserburgh and Peterhead; and whether he can make arrangements to connect Buckie with the Trunk Telephone Line?

Mr. HANBURY: The Postmaster General is aware of the importance of Buckie as a fishing centre. He is giving his attentive consideration to the question whether that place can be connected with the Trunk Telephone system, and it will afford him pleasure if he finds it possible to meet the wishes of the inhabitants.

CRETE.

PROCEDURE OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. JOHN DILLON who had on the Paper a Notice to call attention, on going into Committee on the Civil Service Estimates, to the policy of the Government in relation to the insurrection in Crete, and move a Resolution, said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw the Notice of Motion which stands on the Paper in my name. [Ministerial cries of "No" and laughter.]

Sir WILLIAM HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.): It was my intention to move the Adjournment of the House this afternoon upon the statement made by the Government on Thursday last as to their policy, but it has come to my knowledge since I entered the House that there are technical difficulties in the way of my proceeding. But I gave notice of that intention to the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the House on Saturday, and I have reason to believe that, so far from objecting to that course, he thinks it desirable that it should be taken. I would, therefore, appeal to the right hon. Gentleman whether I am correct in that view of the case, and whether, if so, the difficulties which have been stated can be removed, so that the question may be raised, and the explanation we desire, and which I understand the Government are also desirous of making, may be made To-morrow.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: As the House will remember, a statement was made by me on Thursday last with regard to the policy of the Government in relation to the present position of affairs in Crete. It would have been in the power of the right hon. Gentleman opposite on Thursday to have moved the Adjournment of the House in order to discuss that statement, and such a course would have been strictly in acordance with the practice of the House. The right hon. Gentleman, however, quite rightly, in my judgment, thought it would be for the general advantage that the discussion should be deferred, and publicly across the floor of this House I said, on the part of the Government, that I was prepared to discuss with him what day would be most convenient for the discussion which I recognised as legitimate. The right hon. Gentleman appealed to me on Saturday that the day that he fixed should be to-day. I did not think it my business to raise any objection, and it was not until I came down to the House that I learned, as the right hon. Gentleman has learned, that there is a technical difficulty in carrying out that object. If, however, the hon. Member for East Mayo carries out his intention of withdrawing his Notice of Motion which he has on the Paper, there will be no objection to raising this Debate tomorrow, and I would suggest that that would probably be the most convenient course. I trust—at any rate, so far as I am concerned, I shall use such influence as I possess in that direction—that no technical difficulty will again arise tomorrow of the nature we have had to-day. I trust that that statement will be not only in accordance with the technical and strict rules of procedure which govern us in this House, but that it will also meet with the general approval of both sides as the best way out of the difficulty. [Cheers.]

MR. JAMES LOWTHER (Kent, Thanet): May I ask my right hon. Friend whether it would not be the more convenient course that the House should modify the Standing Order which applies to cases of this kind? ["Hear, hear!"] Because I would remind my right hon. Friend that I for one have a perfect right, if I think fit, to put down a Notice on all fours with the Notice of the hon. Member for Mayo, which would land the House in the same fix as to-day. [Laughter.] Therefore, I venture to ask whether it would not be desirable that some modification of this Rule should be adopted, whereby, if in the opinion of the Chair, any question arises which he considers of sufficient urgency, it might be brought forward notwithstanding the interposition of any Motion of the kind referred to. ["Hear, hear!"] If my right hon. Friend likes I will repeat that question tomorrow.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I have no difficulty whatever in giving my right hon. Friend, at all events, a provisional answer to that question. I do not think that the present system of dealing with questions of urgency is a very satisfactory one, and undoubtedly there is a certain inconsistency in leaving the House bound and helpless before the will of one single and irresponsible individual—["hear, hear!" and laughter]—as might happen under our existing Rules. ["Hear, hear!"] But I would point out to my right hon. Friend that it would take a considerable time probably to frame a satisfactory substitute for our existing Rule, and, in the meanwhile, we have not in practice found that much difficulty arises, for the good sense of Members on both sides of the House has hitherto in my experience always prevented any such impasse, or such insuperable difficulty as in theory undoubtedly might arise at present, although in practice it has not arisen.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER: I am afraid I cannot associate myself with my right hon. Friend's experience as to no inconvenience having occurred in the past. [Laughter.] I have known cases of considerable importance—

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! There is no question before the House. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. JAMES LOWTHER: I will, then, ask a question. [Laughter.] Do I understand that my right hon. Friend will take steps with a view to the modification of the Rule, because, if not, I must consider whether another object-lesson should not be forthcoming. [Laughter.]

MR. DILLON: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would ask whether I am not within my right in withdrawing the Motion now; and whether the object of the Rule is not to prevent a Motion standing in the name of an hon. Member being anticipated by a Motion for the adjournment of the House. If an hon. Member withdraws his Motion, does it not cease to operate? ["Hear, hear!"]

*MR. SPEAKER: The ordinary Rule of the House is, that, when a Motion such as that of the hon. Member has been put on the Paper, it operates, so far as the question of anticipation goes, until it ceases to appear on the Paper. The hon. Gentleman's statement that he intends to withdraw has not, under the existing procedure of the House, any effect.

SIR HENRY FOWLER (Wolverhampton): On a question of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether there is any Standing Order of the House that lays down this rule, or whether it is not the practice that has grown up without any sanction from the House? [Cheers.]

*MR. SPEAKER: I think there is the Standing Orders. [Opposition cheers.] It is a practice of the House which has been acted upon, and the practice of the House, as the right hon. Gentleman knows, when acted upon for years, is as binding upon the House as a Standing Order. [Ministerial cheers.]

MR. DILLON: May I ask whether, if it is only a practice of the House and not a Standing Order, it must depend on precedent and ruling, and has any ruling on the subject been given from the Chair? [Cries of "Order!"]

SIR W. HARCOURT: May I ask, with reference to what my right hon. Friend the Member for Thanet has said, whether you, Sir, will take into consideration that this really seems to be a rule which has grown up without the authority of a Standing Order, and how far it had better be modified? I think everyone must feel that, if any such rule were acted upon rigorously, it would reduce the House to impotency, and the great affairs of the nation would have to be transacted elsewhere. [Cheers.]

*MR. SPEAKER: Of course, it is obvious that there are occasions when the practice would operate inconveniently. It is not for me to say whether, on the whole, it operates inconveniently or not. Certainly, if the House thinks fit to alter the rule, I shall not offer any advice to the contrary. ["Hear, hear!"]

SIR W. HARCOURT: But, as there is no rule, what course can the House take in the matter? As I understand, the House has never made a rule to this effect. It is simply, as I understand, an accidental judgment, and there is no rule on which the House can act.

*MR. SPEAKER: I think there is more than that. The right hon. Gentleman will find that there is such a consensus of practice upon the point for many years past that it is one of the ordinary Rules of the House, and part of the ordinary procedure of the House. The right hon. Gentleman well knows that many of our rules are not to be found in print or in Standing Orders; and this is a practice which has become part of what I may call the common law of Parliament. To alter a long-continued practice at common law requires a statute; and in the same way an alteration in the common law of Parliament cannot be effected on the sole authority of the Speaker, who is not the maker, but only the administrator, of the laws of this House. [Cheers.]

MR. JAMES LOWTHER: What course can the House adopt? Would it be by way of Resolution to move a modification, or by Standing Order?

*MR. SPEAKER: Where you want to alter the practice of the House it would be more convenient to do so by Standing Order. At the same time the House has sometimes acted upon Resolutions. It is a matter for consideration what course should be followed.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER: As far as I am personally concerned, having regard to the assurance that the matter shall receive consideration, I shall not take action in the direction of an object-lesson. [Laughter and cheers.]

BRITISH TROOPS IN INDIA (HEALTH).

MAJOR RASCH (Essex, S.E.) gave notice that on the first opportunity he would call attention to the health of the British Army in India, and move a Resolution. [Cheers.]

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS BILL.

Considered in Committee.

[The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, in the Chair.]

[FIRST DAY.]

Clause 1:—

"(1) For aiding Voluntary Schools there shall be annually paid out of moneys provided by Parliament an aid grant, not exceeding in the aggregate five shillings per scholar for the whole number of scholars in those schools.

"(2) The aid grant shall be distributed by the Education Department to such Voluntary Schools and in such manner and amounts as the Department think best for the purpose of helping necessitous schools and increasing their efficiency, due regard being had to the maintenance of voluntary subscriptions.

"(3) If associations of schools are constituted in such manner in such areas and with such governing bodies representative of the managers as are approved by the Education Department, there shall be allotted to each association while so approved,

"(a) a share of the aid grant, to be computed according to the number of scholars in the schools of the association at the rate of five shillings per scholar, or, if the Department fix different rates for town and country schools respectively (which they are hereby empowered to do), then at those rates; and

"(b) a corresponding share of any sum which may be available out of the aid grant after distribution has been made to unassociated schools.

"(4) The share so allotted to each such association shall be distributed as aforesaid by the Education Department after consulting the governing body of the association, and in accordance with any scheme prepared by that body which the Department for the time being approve.

"(5) The Education Department may exclude a school from any share of the aid grant which it might otherwise receive if, in the opinion of the Department, it unreasonably refuses or fails to join such an association, but the refusal or failure shall not be deemed unreasonable if the majority of the schools in the association belong to a religious denomination to which the school in question does not itself belong.

"(6) The Education Department may require as a condition of a school receiving a share of the aid grant that the accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the school shall be annually audited in accordance with the regulations of the Department."

"(7) The decision of the Education Department upon any question relating to the distribution or allotment of the aid grant, including the question whether an association is or is not in conformity with this Act, and whether a school is a town or a country school, shall be final."

MR. HERBERT LEWIS (Flint Boroughs) moved, "That clause 1 be postponed." He said he thought they ought to know exactly what would be done with Clause 2, which proposed to repeal the 17s. 6d. limit, before they could properly proceed to consider Clause 1, because any change in Clause 2 would profoundly modify the attitude of the House towards the various points which arose under Clause 1. The Government had departed from the order which had hitherto obtained by providing for the grant first and the machinery of administration next. The framework of the clause was such that it was necessary for the Government to have an opportunity of reconsidering it.

MR. REGINALD McKENNA (Monmouth, N.) seconded the Amendment. In the Resolution on which the Bill was founded there was no definition of the term "voluntary"; and the consequence was that the House had decided that an undefined amount should be allotted to helping undefined schools. Before Clause 1 was considered the Committee ought to have a definition of "Voluntary School."

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said it was, no doubt, unfortunately the fact that whenever a Bill was brought in, one clause must precede another. [Laughter.] There must, too, be something in the second clause which had a bearing on something in the first, and until it was certain what was to be done with the second clause it was impossible to be sure about the first. That was true whatever were the clauses; and, with a few verbal alterations, he could adduce the very same arguments as those of the hon. Member for postponing the second clause. The first was the most important and far-reaching clause in the Bill, and it was in accordance with the practice of draftsmen that it should be put first.

MR. A. H. DYKE ACLAND (York, W.R., Rotherham) said that if the money were granted in the first clause, and the authorities were set up in the second, the Bill would be in harmony with most Acts of Parliament dealing with these questions. Clause 1 was most unusual compared with other education and local government Bills; and this was a local government Bill in part, for it set up compulsory local authorities. The authority should be set up first, and the money grant should be provided for afterwards.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: That is not the proposal before the Committee. The proposal is to postpone the first clause to the end of the Bill.

MR. ACLAND said that it was very difficult to raise what was an extremely important point. The grant and the authority were both dealt with in a single clause, which was almost without precedent.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Anyone who introduces a Bill is entitled to draft it as he thinks best. There is no precedent for an Amendment to postpone parts of a clause. That would be a most inconvenient course. Indeed, there is no machinery for working a Bill in that way.

MR. HERBERT LEWIS rose to speak again, when

SIR W. HART DYKE (Kent, Dartford) rose in his place and claimed to move "That the Question be now put." [Cries of "Oh!" and laughter.]

*THE CHAIRMAN withheld his assent, and declined then to put the Question. Debate resumed.

MR. LEWIS, continuing, said that the First Lord of the Treasury had only partly answered his arguments, and he should press the Amendment.

MR. D. F. GODDARD (Ipswich) urged that the machinery of this Bill was most important. A number of new bodies were created with delicate and important duties, and everything ought to be clearly defined.

Question put:—The Committee divided, Ayes, 94; Noes, 244.—(Division List, No. 53.)

MR. E. H. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.) moved at the beginning of the clause to insert the words

> "During the continuance of this Act, that is to say, the period of two years after the thirty-first day of March next, after the passing of this Act."

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said the Amendment was out of order.

MR. PICKERSGILL said he hoped that before the Chairman finally ruled the Amendment out of order, he would allow him to state very respectfully the grounds upon which he submitted it was not out of order at this point; and might he express his great regret that the communication which he sent to the right hon. Gentleman on Saturday, giving the references to the precedents on which he should rely, had, unfortunately not reached him. The Standing Order passed in 1849 provided that the precise duration of every temporary law should be expressed in a distinct clause at the end of the Bill, but he respectfully submitted that there was a long line of precedents which showed that the Standing Order had been interpreted in this sense—that it was passed by the House of Commons, as lawyers said, ex abundanti cautela, that was, to secure that in a matter so all-important as the duration of an Act of Parliament there should be no ambiguity or doubt, but that it did not in any respect preclude that House from deciding and limiting a statute at any point which might be convenient. One of the precedents, which he submitted was on all fours with the present case, occurred no longer ago than last Session. He referred to the Agricultural Lands Rating Bill. When this Bill was considered in Committee, with the Chairman in the chair, the President of the Local Government Board proposed to insert, at the commencement of the Bill—precisely where he proposed to insert the present Amendment—these words:—"During the continuance of this Act—that is to say, for a period of five years." With the substitution of two for five his Amendment was based on that precedent. His second precedent was the Statute passed in 1888 for the Better Protection of Sand Grouse. In that case the duration of the statute was enacted in the principal enacting clause, and there was no distinct clause limiting the duration of the Act. The third precedent was very much like the present Bill, in that it was a grant of public money. The Glebe Lands (Ireland) Act, 1870, the third clause of which said, "It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Public Works of Ireland, during the continuance of this Act." His last precedent was in 1865—The Locomotives on Roads Act, the first section of which provided that the Act should not come into operation before the 1st of January 1865, and should cease to have effect on the 1st of September 1867. There was also a technical point which he thought he was entitled to take. In this first line it was provided that a grant "shall be annually paid." The words "annually paid" would imply a payment year by year for ever. There would, he submitted, be a repugnancy in first enacting that this grant should be annually paid, and then at the end of the Bill introducing a limit into its duration. He submitted, therefore, that the words introduced by the draughtsman, "annually paid," distinctly raised the duration of the Bill and let in his Amendment.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said he thought it rather an unusual thing to argue the point, but as he unfortunately did not receive, prior to coming into the chair, the communication to which the hon. Member had referred, he thought it right he should state his case. It seemed to him it was perfectly clear. There was a Standing Order which said that the precise duration of every temporary law should be expressed in a distinct clause at the end of the Bill. He could not get over that. The hon. Member proposed to make this a temporary law, and he proposed to state the precise duration of it by his Amendment. That being so, it was perfectly clear, according to the order of the House, which he had no authority to set aside even if he wished to do so, that the clause must come in at the end of the Bill. The hon. Member had referred to precedents. He could not answer for those in which he was not concerned, but the hon. Member quoted the precedent of last Session. His attention was not called to the wording of the Standing Order when that Amendment was moved, and he could only say it must have slipped into the Bill, as the lawyers said, per incuriam. [Laughter.] He was not then so familiar with the Standing Orders as he had since become, and probably if the proposal were made again from any quarter of the House, it would not be admitted. He felt obliged to rule the Amendment out of order.

Sir HENRY FOWLER (Wolverhampton, E.) presumed the Chairman would not rule the Amendment out of order if it were proposed in the form of a new clause?

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS said certainly not. It would probably be in order as a new clause at the end of the Bill. The Amendments in the names of the hon. Member for Carnarvon (Mr. Lloyd-George)—to leave out the words "For aiding," and to insert the words, "in order to establish a fund out of which the Education Department may aid necessitous"—and the hon. Member for West Derbyshire (Mr. Herbert Roberts)—to leave out the words "For aiding," and to insert the words "To necessitous"—appeared to be precisely the same as that standing in the name of the hon. Member for the South Molton Division (Mr. Lambert). The two hon. Members first mentioned had very ingeniously attempted to raise the question before the proper time, he therefore proposed to call upon the hon. Member for South Molton. The Amendment of the hon. Member for Bethnal Green ought properly to be raised on line 12, subsection 2. The Amendment immediately following to leave out "aiding" and insert "supplementing voluntary subscriptions constituted towards," and the Amendment of the hon. Member below the Gangway ought to come in on line 13.

*Mr. GEORGE LAMBERT (Devon, South Molton) moved, after the word "Aiding" to insert the word "necessitous." He said it seemed to him an extraordinary thing that the grant of public money about to be made to Voluntary Schools should not be restricted to necessitous schools, for the reason, that if they were not necessitous he did not see why they wanted money. He could point to many instances where Voluntary Schools were in an extremely flourishing condition, schools which did not require any grant whatever, in addition to the annual and fee grant, schools that were altogether outside anything like a condition requiring an extraordinary grant such as the Bill proposed for the benefit and efficiency of education. There was only one reference in the Bill to the case of necessitous schools, the aid grant was to be distributed in manner and amount—

> "as the Department think best, for the purpose of helping necessitous schools and increasing their efficiency."

It was important to notice that it was impossible for the Education Department to distribute or exercise efficient control over the distribution of this grant to the various schools. In the Debate on the Education Bill of last year the Vice President of the Council said it was impossible for the Central Department to discriminate between schools and schools, that it was impossible for that body to make selection of those schools that really required aid, that could only be done by local authorities. That being so, the Education Department was precluded entirely according to the statement of the right hon. Gentleman from the ability to discriminate as to schools being necessitous or not. As he understood the Bill the Education Department would have no power whatever to withhold money from an association provided that the association was constituted in a manner of which the Department approved. Suppose 100 schools in an association, 75 being non-necessitous and not requiring aid, and 25 necessitous. If the association did distribute the money according to the needs of the schools, then the necessitous schools would receive at the rate of £1 a head of scholars, and the 75 non-necessitous schools would get nothing. If that was to be the case, what was the use of inserting in the Bill an annual grant at the rate of 5s. per scholar. It seemed to him, it would be a waste of public money to put into the hands of an association a grant they would have to distribute among schools necessitous or not, and there would be no security for economy. In several districts, and in such a constituency as South Molton, where there were 47 Voluntary Schools and 31 Board Schools, if the grant went to all Voluntary Schools, non-necessitous as well as necessitous, there would be very great jealousy on the part of the 31 schools getting nothing at all. School Boards might be quite willing that necessitous schools should secure the 5s. grant, but there would be a strong sense of the injustice of the proceeding if non-necessitous schools were relieved while they received no assistance. He could give many instances of the flourishing condition of Voluntary Schools. Some of them received very few subscriptions, and according to the latest Return there were 1,061 Voluntary Schools with no subscribers. If that was so it proved that these schools were in a flourishing condition, for if they were not their friends would rally round and subscribe for their assistance. Then there were nearly 5,000 schools having subscriptions of less than 5s., and there the same argument applied; if these schools were necessitous then the friends of the Church of England or other schools would increase their subscriptions. In larger schools, having the largest number of scholars, there were the smallest subscriptions, the subscriptions to Voluntary Schools in the Lancashire boroughs averaged only 3s. 2½d. per head. If his Amendment were carried and only necessitous schools were aided, there would be something like half this money saved, and he regarded that as a very important matter indeed. The House had been told by the Secretary for the Colonies the other day, that the Government were pledged, and if only reasonable time were given them they would deal with Board Schools. By this proposal the Government would have money as well as time, for according to the best calculation he could make, a very considerable sum would be saved for the assistance of other than non-necessitous Voluntary Schools.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said there were one or two statements made by the hon. Gentleman which might, under different circumstances, call for some comment, as indeed they excited considerable surprise in the minds of those who heard them. He laid down the proposition, that where subscriptions were small, schools were more flourishing.

MR. LAMBERT said they ought to be.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said that was an educational and financial paradox the hon. Gentleman would find it hard to sustain in argument. The hon. Gentleman went on to say that his right hon. Friend the Vice President of the Council, said the Education Department had not the means of determining whether Voluntary Schools were necessitous or not, but inasmuch as he proposed by his Amendment to confine the grant to necessitous schools it seemed an odd way to recommend it, to say there was no way by which necessitous schools could be discovered. But he passed by this as being part of the outworks of the hon. Gentleman's position, and came to the citadel or central strength of the proposal. The hon. Gentleman wished to limit the amount of the grant which would be given to Voluntary Schools, and wishing to do that he had set to work in exactly the right way to do it. No doubt there were a certain number of Voluntary Schools which could not be described as necessitous, and if they were excluded from all claim to it the total amount of the grant would be diminished to that extent. Upon this the Government joined issue with the hon. Gentleman, he wished to diminish the amount of money to relieve the necessities of Voluntary Schools, the Government desired to make it even greater if possible. This being the fundamental difference of opinion, he, thinking that the grant of 5s. per head for children in necessitous schools would be sufficient, while the Government did not, there being this broad difference of opinion, it was hardly possible to carry on the argument with profit. If the hon. Member however would consider the amount thought absolutely necessary for education in Board Schools, and the amount Voluntary Schools had the power to spend, he should come to the conclusion to which the Government had already arrived, that this round sum of £600,000 odd was nothing too large for the needs of the schools which would receive the benefit of the grant. The hon. Gentleman said School Boards would feel a great sense of injustice and ill-usage if Voluntary Schools in districts which needed nothing received grants from the public funds. He was as anxious as the hon. Member that none of this money should go to Voluntary Schools that did not require it, but this was not the part of the Bill where this point should be raised. The Committee were now discussing the total sum to be applied, and he felt bound to oppose an Amendment which proposed to dimish that amount.

MR. R. B. HALDANE (Haddingtonshire) remarked that the right hon. Gentleman had assured them on one point which arose in connection with this Amendment, and that was as to the purpose of the Bill, which, the right hon. Gentleman said, was to aid those Voluntary Schools which were necessitous. If that were so he could not help thinking that, as a matter of clearness and convenience, and perhaps as a matter of substance, it would be well that this Amendment should be accepted. The Chairman had ruled that they could not re-draft section one so as to enable them to discuss the machinery—the hand which was to be kept over the machinery—of this grant until they came to that part of the clause. That being so, one did not like to start the commencement of the Section with the words as to aiding Voluntary Schools. They had it now from the First Lord that the purpose of the Bill was to aid necessitous Voluntary Schools, and why should not that purpose be expressed in the very initial words? It looked as if the draftsman of the Bill had further and ulterior purposes than that of aiding necessitous schools, and as if the Bill were meant to be a fulfilment of those very wide promises which were given in the course of the discussion in the country to the supporters of Voluntary Schools—not merely "necessitous," but Voluntary Schools generally—that some special consideration would be given to them by the Government which had received great support from them at the time of the General Election. The words "for aiding Voluntary Schools," would seem to have reference rather to this promise than the promise expressed in the Bill. He could not see why the Amendment should not be accepted so as to make the clause run "for aiding necessitous Voluntary Schools." Then at the end of the clause they could introduce the limiting words they wished, and could make provision as they went on, which would render clear what was intended. He was confirmed in that view by the extraordinary language which had been used in the drafting of Sub-Section 2:—

> "The aid grant shall be distributed by the Education Department to such Voluntary Schools and in such manner and amounts as the Department think best for the purpose of helping necessitous schools."

Surely that was extraordinary language in which to instruct the Department to help necessitous schools. It looked as if the purpose were to enable the Department to grant money to the richer Voluntary Schools on terms that they should send the poorer scholars to necessitous schools. That could not be the purpose of the clause, and he thought there was a great deal to be said in favour of making the governing words of the Bill quite clear at the very commencement.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs) understood there was a perfect agreement that the money was to be appropriated entirely to the relief of Voluntary Schools which were necessitous. If that were so why should not the money be paid in proportion to the necessities of these schools? The Amendment proposed that the money should be paid to the necessitous Voluntary Schools.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: In proportion to their necessities? Is that what it means?

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE said that might come afterwards. What the right hon. Gentleman proposed, however, was not that the schools should be subsidised in proportion to their necessities, but in proportion to the measure of the prosperity of their neighbours. If there were half-a-dozen schools in a district, five not being necessitous and the sixth being really necessitous, then they would pay that necessitous school, not in proportion to its real need, but in proportion to the amount of prosperity of the other five schools. That was a principle that had been incorporated in no other Act of Parliament, and was one which was absolutely indefensible. He objected to the Government's proposal on another ground, namely, that it treated Voluntary Schools unfairly. Something had been said about necessitous Board Schools. Necessitous Board Schools were to be subsided. Were they to be subsidised in proportion to the number of scholars in School Boards where there was no need for an aid grant? If not, why should there be a distinction drawn between Board Schools and Voluntary Schools in this respect? They should subsidise both in proportion to their needs. The only argument which had been adduced in support of this proposal was that it placed Board Schools and Voluntary Schools practically on the same basis, and that it enabled Voluntary Schools to compete with Board Schools. But he would point out to the Committee that in several counties in North Wales the result of this proposal, if carried, would be that, by giving 5s. per child in average attendance at Voluntary Schools, they would be paying more to Voluntary Schools than to Board Schools—while the income of the Voluntary Schools would be greater than that of the Board Schools—by something like 2s. 6d. per child. That was to say, that in these School Board districts the people would be penalised for their great sacrifices on behalf of education. What the Government were going to do by their proposal was to give this 5s. per head indiscriminately, whether the schools were necessitous or not. [Ministerial cries of "No!"] Could hon. Gentlemen opposite point to a single provision in the Bill which would enable the Education Department to enforce the provision which was made subsequently, that this money should go to the pocket of necessitous schools alone. There was absolutely no provision of any sort or kind which would insure this. There was a sort of indication of the intention of the Government that the money should go to necessitous schools, but the whole clause was very loosely worded, and, unless at the very outset they confined the benefit of this clause to the necessitous Voluntary Schools alone, there was nothing that would enable the Department to compel these associations afterwards to limit the amount of the grant and subsidy to such schools. For that reason he protested strongly against the clause in its present form.

Mr. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) was glad to hear the First Lord of the Treasury say that it was intended that this money, so far as it went, was to be applied to the needs of the necessitous schools.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I have said so in every speech I have made.

Mr. BUXTON said it was because the Opposition were anxious that that should be the principle of the Bill, that they desired the adoption of this Amendment, so that the exact purpose of the Bill might be clearly defined. It ought to be stated at the very commencement of the Bill that the money which was to be given was to go to the necessitous Voluntary Schools, and the amount to be so given ought to be based on the existing number of necessitous schools. He, for one, thought there would be great difficulty thrown on the Department and upon these associations in arriving at the fact as to what was or was not a necessitous school. The Government themselves stated that they were able to discover this, and that being so the basis on which this Bill ought to be placed was not that it should go forth to the public that there was to be 5s. for all the children in average attendance at the Voluntary Schools, but that the money was to be devoted simply and solely to the necessitous Voluntary Schools. Unless some such Amendment as this were accepted, and unless they took steps to discover the necessitous schools, and then gave them a grant in aid of the children in average attendance, they would have great inequalities as between school and school, and district and district.

Sir HENRY FOWLER submitted that, if the word "necessitous" did not precede the words "Voluntary Schools," there would be no limit to the aid intended to be given. The First Lord of the Treasury, in moving the Second Reading of the Bill, explained that it was not meant that 5s. per head should be given to every child, but the 5s. was mentioned to ascertain the gross total to be divided according to certain rules. On that side of the House they objected to the mode of distribution. They did not believe it would secure what the clause intended—that necessitous schools should be helped and non-necessitous should not. They desired that the object of Parliament in voting the money should be clearly stated—that it was to aid necessitous Voluntary Schools only. The Government had said all along that their only object was to help the necessitous schools and not wealthy schools. If they were sincere they would accept this Amendment, which sought to secure the real intent of the Bill by limiting the aid grant to schools that really needed assistance.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY said there was no difference between the right hon. Gentleman and the Government as to the schools to which the money should go. The difference was as to drafting. The Government thought the amount of money to be given should first be determined, and that the machinery for distribution should be dealt with subsequently.

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH (Anglesey) insisted that the grant should be restricted to "necessitous Voluntary Schools," and that this should be made clear. Voluntary Schools generally were only regarded as a basis of calculation as to how much the aid grant would come to in the aggregate. The insertion of the word "necessitous" before "Voluntary Schools" would make the meaning of the Bill more clear to the country.

MR. J. H. YOXALL (Nottingham, W.) also agreed that the grant should be clearly restricted to necessitous schools, otherwise the Education Department would have pressure brought upon it by the supporters of schools that were not necessitous that these schools should participate in the grant. He did not support the insertion of the word "necessitous" to restrict the gross amount of the grant. Really necessitous schools should have more than 5s. per child. He would prefer that the 5s. which wealthy schools might claim should go to necessitous schools, so that these might have 10s. per child and the wealthy schools nothing. If the word "necessitous" did not precede "Voluntary Schools," there would be no guarantee that the schools which most needed aid would receive it.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS (Glamorgan, Mid.) supported the Amendment, saying that if the object of the Bill was to assist necessitous Voluntary Schools the words referred to, as they stood, misstated that object. If the object of the Bill was to help necessitous schools only, why should the Government object to that being made clear? The object of the Bill of last year was "to assist public elementary schools requiring special aid." If the Government would not agree to the words of the Amendment, perhaps they would agree to the insertion of similar words to these. If not, those words were used as a blind, and they were so misleading as to be dishonest and almost fraudulent. The Government had £610,000 which they wished to give to the Voluntary Schools. Why did they not state their purpose plainly? What was the reason of their including in their calculations the number of scholars in schools that were not necessitous? The fact was, that the Government were afraid to tell the country frankly that they were giving, not 5s. per child, but, in many cases 10s., and even 15s.

MR. G. C. T. BARTLEY (Islington, N.) thought that the insertion of the word "necessitous" would frustrate the object of the Bill, for there were many schools which were not absolutely necessitous, but nearly so, and to which the grant ought to be given, in order that they might be made more efficient. The Amendment would exclude such schools from the benefit of the grant.

SIR FRANK LOCKWOOD (York) said that the observations of the hon. Member for Islington had thrown a flood of light upon the intentions of the supporters of the Bill. The hon. Member said frankly, "Do not put in the word 'necessitous,' because, if you do, it will be acted upon, and necessitous schools only will receive this relief," which, however, was the thing which the Government said that they wished.

MR. BARTLEY: I said nothing of the kind.

SIR FRANK LOCKWOOD: I understood the hon. Member to plead on behalf of schools that were not necessitous.

MR. BARTLEY: I said that they wanted money in order that they might be made efficient.

SIR FRANK LOCKWOOD: Quite so. The hon. Member said, "Do not put in the word 'necessitous,' because there are many schools which are not necessitous, but nearly so." But the Leader of the House had said that the object of the Bill was to relieve schools that were necessitous, and the hon. Member had based his opposition to the Amendment upon the ground that it would prevent schools which, in fact, were not necessitous from receiving relief. The hon. Member's contribution to the Debate showed more than anything else that had been said how necessary this Amendment was.

MR. McKENNA pointed out that the third sub-section of the Clause said that associations of schools were to receive a share of the aid grants, "according to the number of scholars in the schools of the association, at the rate of 5s. per scholar." But among those schools there might be no school which was necessitous, and yet if the Amendment were rejected the Education Department would not be able to refuse the grant to the association. The Amendment was actually necessary, in order to protect the Education Department in carrying out what the Government affirmed to be the object of the Measure.

Question put, "That the word 'necessitous' be there inserted."

The Committee divided: Ayes, 104; Noes, 276.—(Division List, No. 54.)

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS moved to leave out the word "voluntary," in order to insert the words "sectarian and British." He said his object in asking the Committee to adopt this Amendment was for the sake of accurate statement. "Voluntary" was not an accurate description, one authority on that point being the right hon. Member for Bodmin, who preferred to call them "denominational" schools. He quoted from a Return of the county of Glamorgan, showing that at Aberavon the amount per head contributed was 1s. 4d. and 1s. 5½d.; in other schools the amount was 2s. 10¼d., 11d., 2s. 4d., 1s. 11¼d., and at St. David's, Cardiff, the voluntary contribution was a halfpenny per child. In another school it was 8½d., 4½d., and in the Swansea higher grade schools the voluntary contributions amounted to 2d. per head. The Government had therefore no right to call these schools "voluntary."

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY hoped that the hon. Member would not press the Amendment, which was purely verbal. The Amendment might have been substantial if it had been moved in its original form, but as altered it was wholly indefensible. The suggested alteration in phraseology would not be an improvement upon that contained in the Bill. The meaning of the word "voluntary" was perfectly well understood, and its scope was well defined in the Bill. [Cheers.]

Mr. JOSEPH A. PEASE (Northumberland, Tyneside) asked the right hon. Gentleman to omit the word "voluntary" and insert "other than Board Schools." There was great objection to the use of the word "voluntary," owing to the very large number of schools which received no subscription whatever. As a matter of fact, there were 1,061 Voluntary Schools which had no subscriptions, 674 had less than 1s. a child, 1,095 had less than 2s. 6d. per child and more than 1s. per child, and 1,967 had between 2s. 6d. and 5s. per child. These figures indicated that 4,797 out of the 14,155 schools had less than 5s., and it was absurd to speak of these schools as Voluntary, when practically the whole cost of many of them was borne by the State.

Mr. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.) thought that the use of the word "voluntary" was a most objectionable one for the purposes of the Government. It was difficult to tell exactly what was the meaning of the word, though everyone vaguely thought that he knew what the word meant. In an Act of Parliament, however, they ought to aim at accuracy of definition. Was there any precedent in educational legislation for the use of the word "voluntary." He did not think there was, and in his judgment the Government were dragging in a new word. Why not make use of the word "denominational"? It was much better than "voluntary." He confessed that he did not altogether like the suggested word "sectarian."

Mr. ACLAND thought the word "voluntary" was not a proper definition of the class of schools, and did not agree that the objection raised to its use in the clause was a frivolous one. He quoted a statement made by the Duke of Devonshire 20 years ago, the effect of which was to show that thenceforward the word "voluntary" had no proper meaning. He would ask the right hon. Gentleman whether he had any particular objection to inserting the words "not provided by a School Board" after the word "school," instead of retaining the word "voluntary." He thought that would really meet the case.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY said that, out of courtesy to the right hon. Gentleman, he would say a few words. What the draughtsman of the Bill had done was to use in the Bill itself the phrase which was most familiar and most easily understood by all who had to deal with these matters. ["Hear, hear!"] He had in the definition clause given a perfectly clear and precise definition of what that phrase meant. A more usual or more convenient course he could hardly imagine, and the whole purpose of the definition clause would be destroyed if they were to take out of that clause a long periphrasis, and shovel it bodily into the Bill. It was far more convenient to leave the Bill as it was; it would read far more smoothly, and there could be no possible doubt as to what the Bill meant.

Mr. REES DAVIES (Pembrokeshire) said he strongly objected to the term "voluntary." They did not think that the term was correct as applied to these schools. He was at a loss to understand why the Government would not adopt the words "public elementary schools not provided by a School Board." He thought the attitude of the Government would not tend to accelerate progress.

Mr. ABEL THOMAS (Carmarthen, E.) said there were quite a thousand of these schools which received no voluntary subscriptions at all, but nine people out of ten believed that the word "voluntary" was intended to apply to Voluntary Schools and nothing else. He did not care whether it was denominational or sectarian, but what possible objection could there be to the words "other than Board Schools?" Unless it was with the intention of misleading people in the country, there could be no reason for retaining the word "voluntary."

Mr. ERNEST GRAY (West Ham, N.) said that if the Amendment were adopted some 252,000 children would be deprived of the benefits of these grants. There were schools still classed as Voluntary Schools which were distinctly set out in Departmental returns as British, undenominational and other schools.

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS said the Amendment suggested the words "sectarian and British."

Mr. GRAY thought the Amendment was perhaps useful as an indication of the spirit in which the Bill was being opposed. [Cheers and cries of "Oh!"] A very large proportion of these thousand schools which had been referred to were heavily endowed. He had one in mind—a small school of about 54 children in Wiltshire, which was endowed to the extent of 92s. odd per child. He quite agreed that such schools should be without voluntary subscriptions; yet, on the other hand, the endowment should be put against the subscription. The arguments brought forward in favour of the Amendment were of a frivolous character.

Mr. HUMPHREYS-OWEN (Montgomery) said the phrase "Voluntary Schools" was a popular one which no doubt two generations ago represented an actual fact, but that was the case no longer. These schools were in no true sense of the word "voluntary." A great number of them only existed because of the threat of a School Board. The parents would all be glad to have some control over the schools, but when it was proposed the clerical party threatened them with all sorts of pains and penalties, with 1s. in the pound rates, and so forth. To call such schools voluntary was an absurd misnomer. It was notorious that many railway companies and limited companies subscribed to so-called Voluntary Schools with the object of lessening the rates upon their shareholders, but to suggest that they were influenced in such action by any desire to assist sectarian teaching would be to impute to them the grossest malversation of their funds. He would point out, moreover, that a school which used its endowments to save the rates or the voluntary subscribers was committing a breach of trust, these endowments having been intended for the improvement of education. They were asked for the first time to give a new meaning to the word "voluntary."

Sir FRANK LOCKWOOD asked the Chairman whether the first Amendment that would be put to the Committee would be to leave out the word "voluntary."

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: Yes.

Sir FRANK LOCKWOOD said in that case he should certainly vote for the Amendment, although he did not think he could adopt the words suggested by his hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. McKENNA said he was in the same position as his hon. and learned Friend. No satisfactory reason had been given why words of definition should not be here inserted, and if they were he thought it would actually save time.

Sir BENJAMIN BAKER (Portsmouth) pointed out that though the word "voluntary" was used in the House to apply to Church Schools, it was not so used outside. He thought its application to Church Schools was inaccurate.

*Mr. R. W. PERKS (Lincolnshire, Louth) thought the Government should give some explanation why they had adopted "voluntary" instead of the more accurate and legal word "denominational?"

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: British schools are not denominational.

*MR. PERKS said that in 8,000 parishes there was no choice for parents but these denominational schools, and it was desirable that they should be designated what they were—sectarian establishments.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS said that no reason had been advanced why those schools should not be called by their proper name. The hon. Member for North West Ham, who had described the Amendment as frivolous, had not used a single argument against the word "voluntary." There was no excuse for the use of such a word in the Bill. He would suggest that instead of "voluntary" the words "elementary schools other than Board Schools" should be used; and he certainly intended to ask the sense of the Committee as to whether "voluntary" should stand part of the clause.

*MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.) said it had been admitted by several speakers on the Government side of the House during the previous Debates that the word "voluntary" was not suitable as a description of the schools to which the Bill applied. He thought the words "public elementary schools," which he had placed on the Paper in the next Amendment, if coupled with "other than schools provided by School Boards," would be a more accurate designation of the schools.

MR. GODDARD said that an examination of the income of those so-called Voluntary Schools would show how misleading the word "voluntary" was in such a connection. The total rate of income per scholar in the Church of England schools was £1 18s. 10¾d.; but the only part of that sum derived from voluntary subscriptions was 6s. 9¾d. How could such schools be called Voluntary Schools? Again, in the case of the Wesleyan schools, the total rate of income was £1 17s. 7d. per scholar, while the voluntary subscriptions were merely 3s. In the Roman Catholic schools the total rate of income was £1 16s. 10½d. per scholar, and the voluntary contributions 8s. In the British schools the total rate of income was £2 1s. per scholar, and the voluntary contributions 6s. 6d. To call these schools "voluntary" was therefore a misnomer, and yet the Government proposed to perpetuate the term in a Statute that would make the schools less and less Voluntary Schools.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield) said he could understand why the Government were sticklers for the term "voluntary" rather than "denominational" or "sectarian." The use of one or other of the latter terms would be calling things by their right names, and that would not commend itself to the promoters of the Bill. He would suggest that the object of the supporters of the Amendment could be better accomplished by a change in the definition clause, and he had given notice of the following Amendment to that clause:—

> Clause 4, page 2, line 39, after "Board" insert "and which are maintained by voluntary subscriptions to the extent provided for by this Act."

If that principle were adopted the schools would really be Voluntary Schools, and would be properly so-called in the Bill.

Question put, "That the word 'voluntary' stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 275; Noes, 102.—(Division List, No. 55.)

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH proposed, after the word "schools" to insert the words "in existence at the passing of this Act." He explained that the purpose of the Amendment was to limit the operation of the Bill to such Voluntary Schools as were in existence at the time of the passing of the Act. In the case of new Voluntary Schools the 5s. grant would be an unfair premium given to them, whereas he urged that Voluntary Schools and the Board Schools ought, as far as possible, to be given equal chances. ["Hear, hear!"] Already he had heard, since the Bill was introduced, that there were districts in the country which delayed having a School Board, because otherwise they would lose the 5s. grant under the Bill. That was tantamount to putting a premium on the Voluntary Schools. He hoped the Amendment would be accepted.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said he could not accept the Amendment. Voluntary Schools could not be established unless the money was provided for building and maintaining them—["hear, hear"]—and even after this 5s. grant was made, those who were interested in the development of the voluntary system would find it a matter of great difficulty to keep that system in pace with the growth of the population in new districts in the country. [" Hear, hear!"] So far as equality of the two systems was concerned, the Voluntary system was at present enormously handicapped, and it would be only slightly relieved by the present Bill. In the circumstances he hoped the hon. Member would not think it necessary to press the Amendment.

Mr. ACLAND said he understood the right hon. Gentleman to say that when a new Voluntary School was set up in a district it would receive 5s. per head per child in average attendance as proposed by this clause.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: The new Voluntary Schools will be just like the old ones. [Cheers.]

Mr. ACLAND said that the answer of the right hon. Gentleman was remarkable. If the new schools were to be like the old, it meant that when the choice lay between building a Board School or a Voluntary School, the latter would be recommended by the hope of getting the 5s. grant.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: Of course it will not be in the power of those who wish to start a new Voluntary School to foresee what the Education Department will do in regard to the grant.

Mr. ACLAND pointed out that though the extra grant earned by the new Voluntary School might not be paid to that school, it would be paid to some other in the same association. Up till now, Board and Voluntary Schools had been on an equality. [Cries of " No! "] When there had been a desire to start a Voluntary School, the School Board of the district had always been only too willing. But if this money was to be used as a building grant— [Cries of " No! "] Well, since building grants had ceased a Voluntary School had always meant a school built by volunteers. Was that to be the case in the future? Why should the new schools be brought in at all?

Mr. HUMPHREYS-OWEN said that there was nothing to prevent the grant from being applied as a building grant. But it was not necessary to raise a building fund for the establishment of a Voluntary School. A school, however, might be rented. There was a case in his own constituency where a building had been employed as a school to provide accommodation in an outlying district. The building had been condemned by the Department, but it could be acquired and put in order for a small sum. The parishioners would like a School Board, but that would be extremely obnoxious to the clergyman and other Churchmen, although the parents of every single child attending the school were Nonconformists. The inequality had all along been in favour of Church schools, and this provision really put a premium on the establishment of Voluntary Schools.

Mr. J. A. PEASE pointed out that in a growing district, if this Amendment were not accepted, there would be an inducement to the ratepayers to place all new schools under Voluntary management. This would exclude popular control and discourage the parents from taking an interest in education.

Mr. REES DAVIES said that the argument generally employed by those asking for subscriptions to Voluntary Schools was, "Do something to keep them up and save us from the rates." The whole object was to avoid the School Board, and, if the Bill passed in its present form, not only would the existing Voluntary Schools receive a great stimulus, but a great incentive would be given to the establishment of other Voluntary Schools.

Mr. BUXTON urged that the Committee was entitled to some answer from the First Lord of the Treasury. Under one of these associations new schools accommodating, say, 1,000 children might be built. That would mean that the association would earn an extra grant of £250 a year. The necessitous schools were already amply provided for under the Bill. What would be done with the additional £250 a year?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY said that the hon. Gentleman had misunderstood his interruption. The Government had always held that the grant ought to be made variable and elastic, in proportion to the number of schools to be dealt with. It was conceivable that the number of Voluntary Schools might diminish, and that the necessities of those remaining would at the same time increase. In that case this grant would be insufficient. It was also conceivable that the number of schools would increase, and that the new schools would be so rich that the increase in the amount given by the Exchequer would be more or less wasted. But, broadly speaking, there was not a better plan for varying the lump sum to be given each year than by making it proportionate to the number of schools. [Cheers.] No one could foresee whether the new schools to be erected would be necessitous or not. But the fears expressed lest the ratepayers should, in order to get an additional £250 a year, build schools at a cost to themselves of £15,000 were rather idle. [Cheers.] Some of the new schools would, no doubt, be in rich districts, and would not want the 5s. grant. Others might be necessitous, and so be a drain on the resources of their neighbours. It was impossible to obtain perfect equality and smoothness of working; but no better or simpler plan than that in the Bill could be found. He was glad to hear from the late Vice President of the Council the admission that Voluntary Schools had been built by volunteers.

MR. A. J. MUNDELLA (Sheffield, Brightside) said that the Amendment must be considered in its effect on the future supply of school accommodation. The Opposition had never objected to aid being given to existing necessitous schools. [Cries of "Oh!"] In every School Board district where accommodation was lacking it had to be supplied by the School Board. His right hon. Friend might shake his head, but that had been the custom up to now. If a 5s. additional grant was to be given to all Voluntary Schools that might hereafter be called into existence it was practically a bribe—

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: It is not necessarily to be given.

MR. MUNDELLA said that if the schools were necessitous they were to receive the 5s. per head; therefore this was a bribe to call into existence necessitous Voluntary Schools. [Cheers.] The argument of the clergyman would always be, "Do not take a Board School, but rent our Sunday school, for then you will get the grant of 18s. or 19s. per head, the 10s. fee grant, and, in addition, this 5s. bonus." That meant the keeping down of the quality of education. [Cheers.] The object of all this was to stop the growth of the Board Schools, and to prevent the extension of that education which Board Schools gave. In short, there was to be a bonus for the provision of schools that would just fulfil the demands of the Department, but nevertheless be inferior schools.

*MR. J. M. PAULTON (Durham, Bishop Auckland) said the assumption was that the Bill was to meet the necessities of the Voluntary Schools. It was obvious that the additional money for scholars in new schools would not be wanted unless necessitous Voluntary Schools would be brought into existence purposely. The assumption of the Government was, that the new Voluntary Schools would not be necessitous—[The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: "That is not my assumption"]—and therefore the money would be paid over to give assistance which, under the Bill, was not required. More money would go into a district containing new schools, and the inducement would be great to create Voluntary Schools in order that a larger amount might go to the Association.

MR. YOXALL said there was a great number of certified efficient schools that were not recognised by the Department for grants for several reasons. The first was, that the ground was already covered by existing schools; the second was, that the school premises were unsatisfactory; and the third was, that the education was not altogether satisfactory. Under the Bill, unless this Amendment were adopted, the Department would be inundated with applications for the recognition of these schools, and he did not see very well how recognition could be refused. There would be a stoppage of the growth of satisfactory education under School Boards in favour of cheap, nasty, and marine-store education—["Oh, oh!" and cheers]—in schools that, up to the present, had not been recognised as fit for children to enter.

*MR. PERKS said the Bill put a premium upon the transfer of Board Schools to the National Society, or some other sectarian management. The other day the Bishop of Winchester took part in the ceremony of transferring a Board School to Anglican control, and said that was the first of a series of such transactions which would probably take place under this Bill. In Lincolnshire there were 130 or 140 villages in which there were fairly efficient schools under the control of School Boards. The schools did not, perhaps, give as good education as Board Schools in towns, but they were certainly superior to the National schools in those villages. Why should a premium be placed upon the transfer of those schools to their former conditions? They had thrown over the fetters of ecclesiastical management, and at present were efficiently conducted by farmers, shopkeepers, and labourers. Why should the Government, through the provisions of this Bill, place an inducement before the ratepayers to hand the school back to the bad management and sectarian control of the Church of England? The First Lord of the Treasury told them some minutes ago that one object of the Bill was to prevent the transfer of Voluntary Schools to School Board management. He thought the clergy would manage them better than the parents and ratepayers. [The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: "I never said anything of the kind."] He certainly gathered from the interposition of the right hon. Gentleman that that was one of the objects of the Bill. Let him cite the case of a village he knew very well. There were 240 children in the Anglican school, the only school in the place, and, of the 240, at least 215 were the children of Nonconformists. Suppose the Methodists who were the parents of those children were to say: "We are tired of this sectarian control; we want to run our own school, and, under this Bill, we propose to do it. We got a 10s. grant a few years ago, and we are to get 5s. per head under this Bill." "No," said the right hon. Gentleman, "you are not to be certain of that 5s. It will only be given where, through the agency of these federations, we are persuaded that the schools are effectively managed." Did they think that, under the ægis of the present Education Department, the Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, or any body of Dissenters would be permitted to start their anti-sectarian or anti-Anglican school? ["Why not?"] And be sure of the 5s. grant? [The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: "Hear, hear!"] Did the right hon. Gentleman say they might be sure of the 5s. grant? [The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: "If they are necessitous."] Who was to say they were necessitous? It was because the Amendment would, to some extent, prevent invidious and illiberal treatment of Nonconformist schools that it was worthy of support.

SIR F. LOCKWOOD said he understood the right hon. Gentleman to say, in reply to the Member for Sheffield, that it did not follow that the money raised on this principle of 5s. per head per child should be given to all schools.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Not necessarily to new schools.

SIR F. LOCKWOOD thought that it would necessarily be given to new schools. The money voted might not be needed for the existing schools, and then, it would be spent on scholars attending the new schools. He understood that the amount of the grant was not to be distributed with reference to schools being necessitous or non-necessitous, but only with regard to the number in the association area, and that by the erection of new schools the amount to be distributed could be indefinitely increased. He should like to hear the view of the right hon. Gentleman (Sir J. Gorst) on this point, because he had told them that the money would be paid on the basis of the number of children included in the association area; it was not to be in regard to the number of necessitous schools or non-necessitous schools in that area. They were to take the number of children with the association area and have no regard to whether they were necessitous or not. So far from this being a Bill which was intended to relieve Voluntary Schools it was a Bill intended to create Voluntary Schools. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. SAMUEL EVANS said he desired to ask the Chairman a question on a point of order—whether it would be competent to move an Amendment providing that any portion of this money should be used for the purpose of schools which are not now in existence? Looking at the words of the Resolution and the words of the Bill now in Committee, he submitted that it was perfectly clear that both the Resolution and the Bill were intended to refer solely to existing schools. How could they "increase the efficiency" of schools if they did not exist? ["Oh, oh!"] How could they have regard to "the maintenance of schools" if they were never established? [AN HON. MEMBER: "Annually!"] He asked whether it would be in order to move such an Amendment? He submitted that the Bill was confined to existing schools.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I do not like to give an opinion on an abstract question. It is for the Committee to judge whether the Bill deals only with existing schools or with schools that may be opened in the future. That is not a question of order. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. SAMUEL EVANS said no one dreamt when this Bill was introduced that the money was to be applied to schools that were not in existence, and he believed that Members would be perfectly astounded to hear the statements which had been made. [Cries of "No, no!"] Could anyone point to a single statement in the Measure which indicated in the slightest degree that the money would be used for the maintenance of schools not in existence at the present moment? He challenged the Member for West Ham, who had interrupted him, to point out a single statement in one of his speeches to this effect. They were told that the policy was to relieve 'the intolerable strain," but schools which did not exist could not suffer from "intolerable strain." The fact of the matter was, that the Government and those who supported them were absolutely insatiable. They had got their large majority—["hear, hear!"]—but that did not make what was wrong right. This policy was not before the country when they got their majority. Did anyone say that they were going to erect new schools for the Church of England out of public money? Lord Salisbury, who always spoke plainly, and he wished his example was followed in that House, said their duty was to capture Board Schools, but now they were going to destroy Board Schools. Say that a Board School existed in a village, a wealthy landowner would say, "I shall build a Voluntary School, because I know it will be paid for, and I want you to get rid of the Board School." Take the case of London, where the great majority of the children were educated in Board Schools. They made it possible to establish any number of schools, not primarily for education, but for educating children in the established Church. He wanted to ask the First Lord of the Treasury a very plain question. What was there to prevent an association saying "We are rich; we shall allocate the money for building grants?" [AN HON. MEMBER: "They can't!"] Well, they had a right to know. Supposing £2,000 was given to an association, £1,000 of that might be allocated to the building of new schools. He asked, could that be done?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: The grant can only be given to schools in existence at the time the grant was allocated. It cannot be given to future schools in that sense.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS asked if there was any power to prevent the £1,000 going as a building grant?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Of course there is.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS accepted that entirely. Perhaps words would be introduced to make it clear.

*SIR HENRY FOWLER said he did not see the President of the Local Government Board present; for, if he was, he thought he would regret his Bill of last year was not conducted as this Bill was being conducted so far as money was concerned. Last year the grant to rates was confined to existing schools. This year the grant was not to be confined to existing schools, but new schools were to share in it. A couple of days ago the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury had stated that the grants to Board Schools would be made with two limitations—namely, the limit of time and the limit of money. But this Bill, in dealing with the Voluntary Schools, contained no limit of either time or money. Passing from that point, he would say that the Debate had shown the justice of the complaint that had been made as to the order in which the clauses of the Bill had been placed. They were now granting this money, and when they proposed certain limits for the division of the grant the right hon. Gentleman met every suggestion by saying that under the machinery to be set up by the Bill such and such things could not be done. But there was not a word in the Bill to show what that machinery was to be. It was quite evident that it was the intention of the Government to place the money in the hands of the diocesan associations. That meant in the case of the Church of England, the Bishops; in that of the Church of Rome, the Cardinal Archbishop; and in that of the Wesleyans, the Wesleyan Conference. He objected to any one of those individuals or bodies having the control of this public money without being subject to limitations as to the manner in which it should be applied. He complained that the Government had throughout this Debate shown a disposition—he would not say to enter into a conspiracy of silence—but to refrain from replying to the arguments that were put forward by the Opposition.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said that he had already spoken.

*SIR H. FOWLER said that the right hon. Gentleman was the authority upon the matter—with him it was "sic volo sic jubeo"; but in a matter affecting every parish and every district throughout the kingdom the House of Commons had a right to expect that it would be fairly argued on both sides. ["Hear, hear!"] If the arguments of the Opposition were wrong, by all means let them be answered, and not met by the Government saying, "We have a big majority, and we do not care a brass farthing about what you say. We shall go into the Lobby and register our mandate, and it is by the result of the divisions that we are prepared to stand or fall." That might perhaps be regarded as a wise and a strong policy, but it would recoil upon its authors and in course of time upon the House of Commons itself. He was not sure that the right hon. Gentleman himself fully realised the operation this Bill would have upon the future Voluntary Schools. Was the Bill to be turned into a scheme for extending the Voluntary Schools at the public expense and not the Board Schools?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said that the right hon. Gentleman opposite seemed to think that the promoters of Voluntary Schools went about the country erecting them wherever they liked. A more absurd hypothesis he had never heard put forward. Under the Bill a school not yet completed, or, if built, not actually filled with children, could not get a single shilling of the grant. Moreover, under the existing law, a Voluntary School could not be built or recognised in any district where there was not a deficiency of school accommodation. The idea that Voluntary Schools could spring up in districts where Board Schools existed was preposterous, and was founded on ignorance. The suggestion that the managers of Board Schools were going to spend a large capital sum in building in order to obtain the grant was entirely illusory.

*SIR H. FOWLER said that the new Voluntary Schools might be created by the utilisation of the existing Sunday schools, and then there need be no building grant whatever.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said that he could assure the right hon. Gentleman that when he saw the Government Board Schools Bill, which he hoped would be soon, he would find that the two Bills were absolutely alike, and that, as this Bill dealt with the Voluntary Schools, the other Bill would deal with the poor Board Schools.

MR. MUNDELLA: With all Board Schools?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said that it would deal with poor Board Schools to be called into existence in the future, as well as with Board Schools which were now in existence. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. MCKENNA said that he considered that the Bill would offer a bribe of £25 per hundred children for the creation of Voluntary Schools as opposed to Board Schools.

*MR. J. A. PEASE said that the First Lord had not referred in his reply to the effect which would be produced in those districts where a transfer could be easily arranged from a Board School management to private management. The matter was one of great importance, and unless the Amendment were accepted, they would promote educational retrogression, for in many places in the north of England the colliery owners had handed over their schools to the School Board in order to promote the interests of education. He thought that the Bill would induce the colliery owners to allow their schools to be handed over to private management in order to obtain the larger grant.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS said that this Debate had thrown a new and a strong light on the intentions of the promoters of the Bill. This Measure had been avowedly brought in for the maintenance of the Voluntary Schools, but now it had been shown to be a Bill for their extension. The new Voluntary Schools would very soon become necessitous, and would be making an appeal for their share of the grant, and so the anomalies of the system would be indefinitely extended.

*Mr. CHANNING said that this was a matter of the gravest importance to the education of the country, and ought to be discussed on its merits. [At this point the Vice President of the Council rose from his seat.] He would ask the Vice President of the Council not to leave the House. ["Hear, hear!"] It was a public scandal that when a question of the gravest importance as to the details of the administration of the Education Department was raised—a question in which the First Lord of the Treasury, as he would himself admit, was not versed —the Committee did not receive any advice or aid from the Minister for Education—[cheers]—especially after the grave statements made by his right hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, whose weight and authority on questions of details of educational administration could not be questioned. His right hon. Friend was supported by his hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, whose position in connection with the Teachers' Union also gave him great authority in the matter. It was stated that Sunday Schools and other unsuitable buildings would be placed on the grant list. These were administrative questions of first-class importance, and the Committee had the right to demand to have some light thrown upon them by the Minister for Education. The second Sub-section of the Bill said:—"The aid grant shall be distributed by the Education Department to such Voluntary Schools and in such manner and amounts as the Department think best for the purpose of helping necessitous schools and increasing their efficiency." He would ask whether those words did not give a basis and foothold to the Education Department to deal with some of the cases to which his right hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield and his hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham had referred? ["Hear, hear!"] Suppose the managers of a Voluntary School wished to add a class-room, the words of the Bill did not afford any check against such an application of the money; and moreover, according to the wording of the Bill, even the question of auditing was left permissive. The Committee ought to have some further assurance from the Minister who had to interpret the Statute for the work of his Department as to whether the words in the Bill would not permit an association to enlarge existing Voluntary Schools or create new accommodation. ["Hear, hear!"] This Amendment had brought a really vital issue before the House. It was simply a scandal that the money of the country should be voted, not for the relief of necessitous schools or for the provision of education where it was not provided now, but to enable the denominational system to be extended throughout the land. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. HERBERT LEWIS said that the right hon. Gentleman had stated in reply to his hon. Friend that where there was sufficient accommodation in a parish a Voluntary School would not be started. He knew that schools had been started even where there was sufficient accommodation. Such schools had been maintained privately for a year or two, and had received grants, and in those circumstances the statement of the right hon. Gentleman ought not to be accepted without qualification, and that qualification had a most important bearing on the Amendment before the Committee, because, as a matter of fact, what would follow if the Amendment was rejected? Diocesan associations all over the country would clearly have great power placed in their hands. It was possible they would not be able to give a building grant for starting a Voluntary School, but there were other ways in which they would be able to aid these schools if started afresh. ["Hear, hear!"] Unfortunately in the future these associations would have very considerable discretion with regard to the disposal of the money, and would be able to favour certain schools to the exclusion of others. It would be the policy of these associations to start new Voluntary Schools as far as the law and the Education Department would allow them to do so. ["Hear, hear!"] This was a question of considerable importance to Wales, because there the proportion of Nonconformists to the general population was very large, and if these associations were given the power to carry out the policy which this Bill evidently aimed at, it would largely increase the number of Voluntary Schools. He did not know whether the hon. Member for West Ham had anything to say on this question, but he should think it would operate very prejudicially to the teachers, and on their account as well as on the ground of the insufficiency of the instruction given in Voluntary Schools, he hoped the Amendment would be carried. ["Hear, hear!"]

Question put, "That the words 'in existence at the passing of this Act' be there inserted."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 88; Noes, 127.—(Division List, No. 56.)

On the return of the CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, after the usual interval,

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH moved after the word "schools," to insert the words "situate in School Board districts." He said the last Amendment he moved had reference to a time limit; the present Amendment was a space limit, confining the grant to Voluntary Schools situated in School Board areas. He supported the Amendment by two reasons. The first was that in these School Board areas there was, no doubt, some kind of competition between the Board School in receipt of rates on the one hand, and the Voluntary School which depended to some extent on subscriptions on the other. In so far as that competition told upon the education given in the Voluntary School, and in so far as it might be necessary to supplement the subscriptions which the Voluntary School got, he quite admitted there was something to be said for allowing that school something from Government grant. But where there was no competition, where the Voluntary School was in possession of the field, those were a set of circumstances which did not justify the Government in going out of its way to assist the Voluntary School. He might also add that in those cases where the Voluntary School had no competition to fear and no particular standard up to which to live, the Voluntary subscriber ought to subscribe something for being allowed to monopolise the education of the district in which he lived. The second reason for the Amendment was this. He understood the Bill was introduced to relieve a certain alleged intolerable strain which fell upon somebody or other. The somebody or other, so far as he could find out, was supposed to be the man who lived in a School Board district and paid rates to the School Board, and also paid a voluntary subscription to the Voluntary School. He proposed to limit the grant to those cases where there was this intolerable strain. That was the object of his Amendment. At the Church House Conference, which he took to be a reflection of the diocesan conscience on education, a great point was made of the fact that in the districts to which he had alluded there was this intolerable strain he had tried to define, and he, adopting this opinion, expressed on the authority of high ecclesiastical dignitaries, proposed to relieve that strain, but where there was no such strain the relief would not apply. He, therefore, hoped that the Attorney General, who, for the time was in charge of the Bill, would look with a conciliatory spirit on the Amendment.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir RICHARD WEBSTER, Isle of Wight) said with every wish to conciliate the hon. Member, it was impossible for him to accept the Amendment. In the first place, to do so would reduce the amount of the grant by one-half. Speaking roughly, he believed that half the Voluntary Schools were in School Board districts and half were in distrcts where there were no Board Schools, and that fact he hoped hon. Members would remember in reference to certain other Amendments not altogether consistent with the present one. In the first place then the Amendment would reduce the grant by one-half. Then the hon. Member had put a construction on the expression "intolerable strain" which he would not for a moment say did not apply in certain places and under certain circumstances, but it was not the ordinary meaning attached to it. The "intolerable strain" was this: that having regard to the demands to keep up educational efficiency, and having regard to the growing, he was glad to say the ever growing request for better education, it was impossible for Voluntary Schools to keep pace with the proper demands of the Education Department. That was the intolerable strain under which Voluntary Schools suffered, and, although undoubtedly it was a hardship to many ratepayers to support their own schools as well as Board Schools, that was not the "intolerable strain" understood as necessitating the grant. But he did not deny that the hon. Member was entitled to take that view. In many rural districts Voluntary Schools had maintained the whole burden of education, and maintained it notwithstanding depressed times, from the wish to have education coupled with religion, and this connection he hoped would never disappear, whatever might be the view of hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite. Those who wished to have education coupled with religion had made an effort to keep education going without the necessity for establishing School Boards. In such districts the strain had been severely felt, where from the very proper demands for improved buildings, better equipment of schools, and better teaching, it had been very difficult for school managers to meet requirements, having regard to the fact that there were no rates to fall back upon. He hoped the hon. Member would not think he was treating his proposal with disrespect if he said, on the ground that it would reduce the grant by one half and prevent assistance being given where it was most needed, it was impossible to accept the Amendment.

Mr. BUXTON said the Attorney General described the strain as great on Voluntary Schools, because they had to spend larger sums on education than they spent a few years ago, and that was perfectly true. But on the other hand, the hon. and learned Gentleman had forgotten that the schools had far larger resources to meet that strain than they had a few years ago. Of course, all would recognise, in fact, the Bill was founded on the recognition, that there was considerable strain, an intolerable strain the First Lord of the Treasury had called it, on managers of schools, but the Attorney General, in giving a definition of that strain, must have forgotten that during the discussions of last year's Bill the Government stated that the schools where the greatest strain was felt were those in districts where the rates were high and subscriptions were high, and in the small rural schools. The first mentioned class of schools this Amendment was designed to meet. The Bill as it stood was in no sense of the term intended to relieve the rates, so that part of the strain would remain, and as regarded high subscriptions, which were mostly high where the school rate was high, they, under the Bill, would receive less proportion of relief than they would under existing conditions. Then, as had been pointed out, in small rural schools, where relief was most needed, less in proportion would be received than in urban schools.

Sir W. HART DYKE (Kent, Dartford) said pro rata that was not so. The gross sum allocated might be larger in towns than in the country, but no rural schools under the Bill would be injured in the distribution of the grant as compared with a town school.

Mr. BUXTON said no doubt the right hon. Gentleman had some knowledge of the intention, no doubt he was consulted in reference to the Bill.

Sir W. HART DYKE said he was not.

Mr. BUXTON was glad to hear the right hon. Gentleman say so, as the First Lord of the Treasury distinctly said that the greater relief would go to urban schools.

Sir W. HART DYKE said the sum would be larger.

Mr. BUXTON said his point was that the real strain was in the rural districts, and there the School Boards would receive nothing and the Voluntary Schools would receive less than those schools would in urban districts. So far as the Amendment was concerned, this point was raised because it was asserted by the Conference, to which reference had been made—the Conference in which the Archbishop, the bishops, and clergy took part—and it had been asserted in all quarters that when there were School Boards the pressure was greater. Take as an illustration the position of a subscriber in London, and compare it with the position of a subscriber in a Lancashire borough, where there was no School Board, the subscriber in London would have to pay a rate of something like 11d. or 1s. in the £, and besides his average subscription would be something like 10s. per child, while his colleague in Lancashire, where there was no School Board or School Board rate, would only pay, as was the case in Preston, something like 1s. 6d. per head. So then, under the Bill, the relief given would be most unequal, and the purpose of the Amendment was to equalise matters. There was also this point to consider. One suggestion made at the Conference by the representatives of the so-called Voluntary system was that if they obtained relief from the rates they would be content that the aid grant should be equal to Board and Voluntary Schools.

SIR FRANCIS POWELL (Wigan) dissented.

MR. BUXTON said the Conference unanimously passed a Resolution that if the Voluntary system received aid from the rates for Voluntary Schools they would be quite content that some substantial part in aid should be given to Board Schools.

SIR FRANCIS POWELL said that was carried by a majority.

MR. BUXTON said at all events the majority of the representatives of the voluntary system came to that conclusion. But he did not want to put too much weight on their recommendation, the Amendment was proposed on the ground that the burden was heaviest, and in fact only intolerable in cases where the rates were high, and where, in consequence of competition, subscriptions were also high. It was not right or just that in those places in which the School Board rate had been evaded, by very often continuing schools which, in no sense of the term, could be called efficient, that in those places where the strain was slight the greatest relief should be given, and those places where the strain was heaviest should receive less in proportion.

MR. HENRY BROADHURST (Leicester) said the Attorney General had used the best argument that could be conceived in support of the Amendment, when he said that if the proposal were carried it would have the effect of reducing the proposed Treasury grant by half the sum contemplated in the Bill. That should commend itself to the First Lord of the Treasury who, in replying on the case of necessitous Board Schools said, among other things, there was a difficulty about the money, and that he could not pledge the Chancellor of the Exchequer to find the money. There were some schools, the Attorney General admitted, which were more necessitous than others. Very well; let them use the money where it was wanted, and not for the sake of the dead level of uniformity throw it about where it was not wanted. The hon. Member for Anglesey had come to the rescue of the Government, and had offered them a way out of their financial difficulties. Those who followed closely the proceedings of the Convention would remember that the arguments for increased assistance to Voluntary Schools had been based from the very commencement of this agitation upon the competition of Voluntary Schools with the Board School districts, and the intolerable strain upon the so-called Voluntary Schools caused by their competition with the Board Schools. Hon. Members on his side of the House were not unprepared to admit that Voluntary Schools were imposing upon themselves great difficulties and contending against great competition. But that was their own fault, and they could have joined the Board Schools if they had thought proper, and thus have done away with the competition of the two systems. He wished the First Lord of the Treasury had been present, because he thought the right hon. Gentleman with his philosophical knowledge and power of mind would have seen that this Amendment was really an opportunity for him to serve two purposes at one time. He did think the arguments in suport of the Amendment were quite unanswerable, and if it were not accepted it would not be because it was not founded on reason and justice, but because of the stubborn determination of the Government not to improve their own Measure when they had the opportunity of doing so with the assistance of their political opponents.

MR. MCKENNA observed that the First Lord of the Treasury in the Second Reading Debate admitted that this Bill acted unequally locally. Taking that admission, they had before them an Amendment calculated to reduce that unequal local action of which the right hon. Gentleman spoke.

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL (Sir ROBERT FINLAY, Inverness Burghs): It would increase it.

MR. MCKENNA could prove to the hon. and learned Gentleman that it would decrease it. What were the facts with regard to their educational system? Prior to 1870 there were 1,800,000 children in Voluntary Schools. That was to say, in half the school districts there were then in existence Voluntary Schools sufficient to supply school accommodation for the children; consequently all the buildings and all the grants, whether from Parliament or private sources, had been supplied prior to 1870. The result of that was that in the Voluntary School districts at the present day where there was no School Board, the Act of 1870, instead of adding a new burden had been an exoneration, for those schools had received a Parliamentary grant which they had not received before. The Act of 1870, so far as the pure Voluntary School districts were concerned, had been a Measure which had given an enormously increased Parliamentary grant to those districts, and the Act of 1876 still further increased it. They had consequently the position that in pure Voluntary School districts in which there was no School Board the effect of the Act of 1870 had been one of relief which had been increased by the Act of 1870. As a contrast to that, they found in the pure Board School districts the inhabitants had had to supply not only the maintenance of the schools, but the whole buildings and any expenditure necessary beyond the grants, so that if they gave to the pure Voluntary School districts an increased grant of 5s. per child they would be giving to those very districts which were the best off an increased grant which had been refused to the Board School districts. It was said that the increased grant was necessitated by the increased strain on the Voluntary Schools owing to the demands of the Education Department. Hitherto the strain had been met by increased voluntary subscriptions. These, since 1876, when the Parliamentary grant was last increased, had increased 1s. per child, which represented the measure of the increased demands of the Department. Unless the Amendment was accepted the Committee would give 5s. per child in respect of the increased strain of 1s. in districts where there was no School Board rate, and where since 1870 the strain had been least. He appealed to the Attorney General to accept the Amendment.

Mr. LOUGH said he represented a School Board district, and there, he admitted, the Voluntary Schools needed some assistance. [Ministerial cries of "Hear, hear!"] The basis of the Bill was that in School Board districts the schools had the benefit of the "bottomless purse" of the ratepayers. In districts where the bottomless purse was available the Voluntary Schools were to have 5s. per head. The Bill was a mean scramble for money, because it was said that, if the Amendment were accepted, the money Voluntary Schools would get would be cut down half. Every Amendment was rejected on the ground that it would deprive the Voluntary Schools of money. He contended that there was no foundation for the argument that if the Amendment were adopted the amount to be given under the Bill would be reduced by half. Most of the money to be given under the Bill was to be distributed in country districts where the strain from competition with Board Schools was least. Property owners in country districts saved money by keeping out Board Schools. If they had Board Schools they would have to pay ten times as much as at present.

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS did not agree with the learned Attorney General that the adoption of the Amendment would mean the cutting down of what the Voluntary Schools would receive by half. If parents in a district where competition between Board and Voluntary Schools was keen preferred sending their children to the latter while they also paid School Board rates, he admitted that it was a case of hardship. It was a hardship that they should have to maintain Voluntary Schools to which from conscientious motives they sent their children, and yet pay School Board rates. To such cases the Amendment would justly apply. But in many isolated districts in Wales Nonconformists had to send their children to denominational schools because they were the only schools available. It was said that education should mination, and those who were not adjected to its being coupled with the religion of a particular Church or denomination, and those who were not adherents of the latter having to support it.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE supported the Amendment, saying there were parishes in the county of Carnarvon where Church of England and Roman Catholics, besides maintaining their own schools, contributed to the maintenance of Board Schools. He was against subsidising sectarian teaching in any form, but there was a difference in a case of this kind. In another parish in the same county nine-tenths of the people were Nonconformists and there was no subscription towards the Church Schools. He contended that in the case first mentioned the Voluntary Schools were far more entitled to consideration than in parishes where the majority of the people were Nonconformists. He thought his hon. Friend had made out a case. His hon. Friend and himself were opposed to every form of sectarian endowment, but for the sake of argument they were bound to accept the principle of the Bill loyally. The House had unfortunately committed itself to the principle of giving a further endowment of 5s. per child to sectarian schools. There were two classes of schools, one which had certain merits, and the other which were practically privileged schools. In the latter case they had got their privileges, but they were not entitled to say that they must be further subsidised.

Question put, "That those words be there inserted."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 82; Noes, 237.—(Division List, No. 57.)

*MR. PERKS proposed, after the word "schools," to insert the words "in which no charge for school fees is made." He said that the object of the Amendment was to limit the new aid grant to schools which were really free. Most of them had seen at the last General Election—at which the Government alleged they had received a mandate to introduce this Bill—placards on the walls, asking, "Who gave you free education?" They knew perfectly well that nobody had, so far, given them free education. The Tory Party no doubt by the Act of 1891 gave it to a considerable extent, but there were many elementary schools, especially in towns, where free education was not at present given, and, therefore, the Tory Party, in claiming to have established free education, claimed the credit of giving a benefit to the working classes of the country which was wholly illusory. [Ministerial cries of "Oh!"] The object of the Amendment was to secure in England and Wales what was universal in Scotland. In that country there was not a single child attending an elementary school that did not receive his education perfectly free. But if in some of the towns of England and Wales children claimed free education they were, first of all, subjected to a most humiliating inquiry as to the pecuniary condition of their parents; and, after having passed through that ordeal, they were told that if they wanted free education they must avail themselves of the free places that were provided in some sectarian school utterly obnoxious to their parents. In such towns as Southport and Rugby, for instance, the children of Methodists, Congregationalists, and Baptists were told that if they wanted free education they must go to the free places in Roman Catholic schools. He did not wish to say a word against those schools, but they were not schools to which Nonconformists desired to send their children, any more than Roman Catholics wished to have their children educated in Nonconformist schools; and it was a monstrous thing that children should be compelled to go into those sectarian schools, if they claimed the right, given them in an illusory way by the Act of 1891, to have free education. The Amendment, if accepted, would not make anything like a serious demand on the schools of the Church of England. The overwhelming majority of those schools were at present absolutely free. In only about 18 per cent. of them was any charge made. It was, therefore, not too much to ask that the legislation of 1891 should be carried this one step further. The total amount at present received by the Church of England Voluntary Schools for fees and books was £162,553. The probable amount they would receive under the Bill was £461,000; so that, even if they were to make all their schools free, they would have a clear gain under the Bill of £300,000. The time would come when the change would have to be made. Was it possible that in large towns they could continue to have two classes of children in the elementary Voluntary Schools—one class paying fees and the other class not paying any? ["Hear, hear!"] The two systems could not work well together, and it produced a state of things that was not fair to the artisan class. ["Hear, hear!"] He wished to refer particularly to the cases of Rugby and Southport. In Rugby there was no School Board, and the Voluntary Schools there, which were fee-paying schools, had been, to a large extent built and maintained by contributions from the North Western Railway. A working man had written to him from that place stating that a large number of parents whose children used to go free to school (the St. Matthew National School) had recently had their children sent home, and that the children had been refused admission unless school pence were paid. "After correspondence with the Education Department," continued the writer, "we were at last told that if we wanted free education we were to send our children to St. Mark's Roman Catholic School, so we thought it best to wait and see what fortune would reveal itself." This Bill certainly revealed no better fortune to that man or to men of his class. If they wanted free education for their children in Rugby they must send them to the Roman Catholic School. Was that fair or just? ["Hear, hear!"] Then as to Southport, which was supposed to be an enlightened town, though he thought some doubt must be entertained on the point—[cries of "Oh, oh!" and laughter]—he had receved a letter from Mr. Taylor, the hon. secretary of the National Education Association at Southport, and he wished to read a portion of it to the Committee. Mr. Taylor wrote:—

> "The whole of Southport belongs to two or three persons, and they have inserted clauses in the deeds, when they have leased the land for Nonconformist Sunday Schools, prohibiting the use of most of them as day schools. The Roman Catholics and the Church of England have never suffered these restrictions, so that to-day nearly all our day schools are managed by the Sacerdotalists."

[Cries of "Oh, oh!" and "Question!"]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY rose to a point of order. Was the hon. Member in order in introducing the question of sacerdotalism on this Amendment? [Cheers.]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I think the hon. Member is pursuing the matter at an unnecessary length. I am sure he might state his case more concisely. ["Hear, hear!"]

*MR. PERKS said the writer of the letter now came to the point. [Laughter.] Mr. Taylor added:—

> "About 900 children recently applied for free places in these schools, and Sir George W. Kekewich told me recently that if any wealthy Catholic would provide sufficient free places to meet these demands, the law would require him to recognise these Catholic schools as suitable for all denominations. A Methodist preacher here actually has been compelled to send his child to a Catholic school. When the Education Department received applications for the 900 free places, the Southport School attendance officers went round to verify them, and ordered all parents to apply to the clerical school managers. About 200 did so, and they were asked impertinent questions as to their income and their ability to pay school fees, and after submitting to these humiliations free places were provided. But this deterred the other 700 applicants, and they refused to wait upon the clergy, so they have not got free places, and never will, for they refuse to go and ask as a favour what the law declares is a right. You will readily see that free education for those 700 children is now practically impossible. They will not comply with Sir John Gorst's interpretation of the law, and the local school managers will only deal with those parents who submit to make special application to them."

["Hear, hear!"] He thought he had shown that no great sacrifice would be required on the part of the Church of England to offer free education in every school under their control. One of the objections taken to this course was that parents wished to pay some fees, that they would rather pay fees than not. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.] He attached little importance to that objection, but he believed the parents could contribute and would contribute in the form of subscriptions if they were not called upon to pay fees. ["Hear, hear!"] And the great advantage of this would be that the parents, as subscribers, could have some share in the management of the schools. ["Hear, hear!"] The object of the Amendment was to make real what was at present illusory, and to afford children, under the protection of the clause, free education from one end of the kingdom to the other. He hoped, therefore, the Government would regard the Amendment with favourable consideration. ["Hear, hear!"]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said the hon. Member could hardly have anticipated that the Government would favourably receive the Amendment he had placed on the Paper. He would first remind the hon. Gentleman that it was hardly germane to the purpose of the Bill to make it a lever, or an instrument of torture, as it were, to compel managers of schools to do that which, under the existing law, they were not obliged to do with regard to charging fees. ["Hear, hear!"] In the second place, he would remind the hon. Member that it was undoubtedly the fact—and experience had proved it, not only in England, but in Scotland also—that there were parents who preferred to send their children to a fee-paying school rather than to a non-fee-paying school, and it would be acting very arbitrarily to make that impossible of attainment. ["Hear, hear!"] The effect of the Amendment would be to reduce the total amount given to Voluntary Schools. It might or might not be right to introduce provisions making free education universal and compulsory; but, if that were to be done—and he thought it ought not to be done—the place to do it was not where it would have the effect of arbitrarily limiting the total amount of relief for necessitous Voluntary Schools. Was the hon. Member really serious in representing the charging of fees as a discredit to the managers who did it? The whole of the hon. Member's speech was framed on the hypothesis that the managers who charged fees committed something like a crime against education. The hon. Member himself belonged to a great religious communion—the Wesleyans—in whose schools fees were almost universally charged. [Cheers.] The result of the Amendment would be to exclude from any benefit of the grant the majority of the schools of the communion to which the hon. Member belonged. [Cheers.] That was not a reason why the hon. Member should not press the Amendment; indeed, it showed that he was extremely disinterested. [Opposition cheers.] But it also showed, as the hon. Member would admit, that those who were most zealous for education, and most anxious for the benefit of the children and of the parents, thought it not inconsistent with those principles to charge fees. [Cheers.]

MR. ACLAND said that his hon. Friend had a perfectly reasonable desire—namely, that the Free Education Act should be made more of a reality. When Parliament was asked to vote more money to any class of schools it was only right to consider whether free education was really as fully available as it ought to be.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Order, order! The right hon. Gentleman cannot go into the question of whether free education is in full force or not. The only purpose I had in admitting this Amendment was that I thought the hon. Member wished to limit the grant.

MR. ACLAND submitted that he was only following the hon. Member for Louth.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I listened to the hon. Member to gather his reasons for introducing the subject of free education. [Laughter.] Having heard them, I am clearly of opinion that it cannot be further gone into.

MR. ACLAND said that the question was whether the grant ought to be allowed to schools in which free education was not given. The free places available in schools were not nearly as numerous as was supposed, and there was no doubt that many fee-paying scholars were such not by their choice. The present head of the Education Department could testify—if he would testify to anything—that this was so. His experience told him that there was reasonable foundation for making this grant dependent on the number of non-fee-paying scholars.

MR. BUXTON pointed out that the Amendment, by excluding from the grant all schools where fees were received, would lay down a definition of what Parliament considered to be a necessitous school. The Amendment would not really be a lever for abolishing fees. This was the first opportunity the Government had had of showing what they really meant by necessitous schools.

MR. GRAY said the hon. Gentleman had altogether overlooked the fact that the clause under discussion fixed the aggregate amount to be paid to Voluntary Schools, and that if the Amendment were adopted the effect would be that the sum which might be distributed amongst necessitous schools would be reduced. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. BUXTON said they did not in any sense by this Amendment propose to limit the amount.

Mr. GRAY held very strongly that this was an attempt to diminish the amount that should be rendered available for the necessitous Voluntary Schools, and that it would have, as the hon. Gentleman himself had shown, no influence whatever on the schools which were now charging fees. He was convinced that in many districts the parents desired a continuance of the fee system. The Education Department had power to not only sanction a continuance of fees, but to actually sanction an increase of fees for the benefit of a particular district, and many of those schools, necessitous as they were in spite of the fees, gave a higher education, employed a better class of teachers, and—

The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS said the hon. Gentleman was in order in dealing with the question of the limitation of the amount, but not in going into the general question of free education.

Mr. GRAY said he might, perhaps, be allowed to add that if the proposed treatment were meted out to Voluntary Schools it ought also to be meted out to Board Schools. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. CHANNING thought the Amendment had hardly met with the full consideration it deserved. Take the case of Lancashire. Under the Bill about £115,000 would go to Lancashire, yet what were the facts concerning that county? In the case of Church of England schools in the principal towns the average amount of school fees, including the charges for books, was 4s. 2¾d., in certain towns the amounts were 6s. 1d., 5s. 1d., 6s. 6d., 6s. 5d., 6s. 7d., and so on. At the same time the Lancashire Voluntary Schools received a very small subscription. What the Amendment really proposed was that there should be an honest attempt on the part of the managers of Voluntary Schools to meet the grant given by the State to enable them to carry on their schools, by some reasonable sacrifice of their own.

Sir JOHN BRUNNER (Cheshire, Northwich) regretted that, owing to the Chairman's ruling, the Opposition were unable to enforce their argument by pointing out that the operation of the present law was forcing Protestant children into Roman Catholic schools. If they could not enforce this argument here they should elsewhere. It was a very common argument on the other side that they ought to have freedom of choice in order that children might be brought up in the religion to which they and their parents were attached. He approved of this Amendment in the main because, if adopted, it would be a declaration that the relief should go rather to those who could least afford to pay the money, than to those who could best afford. They proposed by the Bill to give relief to the subscribers and not relief to the poor.

Mr. CHARLES SEELY (Lincoln) appealed to the hon. Member who moved this Amendment to withdraw it. He expressed his sympathy with the object aimed at.

Mr. LLOYD-GEORGE said the hon. Member had, on a previous occasion, expressed his sympathy, but voted in the other Lobby. He hoped he was not going to repeat that to-night. The Bill was not so badly draughted as the hon. Member for West Ham seemed to suppose. They were told that there would be absolutely no inducement if they passed this Amendment—that they would not punish the rich schools, they would punish the poor schools, but there was a very substantial and practical inducement. What would happen? Suppose a school, where a fee of 2d. or 3d. was charged, the association would bring pressure on the manager to reduce the amount of the fees and make it a free school altogether. If they took the schools of Liverpool, why should 5s. be paid if—

*MR. SYDNEY GEDGE (Walsall) rose to a point of order. He said the subject was the total amount to be paid to Voluntary Schools generally, but the hon. Member was speaking about its distribution to particular schools.

THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said, as he understood the Amendment, it raised a very simple and small question, and he had endeavoured to keep the discussion to it.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE said what he was pointing out was that the schools which charged expensive fees would get less than 5s. per child, and no doubt the Member for Walsall, who would be an influential member of the Diocesan Association, would point out that they were losing £200 or £300 a year because the school managers charged 6d. or 9d. in fees. He had no doubt that the eloquence of the hon. Member would have its effect on his clerical friends, who would stop the fees and thus add £200 or £300 to the Diocesan Association. [MR. GEDGE dissented.] He regretted the interposition of the hon. Member for Walsall as it rather tended to prolong his remarks. In one school that he knew of in Liverpool there were 793 children, and he found that the fees paid by children amounted to 25s. per head per annum. That was a school in one of what were called the respectable districts of Liverpool, in which it was expected that the respectable children were not to mix up with the poorer children. If this money was intended to be granted for the maintenance of necessitous schools, why was it to be applied in order to keep up class distinction. The fact was, that the argument of the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury was strongly in favour of the Amendment. He might refer to another Liverpool school, in which the fees paid amounted to 37s. per head per annum of the children. The fact was, that these schools which were for the benefit of the middle classes, were not elementary schools at all; they were really secondary education schools, and they ought to have the benefit of a grant that was intended for necessitous elementary schools only. If schools intended for a select class only were to participate in the grant, the money would be applied, not for the relief of necessitous schools, but for the relief of the subscribers to the better class schools. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. SAMUEL EVANS said that in view of the ruling of the Chairman, he would like to put a question to the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council for Education, as to whether the members of free schools and of the scholars belonging to the Voluntary School class were increasing or diminishing. He directed the right hon. Gentleman's attention to certain statements which were set forth in page 44 of the introduction to the Report of the Committee of Council for Education. Those figures showed that there was not a very strong desire on the part of the parents that their children should attend Voluntary Schools. He should like to ask the right hon. Gentleman by how much the grant would be limited if this Amendment were carried. How was it that according to the last Return the total number of children attending fee schools was 4,340,000, as against 4,519,000 attending the free schools. He could assure the right hon. Gentleman that if he had been able to get at the bottom of the question he was now putting to him for himself, he should have done so, but he had not the time to get up the subject that the right hon. Gentleman had. He hoped that he had put the question as clearly as he could. Then with regard to the Amendment. [Ironical cheers and laughter.] He hoped that he was making himself understood. It might be that if the Amendment were carried the grant might be distributed among a smaller number of schools. He submitted that the Committee were not necessarily bound by the words of the Amendment as it stood, and the £620,000 might still be allotted in respect of scholars, the division taking place amongst a smaller number of schools. If that were so, he would have much more pleasure in supporting the clause, because everything that tended to uniformity in Elementary Educational matters was a good thing and anything which operated indirectly on the managers of Voluntary Schools to compel them to put in force the Free Education Act of 1891 would have his cordial approval. He hoped the right hon. Gentleman would give the Committee an explanation of the extraordinary figures to which he had referred, and so enable the Committee to say what was the limitation that would take place if the Amendment were adopted. ["Hear, hear!"]

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir J. GORST, Cambridge University), who was received with ironical Opposition cheers, said that one figure quoted by the hon. and learned Member referred to average attendance, and the other to the number of free scholars upon the books. The number of free scholars on the books was, of course greater than the average attendance. [Laughter.]

MR. H. J. WILSON (York, W.R., Holmfirth) thought the Committee were entitled to an exposition of the views of the Government on the question before the Committee. He remembered in the year 1891 being in Dorsetshire when a bye-election was going on, and the following lines were placarded about the constituency:—

"Remember, remember the month of November,
  There have been no school fees to pay.
Good Mr. Goschen has brought in his Motion—"

[Cries of "Question."]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: The hon. Member is not saying anything relevant to the Question. [Ministerial cheers.]

MR. H. J. WILSON said he wanted to know whether the Government were frankly in favour of the free school system or not.

Mr. Samuel Evans.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I have ruled two or three times that that subject cannot be entertained.

MR. LOUGH said he thought the Vice President might have given a little more satisfactory reply to the very reasonable question put by his hon. and learned Friend. The First Lord of the Treasury said he objected to the Amendment because it would reduce the amount the Voluntary Schools would get. The Opposition wanted to know by how much, that was to say, they wanted to know the number of free scholars in Voluntary Schools. ["Hear, hear!"] His own point was that it would be much better if less cant was talked on the other side of the House. [Cheers and "Question!"]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I must ask the hon. Member to address himself to the Question.

MR. LOUGH said he was doing so. The Chairman had laid down that the effect of the Amendment would be to reduce the amount given to Voluntary Schools, and it was urged on the other side that it would be a crime so to reduce the amount. That, he considered, was only cant. ["Hear, hear!"] Just as much good might be done with £500,000 properly applied, as with £620,000 given in a lavish manner. He contended that if the effect of the Amendment would be to reduce the amount, that was a reason for its acceptance. But that was not the only point. The hon. Member for West Ham said that the parents preferred to pay fees.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said that he had been compelled to interrupt the hon. Member for West Ham. It was not in order for hon. Members to discuss the general question of free education.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY rose in his place, and claimed to move, "That the Question be now put."

Question put, "That the Question be now put."

The Committee divided: Ayes, 273; Noes, 105.—(Division List, No. 58.)

Question put accordingly, "That those words be there inserted."—The Committee divided:—Ayes, 102; Noes, 276.—(Division List, No. 59.)

MR. LEWIS wished to move to leave out the words, "in the aggregate." He said he could not quite understand why the words appeared in the clause, and it appeared to him they were totally unnecessary.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE rose to order. He did not quite understand that the Chairman had ruled out of order the proposal to omit the word "annually." He desired to omit the word, not that he objected to the annual grant, but in order that he might move a proviso to provide that payments should be made quarterly.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS ruled that the word "annually" must remain as applying to the Parliamentary aid grant. Such grants could not be made quarterly. There was nothing to prevent the proposal of a proviso that payments out of the grant should be made quarterly.

MR. CHANNING desired to know if the Amendment of the hon. Member for Anglesey would be in order to insert the words, "in the year ending the thirty-first day of March, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight."

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS repeated what he had said at the beginning of the sitting, that any limitation of the duration of the Act must be proposed in a new clause.

VISCOUNT CRANBORNE said that before the Amendment was moved he desired to ask a Question as to the exact meaning of the words, "not exceeding in the aggregate." A great deal of misapprehension had been felt in the country owing to the use of these words, and, in order that the Government might have an opportunity of giving some explanation of their meaning, he would move their omission in order to insert the words "equal to." Some persons had fancied that a sinister purpose lay behind the words "not exceeding in the aggregate" 5s.—though he did not share that view—and that the intention of leaving the matter open, as it were, might possibly be to enable the Government or their successors to give something less than the 5s. per child. He understood that this was a mere use of a formula, but it would reassure a great number of persons interested if they could have an assurance from the Government that there was no such intention as had been suggested lying behind these innocent words. He begged to move the Amendment.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY could assure the noble Lord that the words had been introduced in accordance with a time-honoured Parliamentary custom, by which, in all cases where annual grants were made, the phrase was used that the amount should be one "not exceeding" a specified sum. Of course, it was not meant that a less sum should be given. ["Hear, hear!"] The intention was precisely that which would be carried out by the introduction of the words the insertion of which the noble Lord had moved, and in adopting the words in the Bill the Government had been guided by Parliamentary precedents. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. McKENNA looked upon the words, the omission of which the noble Lord had moved, as one of the possibly slightly redeeming features of the Bill. As he understood it, "not exceeding" meant that Parliament might provide in any year for a less amount, having regard to the fact that the distribution of the money was only to be to necessitous schools. If, therefore, by some public spirited persons large sums of money were granted to Voluntary Schools, whereby they could be relieved of their necessity, as he read the Bill there would be no duty upon Parliament to continue to provide this extra 5s. grant to Voluntary Schools which, under these circumstances, could no longer be considered necessitous. He should be very much obliged if the First Lord of the Treasury could assure him, in spite of his last observations, that these words, "not exceeding" did not bind Parliament in every year to provide this sum of money. In the event of the necessity not continuing, and of no such thing existing as a necessitous Voluntary School, there would be no occasion for the expenditure of money; therefore, there would be equally no necessity for Parliament to provide it.

Mr. DILLON thought there was great force in the noble Lord's point. The words in the ordinary Estimates, which he understood the First Lord of the Treasury had referred to, set forth that a sum not exceeding such an amount should be granted. But in such instances very frequently surpluses were returned to the Treasury by surrender. The point in regard to the Estimates was, that the Minister in charge of the spending department had not to exceed the sum mentioned therein; but he might, and frequently did, spend less. But this was a totally different case. The object of the present Bill was to secure for Voluntary Schools that the full sum of 5s. per head should be given apart altogether from the question of whether it was wanted or not. [Opposition cheers.] He was stating the case from the point of view of the Voluntary Schools. He himself considered the sum of 10s. would be wanted every year, and they wanted to make sure that this five shillings was the minimum. He believed the words to which the noble Lord had called attention would not prevent a subsequent Administration saying, "We do not want 5s., we shall give less," and surrendering the balance to the Treasury. He thought it ought to be made perfectly clear that no such thing was contemplated by the Government.

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS considered that an answer should be given to the two hon. Members who had last spoken. It was one thing to have the words in an Act of Parliament and another to have the words "not exceeding" in an Estimate. In the latter case, as the hon. Member for Mayo had pointed out, Parliament did not know how much was going to be spent, and it was stated that the sum should be one "not exceeding" such and such an amount, and if it was desired to spend more Parliament had to be asked for a Supplementary Estimate. He regarded the words as meaning in plain English the maximum sum of 5s. The words should be dealt with in just the same way as words in any other Bill. He invited the Law Officers to say whether, if the words remained, there would be any obligation on the Education Department to pay the full sum of 5s.

Mr. BARTLEY argued that the words as they stood were quite correct. The whole object of the Bill was to secure efficiency, and if in a certain school the education was not satisfactory the full grant would not be paid.

Mr. DILLON pointed out that money withdrawn from any school which did not deserve the grant would not be surrendered to the Exchequer, but would be redistributed among the associated schools.

Mr. BARTLEY said he still believed he was right. [Laughter.] An associated school would not get more than 5s. under any circumstances, and if a certain school was not efficient the sum withdrawn would surely not be handed over to an association to which that school did not belong.

Mr. DILLON said the hon. Member evidently had not studied the Bill, and was wrong in all his points. [Laughter.] He repeated that money withheld from any associated school would be redistributed.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY assured hon. Members that their fears were groundless.

Mr. DILLON said the country associations got less.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY said the hon. Member appeared to think there would be pure country associations. Any residue would go back, not to the Treasury, but to the other schools, and therefore the whole amount would be distributed. Nothing in the Bill could compel the House of Commons to vote the money, and of course he had never suggested so unconstitutional a course. But if the money was voted, the fear that it would be kept back from the schools by the Education Department was perfectly illusory.

Mr. McKENNA said the right hon. Gentleman said the money would be paid to the associations, but that was not so under the Bill. The money was to be allotted, not paid, to them. The money was to be distributed by the Education Department, but only to necessitous schools.

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS said the Solicitor General was present, and he really must press for an answer from him.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: I have answered on his behalf.

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS said the right hon. Gentleman had not really answered the question. The hon. Member for Islington had said that the Education Department might keep back from any one school the proportion to which that school would be entitled if the school was not efficient. He saw nothing in the Bill which enabled any portion of the grant to be kept back in respect of any particular school because the education in that school was not efficient.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL said the words had been introduced in accordance with the usual form. The provision made for disposing of the sum showed that the intention was that the aggregate amount of the grant should be 5s. per child in all cases.

Mr. EVANS objected to the Amendment being withdrawn, as he wished to know first whether these words compelled the Education Department to give 5s. for the number of children in average attendance.

Viscount CRANBORNE said he was of course quite satisfied with the explanation the Government had given, and had only raised the question to get a public explanation. He asked leave to withdraw the Amendment.

Question, "That the words 'not exceeding' stand part of the Clause," put and agreed to.

And, it being midnight, the Chairman left the Chair to make his Report to the House.

Committee report Progress; to sit again to-morrow.

MILITARY WORKS (MONEY) BILL.

Committee deferred till to-morrow.

SUPPLY [26th FEBRUARY].

Resolutions reported.

NAVY (SUPPLEMENTARY) ESTIMATES, 1896-7.

1. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £507,000 be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for additional Expenditure on the following Navy Services, viz:—

	£
Vote 8. Shipbuilding, Repairs, Maintenance, &c. Sec. 2 Materiel	386,900
Vote 9. Naval Armaments ...	120,000
Vote 10. Works, Buildings, and Repairs at Home and Abroad	100
Total	£507,000

2. "That a sum, not exceeding £5,775 13s., be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for repayment to Naval Funds of certain Excess Expenditure on Contract Vessels, under the Naval Defence Act, 1889."

CIVIL SERVICES AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS (SUPPLEMENTARY) ESTIMATES, 1896-7.

Class I.

3. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £7,000, be garnted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, in respect of sundry Public Buildings in Great Britain, not provided for on other Votes."

CLASS II.

4. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £1,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Expenses of Telegrams of the Department of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies."

5. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £40, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Salaries and Expenses of the Mint, including the Expenses of Coinage."

6. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £25,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for Stationery, Printing, Paper, Binding, and Printed Books, &c., for the Public Service."

7. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £80, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Expenses of the Board of Lunacy in Scotland."

CLASS III.

8. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £17,500, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Expenses of the Department of the Solicitor for the Affairs of Her Majesty's Treasury, Queen's Proctor, and Director of Public Prosecutions; the Costs of Prosecutions, and of other Legal Proceedings."

9. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £2,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for such of the Salaries and Expenses of the Supreme Court of Judicature as are not charged on the Consolidated Fund."

10. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £10, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Salaries and Expenses connected with the County Courts."

11. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £2,030, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Salaries and Expenses of the Offices in Her Majesty's General Register House, Edinburgh."

12. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £12,938, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Salaries and Expenses of the Office of the Irish Land Commission."

Resolutions agreed to.

CLASS IV.

13. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £153,044, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for Public Education in England and Wales."

MR. HUMPHREYS-OWEN said he understood that it had been stated that under this Vote there would be no remedy by which the arrears which had been referred to, and which so many necessitous Board Schools were anxious to get, could be obtained, although it had been shown that, under a Circular issued by the Department, several years' arrears had been paid. He wished to ask the Solicitor General whether, that being so, it might not be possible so to manage that further arrears should be paid, whereby the poor Board Schools would be much benefited.

*MR. CHANNING said he understood the Attorney General on Friday night laid down that the Education Department did not act ultra vires in issuing the Circular of 1881, which was expressly meant to deal with those cases of arrears, and it had been seen that that Circular allowed to the poor Board Schools not only the grant for the current year, but also for the immediately preceding year. As he understood the law thus laid down, if the Department was acting within its powers in issuing that Circular, and granting, on their own discretion, this extra grant to the necessitous School Boards, then he submitted that his hon. Friend would be justified in pressing on the Government the duty of dealing with the equitable claims of these necessitous boards in this spirit. The Attorney General having laid it down that this action was within the power of the Department, he thought they had a right to ask the Government to take into consideration the case of School Boards in a necessitous condition, and to exercise the same powers with regard to matters of arrears which they exercised towards the schools when they issued the Circular of 1881. He should like to ask whether it was not possible for the Department to issue another Circular to meet the present difficulty?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL said that no one could read the Section without seeing that these grants were to be claimed and made annually. It never could have been meant that they should be allowed to accumulate. The terms of the Circular of 1881 clearly excluded the accumulation of arrears.

MR. HERBERT LEWIS said that the Circular of 1881 allowed arrears for one year.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL said that what the Circular did was to fix a period within which the annual statement must be sent in. There was no allowance of arrears. It was simply reasonable requirement on the part of the Department to see what was included in the year's accounts.

MR. LEWIS said that it was obvious that the Department had the power of extending the time within which the accounts might be sent in. Why not extend the time still further? The poor School Boards had an equitable claim to these arrears.

Resolution agreed to.

14. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £10,000, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Expenses of the Department of Science and Art in respect of Schools of Science."

15. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £650, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for Purchases and Acquisitions of the British Museum."

16. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £327, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Salaries and Expenses of the National Portrait Gallery."

17. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £20,110, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Expenses of the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland."

CLASS V.

18. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £23,670, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the expenses of Her Majesty's Embassies and Missions abroad, and of the Consular Establishments abroad, and other expenditure chargeable on the Consular Vote."

19. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £36,700, be granted to Her Majesty to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for sundry Colonial Services, including certain Grants in Aid."

20. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £14,980, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for sundry Colonial Services, including certain Grants in Aid."

21. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £1,200, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Expenses in connection with the Suppression of the Slave Trade."

22. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £16,304, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, to make good the net loss on transactions connected with the raising of money for the various Treasury Chests Abroad in the year 1895-6."

CLASS VI.

23. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £30,151, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, to make good the sum by which the Interest accrued in the year ended 20th November 1896, from Securities held by the National Debt Commissioners, on account of 'The Fund for the Banks of Savings' and 'The Fund for Friendly Societies' is insufficient to meet the Interest which the said Commissioners are obliged by Statute to Pay and Credit during such latter mentioned year to Trustees of Savings Banks and to Friendly Societies; and also the sum by which the Interest accrued in the year ended 31st December 1896, from Securities held by the National Debt Commissioners on account of 'The Post Office Savings Bank Fund,' is insufficient to meet the Interest which the said Commissioners are obliged by Statute to Pay and Credit during such latter mentioned year to Depositors and the Expenses incurred during that year in the execution of the Acts relating thereto."

24. "That a sum, not exceeding £95,434, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for a Grant in Aid of the Capital of the Pension Fund created under the provisions of the National School Teachers' (Ireland) Act 1879."

CLASS VII.

25. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £4,500, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Salaries and other Expenses (including certain Grants in Aid) of Temporary Commissions and Committees, including Special Inquiries."

26. "That a sum, not exceeding £16,617, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, to make good certain sums written off from the Assets of the Local Loans Fund."

27. "That a sum, not exceeding £20,500, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for Grants in Aid of the Expenses of the British Commissions for the International Exhibitions at Brussels, 1897, and Paris, 1900."

REVENUE DEPARTMENTS.

28. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £6,800, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Salaries and Expenses of the Inland Revenue Department."

29. "That a Supplementary sum, not exceeding £10, be granted to Her Majesty, to defray the Charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending on the 31st day of March 1897, for the Salaries and Expenses of the Post Office Services."

Resolutions agreed to.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (ALDERSHOT AND FARNBOROUGH) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

BERRIEW SCHOOL BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

MILITARY LANDS ACT (1892) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till To-morrow.

SUPPLY.

Committee deferred till Wednesday.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Committee deferred till Wednesday.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Standing Committee on Trade, etc. [17th February] further adjourned till To-morrow.

ESTATES TAIL BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

MOTION.

VERMINOUS PERSONS.

Bill to permit Local Authorities to provide cleansing and disinfection for persons infested with Vermin, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Hazell, Lord Balcarres, Sir Albert Rollit, Mr. Burt, and Mr. Field; presented, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Friday, 2nd April, and to be printed.—[Bill 147.]

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

Ordered, That the Committee do consist of Fifteen Members.

The Committee was accordingly nominated of:—Mr. Gibson Bowles, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Victor Cavendish, Mr. Cameron Corbett, Mr. Gilliat, Mr. Hanbury, Mr. Brodie Hoare, Mr. Grant Lawson, Mr. Herbert Lewis, Mr. Luttrell, Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. Arthur O'Connor, Dr. Tanner, Mr. Thornton, and Mr. Woodall.

Ordered, That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers, and records.—[Sir William Walrond.]

House adjourned at Twenty minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, 2nd March 1897.

THOMPSON'S DIVORCE BILL [H.L.].

Order of the Day for the Second Reading read; Counsel called in; Witnesses examined. Moved, That the Bill be now read 2ª; the same was agreed to. Bill read 2ª accordingly, and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Thursday next.

STANDING COMMITTEE.

Report from the Committee of Chairmen of the Standing Committee, That they have appointed the Lord Herschell Chairman of the Standing Committee; read, and ordered to lie on the Table.

CRETE.

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY, on rising to call attention to the statement made (25th February) by the noble Marquess the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of the policy intended to be pursued with respect to Crete, was received with Opposition cheers. He said: My Lords, I am so deeply sensible of the exceeding gravity of the crisis in the affairs connected with Crete at this moment that even if I were disposed to make, which I am not, any attack on the Government, I certainly should refrain from it. I need hardly assure the noble Marquess that I have not the smallest desire in any way to embarrass the Government in the conduct of the most difficult affairs in which they are engaged—[cheers]—but I think it is fitting that, upon the statement made by the noble Marquess the other night, some observations—prudent observations I trust—should be made. Before, however, I proceed, I have a word to say arising out of the Blue-book which has been presented to Parliament upon Cretan affairs. I have not had the advantage of studying that Blue-book, as a copy of it has not yet reached me, but through the extracts published in the public Press I have been able to read some of the important documents contained in it. There is only one to which I desire to advert, and that is the answer given by the noble Marquess to the communication of July 27, last year, from the Austro-Hungarian Government, and I think I shall have general concurrence when I say I believe that answer will have been universally read with the greatest satisfaction. [Cheers.] I think I shall be correct in assuming that the noble Marquess, however strong may be his desire—his natural and just desire—to act in harmony with the other Powers of Europe, will not allow himself to be forced into any Measures which may be repugnant to the feeling which prevails generally throughout this country. As to the statement itself I, of course, am not aware—the noble Marquess will probably tell us—whether what may be termed, I suppose, the proposals of Her Majesty's Government were entirely accepted by the other Powers; but I may assume that, to a very large extent at all events, they represent an agreement which has now been arrived at. At any rate, the statement contains the policy which Her Majesty's Government desired to pursue. One thing, happily, appears to be irrevocably decided by the Powers—namely, that in no circumstances shall Crete return under the direct domination of the Sultan of Turkey. [Cheers.] That I apprehend is the solid basis which has been laid for whatever settlement may ultimately be arrived at; but, speaking for myself only—though I believe that there are not a few who agree with me—putting aside all feeling of sympathy with the Greeks, concerning which I shall say something presently, as a mere cold question of policy, it would have been wiser and safer to have joined Crete to the kingdom of Greece. ["Hear, hear!"] My Lords, perhaps no more unfortunate event occurred some 60 years ago, or rather more, than the refusal of the Powers to unite Crete to the then newly-formed independent kingdom of Greece, and anyone who will refer to the remarkable correspondence which passed between Prince Leopold, the Earl of Aberdeen, and the Duke of Wellington at that time, will see that Prince Leopold in point of fact prophesied all the evils which have arisen by leaving Crete under the domination of the Porte, and not adding it to Greece. His words might be adopted by anyone at the present time. I believe it would have been a wiser course; but however, the Powers have determined upon what is termed "autonomy." Now autonomy is a very blessed word; something like the well-known blessed word "Mesopotamia;" but everything depends upon what autonomy means. Now, in the first place, I suppose we all agree that that autonomy which is to be, as I understand, under the sovereignty of the Sultan should be complete and clearly defined. There is an example, which has been often quoted, of the autonomy of Samos, but I desire to point out that the circumstances of the island of Samos differ largely and essentially from the conditions of the island of Crete, because in Samos there are scarcely any Mussulmans amongst the population. I have been told there are some twenty; but, no matter what the number may be, the population is almost entirely Christian. On the other hand, in Crete there is a considerable body—I forget the exact proportion—of Mussulmans, and it is obvious that, whilst in Samos it is easy, no doubt, to govern a population which is homogeneous, or nearly entirely Christian, in Crete, unless there be a strong controlling power, it would be exceedingly difficult to govern such a population as there exists; and that is one of the reasons why I, personally, think it would have been well to have placed Crete under Greece. What I dread is this, that the Powers may have decided upon autonomy in principle, but have formed no scheme as to the manner in which that autonomy is to be carried into effect, or as to the precise nature of the autonomy which is to be established. If that be so, and if they are about to proceed to summon the Greeks to retire, or have proceeded, perhaps, already at this moment to summon the Greeks to retire from Crete, it seems to me that there may ensue great confusion, great further disturbance and difficulties, the end of which it is hard to foresee. It is quite obvious that there must be some means of preserving order in Crete until the new Government is entirely established, and upon that I find that the noble Marquess, in the statement he made, added some observations which I must confess filled me with considerable alarm. He said:—

> "It does not follow that, certainly in the case of Turkey, all the troops can be withdrawn immediately. Mere questions of police would prevent such a result as that."

I ask myself can it be intended, after the withdrawal of the Greek troops, to use the Turkish troops for the purpose of policing the island. Surely if any such attempt be made, it will only prolong the conflict between the insurgents and the Turks, and lead to disasters as great as, if not greater than, any which have hitherto occurred. The insurgents, finding that they have no longer the assistance of the Greek troops, will probably commit some of the crimes natural in a civil war, and, alas! we know too well what has taken place in other parts of Turkey, and, to some extent, in Crete itself. We know that in such circumstances the Turkish troops are not likely to be subject to much restraint. For these reasons, it seems to me that it is almost absolutely necessary that there should be organised a means of keeping order in the island before there is a withdrawal of the troops; and, further than that, it seems to me both policy and justice require that the withdrawal of the Turkish and Greek troops should practically be simultaneous. [Opposition cheers.] That, I think, would have a very pacifying effect upon the insurgents, and I believe, whatever you may think—and I have my own opinion, which I will express presently, as to the proceeding of the Greek Government in sending troops into the island—it would be wiser, now that the Greek troops are there, to make use of them rather than to aggravate the state of things which exists by peremptorily withdrawing them from the island, probably by the exercise of force. A further statement made by the noble Marquess with regard to the Turkish troops was that their withdrawal "is a necessary condition of administrative autonomy." It may be proper, he said, to keep, as in the case of Samos, and now for many years in the case of Servia, some troops—some few troops, no doubt, is meant—as an indication simply of sovereignty. The Samian Constitution states positively in terms that no Turkish troops are to remain in the island; but I believe there is some guard of honour to the Governor. Whether that be so or not, I have no information which enables me precisely to say; but to me it seems that it would be far safer if no Turkish troops remained in Crete, and I cannot understand why it should be necessary as an indication of sovereignty, because no doubt there will be stipulations that some tribute be paid to the Turkish Government, and there will be other indications which will clearly show that the sovereignty of the Sultan over the island continues. However that may be—and I do not attach must importance to the point, but merely mention it because the noble Marquess referred to it—what I insist upon is this, that until the Turkish troops are withdrawn from the island, there will be no security whatever that there will be order and peace in the island, and the sooner, therefore, they can be withdrawn the better. My Lords, I have made these observations, which I have strictly confined to the statement made by the noble Marquess; but there is one further statement besides that as to autonomy which undoubtedly and necessarily is of the gravest character—namely, that as to the determination of the Powers to summon both the Turks and the Greeks to withdraw their troops from the island, and if either of them refuse, to compel them by force to do so. If we are to believe what we read in the newspapers, the summons may have been presented to Greece. If it is not presented at this moment, no doubt it will be presented very shortly. I do not, of course, know what the terms of that summons may be; but we have been told that the Russian Government laid great stress upon the summons being to retire within three days. I should be glad if the noble Marquess is in a position to give any information as to the precise nature of the summons which has been delivered to the Greek Government. The newspapers also contain a document which, according to the statement I have read, has been actually presented to the Greek authorities. It is said that it was communicated to the Greek Chamber by one of the Ministers, and caused a great sensation, at which I am not surprised. It is the notification of the foreign Admirals—I quote from The Times—as to the measures that they will take. The words are:—

> "The admirals do not allow the Greek fleet to bombard the occupied fortresses and towns. They forbid any attack by Greek troops on the fortresses aforesaid. They do not permit the landing of guns or of ammunition. They forbid any attack on the Turkish ships on the part of the Hellenic fleet. They do not permit the troops of Colonel Vassos to advance into the interior of the island. Any attempt on the part of the Greeks to infringe these orders will be repelled by the combined fleets."

*THE PRIME MINISTER (The MARQUESS of SALISBURY): That is not correct.

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY: I ask myself what can be the meaning of the Greeks permitting troops—

*THE PRIME MINISTER: I think I shall save the noble Earl from unnecessary argument if I say that I never heard of the document. ["Hear, hear!"]

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY: Very likely. I am glad to hear it; but the noble Marquess will admit that it is exceedingly natural that I should make this comment upon it—namely, that, undoubtedly, it is quite within the power of the fleet to do all that; but one is a little puzzled to see how, unless forces are landed, you can prevent the Greeks from advancing into the interior of the island.

*THE PRIME MINISTER: "Hear, hear!"

THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY: If force is to be applied to compel the Greek troops to retire from the island, military forces must be employed in the island itself, and I should doubt whether the Powers contemplate that. I read that extract because I wished to get the explanation which the Prime Minister has been good enough to give us. With regard to the summons itself, I certainly sympathise strongly and deeply with the Greeks in the action they have taken. My feeling is this, that they alone have forced the Powers to act with decision in this matter, and it is due to Greece really that Crete will be emancipated from Turkish rule. Otherwise months more might have passed of massacre and turmoil, and the result might have been as distant now as it is in regard to the unfortunate Armenians, for whom, in point of fact, nothing has been done. I say, all honour to the Greeks—["hear, hear!"]—for what they have done. It is said that they have violated international law. I am not an international jurist, but I never yet heard that an act of war on the part of a regular Government was a violation of international law. No one can doubt that the invasion of Crete by Greek troops, Crete being a Turkish possession, was a distinct act of war, and one which the Turkish Government would have been entirely justified in treating as an act of war. I have heard it spoken of as a filibustering expedition; but if that be the case, there are few governments which have not been engaged in filibustering expeditions. [Laughter.] However that may be, the Greeks deserve warm sympathy for what they have done. But, my Lords, in circumstances so exceedingly grave and so critical, involving questions reaching so far, I certainly could not, as far as my humble voice goes, take upon myself the responsibility of offering any counsel to Greece at the present moment to take any step which might endanger her safety or prejudice her hopes for the future. [Cheers.] She has already done much for the freedom of her Hellenic countrymen in Crete, and I believe that it is not too sanguine to expect that, at no very distant date, although she may be again disappointed, as she was in 1829, Crete will be united with Greece under one Greek Government. [Cheers.]

*THE PRIME MINISTER who was received with cheers, said: I have nothing to complain of in the tone adopted by the noble Lord. He is too familiar with the difficulties with which foreign administration has to contend to have said anything to embarrass the Government in his remarks. But naturally there is much in what he has said to which I cannot consent. I will begin by saying that he is right in his conclusion that the policy which I explained by reading the telegram on Thursday night is a policy that has, on the whole, been accepted by the Powers. But I am compelled to put in a word of reservation, because I think it is right that I should say that that part of my statement which referred to the withdrawal of the Turkish troops has not been received without considerable demur on the part of many of the Powers. In fact, the one thing desired by the noble Lord is the one thing that they apprehend. I do not think that they were as unreasonable as it may have seemed at first sight, but the point which I have mostly to defend in their action, so far as it is incumbent on me to defend it, is in the decision that Crete should not form part of the Hellenic Kingdom. I do not admit that that is doing any violence to Crete. We have no grounds for thinking so. Before this crisis arose we had no evidence that there was on the part of the Cretan population, as a whole, a desire to be united to Greece. We know now that to the Mussulman part of the population it would be intensely distasteful. Whether it would be agreeable to the others at this moment it is impossible to say. I put aside the notion that you can trust the announcements of the leaders of insurrections, of politicians whose position is depending upon the success of the enterprise which they have sustained. Such evidence is of no value at all for declaring what the fixed and permanent and steady view of the population may be. I think that our experience of some 30 or 40 years ago may dispose of any inclination to apply the machinery of a plébiscite to ascertain a similar result. If I were to decide this question in the interests of Crete alone, without reference to any larger question or to the desire of any other Power, I should still say that it was a rash and hazardous, and, perhaps, an unjustifiable step to force Crete into a union with Greece at a moment when it is impossible that a sober and deliberate determination of the people can genuinely be ascertained. ["Hear, hear!"] The noble Lord has indulged in eulogies of Greece, and that, no doubt, is part of his case; and if I were contesting with him before a tribunal part of my case would be exactly the reverse, but in the position in which I stand I cannot develop that view. It is, however, but fair to ask whether you have a right to rush on the union of a separate island and a people like the Cretans with people on the mainland with whom they have really no community of interest and only a community, if it be such, of race, and a certain community of language. I ask whether you have a right to rush that union on without considering—without taking some precautions to ascertain—what their wishes are in that respect. If, when some years have passed, they should be of opinion that—looking at the financial position of Greece, looking upon its success in past years in maintaining public order, looking upon the character of its administration, and the salient features of its political history—an alliance with Greece, a closer union with Greece, is one that the Cretan population ought to desire, I am exceedingly sceptical that the majority of the Great Powers would offer any opposition to such a result. But I say, for the sake of the Cretans themselves, it is right that matters should be deferred until a more quiet and deliberate consideration of the question is possible, when they should really have an opportunity of giving a sincere and reflecting opinion as to the effects of the union with Greece on their future destinies. But, my Lords, I have said this assuming that I am arguing about Crete alone. Of course, everybody knows that I am not. There are other considerations of the most potent character which have weighed with the Powers in the decision to which they have come. Some of them are territorial questions which will readily occur to the mind of the noble Lord, and he will forgive me for not entering upon them. But to others I may advert, and they are most important. There is no feeling which I have found so strong among the Powers with whom I have been in communication as the belief that if this enterprise of Greece, which they stigmatise as illegal—and they use stronger language than that—is to be allowed to result in the attainment of a great territorial advantage to the Greek Government, the example will spread, the signal will be given, the fire of civil war will be lit where there is peace now. All men are familiar with the fact that, if the fire of civil war is lit on the Continent of Europe and in the Turkish Empire, it will not be civil war alone with which we shall have to deal. These are grave considerations, and we have been struck with the intensity with which they have presented themselves to the minds of the other Powers. I have also been struck with the utter neglect which they have received from public opinion here. I should say that the dominant feeling with the other Powers is this—we sympathise with the Cretans, we are earnestly desirous to serve them, to prevent and to bring to an end oppression; but if it is to be a question whether the arrangements which have gone on are to continue with only slow and general amelioration, or whether the whole of Europe is to be plunged into a cauldron of civil war, we say that the interests of vast masses of populations are superior to those of the few who appear in the forefront of the present crisis, and that it is our duty to maintain the existing state of things until we can see a safe and peaceful issue. [" Hear, hear! "] Of course, in using the phrase " the existing state of things," I refer to the integrity of the Turkish Empire, and not to the question of autonomy which we are all content to give. Therefore, my Lords, in judging of the position of the Powers that Crete is not to form part of the Hellenic Kingdom you must in the first place consider the interests of the Cretans themselves; you must ask yourselves whether you have any sufficient and adequate reasons for supposing that the Cretans themselves desire or that they would be better for it; and you must further give your sympathies to those wider views which are in favour of the preservation of the paramount blessings of European peace which have weighed heavily with all the great nations in the decision to which they have come. [" Hear, hear! "] The noble Lord pressed the question of the Turkish soldiery very strongly. The question of the Turkish soldiery is one with which I am very familiar. When I am here or with my colleagues in the other House we hear of nothing but of the necessity of turning the Turkish soldiers out of Crete, but when I am at the Foreign Office I hear of nothing but the expediency of not interfering with the Turkish soldiery unnecessarily. The belief which the Powers entertain is that the Turkish soldiery in Crete are not to be feared for the purposes of any prospective action such as the noble Lord has in his mind. By all accounts they have—I mean the regular Turkish soldiers in Crete—behaved extremely well during the present crisis, and there is really no ground to apprehend that they will disobey the orders of their officers in the future. But I may mention that I believe that a combined representation has been addressed to the Porte pointing out that the withdrawal of the Turkish soldiery must be a necessary consequence of autonomy—I am speaking from memory—and that it ought to be conducted as expeditiously as the circumstances of the situation permit, and that as soon as possible the Turkish soldiers should be gathered into those parts of the island where, being side by side with the European troops, there will be no danger of any contest or conflict between them and the islanders. I hope that the Porte will take that view—

I think that would be very desirable; but I am bound to say that the proposal to remove them immediately seems to me not practicable. There is no police. A gendarmerie was established and money for it was begun to be provided, but the enterprise of the Greek Kingdom has stopped the raising of the loan and has stopped the payment of the gendarmerie, with the result that the gendarmes, taking a very natural view of their own interest, declined to serve merely upon promises. Major Bor is there, but I am not sure that he has any gendarmes under him, and he only holds by a temporary title. He is unfortunately a British subject, and therefore some of the other Powers would rather like to see him displaced by an officer of some neutral Power. I am told that there is a very excellent Belgian officer who is willing to hold the position, but I am not sure that the arrangement has arrived at a condition of maturity. The noble Lord will therefore see that the question of an efficient gendarmerie in Crete is not sufficiently before us. I think that I heard some words dropped which sugested that the police should be maintained by the Powers.

The Earl of KIMBERLEY: I only asked how the Powers intended to maintain the police.

*The PRIME MINISTER: That is a very different matter, and it is a reasonable request. A very learned person with whom I was discussing this matter yesterday informed me that two centuries ago, when the Turks took possession of the island, they found an army of 250,000 men necessary to keep order—["hear, hear!" and a laugh]—and therefore I am not certain that the bluejackets detailed by different vessels would be adequate for the purpose. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.]

The Earl of KIMBERLEY: I never thought that they would be.

*The PRIME MINISTER: The case is certainly one of extreme difficulty. For my part I should not be jealous—and I am speaking only for myself—if any one of the Great Powers would undertake to police Crete. But that duty has not been undertaken by them yet, and therefore we must work with such materials as we have. It appears to me, and I believe that it appears to all the Powers, that it would be a rash act to at once withdraw the Turkish troops, who are really our only safeguard against disorder, until we get something in their place. That they are ultimately to be withdrawn is undoubted, but that they shall be withdrawn at the same time as the Greek troops, whom some of the Great Powers look upon as mere invaders, is, I think, an unreasonable demand. But I hope that, if the Porte is content to leave the Turkish troops, under the supervision of European troops, to protect them from the suspicion of the noble Lord—I hope we shall be able to use them for all useful purposes without running the risk of any great dangers which he apprehends. But these are matters of detail. I cannot go more closely into detail, because I dare not answer for the consent of the Great Powers which I have not yet obtained. I can only assure the noble Lord that upon this point we are resolved—that is, on effective autonomy for Crete, and by effective autonomy I mean an effective withdrawal of Crete from the arbitrary power of the Sultan. Without saying a word which is inconsistent with international comity, I think that it can be said without rashness that the arbitrary power of the Sultan has not hitherto succeeded in securing the well-being and peace of his Christian subjects—and that is the main object we have in view. But the Powers are firmly resolved that Crete shall not for the present time form part of the Hellenic Kingdom, and if the Hellenic Kingdom chooses to take issue with the Powers upon that point it must abide the consequences. The feeling upon that point is unanimous amongst the Powers. The feeling, as the noble Lord said, is strong among some people in favour of Greece, but the feeling in other parts of Europe is strong against them as having needlessly disturbed the peace of Europe, and as having risked a general conflagration, and as having brought the sanctions and obligations of international law to a certain extent into contempt, and as having placed us in a crisis which, if she had had somewhat more self-control and somewhat more patience, we should have been able successfully and peacefully to surmount. [Cheers.]

House adjourned at a quarter past Five o'clock, to Thursday next, a quarter past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 2nd March 1897.

GOLD AND SILVER PLATE LICENCES BILL.

Order for Second Reading To-morrow read, and discharged.

Bill withdrawn.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

EAST INDIA (OFFICERS OF GENERAL LIST).

MR. HEYWOOD JOHNSTONE (Sussex, Horsham): To call attention to the grievance of the Officers of the General List (Indian Army) in the matter of their Pensions; and to move that a Select Committee of this House be appointed to inquire into their case. [Tuesday 30*th March.*]

LABOUR LAW.

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee): To call attention to the Laws affecting Labour; and to move a Resolution. [Tuesday 30*th March.*]

AGRICULTURAL POPULATION.

MR. ATHERLEY-JONES (Durham, N. W.): To call attention to the condition of the agricultural population; and to move a Resolution. [Tuesday 30*th March.*]

FOOD SUPPLIES (UNITED KINGDOM).

MR. SETON-KARR (St. Helen's): To call attention to the wholly inadequate production of food supplies within the area of the United Kingdom in relation to its large and increasing population; and to move, That, in the opinion of this House, the dependence of the United Kingdom on foreign imports for the necessaries of life, and the consequences that would arise therefrom in the event of war, demand the serious attention of Her Majesty's Government. [Tuesday 30*th March.*]

QUESTIONS.

NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT (PAY).

MR. HUDSON KEARLEY (Devonport): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty what number of men are employed in the Naval Establishments who receive less than 20s. a week?

THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. W. E. MACARTNEY, Antrim, S.): The number of men in Naval Establishments whose pay is less than 20s. a week is 4,231.

MR. KEARLEY: Do I understand the hon. Gentleman to say that some of these men have pensions?

MR. MACARTNEY: Yes.

MR. KEARLEY: Do the Government take the pensions into consideration when fixing the pay?

Mr. MACARTNEY was understood to reply in the negative.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): Could a return be given showing in what places these men are employed at the present time? Of course the hon. Gentleman will see there is a reason for establishing a distinction between certain places?

MR. MACARTNEY said he would consider the matter.

INFANTRY RECRUITS (CHEST MEASUREMENT).

MAJOR RASCH (Essex, S.E.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the standard for infantry has been reduced to 5 ft. 3½ ins. and 32 in. chest measurement for recruits under 20 years of age; and whether this is caused by the impossibility of filling existing establishments or to raise the new battalions.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. BRODRICK, Surrey, Guildford): Recruiting varies with the state of the labour market, and temporary relaxations as regards height and girth have to be made from time to time when trade is brisk. In March of last year the supply of recruits was so abundant that we were able to exact the full standard and discontinue special enlistments below it. Recruits now are scarcer, and therefore young men under twenty whom the examining Medical Officer pronounces to be likely to develop to the full standard will, until further orders, be accepted at the figures named in the Question.

PENAL SERVITUDE.

Mr. KEARLEY: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) under what circumstances, and by what Judge, a convict returned for in the last Report of the Commissioners of Prisons and the Directors of Convict Prisons (Appendix No. 3) was sentenced to 29 years' penal servitude; (2) whether there is any limit to the number of specified years for which convicts can be sentenced in cases where the maximum punishment is penal servitude for life; and (3) what sentence in years would result in an equivalent to the actual imprisonment suffered by a convict sentenced to penal servitude for life, assuming satisfactory conduct in each case?

The SECRETARY of STATE for the HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir Matthew White Ridley, Lancashire, Blackpool): The sentence is made up of four sentences imposed by Mr. Justice Stephen for various offences of blackmailing, indecent assault, and robbery with violence. The prisoner had been previously convicted of blackmailing, and the offences were of the worst kind. The answer to the second paragraph is in the negative; to the third, in the case of a male convict, a sentence of 26 years eight months. In the present case the convict is to be treated as under a life sentence.

IMPORTATION OF CATTLE (IRELAND).

Sir JOHN LENG (Dundee): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he has been informed that extensive purchases of cattle have been made recently in Perth for breeding purposes in Ireland, and what necessity exists for demanding special licences and declarations with regard to such cattle on their importation into Ireland, seeing that Scotland is entirely free from contagious disease, and that no such licences and declarations are required on the importation of Irish cattle into Scotland, England, or Wales?

The CHIEF SECRETARY for IRELAND (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central): It appears that 55 cattle have recently been purchased at sales at Perth for importation into Ireland for breeding purposes; 40 of these were bought for the Congested Districts Board. For years past, in consequence of pleuro-pneumonia in Great Britain, the importation of British cattle into Ireland has been prohibited except with the special consent of the Lord Lieutenant. This consent is invariably given for the importation of cattle required for breeding purposes on satisfactory evidence that the cattle to be imported are free from disease, and that they have not been in any infected district or in contact with any diseased or suspected cattle, or otherwise exposed to infection. Pleuro-pneumonia still exists in Great Britain. More than one outbreak of the disease has occurred in England during the past year. Scotland is at present, so far as is known to the Irish Department, free from pleuro-pneumonia. There is, however, entirely free movement of cattle between England and Scotland, and the Irish Veterinary Department does not consider that the time has yet come for making any change in the existing conditions, which, as experience has shown, can, without difficulty, be complied with by persons desiring to import stock into Ireland. Cattle are not permitted to be exported from Ireland to Great Britain without having first obtained a licence declaring that the animals are free from disease, and this requirement has been in force since the passing of the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act of 1878, when pleuro-pneumonia was prevalent in Ireland.

TOLLS (NEWPORT, CO. MAYO).

Dr. ROBERT AMBROSE (Mayo, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) on what authority tolls are collected at Newport, County Mayo; (2) to whom do the tolls go; (3) is he aware that there is no weighing machine in the town; and (4) will he explain what right the landlord has to charge Customs for fishing boats coming up to the quay?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The tolls go to Mrs. O'Donnell under the authority, it is understood, of a patent in her possession, though I am not in a position to verify this. There is no weighing machine in the village, but there are public scales. No Customs or tolls are charged for fishing boats as alleged in the last paragraph.

COPYHOLDERS (GROUND GAME).

MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been called to the position of copyholders in some cases where the right of free chase and free warren is vested in the lord of the manor, and to the fact that they have no rights under the Ground Game Act or any other Act to protect their crops from damage by ground game; and whether he will either introduce or give support to a Bill to confer upon such copyholders, under equitable conditions, similar rights to those enjoyed by tenant occupiers under the Ground Game Act?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: My attention has been called to this matter, and I have been in communication in regard to it with the Board of Agriculture. I cannot undertake to introduce legislation myself, but I should be glad to give favourable consideration to any Bill dealing with the subject, as the hon. Member says, on equitable terms. The subject, however, presents several difficulties which have not been adequately dealt with in the Bills of previous years. The rights now in question, which may affect freehold as well as copyhold land, differ in material points from those affected by the Act of 1880.

MR. CHANNING: If a Bill is introduced by a private Member with proposals that meet with his approval, will the right hon. Gentleman assent to its passing, so far as he is concerned?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY said he should be glad to co-operate in removing the existing grievances, but so far the Bills he had seen did not deal adequately with the subject.

SLAVERY (NEW HEBRIDES).

MR. SAMUEL SMITH (Flintshire): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that slavery in the New Hebrides still continues; that natives are sold to dealers like sheep at £6 to £10 on some of the trading vessels, and afterwards retailed according to the demand or the quality of the natives; and at some of the stations natives are placed in shackles because, as was alleged, they had not done sufficient work; aud what action he proposes to take in the matter?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W): I have no information to the effect of the hon. Member's Question. If he can furnish me with any evidence of the existence of such a state of things, I will take action immediately against any British subjects concerned, but the New Hebrides are not British, I can, therefore, do no more. The right hon. Gentleman added: Since I came into the House the hon. Member has been good enough to send me an extract from a newspaper—it does not appear which——

MR. S. SMITH: The Melbourne Argus.

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: The extract is part of a letter signed "Henry Varley, San Francisco," who refers to an anonymous statement in The Melbourne Argus speaking of a report received from a recent visitor, also anonymous. The hon. Member will see that upon a statement of that kind—which is threefold anonymous—[laughter]—it is impossible for me to take any serious action. ["Hear, hear!"]

RE-ARREST OF DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

MR. SAMUEL SMITH: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring in a Bill to obviate the difficulties at times caused to the police and the hardships to some prisoners by re-arrests at prison gates for similar offences previously committed in a different county or jurisdiction; or, if not prepared to take this course, will he send out generally to police authorities, chairmen of quarter sessions, and judges a circular on this subject, similar to the one addressed by himself last summer to the Liverpool Watch Committee, so as to facilitate arrangements that a prisoner on trial on confessing any previous offence in addition to that for which he is accused, may be dealt with by a single sentence and punishment?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: I have considered the possibility of remedying the hardship to which the hon. Member refers by means of legislation, and have consulted Her Majesty's Judges on the point; but it was found that there were great difficulties in the way. In order if possible to diminish the hardship, I caused the circular which the hon. Member mentions to be issued, not to the Liverpool Watch Committee only, but to all the police authorities in the country. I do not see that anything would be gained by issuing another circular to judges, recorders, or chairmen of quarter sessions. I am glad to say that I find the circular has been effective.

GIBRALTAR (DRAINAGE WORKS).

MR. EDMUND ROBERTSON (Dundee): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he has received a protest from the Sanitary Board at Gibraltar against the mode in which the scheme of drainage works, agreed upon by the Inter-Departmental Committee, is being carried out; and, if so, whether he will lay it upon the Table?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I have received from the Governor of Gibraltar a communication addressed to him by the Sanitary Commissioners complaining of the large excess on the estimate for the execution of the drainage works. The papers will be referred to the consulting engineer, who is responsible for the estimate, and it would be unfair to that gentleman to publish the complaint before he has had an opportunity of replying to it.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS BILL.

MR. JAMES RANKIN (Herefordshire, Leominster): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education if in the case of a School Board District where there is no school' and the children of the district are sent to a Voluntary School outside the district, it is legal for the School Board of the district to pay the managers of the Voluntary School an agreed sum for each child so sent?

THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University): No, Sir; such a payment would not be legal.

QUEEN'S REIGN (COINAGE).

MR. W. F. LAWRENCE (Liverpool, Abercrombie): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it is in contemplation to issue the bronze coinage with the head of Her Majesty as it is at present on the last silver issue; and, if so, how soon; and whether, with a view to increase the historic and numismatic interest of the coinage generally, he will take the necessary steps to issue this year a complete and new series so as to specially commemorate if possible in some way on the coins themselves the sixtieth anniversary of Her Majesty's reign?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Sir MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, Bristol, W.): The effigy of Her Majesty on the bronze coinage has been the same since 1895 as that on the silver coinage. It is not desirable to vary the design upon the coinage at short intervals of time. The present coinage is the result of the recommendation of the committee which sat in 1891, and is, I believe, generally considered satisfactory. I am afraid that the attempt of a special coinage in 1887 was by no means so successful as to encourage a fresh attempt of the same kind. The sixtieth anniversary of Her Majesty's reign will be commemorated by the issue of a medal.

RAILWAY RATES (LONDON AND TILBURY COMPANY).

MAJOR RASCH: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether complaints of increased rates made by the London and Tilbury Railway (from 12 per cent. to 45 per cent.) on manures and blue lime, were deposited with the Board of Trade in pursuance of the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts 1886 and 1894, on 19th May 1896; will he explain why, although nine months have elapsed, no proposal has as yet been made by the Railway Company; and whether the Railway and Canal Traffic Act gives the Board of Trade power to prevent such delay; and, if not, whether the Department will consider the possibility of applying for the necessary powers?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. C. T. RITCHIE, Croydon): The complaint referred to by the hon. and gallant Member was received by the Board of Trade about the date mentioned. After correspondence with the traders and the London Tilbury and Southend and the Great Eastern Railway Companies, a meeting of the representatives of the various parties was held at the Board of Trade in November last. At this meeting it was admitted that the increase of rates complained of was occasioned by a dispute between the Companies as to the division of the rates, and it was understood that the two Companies would consider whether they could make some arrangement by which the increase would be removed. The Board of Trade are prepared at any time to give the traders the necessary certificate to enable them to take their complaint before the Railway and Canal Commissioners, who alone have power to decide whether the increase is reasonable; but the Board still hope the Railway Companies will agree to return to the old rate. I am not prepared to apply to Parliament for any further powers.

NAVAL SHIPWRIGHTS.

CAPTAIN PIRIE (Aberdeen, N.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty whether the allegations contained in a recent petition of the Naval shipwrights that they are compelled to perform menial tasks on board ship are correct; and, if so, whether, in view of the very responsible positions held by these men, the Lords of the Admiralty propose to take steps to prevent such employment of the time of these highly skilled artisans in the future.

MR. MACARTNEY: In common with all other ratings, except chief petty officers, shipwrights have to take part in the work necessary to keep their mess-place clean and the ship efficient. In this respect they are on the same footing as armourers, blacksmiths, skilled gunnery and torpedo ratings, whose duties are of the utmost importance as regards the fighting efficiency of the ship. It is not considered either necessary or desirable to treat the shipwrights in any exceptional manner.

MR. KEARLEY: Arising out of that answer, I should like to ask the hon. Gentleman whether it is not the fact that although special efforts were made by the Admiralty lately to fill up a hundred places, only two men responded to the appeal of the Admiralty?

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! That does not arise out of the question.

LAND TAX.

MR. G. H. MORRELL (Oxon, Woodstock): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is aware that recent instructions have operated to raise the assessment of the Land Tax above the assessment for the Poor Rate on small agricultural holdings; that four-acre plots of purely agricultural land at Minster-Lovell (Oxon) are assessed at £8 12s. 6d. for Poor Rate and £13 for Land Tax, and that the small freeholder who has paid 7s. 7d. for Land Tax for 45 years is now (1897), without any alteration of his holding required to pay 10s. 10d. for Land Tax; and whether he will cause inquiry to be made with a view to correction of what appears to be a hardship to a large number of small freeholders?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: The increase of Land Tax on the property mentioned by the hon. Member is not due to any instruction from me or from the Inland Revenue. The assessment has been made by the Local Commissioners of Land Tax executing the duty imposed on them by the Land Tax Acts, and I have no power to interfere with them. I believe that it is probable that the plots of land in question include houses; and, if the tax on them has been raised, it must be because, in the opinion of the local Land Tax Commissioners, they have hitherto paid less than their due share of the quota of the parish, while other properties have been paying too much. The total quota of the parish cannot have been increased.

INDO-CHINA AND AUSTRALIAN MAIL CONTRACTS.

SIR JOHN LENG: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, what number of tenders were received for the Indo-China and Australian mail contracts; whether they were all from British companies; and whether both with regard to speed and rates of subsidy, the tender of the Peninsular and Oriental Shipping Company was in all respects the most advantageous?

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. R. W. HANBURY, Preston): Tenders for the Indo-China and Australian mail services, or for portions of them, were received from four companies. All the tenders received were from British companies. The only opportunity of obtaining a complete service to and from the whole of the British Possessions concerned was to accept offers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company. When the contracts with these companies are signed they will be laid before the House for confirmation, and will be accompanied by a Treasury Minute giving full particulars of all the tenders received.

CASH BALANCES (INDIA).

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether he will inform the House what is the present amount of the cash balances of the Indian Government, and in what proportions they are held in its Home Treasury in sterling and in India in rupees; if he will state how much of the balances held in India in rupees is in the Indian Government's own treasuries, and how much is out on deposit in the Presidency Banks; and whether he can give the sum now advanced on the money market from the Indian Government's Home Treasury?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, Middlesex, Ealing): On January 31 the cash balances in India amounted to Rx.11,400,000. The cash balance of the Home Treasury this morning was £2,099,462. It cannot at present be stated with accuracy how the balances in India on January 31 were divided between the Government's own treasuries and those of the Presidency banks. The Government deposits in the latter during the last week of January seem, however, to have amounted to about Rx.2,890,000, and the remainder, which would be about Rx.8,510,000, must have been distributed over Government Treasuries, which are very numerous. The amount now out at short dates on loan from the Home Treasury is £1,550,000.

NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.

MR. E. H. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are any instructions to the Metropolitan Police prescribing their relations with the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children; how many cases were last year discovered by the Metropolitan Police and transferred by them to this Society for prosecution; and is there any other Society, and, if so, what, with which the Metropolitan Police have similar relations?

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: Yes, Sir, there are such instructions, and under them the Police notify to the Society particulars of all cases of cruelty to children which come to their notice. Five hundred and thirty-one such cases came to the notice of the Police during 1896, 182 of which were transferred to the Society for prosecution. There is no other society with which the police have similar relations.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGES.

SIR JOHN LENG: I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury what proportion of the increased grant of £9,500 to University Colleges in Great Britain will be allocated to Scotland; to what college or colleges; and in what sum or sums?

MR. HANBURY: The question of allocating the £25,000 included in the Civil Service Estimates for 1897-98 is still under consideration. It will probably be referred to a Committee to be appointed for the purpose.

MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield): Will the report of the Committee already appointed with reference to the grant be produced before the Vote is asked for?

MR. HANBURY: That is a separate question, which I cannot answer without notice.

PRIVATE LUNATIC ASYLUMS (IRELAND).

MR. W. FIELD (Dublin, St. Patrick): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the visiting physicians of private lunatic asylums in Ireland are invariably approved of by the Recorder; and whether he will order a return of the number interned, the revenue accruing, and the cures effected during the last decade of private lunatic asylum management in Ireland?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The management of private lunatic asylums in Ireland is regulated by the 5th and 6th Vict., cap. 123, under which no approval of the appointment of a visiting physician is required. If the words "revenue accruing" are intended to refer to the amount received by way of fees on licences issued to private asylums there will be no objection to grant a return such as indicated, if the hon. Member will move for it in the usual way.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS, HEYWOOD.

MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS: I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education when the Reports relative to the public elementary schools at Heywood will be laid upon the Table of the House?

SIR J. GORST: The Reports relative to the public elementary schools in Heywood have been laid upon the Table of the House to-day.

ARMENIA.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he can confirm the statement published at page 95 of the French Yellow-book on Armenian affairs, that Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs proposed on 13th August 1895 to Baron de Courcel, French Ambassador in London, to confide the surveillance by the Powers of the execution of Armenian reforms provided for by the Treaty of Berlin, to a Commission organised on the spot which might be composed of four Ottoman delegates and of one representative of each of the three Powers; what part it was proposed should be taken in such a Commission by the other Powers signatories of the Treaty of Berlin; and whether the proposal still subsists, or has now been abandoned?

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (MR. G. CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): The Dispatch recording the conversation referred to will be found on page 120 of the Correspondence presented to Parliament in Turkey No. 1, 1896; and a considerable amount of correspondence with regard to it is contained in the pages which follow. The reason for which it was suggested that the three Commissioners should be nominated by Great Britain, France, and Russia was that they were the only Great Powers who possessed representatives on the spot, and that these representatives had been acting in concert since the events arising out of the Sasun massacre in 1894. The Porte strongly objected to the proposed surveillance Commission, and when a scheme of reforms which was considered to be satisfactory by the Great Powers was accepted by the Sultan the idea of the Commission was abandoned.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES: I gather that it was proposed that no other Powers signatories to the Treaty of Berlin should take part?

*MR. CURZON: Yes. It was proposed that the Commission should be constituted, in addition to the Ottoman delegates, of representatives of those three Powers alone.

TOWN COURTS.

MR. D. MACALEESE (Monaghan, N.): I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland if the commissioners of a town incorporated under the Towns Improvement Act, 17 and 18 Vict., c. 103, which requires a population of 1,500 and upwards, cease to exist as commissioners when the population dwindles down to 1,100, or other number; and, does the Town Court, established to deal with offences committed within such town, continue to be a legal Court, and are its judgments legal judgments?

*THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. J. ATKINSON, Londonderry, N.): This is a hypothetical and abstract Question, which I respectfully submit I may decline to answer.

MUZZLING DOGS.

Mr. H. C. STEPHENS (Middlesex, Hornsey): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture (1) whether he is aware that, as the muzzling orders for dogs in the counties of London, Surrey, and Hertford having been taken off, it is in contemplation to remove the muzzling order in the county of Middlesex; (2) whether it is true that fresh cases of rabies within the area of the counties mentioned have occurred quite recently; and (3) whether the Departmental Committee having reported that muzzling is not only an efficient, but the only means which is now practicable for the extermination of rabies, he will issue a muzzling order for an area and with conditions which would be likely to bring about the extermination of rabies.

*THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. WALTER LONG, Liverpool, West Derby): The answer to the first question is in the affirmative. I regret to say the answer to the second is the same. In reply to the third, I would say that the circumstances which have recently occurred point clearly to the necessity for the issue of a muzzling order applicable to the whole of the metropolitan district, irrespective of the boundaries of particular local authorities. The form which such an order should take, is now engaging my attention, especially with regard to the description of muzzle to be used.

MR. STEPHENS asked when this order would probably be issued.

*MR. WALTER LONG: I am afraid I cannot give the exact date, but I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

DISCHARGE OF SEAMEN (FOREIGN PORTS).

SIR EDWARD GOURLEY (Sunderland): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will be good enough to state how many seamen were paid off from British ships last year at the ports of Antwerp, Hamburg, Rotterdam, Dunkirk, and Havre, together with the amount paid in wages and the charges deducted by the Consulates; whether he is aware that in 1895, in connection with the discharge of seamen at the ports named, the charges of the Consuls amounted to the large sum of £4,600; and, whether he has yet decided to establish outdoor Board of Trade officials to assist seamen with advice at the ports of Antwerp, Hamburg, Rotterdam, and Havre, similar to the system now adopted at Dunkirk?

MR. RITCHIE: The number of seamen paid off from British ships at Antwerp in 1896 was 13,538. The amount paid in wages was £101,880, and the consular fees in respect of such discharges amounted to £1,353 16s. As regards the ports of Rotterdam, Hamburg, Dunkirk, and Havre, I have no figures for 1896, but the total number of men discharged at those ports in 1895–96 was 12,755, and the consular discharge fees amounted to £1,275. I have in these instances no authentic figures as to the wages. It has been decided to establish Board of Trade outdoor officers at Antwerp, Hamburg, and Rotterdam so as to extend the experiment introduced at Dunkirk. The officers are expected to be at their stations for duty in the course of next month.

TRANSVAAL.

SIR ELLIS ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies what reply the Transvaal Government have made to the remonstrance of Her Majesty's Government regarding the recent legislation of the Volksraad which is in violation of the Convention of 1884?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I informed the hon. Member on the 21st of January that I propose to lay the papers on this subject before Parliament, but that until the time arrives for doing so I am unable to make any further statement. The correspondence is still incomplete, and cannot yet be laid.

EXPLOSION (H.M.S. "HOWE").

CAPTAIN DONELAN (Cork, E.): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Admiralty if he can state the cause of the recent explosion on board the guardship at Queenstown; and, whether the injured men are progressing favourably?

MR. MACARTNEY: No information has been received further than a telegram from the senior officer at Queenstown, to the effect that a chief stoker and a second-class stoker were seriously burnt by an explosion of coal-gas in one of the bunkers of the Howe last Friday afternoon, and that an inquiry had been ordered. Until this inquiry is completed, it is impossible to state the cause of the explosion.

Captain DONELAN: Can the hon. Gentleman say how the injured men are progressing?

Mr. MACARTNEY: We have no information.

POOR LAW RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

Mr. JAMES O'CONNOR (Wicklow, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he can say how soon he is likely to introduce the Poor Law Relief (Ireland) Bill?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: This Bill is nearly ready, and I hope to be able to introduce it shortly, though I am not yet able to fix the day. In view of the fact that the Bill is substantially the same as that introduced last year, I would venture to suggest that it should be allowed to be read the First time after 12 o'clock.

MAILS (SKIBBEREEN AND SCHULL).

Captain DONELAN: On behalf of the hon. Member for Cork Co., W. (Mr. James Gilhooly), I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether any arrangement has been made with the Schull and Skibbereen Tramway for the conveyance of the mails from Skibbereen to Schull?

Mr. HANBURY: As the hon. Member was informed only 11 days ago the question of using the Schull and Skibbereen Tramway for the conveyance of mails is under inquiry, and when the report has been received and considered the result shall be communicated to him.

SCHOOL TEACHERS (SUPERANNUATION).

Mr. VERNEY (Warwickshire, Rugby): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce this Session a Bill dealing with the superannuation of school teachers?

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY (Mr. A. J. Balfour, Manchester, E.): This is a matter which has been under the consideration of the Government, but we could not introduce a Bill until the educational legislation pending or promised has been brought in.

CRETE.

Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have given attention to the statement by Consul Biliotti, in his dispatch of 22nd August, 1896, to the effect that the withdrawal of Turkish troops from the inland stations in Crete, on which the Vali had not been consulted, and which was said to have been ordered from Constantinople, would have the most disastrous consequences for the Mussulmans, from which the Christians would have to suffer in their turn later on, and that it may bring on the utter ruin of the island; whether this withdrawal was ordered from Constantinople on the advice of the European Powers: and whether any reply was made to, or any action taken by, Her Majesty's Government in consequence of Consul Biliotti's dispatch?

*Mr. CURZON: The withdrawal of the Turkish troops from the inland stations was not taken on the advice of the European Powers. It does not appear certain that it was taken by orders from Constantinople. But it was obviously a matter in which the Turkish Authorities were the best judges as to the most expedient course to pursue, and Her Majesty's Government took no measures to interfere with their discretion on the subject. Her Majesty's Government had already, in July, made representations as to the necessity of the Vali being consulted in regard to the arrangements made by the Military Commander. The Consul's dispatch was one imparting information, and did not call for a reply.

Sir EDWARD GOURLEY: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Admiralty whether his attention has been called to a telegraphic statement, dated Thursday last, from Canea, that H.M.S. Barfleur had only 150 tons of coal in her bunkers, whilst she burns with banked fires 15 tons a day, thus rendering her until re-coaled practically useless, and in the event of bad weather unable to steam to a place of safety; and will he state what arrangements have been made for the proper coaling of the squadrons compelled to remain in the neighbourhood of Crete and the Archipelago?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY (Mr. GOSCHEN, St. George's, Hanover-square): I have received no such information. The provision of coal is in the hands of the Commander-in-Chief of the station, and the Admiralty have no reason to suppose that he does not make all proper arrangements for the supply of the squadron in Cretan waters.

MR. BRYN ROBERTS (Carnarvonshire, Eifion): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether, in or about November 1895, or at any other time, one of the Great Powers of Europe proposed to the others that the Dardanelles should be entered by or with the sanction of the Powers, with a view of coercing Turkey or with any other view; and whether Her Majesty's Government considered any such proposal, and whether they supported or opposed it?

*MR. CURZON: I regret that I can give the hon. Member no information on the first part of the Question. No such proposal has been submitted to Her Majesty's Government.

MR. C. J. DARLING (Deptford): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (1) whether his attention has been called to a statement in The Daily Chronicle of this morning to the effect that the document printed in that paper on March 1, purporting to be a protest by the Greek Government against the bombardment, and addressed to the Six Powers, had been communicated to Her Majesty's Government; and (2) whether he is correctly reported as having said in this House, in reply to a Question, that he believed that this communication had not been received by Her Majesty's Government?

*MR. CURZON: Yes, Sir; my answer to both Questions is in the affirmative. What happened was as follows:—On Thursday evening the Greek Chargé d'Affaires called at the Foreign Office and read to the permanent Under Secretary of State a telegram from his Government, of which, however, he declined to leave a copy or a written précis, as he said he was not authorised to do so. At the same time he promised to send a précis of the Greek Commodore's report from Canea which formed an annex to the telegram. The précis duly arrived the next day. On Saturday the Chargé d'Affaires again called, and left a précis of another telegram from his Government. But the latter communication was not identical with the Dispatch published in The Daily Chronicle, which we have never received, and upon the identity of which with the telegram read out to the Under Secretary we are not in a position to pronounce.

MR. HENRY LABOUCHERE (Northampton): Would the right hon. Gentleman state whether the Foreign Office did obtain a copy, or took a copy, of what was stated by the Greek Chargé d'Affaires?

*MR. CURZON: I have already said that the Greek Chargé d'Affaires declined to leave a copy, and of course the Permanent Under Secretary did not copy it, while it was being read. [Laughter.]

*SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: Can the Under Secretary state whether the report is true that Candamos is captured, and, if so, what is the fate of the Mussulman inhabitants?

*MR. CURZON: The following telegram was received this morning from Her Majesty's Consul at Canea:—

> "Governor of Candano reported that on February 26 insurgents and Greek troops with two cannons destroyed Candano blockhouse, and day following occupied commanding position; blockaded Mussulmans, having no ammunition or victuals, beg that pity should be taken on women and children. Having told them that admirals had done all they could do on their behalf, they pointed out that captain of French ship Suchet had rescued hundreds of Turks from far inland villages with small relief parties. I offered my services to Admiral Harris in case a last attempt should be made to save lives of Mussulmans at Candano, and consequently of such Christians as may fall victims to retaliation. Deputations of Mussulmans implored assistance of Great Powers. Greek Vice Consul having come to my office and stated that Mussulmans had applied to him to obtain liberation of besieged at Candano, two leading chiefs who were present declared that they spoke in the name of all the Mussulmans in Crete, that they had placed all their hopes in the Great Powers, and would never consent to union with Greece. Admiral informed me that Spinalonga had been revictualled, and that an Italian ship of war being at Hierapetra, that town could not be bombarded; also that four ships of war had been sent—two westward and two eastward—to visit all the creeks of the island to distribute the proclamation and to exhort the population to keep quiet."

We have also received the following telegram from the British Admiral:—

> "Mahomedans at Selino, Candano, Hierapetra are reported by Consul to be in great danger of massacre by Cretans and Greeks. Admirals are concerting to hoist flags at the places, and to inform Colonel Vassos that they are under the protection of Great Powers. From information received of Greeks reducing these Turkish blockhouses in the south by gunfire, my opinion is that Greeks have taken their field guns away from Canea and are using them elsewhere. Information as to what has happened inland very difficult to get, but many reports say that Greeks and Cretans are exterminating Mahomedans wherever they can."

*Sir E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: Can the right hon. Gentleman state why the force of 300 men which the three Consuls informed the Great Powers eight days ago were sufficient to save the lives of these besieged Mussulmans has not been sent and landed, and, if not, whether Her Majesty's Government will direct that a sufficient landing force shall be sent immediately?

*Mr. CURZON: We have no information that the force has not been sent; on the contrary, I have more than once stated to the House that ships have been sent, and presumably those ships have men upon them. When my hon. Friend talks about saving the lives of these unhappy beleaguered garrisons, as the telegrams I have read show, it does not appear that those lives have been sacrificed.

*Sir E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: Has not Candamos been captured?

*Mr. CURZON: I have read the only information which we have received.

SUPPLY (NAVY ESTIMATES).

Sir C. DILKE asked the First Lord of the Admiralty for an explanation of the non-appearance of the Navy Estimates which he had promised for that morning?

The FIRST LORD of the ADMIRALTY said he believed they would be in the Vote Office that afternoon. They would certainly be in the hands of the right hon. Gentleman in the course of the afternoon.

CRETAN QUESTION (DECLARATION OF POLICY).

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

*Sir WILLIAM HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.) rose in his place, and asked leave to move the Adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, viz, "the declaration made by Her Majesty's Government to this House on Thursday last of their policy on the Cretan question."

*Mr. SPEAKER asked if the right hon. Gentleman had the leave of the House. The pleasure of the House having been signified by general assent,

*Sir W. HARCOURT said: The House will remember that on Thursday last the right hon. Gentleman made a statement to this House of the policy of Her Majesty's Government, and he said at the time that an identical statement would be made in the other House of Parliament. Now, Sir, that did not turn out to be absolutely correct, because a statement appears to have been made in another place which was not identical, but which contained additional particulars of a very important character—["hear, hear!"]—to which I will presently refer. What we were informed was that a telegram was sent late on Wednesday night to the Five Powers in those terms:—

> "Inform Government to which you are accredited that Her Majesty's Government propose to make the following public declaration of the policy which they are prepared to pursue and which they believe to be in accordance with the views of their allies."

Now, it was admitted by the right hon. Gentleman that that was a remarkable proceeding; he said it was a departure from ordinary diplomatic tradition, and that they were making this statement of their views before receiving the full and formal assent to those views of their colleagues.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: Allies.

*Sir W. HARCOURT: Of their allies. That savours of the new diplomacy. It is quite true that it was a remarkable departure from diplomatic custom. The right hon. Gentleman also mentioned, which was correct, that we did not, on this side of the House, ask for that statement. We were willing to leave it to the discretion of Her Majesty's Government to determine what was the time and what was the manner in which they would announce to this House the policy they intended to pursue. It was volunteered by the Government, I have no doubt, for very good reasons, at that time, and it was made public, as we were told, before the assent of the other Powers had been given. That is extremely important with reference to the first question which I desire to ask Her Majesty's Government. I would first remind the House what was the declaration under several heads. It was:—

> "(1) That the establishment of administrative autonomy in Crete is, in our judgment, a necessary condition to the termination of the international occupation; (2) that, subject to the above provision, Crete ought, in our judgment, to remain a portion of the Turkish Empire; (3) that Turkey and Greece ought to be informed by the Powers of the above Resolution; and (4) that if either Turkey or Greece persistently refuse, when required,"— we were told in another place that the emphatic words were

> "when required—to withdraw their naval and military forces from the island, the Powers should impose their decision by force upon the State so refusing."

The first question I have to ask is this, Has the assent of the other Five Powers been given to those proposals of the Government in the manner and form in which they were there presented, or has any modification been made of those terms? I ask that for this reason—that immediately those terms and that programme of Her Majesty's Government were published here there was a demonstration of a character which certainly did not bear signs to very cordial assent in other quarters. I do not desire to press that matter, which it might not be desirable now to raise, but that is the reason why I think it is very important we should be told, in the first place, whether or not these categorical terms of the policy put forward by Her Majesty's Government have been accepted, and are practically now in force, in what is called the Concert of Europe. There is at least one thing in regard to this publication which I am entitled to refer to, and that is, that it was an invitation to this House, as it was to the world, to discuss the terms of this policy. ["Hear, hear!"] That may be regarded as sufficient justification of the Motion I shall make, and I am happy to say that the courteous reception which it has had from the Leader of the House implies that he does not differ from that view. It was obviously intended that the House of Commons should discuss this question when they became acquainted with the policy of Her Majesty's Government. I do not know whether it will be alleged by anybody that a discussion of the situation in which we find ourselves—a very grave situation without doubt—is premature. There is one quarter in which I am sure that such an allegation will not be made, and that is upon the Treasury Bench; nor will it be made by the able representative of the Foreign Office in this House. On Thursday night I suggested that we should take time to consider the policy so propounded and that the Debate should take place on Friday, but when the Leader of the House suggested that this was too early I acquiesced at once and waived the request for Friday. But what was my surprise—and I will add my satisfaction—when I found in the journals the next morning this announcement—

> "Mr. George N. Curzon, Under Secretary of State for Foregn Affairs, was the chief speaker at a largely-attended Smoking At Home at the United Club."

[Laughter.] Although I was taken by surprise, I do not complain, because it may come to this—that "Smoking At Homes" may be the only places at which we shall find ourselves able to discuss the great affairs of the Empire. [Laughter.] At all events, the Under Secretary had the advantage which I think Mr. Carlyle in his Life of Frederick the Great describes as "the Tabak Parlament." [Laughter.] In that speech the right hon. Gentleman entered at length on the whole of the Eastern Question, and especially upon the Cretan Question. I do not propose to discuss that speech here. It would not be in order, but I may refer to it. I will, however, give the House an idea of the speech from what I believe are called the head lines in the journal in which I read the speech. They are as follows:—"Three Aspects of the Cretan Question"; "Other Influences at Work"; "The Present Situation"; "The Attitude of the Powers"; "The Charges against the Government"; "The Proposed Reforms and General Reforms in Turkey." [Laughter.] A more comprehensive view of the subjects to be discussed at a Smoking At Home it is difficult to conceive. [Laughter.] Although there were in that speech some remarks not altogether favourable to the House of Commons as a place of discussion, and some severe remarks upon the Opposition, the right hon. Gentleman, as I desire to acknowledge, was extremely favourable and kind to myself—[laughter]—because he said I had asked the following questions:—

> "What is the international question in Crete? Why are you there? What is your object? What are you doing? Let us understand where we stand."

The right hon. Gentleman quotes these questions as having been propounded by me; and he said:—

> "I think that is a most reasonable question and a question which no member of the Government would shrink from giving a reply to; and, indeed, a reply to these questions will not merely elucidate a great deal of the position, but will, I think, give us a clue for the comprehension of the present and the future."

That is exactly the clue we want to get here, which is the proper place, in my opinion, for an exposition of this Question—[cheers]—so that we may have that clue to the comprehension of the present and the future. The only point to which it seems to me necessary to refer in that speech—for, no doubt, we will have the substance of it again from the right hon. Gentleman—is that the right hon. Gentleman spoke of the "solution" which had been propounded by Her Majesty's Government without any reserve as to the rest of the Powers. ["Hear, hear!"] On Thursday it was stated that the assent of the Powers had not been received; but as the Under Secretary made no reserve as to the assent of the Powers, I presume that on Friday the assent had been received. But the right hon. Gentleman made another statement. He said that this solution was due mainly to the initiative of Lord Salisbury.

*THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. GEORGE CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): I said "due in the main."

*SIR W. HARCOURT: Yes, I said, "mainly." That is an important statement. It is one the right hon. Gentleman has made on many occasions in reference to the arrangements of last August in reference to Crete. But I am not sure that it is a very discreet or diplomatic statement, because when one party in a concert takes all the credit to himself, it is very likely that the other partners might not altogether acquiesce in that view of the situation—["hear, hear!"]—and there are circumstances which lead one to believe that that is not the view which has been taken in other quarters. ["Hear, hear!"] I would also recommend to Her Majesty's Government, if I may be permitted to do so, not to be too anxious to claim all the credit for themselves in this matter, especially in regard to the latter part of the articles which I have read to the House. [Cheers.] I have referred to this speech to make it perfectly clear that if the Government find themselves entitled in other places to enter into extensive discussion of the present situation, they cannot complain—and I do not believe that they do complain—of our asking for equally full explanation and discussion in the House of Commons. [Cheers.] Now, in order to make it clear what are the explanations we specially desire to receive from the Government, I should like to state the propositions upon which the questions which I desire to put are founded. First of all, I venture to affirm that the present situation—that is to say, the present insurrection in Crete; the intervention of Greece; the intervention of the Powers by force of arms in Crete—has been the direct result of the entire failure of the arrangements made by the Council of the Powers of last autumn. [Cheers.] That arrangement was founded upon the worn-out idea that you can reform Turkey, leaving Turkey to be the engine and the instrument to carry out those reforms. [Cheers.] That was the system upon which the reform of last August was founded, and it is because it was founded upon that false conception that it has failed. [Cheers.] We are still, no doubt, without official information as to what happened since that arrangement, and the causes of its failure. Consequently, we must take the best information we can get upon the subject, and I find in The Times, from its Vienna correspondent, on February 27, the following statement, which is ascribed to Georgi Pasha Berovitch, the Governor of Crete:—

> "Referring to the reforms which were to have been introduced into Crete, the Pasha said that they were the best that the Christians could have expected; but as they would have done away with the supremacy of the Turks, the latter placed every obstacle in the way. The Christians were driven to despair by the delay in the execution of the reforms, and eventually hostilities broke out. From this brief account of Georgi Pasha Berovitch it is clear that the Porte took away with one hand what it had given with the other; and thus the full responsibility for the sanguinary events in Crete rests with the Sultan and the Camarilla."

[Cheers.] We have there the causes of the failure of the arrangements of last August. With regard to the policy set forth by Her Majesty's Government, I observe with satisfaction that the article of autonomy is placed first—["hear, hear!"—because it shows that the fundamental principle and the policy of the Government is the practical expropriation of Turkish rule from the island of Crete. ["Hear, hear!"] Everything depends, in my opinion, upon the completeness of that expropriation, and, therefore, what we have to inquire is how far and how completely does the autonomy that you propose to give to Crete get rid of Turkish rule, which has been the cause of all these evils and to reform which you entirely failed last autumn. [Cheers.] Of course, you may continue to speak of the integrity of the Turkish Empire, and the consolidation of the Turkish Empire. The question is whether that is a phrase or a reality. If it is only a phrase it does not so much signify; but let us examine what is the reality of this autonomy which you have put first in the statement of your policy. At all events, this, I hope, is clear and cannot be departed from—that the Government have arrived, and I hope those with whom they are acting have also arrived, at this conviction, that there is no reform possible in Crete except upon the condition of practically and substantially removing all Turkish authority and rule in that island. [Cheers.] If we have got so far, we have made a great advance in the solution of the Eastern Question. [Renewed cheers.] The Leader of the House said truly the other day that there are many forms of autonomy in the Turkish Empire. I think the more correct expression would be that there have been many experiments at autonomy in the Turkish Empire. The right hon. Gentleman referred to Servia. Servia is a very good illustration. In the original attempt to establish autonomy in Servia the Turkish troops were left in the country. That experiment entirely failed. It was not until the Turkish troops were removed from the country that anything like true autonomy was established in Servia. Then we all remember the experiment of Eastern Roumelia, which was loudly proclaimed as the great triumph of British policy in the Treaty of Berlin. Hardly was the ink dry upon the instrument by which the autonomy of Eastern Roumelia was established when that also disappeared; and the garrison which the Turks were to have held in the heights of the Balkans never appeared at all. ["Hear, hear!"] And Eastern Roumelia as a separate item also disappeared from the face of the arrangements in the Balkan Peninsula. All these figments of Turkish autonomy have disappeared wherever you have a real autonomy and true reforms. But at least let us know that the autonomy which you are going to establish in Crete is a real autonomy which will remove the power of the Turk at once and altogether from the island. [Cheers.] What is this autonomy to be? It is a very vague term without some definition, and we ask you to explain to us its nature. First of all, has the plan been settled? [Cheers.] That is a most important question. Or is it hung up to be settled in future by the Powers? That is a most material point on which we ought to have an answer. We have always assumed that the policy of Lord Salisbury was first to settle the autonomy beyond further dispute, and then to proceed to the measures which may be necessary to set it in operation in Crete. ["Hear, hear!"] But there has been propounded elsewhere a different policy, and that is why I put this question. It is that autonomy is not to be given first, but that you are first to put down the Cretans in Crete and expel the Greeks, and then discuss the autonomy afterwards. [Cheers.] It is impossible for two policies to be more discordant than these. Because, what may happen? You may combine to coerce first and quarrel over autonomy afterwards, so that coercion will take place and autonomy will never be realised [Cheers.] I want to know whether the policy of Lord Salisbury is, as I believe and hope, the policy of settling the autonomy first and not to proceed to the coercion until that settlement is arrived at. I would ask what form of autonomy is it that you are going to set up in Crete? I am afraid, from the statements that have been made, that you are going to set up a government which is one the Cretans do not desire. [Cheers.] They wish for union with Greece. [Renewed cheers.] You say that you will not permit that. I want to know why? [Cheers.] Can there be anything more dangerous in a situation of this kind—can there be anything less statesmanlike—when you are removing one form of government and setting up another, than to set up the new Government in a shape which is distasteful to the people who are to be governed? [Cheers.] And yet that I gather to be the policy which is about to be pursued. It is said that you desire to set up a Government like that in Samos. Well, Samos is a small island. I believe that there is a nominal Turkish Governor, and I am told that he has a guard of honour of some 20 soldiers. And that represents the integrity of the Turkish Empire in Samos. But there the population is homogeneous. They are almost all Christians; the number of Mussulmans is small. In Crete the conditions are totally different. You have a large predominant Christian population, but you have also a large Mussulman population also. ["Hear, hear!"] Therefore you must have some controlling power. A merely indigenous autonomy would still leave these two populations face to face uncontrolled; and so that the last state of that island will be worse than the first. ["Hear, hear!"] There will be no controlling power to obtain justice for the minority of Mussulmans against the majority of Christians, and I for one have no hesitation in saying that I desire protection for the minority of Moslem, as much as for the majority of Christians, for this is not a religious question in any sense of the word. But how in the world is an indigenous autonomy in Crete to keep the peace between these two parties? You have an example of similar conditions in Thessaly, where Greece has to deal with a Christian and a Mussulman population, and from all I have read the Greek Government have done their work well in Thessaly. [Cheers.] The Mahomedan population in Thessaly recognises that in the Greek Government they have a protector, and the two populations live side by side in amity and peace. There is this remarkable fact. I read the other day in the "State Papers" a document proceeding from a man who is recognised as one of the most sagacious European statesmen of this century—I mean Prince Leopold, who afterwards became King of the Belgians. He was invited to assume the throne of Greece, and he considered, with the caution and sagacity which belonged to him, what were the conditions on which alone Greece could be constituted a permanent and prosperous State. And the main thing on which Prince Leopold relied was the necessity of adding Crete to the kingdom of Greece. He argued the point in a letter to the Duke of Wellington, and for any man who wishes to understand this, which is the crux of the question, I recommend the reading of that letter of Prince Leopold's. He pointed out what would be the consequences to Greece and to Crete in the future if that union was not effected; and a more prophetic document it is impossible to conceive. You may trace in it the history of all the evils which have since occurred. It was to a very great degree, if not altogether, Prince Leopold's reason for declining the Crown of Greece; and it is because, unfortunately, the policy of the Duke of Wellington, which was very different from the policy of Mr. Canning, refused the annexation of Crete to Greece at that period, that we are confronted with the present difficulties. I have yet to understand the ground upon which the English Government are opposed to the annexation of Crete. [Cheers.] So much for the autonomy which you are going to establish in the future. But there is another and a very urgent question. What are you going to do now, and at once? What are you going to do in that sort of interregnum which you contemplate, and in which you are going to occupy and deal with the island before you establish the autonomy? I have heard it very absurdly stated that the Greek Government have been guilty of a breach of international law. That is an entire misuse of the term. The action of Greece is no breach of international law; it is something quite different. I have heard it compared to a raid. But a raid is the act of private individuals, not of a responsible Government. ["Hear, hear!"] That is filibustering. But when a responsible Government comes forward and takes part in the affairs of another country that is intervention, which may or may not result in war. It is a casus belli; but whether it result in war or not depends on the circumstances of the case. That is a perfectly accurate description of the Greek action. But what have the Powers done? They have gone to Crete; they have taken possession of the territories of the Sultan; and they have assumed to deal with them as they like and to give them to whom they like. That is an intervention at the very least. [Laughter.] I have seen that abroad it has been called a "deposit." It is a deposit in one sense. If you take from a man his purse full of money, and you take the money out of it and give it to someone else, and then return to the man "the integrity" of his purse—[laughter]—that would be the manner of dealing with the deposit, and in which it is proposed to deal with Crete. Therefore both of these operations are interventions, in the true sense of the term, and, if the Turkish Government choose to deal with them so, they are casus belli. Let us deal with this question on recognised grounds, and in the proper terminology. I want to know what you are now, and at once, going to do with Crete? As I understand, you are going to have an occupation, a condominium of the six Powers. And now comes in the statement, to which I have referred, made in another place as to how that condominium is in the interim to be worked. It is to be worked by Turkish police. [Opposition ironical cheers.] The arrangement of a disturbed country by a condominium of six Powers operating through Turkish police seems to be about as unsatisfactory a settlement as you could well have. [Cheers.] What is to happen if the six Powers are to depute the Turkish police to go into the mountains and settle the disturbances between the Mahomedan and Christian populations? I really cannot call this anything but an insane proposal. [Cheers.] Surely you can find some better instrument to pacify Crete than Turkish police acting under the joint direction of the six Powers. The whole difficulty arises from your determination not to have peace kept by the only people who could keep it. [Cheers.] I have, I hope, moderately put before the Government the points on which we require and request from them information. But I cannot sit down without asking the question which, I am sure, is in the heart of every man in whom the love of freedom breathes. I ask what, under your policy, is to be the fortune of Greece? [Cheers.] I say that is the first question in the mind of every Englishman today. [Cheers.] The deliverance of Crete from the abominable tyranny of the Turk is at last I hope proclaimed. [Cheers.] Whose work has that been? [Cheers.] I say without hesitation and without reserve that the deliverance of Crete is due to the Greek King and to the Greek people alone. [Cheers.] That King and that people have greatly dared, and they have greatly done. [Cheers.] They came to the rescue of this oppressed people who had fallen among thieves. [Cheers.] They came and played the part of the good Samaritan. [Opposition cheers and Ministerial laughter.] Yes, you may laugh, but I say they played the part of the good Samaritan while the concert of the priest and Levite passed by on the other side. [Cheers.] That work, worthy of their immortal race, will remain to them as an inheritance of imperishable fame when the laughter of the Gentlemen opposite has disappeared and I hope will be forgotten. [Cheers.] I read with anything but satisfaction the speech the other day by a Member of the Cabinet who thought it a good opportunity to jeer and sneer at the Cretans in the struggle for liberty in which they are engaged. I do not charge the Government with that spirit. I do not believe that the language of Lord Balfour of Burleigh represented the feelings of the Cabinet in this matter. But the hour of the triumph of the Greek people in the cause of others is also the crisis of their own. In the critical circumstances in which Greece is placed I feel that those to whom her fortunes are most dear ought to utter no word that should place her in danger. But this, I think, we are entitled to say, and we are bound to say—a word of solemn warning to Her Majesty's Government let them beware of the perils of the path upon which they are entering—a path in which they will not be their own masters, in which they will not be the persons to say where they shall advance or where they shall go. They may be forced by others into deeds which the conscience of the English nation will condemn. I will say no more than that we must reserve to ourselves the absolute right of judgment upon those transactions when they arise. Greece has earned for herself the right to judge of the course she shall pursue, and in the cruel position with which she is now threatened it is not for us, to whom her future is dear, to counsel her to any measures which may endanger the noble future that lies before her. She has done great things for freedom in the past, more greater than that which she has accomplished to-day, she has great things to do for freedom in the future. She has given at least autonomy to Crete, and autonomous Crete will one day—I feel assured at an early day—be joined to her Throne. [Cheers.] And by a far-sighted policy guiding her undaunted spirit she will live to fulfil that mission of emancipation upon which she has entered. [Cheers.] Her safety is the precious hope of all that are desolate and oppressed, and we may devoutly pray that she will long endure to hand on, like the torch-bearers of her classic age, the lamp of freedom which her valour has kindled, and which her wisdom may long keep alive. [Loud cheers.]

*MR. CURZON, who was received with Ministerial cheers, said: I hope that I may succeed in catching some echo of the note of dignity and of moderation which, with the exception of one passage, to which I shall presently call attention, has characterised the speech of the Leader of the Opposition. At the opening of his remarks the right hon. Gentleman addressed a few observations to myself. He complained that the Leader of the House not having acceded to a discussion upon this question on Friday last, I had taken his Friday and had presumed to make a speech elsewhere upon the same evening. The reason, if I remember aright, why the Leader of the House was unwilling to surrender Friday was because it would have interfered with the devotion of Friday night to the discussion of Supply. But so successful is that scheme, and so expeditious on Friday last was the House in the discharge of its business—a compliment which it is only rarely that one can offer it—[Opposition cries of "Oh!"]—that by nine o'clock the House had risen, and I, therefore, was at liberty to fulfil a long-standing engagement elsewhere. The right hon. Gentleman said that I gave extensive information in that speech. That certainly was not my impression nor my intention. [Laughter.] But the right hon. Gentleman has gone on to invite me to give a more ample clue this evening in a more proper place than I was then able to do. It is to that invitation that I will now respond, and I hope that in the course of doing so I may succeed in giving a different aspect to the new version of the old Scriptural story of the Samaritan and the Levite which we have had put before us this evening by the right hon. Gentleman. Whatever may be the merits, or whatever may have been the conduct of the Samaritan in this case, about which I shall have to say very little, I shall hope at any rate in the observations I have to make to prove that the Levite and the publican—[loud laughter]—I should have said the priest—have not passed by on the other side. [Laughter and cheers.] It is, I think, true that for the proper comprehension of the case before us some reference to past incidents is necessary. A big Blue-book was laid before the House yesterday. It may be said that that Blue-book contains nothing but past history; and that being so, no reference is needful to it, and that it throws very little light upon the present. I think that that is not the case, and that from even a casual perusal of that book three points stand prominently forth, which it is essential that the House should grasp in order to understand the present position. The first is this—that throughout the period which that Blue-book covers—namely, the whole of the earlier and middle portions of last year—the policy of the Government was consistently devoted, to use Lord Salisbury's words, to a thorough reconstruction of the Government of Crete, to a mitigation of the authority of the Sultan, and to the imposition, if necessary by forcible means, upon the Sultan of the necessary reforms. And I would remind the House that it was in the interest of Crete herself, and with the view of carrying out those objects, that the Government declined last year to take part in the blockade of the Cretan coasts which had then been suggested, and equally declined to embark upon those military and naval demonstrations which I remember were urged upon us by some ardent spirits in this House. The second point is this. The right hon. Gentleman has spoken with some contempt of that scheme of reforms. No doubt it is now superseded, and therefore forgotten, and it is easy to speak in a slighting manner of the dead. But it is only fair to remember that that scheme was received with more than contentment, with gratitude, by both sections in the island, and more especially by the Christian section; that 30 out of 40 Christian deputies signed the declaration to the foreign Consuls expressing their complete satisfaction with the scheme, which was more than they had expected or asked for, and signified their intention of conforming to and assisting in its execution. The third point, and upon this I cannot lay too much stress, is this—that by that scheme the Powers assumed the joint responsibility for the present and for the future of Crete, which they have ever since been discharging, and which is the explanation and basis of their conduct at this moment. In the last clause of the scheme hon. Members will find that the Powers declared that they would "assure themselves" of the execution of these reforms, and, as the autumn went on, they, in the first place, delegated their military Attachès to represent them upon the Gendarmerie Commission; they appointed delegates also upon the Judicial Commission sent to the island to reorganise the law Courts, and as soon as trouble commenced they sent their ships and their sailors to the places where distress and disorder occurred. Meanwhile at Constantinople they were dissuading the Turkish Government there from sending any reinforcements to the island; and finally, less than three weeks ago, they occupied the principal seaports on the coast. By these steps they showed that they were prepared continuously to discharge the obligations they had taken upon themselves last summer. That being so, and the Powers, having, so to speak, taken Crete out of the hands of the Turk, a fortiori they could not allow Crete to be taken by anybody else out of their hands. [Cheers.] That was the situation after the reforms had been enacted. I will not weary the House by asking them to accompany me through a tedious record of the incidents of last autumn and winter. The right hon. Gentleman says the reforms failed, but they failed because they were never allowed a chance of being carried into effect. ["Hear, hear!"] The gendarmerie, upon which so much rested, was, owing to inherent difficulties in the constitution of a foreign body, not embodied until the end of the year.

MR. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.) was understood to ask who was responsible for the creation of the gendarmerie.

*MR. CURZON: I could answer that question, but I do not think it is material. ["Hear, hear!"] The situation in the island was greatly aggravated by a lack of funds owing to the financial embarrassments in which the Government had long been involved and the difficulty of raising a loan on satisfactory terms. Meanwhile there was increasing agitation and disquiet, and, I am sorry to say, intrigue going on in the island. The old distrust between Mahommedan and Christian, which has existed in Crete now for 250 years and which is almost ineradicable from the blood of the people, revived, both parties declining, in the fear which they commonly shared, to return, the one to the villages and the other to the towns. In the meantime it is not capable of dispute that agitators continued to arrive in the island; a propaganda was conducted and the hopes of the Christians were excited by a prospect of fresh concessions. That brings us down to the end of the year. In December and January the old situation of panic, and of firing, of incendiarism and wounding, and even of massacring, had revived, and so we come to the first day of the last month. I wish to ask the attention of the House a little more closely to the incidents of this most critical month of February. On February 1 the British Consul reported that British ships were necessary for the protection of British subjects. They arrived, and I do not think any words used in this House could exaggerate the debt which is owed by both parties in that unhappy island to the exertions on the one hand of the captains and the crews of the vessels, for which my right hon. Friend the First Lord of the Admiralty is responsible—["hear, hear!"]—and, on the other hand, to Her Majesty's Consul in the island, Sir A. Biliotti, who can scarcely have slept for many weeks past, and to Colonel Chermside, who was representing the Government on the Gendarmerie Commission, and who has been practically acting as joint Consul with Sir A. Biliotti. At this time all reports agreed that the Turkish garrisons, about whom the right hon. Gentleman had had nothing favourable to say, behaved extremely well, and were held in proper control. Then we come to the events of the first and second weeks of February and the appearance of the Greeks upon the scene. It was on February 7 that a Greek ironclad and transport first arrived, their object being to protect the Greek subjects and to save from danger the Greek women and children. [Opposition cheers.] Then on February 12 there arrived the flotilla of gunboats headed by a Prince of Greece. [Opposition cheers.] On the same day a Greek ironclad, although there had been no declaration of war, fired upon a Turkish ship that was conveying Turkish forces to the relief of one of the beleaguered garrisons.

MR. DILLON: Was that before or after the burning of Canea? [Ministerial cries of "Order!"]

*MR. CURZON: The date was February 12, though I do not see the relevancy of the remark. [Cheers.] On February 16 there arrived in the island Colonel Vassos with 1,500 men, with instructions to occupy the island in the name of the King of Greece. Upon the wisdom or the reverse of the Greek proceedings, upon the motives by which they may have been actuated, I do not desire, it is clearly not my business, to say one word, but there can, I think, be no doubt whatever, from all the information we have received, that, from the first, the arrival of these Greek ships and troops greatly aggravated the situation. ["Hear, hear!"] On the one hand it excited the Christians with new hopes—[Opposition cheers]—and on the other hand it infuriated the Mahommedans and reduced them to a state of sullen rancour and almost of despair. [Opposition laughter.] As early as February 11 the Consuls and the Admirals acting together reported to their Governments that the only chance for the peace of the island lay in the withdrawal of the Greek forces; the continued abstention of the Turks, the mixed occupation of the Powers, and, finally, in the organisation of the gendarmerie and reforms in the administration. Upon the first point, the withdrawal of the Greeks, as the House knows well, the representations that were made by the Powers were without effect. [Opposition cheers.] On the second point, the influence of the Powers was successfully exerted at Constantinople to prevent any reinforcements whatever being sent to the island. The four principal seaports were occupied by detachments from the allied fleets, and the gendarmerie, having been constituted, arrived in the island, and Major Bor, as temporary commander, took up his post. Meanwhile the tension had increased in the island, and it was just about this time that those unhappy massacres took place to which I have had occasion to refer to this House, and in which the Mussulmans were the sufferers. The House will easily understand how this arose. The bulk of the Mussulmans, having fled for safety into the bigger towns on the sea coast, there were scattered communities of Mussulmans left in the interior, where the majority of the population is Christian. It is these unhappy people who were beleaguered in one place and in another, and who, from time to time, as the Christians gained the upper hand, suffered, and even in some cases were practically extinguished. Thus, when the right hon. Gentleman talks this evening about the action of Greece having brought hope and peace and goodwill to the island, and when he compares it to the action of the good Samaritan in the tale—[Opposition laughter, and an HON. MEMBER: "A tale?"]—well in the parable—[Opposition laughter and cheers]—I always thought a parable was a tale in illustration—[cheers]—I hope he will see that, while I do not desire to dispute for one moment that such may have been the object with which those troops were landed, and with which they endeavoured to conduct themselves, such has not been the consequence in its operation upon the state of society in the island. ["Hear, hear!"] I now come to what is really in itself an important incident, but which has, I think, assumed almost undue proportions in the part it has played in public attention in this country. I allude to the bombardment. [Some Opposition cries of "No!"] I suppose I may allude to the bombardment? I quite understood, with the right hon. Gentleman opposite, that we are discussing wide issues—["hear, hear!"] —and I thought that, as so much has hitherto turned on the incident of the bombardment, and as it is such a material point in the consideration of the question, I might be allowed, perhaps, as we have full information, to state to the House exactly what did occur. ["Hear, hear!"] It was on February 15 that the detachments from the ships of the Powers, 450 men, were landed at Canea. An intimation was sent on that day by the Powers to the Greek Commodore and the Greek Commander on land, and to the Cretan insurgents on the heights of Akrotiri, commanding Canea, that they had taken the town under their protection. Three days later the insurgents sent an official notification, in reply, that they intended to attack the Turkish outposts on the morrow. The Admirals reported that this would be a most menacing measure for the occupying forces, and that, should the Turkish outposts be driven in, fire would then be opened upon the position of the allied forces in the town; that the Admirals were unanimous in deciding to prevent this, and that fire from the ships would be used to check such an advance of the insurgents. The Admirals reported that such a step was necessary for the safety of their men in the town. [Cheers.] On the next day they did more. They sent an urgent remonstrance to the Greek naval and military commanders against any attack upon Canea. The Greek Commodore replied that he was not responsible for the action of the insurgents in question. Then, on the same day, February 19, we heard that the insurgents' guns were advanced and it was reported that any further advance would have to be stopped, that the Admirals were unanimous on this point, and that the step was necessary to prevent loss of life among their own people in the temporary possession of the town, which would be most probable if the investment became closer. In consequence of these messages the Admirals were authorised to assist any attack on the town—[cheers]—and consequently any censure anyone may have thought fit to bring against the Admirals must be brought against those who sit upon this Bench. ["Hear, hear!"] Then came the day of the bombardment, which was on the evening of February 21, and about which we received the information that the insurgents having renewed their attack on the south-eastern side of the town, fire had been opened from the German, Russian, Austrian, and English ships; that after a few minutes the Greek flag had been hauled down and the firing had ceased. The French and Italian ships did not fire, their guns being masked by the other ships. The only other point that has since arisen is in regard to the wounded. Fearing that there might be wounded, the Commanders asked leave to send their medical officers on shore, and were declined permission by the Greek Commodore. The House will be aware that during the last ten days I have been almost daily assailed with questions as to the incidents of this bombardment. Some points may still perhaps be in doubt, and it may therefore be for the general advantage of the House if I am permitted to read the latest information which we have received. This is the account of what actually happened from the British Admiral:—

> "Revenge at 4,700 yards fired three shells; Harrier at 3,800 yards, Dryad at 4,000 yards, fired each about six shells."

That is 15 shells in all in place of the 40 about which we heard. [Cheers.]

> "Distance of buildings occupied by insurgents from Turkish outposts 1,800 yards, the latter about 1,500 yards from the suburbs of Halepa, and these are 1,200 yards from Canea. Insurgents had commenced forward movement, without provocation, for two hours before ships opened fire, and had closed 800 to 1,000 yards on Turkish outposts. Turks were and have been throughout, absolutely passive until attacked, so much so that it is presumed that they are short of ammunition. [Laughter.] All the necessary communications with insurgents passed through Greek Commodore a few days before. Bread and flour were allowed to be landed at Akrotiri on his application, on the condition that insurgents remained passive. Last warning was passed through Greek Commodore on the day before attack."

This is an interesting and, I think, a conclusive account. We now know that the successive allegations which have played so conspicuous a part at question-time in the House for the last 10 days are for the most part entirely erroneous. ["No, no!" and "Hear, hear!"] I will summarise them. There was an allegation that the proceedings began by an attack by the Turks on the insurgents, and that I have shown to be untrue. ["Hear, hear!" and "No, no!"] There was the allegation, a very unimportant one, that the British Admiral gave the signal, and that the British Fleet fired 40 out of 70 shots. There was the allegation that the Turks fired on the wounded, and that after the bombardment the Turks continued firing, but that the Greeks and Cretans were prevented from returning the fire for fear of a renewed bombardment. All these allegations have been exploded by the information we have received; and I should like to inform the House that so far were these statements from being true that we hear that the Turks did not reply from the arsenal at Suda, although they were repeatedly fired on from the hills, and that the British Admiral and his flag lieutenant were fired on by the insurgents while they were reopening the telegraph office outside the arsenal. Now, I do not think that anybody can contend that a "people rightly struggling to be free" are to be at liberty to fire upon a British Admiral and his flag lieutenant. [Ironical cheers.] There are another half-dozen reports which have done duty during the last ten days, but they also, I am afraid, must be considered to be exploded, culminating in the story of a great massacre of Mussulmans in Sitia. These reports have been industriously circulated, but they must all be relegated to the limbo of exploded fictions. ["Hear, hear!"] Now I come to the present situation in the island, and I am afraid it is very serious indeed, and the telegrams indicate that it may become more serious still. Desultory firing has been going on in the neighbourhood of the towns, the Admirals are endeavouring to prevent each side from continuing aggressive action, and we can only hope that their efforts may be attended with good results. I apologise to the House for having detained it so long with this narrative of incidents, which, however, is not immaterial for the formation of a judgment. ["Hear, hear!"] And now I turn to the larger question raised by the speech of the right hon. Gentleman; his speech was, in fact, a question as to what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government. ["Hear, hear!"] Throughout this time of trouble that policy has been based on two main principles—first, loyalty to our obligations entered into with the other Powers of Europe—["hear, hear!"]—which we have since conscientiously discharged and to which we are not going to be faithless; and, secondly, a regard for the future of the island itself. It is for these reasons that we have contended throughout that, though in the interest of order it was highly expeditious that the Greek troops should withdraw, yet it would be impossible usefully to consider proposals for enforcing that result until the Powers had made up their mind what was to become of Crete. It is to the future of Crete our eyes throughout have been turned. In the course of the discussions with our colleagues which ensued it soon transpired that on this point, as before, the Powers were in practical agreement. I do not think there has been a breach in the absolute unanimity of action at Constantinople and at Athens. The right hon. Gentleman asked whether the assent of the Powers had been given to the scheme of policy that was put forward the other day by the right hon. Gentleman sitting on my right. Well, Sir, we have every reason to believe that the Powers are in absolute agreement.

*SIR W. HARCOURT: The phrase used by the Leader of the House was that it had not received formal assent, but that the general assent of the Powers was secured. I should be glad to know if the Government have received the formal assent.

*MR. CURZON: Yes; I think that the full assent of the Powers has been received. The right hon. Gentleman has said you are proposing to offer autonomy to Crete—what is that autonomy you are going to give, and can you give us an assurance that it will be full and complete? Sir, by autonomy the Government intend that the effective authority for internal government of the Sultan shall cease to exist in Crete—["hear, hear!"—that there shall be a government in Crete, but that that government shall not be the government of the Sultan. ["Hear, hear!"] That, I think, is the answer in a sentence to the question the right hon. Gentleman has put. There is only one other point about which the right hon. Gentleman asks, and to which it is necessary I should reply, and that is in reference to the Turkish police, as he calls them, in the island.

*Sir W. HARCOURT: It is Lord Salisbury's phrase.

*Mr. CURZON: Upon that point I think the right hon. Gentleman has perhaps not given sufficient importance to the critical nature of the situation as it now stands. When we hear of Moslem garrisons beleaguered by hostile populations it is quite obvious that there must be some force in the island until a permanent gendarmerie can take its place to save those beleaguered Moslems from the fate that otherwise awaits them; and, when slurs are, perhaps not unnaturally, cast upon the Turkish soldiery, it should be remembered that the Turkish soldiers for months past in Crete have acted with exemplary obedience, and that in Armenia and elsewhere, where Turkish soldiers have taken part in lamentable excesses, they did so under the authority and instructions of their own officers. ["Hear, hear!"] There is no reason to believe that, under proper authority and in places where there may be European supervision and control, Turkish soldiers and police are not perfectly capable of efficiently discharging the temporary duties intrusted to them. This will be, I think, only a necessary and temporary measure, which, of course, will cease to apply when the gendarmerie are ready to take their place. One other observation I have to make. The right hon. Gentleman has asked a number of questions which he will excuse me for saying it is very difficult to reply to. Let me remind him that Great Britain is only one of the six consenting parties, and that each party naturally approaches the question from its own standpoint, and has its own interests to consider. The Powers are not as six men seated at one round table, a situation which we all know is not invariably fraught with harmony—[laughter]—but they are like parties at different tables, not all round, and some, indeed, with very sharp corners. But, so far from any undue delay in the proceedings having arisen from the common action of the Powers, I submit to the House unanimity has been arrived at and action has been carried out with very reasonable speed. The right hon. Gentleman has suggested the conclusion he would prefer—annexation to Greece. ["Hear, hear!"] It is not for me to discuss that suggestion, but one thing I think at least is obvious—that, be it wise or unwise, be it right or wrong, it is, at any rate, impossible, in face of the present attitude of the Powers of Europe; and I should have thought, looking at the facts and the condition of the island, that this was the last moment when the prospect of such a step would be likely to lead to peace between the rival factions in the island. What is the only alternative to this autonomy offered? I imagine it would be that Great Britain should recede from the Concert of the Powers, and I cannot think that in any part of the House there will be a disposition to recommend that step. ["Hear, hear!"] It would not mean, in the first place, that Crete would be annexed to Greece, because we know the attitude of the other Powers; it would be encouraging Greece to persist—a step which, I think, would be absolutely wicked unless we were prepared to assist her in so doing. It would not mean war in Crete alone; it would mean war on the northern frontier of Greece, in a region where the slightest spark would kindle a wider flame. It would mean disturbances in Thessaly, and, finally, it would be good-bye to all the reforms we still look forward to carrying out. But I imagine that the real object everybody has in view is the future peace and prosperity of the island. The first condition of that prosperity is its liberation from the rule of the Turks. [Cheers.] The right hon. Gentleman has said that autonomy would not be satisfactory to the people of Crete. That is not the opinion of Her Majesty's Government. Autonomy is what the people of Crete have set before themselves for a century. It was much more than they asked for or were content to receive a year ago. We believe it now meets to the full extent their wants, and I hope that in the course of this Debate, at least, nothing may be said, and I hope nothing has been said in the course of the speech I have made, and which I am grateful to the House for having listened to for so long—[cheers]—I hope nothing has been said which may in any degree tend to retard that result. [Cheers.]

Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR (Liverpool, Scotland) thought that some parts of the speech to which the House has just listened would excite a good deal of alarm. The right hon. Gentleman had made an extremely able speech, from his own point of view; but he was very sorry that the right hon. Gentleman, while making a defence of the policy of Her Majesty's Government, had found it necessary to attack the kingdom and people of Greece. In the history which the right hon. Gentleman has given of the events which had led up to the present situation, there were some very large and grave gaps, and that part of the right hon. Gentleman's speech was calculated, and he dared say, intended, to produce the impression that if it had not been for the intervention of Greece, the condition of the people of Crete would be better than it was. He held that the intervention of Greece alone had brought about the present amelioration of the condition of things in the island. ["Hear, hear!"] The right hon. Gentleman said the reforms had been adopted, and were apparently going forward very well; but the right hon. Gentleman forgot to tell the House that the acceptance of those reforms by the people of Crete was largely due to pressure from the Government of Greece. ["Hear, hear!"] Was it not a notorious fact that the reforms were interrupted by action from Constantinople? Then, the right hon. Gentleman spoke a good deal about the gendarmerie, and from what he said the House might be led to imagine that the gendarmerie had restored peace to the island. Of all the failures in connection with the history of Crete none was so famous and so grotesque as the failure of the gendarmerie. ["Hear, hear!"] What did the correspondent of the Telegraph say that morning?

> "The Commission for the re-organisation of the European Gendarmerie met this morning, but was unable to come to any decision, as there are no funds with which to pay the men."

That was the end of this extraordinary gendarmerie the beneficent effects of which were interrupted by the invasion from Greece. In spite of all the right hon. Gentleman had said, the invasion of the island by Greece was what had led up to the present state of things. ["Hear, hear!"] He contended that the policy of the Government with regard to a blockade of Greece was right. The only fault to be found with it was that it was not consistent. From the very first Lord Salisbury had resisted a blockade of Greece; and if he wanted to form an indictment of Lord Salisbury's present policy he could not do better than to turn to Lord Salisbury's own Dispatches on the subject. The Government had now thrown in their lot with the other Powers as to the coercion of Greece. He wondered if they had asked themselves how that coercion was to be carried out? ["Hear, hear!"] In the autumn of last year Lord Salisbury was opposed to the policy of blockading Greece. The right hon. Gentleman had indicted the policy of the Greek Government, but he would call his attention to a Dispatch of Lord Salisbury's as to the conduct of Greece last autumn, in which he said that the conduct of the Greek Government had been perfectly correct—["hear, hear!"]—and that a blockade of Greece, even by the united fleets of the Powers, would be no easy matter. He was surprised that Lord Salisbury had now entered on a policy which must result in an attempt at a blockade. ["Hear, hear!"] He would ask the Government what they really intended to do with regard to the Greek force now in Crete, and how they were going to restore order there? Everyone would read with alarm the announcement that peace was to be preserved by Turkish police. Did the right hon. Gentleman deny that the soldiers who were to be employed as police were the very men whose hands were still red with the blood of Christian Armenians?

*MR. CURZON: I believe it is untrue.

MR. T. P. O'CONNOR said the right hon. Gentleman had said it was true that the Turkish soldiers committed these atrocities, but that they only did so because they were under the authority and orders of their officers. That was the force that was to keep peace in the island between Mussulmans and Christians. Furthermore, he would ask, Who was to pay those soldiers? Every correspondent in every capital in Europe declared that the one thing the Powers were determined not to do was to spend one farthing in restoring peace in Crete. This was the joyful and tranquillising information the right hon. Gentleman had to give to the world, the people of Crete, and the Government of Greece. ["Hear, hear!"] Had the right hon. Gentleman considered the position of the Greek question? The Government of Greece was no longer able to control the passions of the people.

He warned the Government of the responsibility of carrying out a policy which might drive the King of Greece from the throne which he had occupied with so much benefit to the people. How were the Powers going to get rid of the Greeks in Crete? Were they going to fire upon them or to bombard the towns on the littoral in which they had taken refuge? If the Government of this country took any part in driving out the Greek soldiers in Crete he did not think that their tenure of power would be of greater duration than that which would be allotted to the King of Greece. There was indeed only one final solution of the question—the transfer of the government of Crete to the Government of Greece. Was it not therefore unwise on the part of the Government to delay that solution, to leave the Cretans to the tender mercies of the Turkish soldiers, who only massacred when ordered to do so by their officers and chiefs. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall) said that no one would dispute the fact that the Powers had undertaken a very great responsibility with regard to the condition of Crete. The truth as to the state of affairs in the island only made it more clear how baseless and how fraudulent had been the agitation so actively propagated in this country. For the last few weeks the Mussulman inhabitants of Crete had been hunted from their homes in the interior and driven to the sea-coast towns. That had been the beginning of the trouble in Crete, and he feared that the account of their sufferings now given by the Under Secretary would prove to be understated. He believed that eventually it would be found that not a few hundreds, but thousands of Mussulmans had been massacred in the interior. He understood why it was that the Irish Members were taking part in this agitation. This Cretan movement was largely an agrarian movement inflamed by religious animosity—it was practically what would happen in Ireland if the persons whom hon. Gentlemen from Ireland represented got the upper hand. [Laughter.] The Mussulmans in Crete were the chief landowners, and the Cretan Christians were exterminating them in order to seize their land. In every Cretan revolt during the present century the Mussulmans had suffered more than the Christians, until the balance had been turned by the arrival of Turkish troops. What was the responsibility of the Great Powers with regard to Crete and the Mussulmans? During the last ten days 3,000 Mussulmans had been beleaguered in two places. Neither was more than 12 miles from the sea. The Admirals had close by 20 great warships, with 12,000 fighting men on board. They were told nine days ago the critical position of these Mussulmans. The Consuls of England, Italy, and Russia had then solemnly stated that a landing force of 300 men would be sufficient to rescue these Moslem sufferers. He asked the Government why that force had not been landed? If they allowed the Mussulmans to be massacred wholesale in Crete, how could the sympathisers of the Christians complain if the Mussulmans retaliated in other parts of the Empire? It was for the interest of the Christians throughout the Ottoman Empire that these beleaguered Mussulmans in Crete should be rescued. It was by no means certain that the Cretans desired union with Greece; he believed the majority of the Cretans would prefer independent autonomy under the suzerainty of the Sultan to union with Greece. The action of the Greek Government had been taken not to obtain reforms for Crete, not for Cretan autonomy, but to prevent Crete from enjoying autonomy. ["Oh, oh!"] He was not satisfied with the international law and authorities of the Leader of the Opposition, for he believed that he had higher authorities behind him than the right hon. Gentleman to support the view that the invasion of territory of a foreign State without declaration of war in time of peace was an act of piracy. The whole of the agitation in this country was fraudulent, no doubt unintentional on the part of many of its supporters, who looked upon Greece as an heroic little Power struggling to obtain liberty for an oppressed people. The real fact was the reverse of this. The Greeks had attacked the Turkish power in an island where they knew they were safe from retaliation, and in order to prevent the Cretans from obtaining the autonomy which they desired. The power of the Sultan and the strength of the Turkish forces had been previously reduced by the influence of the Great Powers. The Greek Government were not moved by the noble motives alleged; they desired to prevent Cretan autonomy, and by interfering in this unprovoked and aggravating way when the hands of the Turks were tied, they had turned a peaceful and orderly settlement into a perfect pandemonium of bloodshed and massacre. No attempt had been made by the Leader of the Opposition to prove the statement that the application of reforms had been prevented by the Turkish Government. Indeed, an official denial on the part of the Government had been given to this view by the Under Secretary of State in his speech before the United Club on Friday last. There was no foundation for the statement that the Turkish Government in this matter had behaved otherwise than in good faith. He believed that the Turkish Government were not at all averse to see autonomy established in Crete, if the rights of the Mussulman population, as well as those of the Christian, could be secured. Crete had long been a costly burden to Turkey, and but for the fact that the Sultan felt bound in honour to protect his Mussulman subjects in Crete—who would, as present events showed, be exposed to outrage and massacre if Turkish authority was withdrawn—Crete would have been abandoned long ago. He hoped that the Powers would insist on international law being respected, and would secure autonomy and good government for Crete, while on the other hand teaching Greece that piratical expeditions of this kind could not be allowed. He maintained that the Turkish soldiers were among the best disciplined forces in the world. During the Russo-Turkish war, as several hon. Gentlemen opposite knew, they behaved in a most exemplary way towards non-combatants on the other side. He questioned very much whether it could be proved that any organised body of Turkish soldiers took part in the outrages in Armenia—[cries of "Oh, oh!"]—and under suitable leadership they could not find a better body of troops for maintaining order and for purposes of policing than Turkish troops. Hon. Members opposite did not care how many Mussulmans were sacrificed. [Opposition cries of "Oh!" and an HON. MEMBER: "How much do you care for Christians being massacred?" [Opposition cheers.] He felt very deeply indeed for the events that took place in Armenia, and the only reason the hon. Gentleman made that observation was because he had declined to express sympathy for sham atrocities in Sassun which never happened. ["Oh!"] The moment he was satisfied there were terrible deeds in Armenia in the last three months of 1895, that moment he expressed his extreme horror and regret. He had done his best to secure a better state of things for the unfortunate Armenians, and that in a more practical way than the reckless vituperation of hon. Members opposite. He denied that the failure of the scheme of reforms proposed and practically carried out by the Powers was due to the Turkish Government. The failure was attributable to the fact that Greek secret societies set to work immediately, flooded the country with agitators and arms, stirred up race and religious feelings in the island, and started in the western districts savage risings by which the Mussulman inhabitants were driven to the coast. That was the cause of the turmoil and disturbance. The Austrian Government foresaw the danger, and made a most sensible proposal last September to keep arms and agitators out of Crete by means of a naval cordon. That would have averted all the present trouble. Now we should have to blockade not only Crete, but Greece as well, when it was too late. The Leader of the Opposition spoke in favour of the expropriation of Turkish authority in Crete. Did the right hon. Gentleman and his friends mean to drive the whole of the Mussulman population out of Crete, because, if the island were handed over to Greece, and Colonel Vassos was left in charge, the whole of the 70,000 Mussulman inhabitants would be exterminated? If the Cretans had a few years of autonomy it was very doubtful if they would desire union with Greece. They had proved themselves the most turbulent people in the East, and the best thing which could happen would be an autonomy for the Cretans under the sanction and control of the Great Powers, which would put an end to the condition of anarchy that had prevailed too long. During the last four months he maintained that the provocation had come from the Christian population, and that the action of Greece had caused scenes of rapine and massacre. It was only by the intervention and the enforcement of order by the Great Powers that this appalling state of anarchy and bloodshed could be brought to an end.

MR. R. B. HALDANE (Haddingtonshire) observed that the hon. Member for the Yildiz division of Constantinople—[Opposition laughter and Ministerial cries of "Oh!"]

*SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: I rise to order. I must ask you, Sir, whether a personal reference of that kind is permissible?

*MR. SPEAKER: I do not think the hon. Member is exceeding the limits of Debate. [Opposition cheers.] I do not think the observation was in the nature of a personal insult. [Opposition cheers and Ministerial cries of "Withdraw!"]

MR. HALDANE rose to proceed with his speech, but was received with Ministerial cries of "Withdraw!"

*MR. SPEAKER: I have already said that I did not think the hon. Member had exceeded the limits of Debate. If I thought he had I would have called upon him to withdraw. [Opposition cheers.]

MR. HALDANE could assure the hon. Member he did not intend any personal reflection. He observed that this was the first occasion upon which the hon. Gentleman had received any symptom of assent from hon. Members sitting around him. His speech had been listened to in silence, not even the Member for King's Lynn being present to throw the light of his countenance upon him. [Laughter.] He desired to associate himself unreservedly with the sentiments which were expressed in dignified language by the Leader of the Opposition as regarded the future of the relations of Crete to Greece. They on that side of the House, at any rate, and, perhaps, many on the other, desired and hoped that the time might come when that natural union of the island, which never should have been dissevered from the mother country, should take place once more. However that might be, the natural sentiment of the people of this country, they knew that at the present time they were face to face with a situation in which their hands were not wholly free. There was impatience on that side of the House with what was called the Concert of Europe, because they thought it prevented this country from having free action. His first observation on that was that the action of the Concert of Europe had not been by any means an ineffective action in the past. It was by means of the Concert of Europe that Mr. Canning succeeded in realising the great ideas with which his name was indissolubly associated in their memory. It was the Concert of Russia, France, and England that fought the battle of Navarino, and emancipated Greece from Turkish rule. It was by the Concert of Europe that the Treaty of Berlin was passed, and the Balkan States freed from oppression, and he did not think that even now in Montenegro and Servia they would find any disposition to cavil at the work of the Berlin Treaty. ["Hear, hear!"] What would be the position of this country if we broke away from the Concert of Europe and set ourselves to work out the emancipation of Crete with such aid as we possessed standing by ourselves? Was the agreement between the Powers as to the future of Turkish rule in Crete an instrument we should be called upon to give up at the present time? The question of Crete could not be isolated from the rest of the Eastern Question. He was glad to hear of the proposed autonomy for Crete. If we and the Powers concerned were in earnest—and there was no reason to think the latter were not—the present difficulty would be solved and matters left open for the future union of Greece and Crete. The assurance as to keeping Turkish police in Crete was not wholly satisfactory. We stood at a time which was indeed critical, when a false step might cause mischief. [Ministerial cheers.] The insular tone of the speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Egypt the other day was a tone which exposed us to the danger of other Powers seizing on the opportunity to put us in difficulty on other questions, and if we broke away form the Concert of Europe now, who knew but that we might get a Collective Note which might raise questions even more difficult than those we had to face at present. So he was glad to see Her Majesty's Ministers assuming a friendly attitude towards other Powers, and by no vote of his would he put any difficulty in their way. But our present relations to other Powers must not be the be-all and end-all at which we should aim. There was a future for Greece—the only Liberal country in that part of the world—a country with which some of the noblest sentiments were associated—and he used the word "Liberal" in relation to it in a much wider sense than it was commonly used on those benches—a country which had aspirations the most nearly akin to our own. It was hoped that Greece had still before it another great future, and that as part of that future they might see it reach a condition of honourable and effective government in the East of Europe and embrace in its territory the island of Crete, which never should have been taken from it. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. LEONARD COURTNEY (Cornwall, Bodmin) remarked that it had been truly said by the Leader of the Opposition that the step taken last week was a step unexampled in Parliamentary procedure in respect of diplomatic and foreign negotiations. The Foreign Minister of the Crown had communicated a scheme of action to our allies, and before obtaining their formal assent, both Houses received a message indicating what was proposed. What was the meaning of this step? It appeared to himself that Lord Salisbury took action similar to his action last year in respect to arbitration, in indicating the kind of policy he proposed, and inviting the opinion of Parliament and the country upon the policy, so that he might know with what force he could go in council with the United States on that subject, and on this occasion into council with Europe with respect to Crete. The House was therefore answering the question of the Government—whether Parliament was prepared to support them in the policy they had indicated, and to which the Government were, to a certain degree, committed. The hon. and learned Member who had just spoken had intimated that for himself he was prepared to support the policy which Lord Salisbury had indicated. He himself was strongly disposed to sympathise with Lord Salisbury in his foreign policy. In many transactions it had been a policy of which he altogether approved. [Cheers.] His action when the proposal came to blockade Greece and prevent the movement of men and munitions of war from Greece to Crete was altogether admirable. But the policy of Lord Salisbury in that respect was a policy to depart from the Concert of Europe. For some days Lord Salisbury and England were the subjects of unmeasured vituperation. England was held up to obloquy because Lord Salisbury refused to join in a policy which would have left the Cretans open to the action of the Turks. In looking back on the past he observed that Lord Salisbury had not always agreed with what had been the policy of the other countries of Europe in respect to these matters. What was the situation now? At the end of last year a scheme of reform was drawn up for the government of Crete. That scheme had failed. The hon. Member below him said that it failed owing to the intrigues of the Greeks, who desired it to fail, and stated that there was no evidence to the contrary. The evidence might be judged by some to be worthy of acceptance, by others of rejection; but, at all events, there was the evidence of the gentleman who was appointed by the Sultan himself to be the Governor of Crete. At all events, there was evidence of a continuous character that the scheme of reforms which was adopted by the Powers and promulgated last autumn had been thwarted and prevented in consequence of the Sultan himself using all his powers to prevent its being successfully carried on. The Powers tried their best, and they failed because there were troublesome persons in the world who insisted on spurring one onwards to do more than was perhaps consistent with prudence. Having failed, the Powers acknowledged their fault, and another policy had now been put forward, and the question was whether the present policy could obtain success. The hon. and learned Member who had just spoken had referred to the present policy, but had omitted to touch upon what was the critical question upon which he conceived the whole chance of success depended. They were going to establish, or try to establish, an administrative autonomy in Crete, and in pursuit of that design they were going to insist that the Greek and Turkish troops when required should retire. We could not always have our own way, and the real question, so far as he could see, was what was to be done supposing that the retirement was not so easily effected. [Opposition cheers.] They might address their moral suasion to both parties, and say that it was extremely inconvenient to precipitate a crisis which might cause a European war; they might say that their plans were such that if carried out faithfully they would give good government to Crete. But what if the Greek and Turkish troops did not retire? [Opposition cheers.] What was the European Concert going to do if both refused to retire? He was inclined to think that when Lord Salisbury suggested to the European Powers the policy that these troops should retire when required—laying great stress on the words "when required"—he reserved to himself considerable discretion as to the conditions under which the order should be given requiring them to withdraw. If that could be done peacefully by moral force there was much to be said in favour of maintaining the Concert of Europe by such a process; but if it was to be done by an act of war against Greece, then, he ventured to think, the question would seriously arise whether the United Kingdom must not retire from the Concert of Europe in connection with that. [Loud Opposition cheers.] It was very dangerous to utter such an opinion now, he knew. [Ministerial cheers.] He had not spoken without much deliberation. He knew it might be said, perhaps with some truth, that the Greeks by such utterances would be encouraged to persevere and to remain. [Ministerial cheers.] But let them observe the alternative. Why had Lord Salisbury put this policy before them? Was it to obtain for them such a concurrence of opinion that if the occasion arose they would be bound to support the use of force against Greece and to support an act of war? If they doubted whether we should be called upon so to act, now was the moment to express that doubt. [Opposition cheers.] They would be open to just censure of a very severe kind if now, by their silence as much as by their words, they encouraged the other Powers to believe that this country would join in an act of war against Greece, and encouraged Lord Salisbury to think that he would be supported by unanimous public opinion in such an act of war. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not think that Lord Salisbury held that opinion himself, nor that he relied upon a unanimous public opinion, or even upon a preponderance of public opinion, in support of such a policy. He thought Lord Salisbury distrusted the future in respect of that question. Although it might seem that he left the problem still unsolved in saying that it must depend in a large measure on the conduct of other Powers, and particularly on the conduct of Greece, he still thought they would be open to the severest condemnation if they kept silence at this crisis and allowed it to be supposed for one moment that we should not hesitate, and hesitate long, before allowing Lord Salisbury to carry them in concert with the other Powers into a war against Greece—["hear, hear!"]—or if they kept silence and allowed Lord Salisbury to imagine that he would be supported by anything like the concurrence of public opinion if the action he had now initiated should lead to such a result. The hon. and learned Member who had just sat down had not considered this contingency. If they did not look this contingency in the face, that discussion was worse than useless. His right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition had not said much about it, but he himself had introduced it, and he hoped it might be faced, in one sense or the other, by those who followed him. [Cheers.]

MR. HENRY LABOUCHERE (Northampton) said the right hon. Gentleman had spoken with his usual judicial independence. It could not be said, however, that in his speech he was a very warm supporter of the policy of Lord Salisbury. He was surprised at the way in which the right hon. Gentleman had been interrupted by his own side, as though nobody sitting on that side of the House might venture to criticise the Unionist Government. Hon. Gentlemen should have taken an example from the way in which they on that side met the speech of his hon. and learned Friend the Member for Haddington. He did not think a stronger speech than that in favour of the policy of the Government could possibly be made. His hon. and learned Friend was so zealous against the present policy of the Liberal Party that he positively went out of his way to attack a speech made by his right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition.

MR. HALDANE said he had entirely agreed with the speech of the Leader of the Opposition as to what they would like to do, but he was in agreement with the Government, inasmuch as they were doing the only thing that could be done. [Ministerial cheers.]

MR. LABOUCHERE thought his hon. and learned Friend had made an attack upon the Leader of the Opposition in stronger terms, and had protested against his making reckless speeches on the ground that they ought to limit themselves to considering what it was possible to do, and that, therefore, the honest, intelligent, and able Government —[laughter]—ought not to be blamed. He confessed that he himself was going to find fault with his right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition. [Laughter.] He entirely agreed with the Under Secretary of State that his right hon. Friend was wrong in comparing them to the Levite and the priest, and the Greeks to the Samaritan. The priest and the Levite went on their way; they did not bombard or blockade the man who had fallen amongst thieves. [Laughter.] The Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs relied upon the very old history contained in the Blue-book. The right hon. Gentleman thought it better to found his defence of the Government on what the Government were inclined to do two years ago than on what they were doing at present. It was no answer to the complaint that we had bombarded the Cretans to say that we had refused to blockade Crete a year ago. The right hon. Gentleman had said that the Great Powers had taken Crete out of the hands of the Turks and therefore that no one had a right to take Crete out of their hands. But it should be rembered that Crete belonged to the Cretans. [Cheers.] The destinies of Crete ought to depend upon the wishes of the Cretans, and he was not surprised that they should desire to throw off the last link of Turkish rule and join with their fellow-countrymen in the kingdom of Greece. The right hon. Gentleman said that all the disturbances in Crete were owing to agitators who were sent over by Greece. Had the right hon. Gentleman any proof of that?

*Mr. GIBSON BOWLES (Lynn Regis): Any amount. [Laughter.]

Mr. LABOUCHERE: Can the right hon. Gentleman give us chapter and verse?

*Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: I can give the hon. Gentleman chapter and verse. [Laughter.]

Mr. LABOUCHERE: No, no! I will not have them from you. [Renewed laughter.] The Under Secretary had given another and a much better reason for the disturbances. The right hon. Gentleman explained that the international gendarmerie proposed to be established had not been established, and that consequently the Cretans were left to the tender mercies of the Turkish garrisons. He could understand that under these circumstances the Cretans, dreading further atrocities, had broken out into rebellion, and he thought they were right in doing so. [Cheers.] The Under Secretary then went on to talk of having exploded 12 fictions contained in questions that had been addressed to him from the Opposition side of the House. The chief question was whether 40 shells had been fired upon the Cretans, and the right hon. Gentleman assured the House that only 15 shells had been fired. It was a small matter whether 40 or 15 shells had been fired. The fact remained that shells had been fired, and it was against that that they protested. [Cheers.] The right hon. Gentleman had said with regard to the bombardment that the Cretans advanced after they had been told that they must not advance, and that therefore the Admirals had a perfect right to fire upon them. Then again the right hon. Gentleman says that it was an exploded fiction that the Turkish troops issued from the towns held by the International Forces and retired again to those towns after they had attacked the Greeks. But in the protest, dated Feb. 24th, sent by the Greek Government to the Powers, the following description of what had occurred was given:—

> "The Turks, under the protection of the Great Powers around Canea, have attacked the Christians encamped at Froudia, and having defeated them the Christians were about to occupy the advanced posts abandoned by the Turks; therefore the Admirals believed it to be their duty to fire upon Christians who were coming up to help against the aggressors, who were supported by two Turkish ships anchored near the fleets. Thus the Turks fired from their position on the land and the ships fired from the sea, and they had the assistance of the foreign fleets.
>
> "The following day the Turks attempted the same procedure, hoping to provoke a fresh bombardment by the fleets. It is only the calmness of the Christians which avoided a similar scene of atrocity. It was noticed that the bombardment was preceded by a visit of the Turkish military commandant of the Admiral, after which the European cannons immediately opened fire upon the Christians."

That statement, derived from the Greek Admiral on the spot, and from the Greek Consul had been supported by all the newspaper correspondents, including the correspondent of The Times. Therefore the Under Secretary had not exploded what he was pleased to call the fiction in regard to the bombardment. The statement that the Turkish troops emerged from the towns, attacked the Greeks or Cretans and then withdrew, was supported by a telegram from Reuter's agent at Canea that morning. The right hon. Gentleman said that the origin of all this was that the Greeks had the effontery to send ships into Cretan waters, and that one of their ships stopped a transport carrying Turkish troops to Crete.

*Mr. CURZON: It was not carrying Turkish troops to Crete, but carrying Turkish troops from one end of the island to the other.

Mr. LABOUCHERE said the right hon. Gentleman then went on to explain that there was no necessity for Greece to have done this, because, subsequently to this, the Great Powers had urged at Constantinople that no fresh troops should be sent to Crete.

*Mr. CURZON: I must have expressed myself unintelligibly. The hon. Gentleman is quite wrong. A long time before this incident in Cretan waters the Ambassadors had constantly urged at Constantinople that it would not be wise to send troops to the island—[cheers]—and, as a matter of fact, not a single transport was sent to the island. The transport that was stopped by the Greeks was removing Turkish troops from one end of the island to the other.

Mr. LABOUCHERE said he thought the Greeks had a perfect right to stop the transport. [Cheers and laughter.] His hon. Friend, the Member of Haddington, had said there was no stain upon the honour of this country from what had occurred at the bombardment. [Ministerial cheers.] That, no doubt, was the view of hon. Gentlemen opposite, but on the Opposition side of the House they were almost all agreed, probably with the sole exception of his hon. Friend the Member for Haddington, that there had been a stain put upon the honour of this country by the bombardment of the Cretan troops. [Cheers.] Some hard facts remained, and he did not think that any amount of talking on the other side of the House would get over them. The Armenians were massacred for more than a year. During all that time the Ambassadors, like a number of old women, twaddled and twaddled over a table at Constantinople—[laughter]—and all the while the Sultan had a free hand. The Ambassadors explained the difficulties of the situation in Armenia, but they referred to their magnum opus in Crete. There, at least, they said they had introduced a good sound system of reform. But had that system of reform, the magnum opus of the Great Powers, produced the result they anticipated in Crete? After all the agitation in this country in favour of the Christians in Turkey, after all the denunciations of the Sultan at meetings throughout the country, attended not only by the Liberals but by Conservatives, the fact remained that all we had done was that we had fired upon the Cretans, and that we intended to coerce the Greeks into leaving the island. [Cheers.] With regard to the future what he wanted to know was what the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Bodmin wanted to know, were we going to join the Great Powers in coercing the Greeks if they do not leave Crete, and if they refuse to submit to the will of the Great Powers? If we were not prepared to do so, we ought, at once, to tell the Great Powers. [Cheers.] We had no right to sign Joint Notes sent on behalf of the Great Powers to Greece, and saying that we would coerce the Greeks if they did not retire from Crete, if it was not our intention to do anything of the kind. [Cheers.] They were told that the Concert of Europe might break up. For his part he did not care if the Concert did break up. [Cheers and laughter.] In this matter of the Eastern Question we had ever been the evil genius of Europe. We had forced Europe into war in order to maintain the integrity of the Turkish Empire. What had we done in the case of Crete? In 1867, when the Cretans had vanquished the Turks and were almost independent, the Concert of Europe wanted to give autonomy to the Cretans? Who stopped it? We, and we alone, stopped it. [Cheers.] And then we talked about using the Concert of Europe. We stood to the Concert when it acted as we wished, and retired from it when it did not. But now we were absolutely told that we were to commit what would unquestionably be an atrocious and wicked crime. [Cheers.] We were to drive the Greeks out of Crete if they would not go of their own accord, in order that the Concert of Europe should not be broken down. The Government had no right to drag this country into an infamous attack on civilisation and humanity. [Cheers and ironical cheers.] The Under Secretary said that after the Greeks had been turned out the Cretans were for a time to be left to the tender mercies of the Turkish gendarmerie, and that the Turkish gendarmerie could be depended on because they would obey their officers. But Turkish officers and soldiers were united in attacking the Armenians, and they would also unite in attacking the Christians in Crete. He would admit that the Christians often attacked the Turks; but the Mussulmans always forced the soldiery and gendarmerie to side with them, their co-religionists; and in any disturbances between Mahomedans and Christians in Turkey the troops always ended their interference by helping to massacre the Christians. One thing must be made as clear as possible. The Government might carry out their policy by means of their majority —[Ministerial cheers]—but it was not the policy of the country. [Cheers and cries of "Oh!"] It was not the policy of the united country. It was the policy of the Unionist Party. The Opposition protested against it, and regarded it as the greatest crime we could commit to attack the Greeks in this fashion. [Cheers.] Liberals all over the country, with the single exception of the hon. Member for Haddington—[laughter]—were opposed to the Government of this country—[ironical cheers and laughter] —siding with the Turks against the Christians; and that the Government had certainly done. [Cries of "No!"] It was really a little too absurd—[ironical cheers]—of hon. Members opposite to say, after we had fired at the Cretans in order to protect Canea from their attack, that we had not sided with the Turks. [Cries of "No!"] Should we be told that we were not siding with the Turks if, as Lord Salisbury had announced, we used force to compel the Greeks to retire? [Cheers.] The policy of Her Majesty's Government might be in accordance with the views of hon. Members opposite and of their constituents, but it was entirely contrary to the views of hon. Members on the Opposition side of the House, and to the views of those whom they represented. [Cheers.]

MR. T. W. LEGH (Lancashire, Newton) said that the Debate had been opened by the Leader of the Opposition in a speech of unusual moderation, but it was marred by an unfortunate reference to the Concert of Europe. The right hon. Gentleman forgot that the Concert which he described as a concert of "Priests and Levites" was re-established by the Government of Mr. Gladstone in 1880 for the purpose of coercing the Turk. Truly, it existed now not solely for that purpose, but also for the purpose of maintaining European peace. The hon. Member for Northampton attacked the Government for taking the side of the Turks. A more unfounded accusation had never been brought against the Government. As the Blue-book showed, this was the only Power which had been consistently friendly to the Cretan cause. After an immense amount of trouble the Powers elaborated a scheme of reforms which was gladly accepted both by Mussulmans and Christians. There was the authority of the Under Secretary for the fact that from that moment the Greek revolutionary societies deliberately set to work to bring about the present condition of things. What had the Powers done? They allowed a Greek expedition under the command of a Greek Prince to land in Crete; and they allowed provisions and munitions to be landed; but, when the insurgents fired on the Marines of the Powers they naturally drew the line. The important part of the speech of the Leader of the Opposition was that in which he pronounced emphatically in favour of the annexation of Crete by Greece. He himself saw very little to admire in the action of the Greeks. Their action in forcing this crisis was unpardonable. If they had only waited a few years Crete would inevitably have fallen to them. The final break-up of the Turkish Empire might not be very long. The Turks had already lost command of the sea; and if the Cretans declared in favour of the union with Greece the Turks could not prevent it. But there were serious objections to the policy of annexation. The bloodless revolution in Eastern Roumelia in 1886 very nearly precipitated a European war. But for the promptitude of Lord Salisbury and Sir W. White it would have been difficult to prevent a general conflagration in the Balkan Peninsula. War did break out between

Servia and Bulgaria, and was only stopped by the interposition of Austria. If the Greeks were allowed to take possession of Crete merely because it was a desirable possession, their example would be followed by other countries. Servia, Bulgaria, and Montenegro would claim to take possession of territory. The Turk was not so effete that he would not fight for his European possessions, and the result would be war in the Balkan Peninsula. Sooner or later Austria would be drawn in, and then it would merely be a matter of days before Russia followed. The Leader of the Opposition did not believe in this eventuality, which, however, was not baseless in the eyes of those best acquainted with European politics, though they might not be supported by Mr. George Russell and the leaders of the Liberal Forward policy. He declined to believe that the right hon. Member for the Forest of Dean looked forward without alarm to a crisis being brought about in Constantinople. Nor was he disposed to think that Lord Rosebery would regard such an event with equanimity. Hon. Members opposite, and also the Leader of the Opposition, had cast doubt on the efficiency of the Concert of Europe. What they had to consider in the present instance was whether it was worth the risk of a European war on account of sentimental admiration for Greece. ["Hear, hear!" and Opposition laughter.] For his part he declared most emphatically that it was not. At the present time, despite the insinuations of hon. Gentlemen opposite, he believed the Powers were in agreement, and that not one of them approved of the action of Greece. ["Hear, hear!"] If any one of the Great Powers showed any signs of hesitation, or of retiring from the Concert, what was already a difficult situation might at once become a most dangerous one; and, in conclusion, he would venture to suggest that those who, apparently with a light heart, were going to take part in a Division that would amount to a Vote of Censure on the Government, would thereby incur a very grave responsibility. [Cheers.]

*MR. HERBERT GLADSTONE (Leeds, W.), who was received with cheers, said he should be glad to see perfect unity among the European Powers, if it was thought that that unity would produce good and lasting results. But they had yet to wait for that happy consummation. How could the Powers be agreed when they did not know what was going to happen, or what shape the negotiations now going on would ultimately take? The difficulty in discussing the matter on the present occasion was the lack of information. He did not blame the Government for that. But the Government told them that they were proposing to set up autonomy in Crete. How were they going to do it? He did not think the Government knew themselves. ["Hear, hear!"] They were told that the Turkish gendarmerie were to be employed in Crete. Were the gendarmerie to be police, or were they to be Turkish soldiers acting as such, and were they to be under Turkish officers, and, if so, who was to control the Turkish officers? [Cheers.] Suppose Crete firmly rejected the proposals of the Powers, was it proposed to coerce the Cretans as well as Greece? [Cheers.] If, so, how was it to be done? Was it to be done by Turkish soldiers or the gendarmerie, or by sending British soldiers? [Cheers.] Did the Government contemplate with equanimity the prospect of diverting the Guards from Gibraltar and sending them to Greece to force upon her an autonomy which the Cretans might not want? [Cheers.] He did not agree with the hon. Member for Haddington that the Concert of Europe had done as much as he claimed. The hon. Member began by carrying them back to the Treaty of Berlin and to the freedom which was given to various countries which, until then, were under the dominion of the Turk, and he exclaimed, "See what the Concert of Europe did then?" But the hon. Member was altogether in error in taking that view. It was Russian action—[cheers]—sole and isolated action, which brought about that happy result. [Cheers.] Unfortunately the action of Russia as set forth in the Treaty of San Stefano was curtailed at Berlin by the Concert of Europe. ["Hear, hear!"] The hon. Member for the Newton Division had carried the matter a step later, and in arguing in favour of the concert of Europe alluded to events of importance in 1880. The hon. Member referred, he presumed, to the final cession of Thessaly to Greece, and to the extension of Montenegrin boundaries, but was he sure that the Concert of Europe was so effective on that occasion as he seemed to think? He should have thought that happy result was due rather to the action of England. It was true that on that occasion Russia co-operated with England. But two or three of the Great Powers stood altogether aloof. ["Hear, hear!"] He would not say for a moment that the Concert of Europe was not a great instrument for effecting national purposes in European policy. If an important thing was to be done in Europe it followed that the more Powers that could unite to compel that it should be done the better. ["Hear, hear!"] That was obvious; but if now one among the six Great Powers of Europe actuated by a selfish motive and by threatening a little opposition reduced the European Concert to impotence, then the alleged Concert of Europe might become a disgrace to Europe itself. ["Hear, hear!"] They had been told for three years past what the Concert of Europe was to do. They had waited patiently and were still waiting for some definite result, but the Concert had done nothing up to the present time. ["Hear, hear!"] It had yet to justify its existence. What happened last year when the proposal was made—he thought by Austria—to blockade Crete? Lord Salisbury himself—as the right hon. Member for Bodmin had pointed out—then departed from the European Concert by telling the Powers that he would be no party to such a proposal. If the Prime Minister could act apart from the Concert of Europe in one respect he could act apart from it in another. He repeated that up to the present time the Concert of Europe had effected no positive or lasting result, not even in relieving the Armenians. ["Hear, hear!"] Therefore, he and those hon. Members who agreed with him looked upon the Concert of the Powers with grave suspicion. He could understand the policy of the Government up to a certain point. They had committed themselves over and over again with regard to other Powers to maintain the Concert of Europe, and bound themselves hand and foot by making the integrity of the Turkish Empire one of the mainstays of their policy. ["Hear, hear!" and Ministerial dissent.] The maintenance of the integrity was mentioned in the Queen's Speech, and it was impossible for right hon. Gentlemen opposite to deny that it was one of the mainstays of their policy. He was much pleased, however, that evening, when he heard the right hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs say that the first condition of the good government of Crete was the liberation of the island from the rule of the Turk. ["Hear, hear!"] With that sentiment he heartily agreed, but he confessed that he utterly failed to perceive how it could be associated or reconciled with the object of preserving the territorial integrity of the Turkish Empire. ["Hear, hear!"] Years ago the Tory policy was the preservation of the territorial and political integrity of the Turkish Empire, but if that policy as exemplified in the Treaty of Berlin was to recur he did not mind whether the Tory Government went in for Turkish integrity or not. But as far as the policy of the Government in Crete was concerned, the best that could happen would be that the history of Wallachia and Moldavia should be repeated. The Powers in that case were agreed. In 1857 they set up two Assemblies, one in Wallachia and another in Moldavia. The two Assemblies met and resolved to unite and set up an independent Roumania. The Powers assembled in Paris, and to save their dignity decided that they must adhere to their action and again set up the two Assemblies. Then Wallachia and Moldavia decided to elect Prince Alexander, and so they were united through their head. Subsequently they again decided to have one Assembly. They proclaimed their unity, and Europe, completely baffled, acquiesced. [Opposition cheers.] Did Europe get much satisfaction out of that? If some such result happened in the case of Greece we should welcome it, but it would reflect no credit on this country. ["Hear, hear!"] It was premature to express a final judgment upon the matters before them—[Ministerial cheers]—and he had not done so. In the first place they did not know what action Greece was going to take, and that was a most important factor in the matter. They did not know, and he did not believe the Government knew, what were the real views of the Cretans themselves; and, further, they did not know what exact shape the proposals for autonomy were going to take. Personally, he would not be a party to that policy, indicated to a certain extent by the action of the warships off Canea; he would not be a party to the coercion of Greece. [Opposition cheers.] He agreed with the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Bodmin that all these years the Powers had done nothing. Greece had acted with promptitude, with decision, and with success, and by her action she had forced the hand of Europe, and Europe was labouring heavily in the rear. Because Greece had done what Europe ought to have done—[Opposition cheers]—he would have no part whatever in coercing her. She had done great service to the cause of liberty in Europe, and deserved the gratitude of every Britisher. [Opposition cheers.]

*MR. VICARY GIBBS (Hertfordshire, St. Albans) said the hon. Member for Leeds asked whether if the Cretans declined to accept autonomy, we should attempt to coerce them. If they objected to any such control by the Powers as would prevent their fighting with one another, assassinating one another, and causing a danger to the peace of Europe, he sincerely hoped the Great Powers of Europe would coerce her. Then the hon. Member for the Scotland Division of Liverpool said the Under Secretary had made an attack upon the kingdom of Greece. He did not think the speech of the right hon. Gentleman justified such a charge. It was only fair they should assume that the Government had not only better means of judging who was to blame than any private Member could possibly have, and that they were more likely to approach the matter from an impartial standpoint. The hon. and learned Member for Haddington said he longed to see the day when Crete would be reunited to the kingdom of Greece. When in the world's history had there been a kingdom of Greece to which Crete belonged? Never. Who were the gentlemen who were rousing the sentimental enthusiasm of hon. Gentlemen opposite? Who were these Levantines who called themselves Greeks? ["Oh!"] They were a mixture of Albanians, Franks, Slavs, and everybody except Greeks. There were no men of Greek blood on the mainland, whatever there might be in Crete. They were gone over and over again. What was there in the history of these people to arouse enthusiasm? Did hon. Gentlemen like fraudulent bankruptcy? ["Oh, oh!"] Oh, let them have the truth! He would suggest some test-books. Let them read "The War of Greek Independence," by a respectable Scotchman, Mr. Finlay. The Greeks, carrying out their national aspiration for the acquisition of other people's property without paying for it, stole some of Mr. Finlay's property in Athens. [Laughter.] If hon. Gentlemen did not like a Scotchman's view of the Greeks, let them take that of an able Frenchman in Le Roi des Montagnes, an amusing satire, which gave a very fair picture of the modern Greek character. Or let them turn from the romantic to the more prosaic Stock Exchange Year Book. [Laughter.] Greece had done nothing either in the recent or long past to show that there was any advantage whatever to be gained by increasing the territory which was placed under its Government. There were many people on the Continent as warm friends of liberty as any hon. Gentleman who sat on the opposite benches, but they did not desire to place the Cretans under Greek rule, and there was not a jot or tittle of evidence that the Cretans desired to be put under Greek rule. What he desired to see was that the Government, when they had to choose between bad Government in Turkey and thoroughly dishonest Government in Greece, should have consideration neither for one nor the other. He believed an administrative autonomy under strong control from the Powers, which would prevent religious fights breaking out which had disgraced Crete in the past, would be, on the whole, the best arrangement that could be made. The Leader of the Opposition said that a mere indigenous autonomy would not do, because of the strong religious differences. Those were curious words for an advocate of Home Rule to utter, for he must know that precisely the same conditions which now existed in Crete had existed on various occasions in Ireland. [Cries of "Oh!"] Ireland had been disgraced by most violent quarrels and shedding of blood between men of different religions, but he must not now enter upon a discussion of the Irish Question. How long was it since hon. Members considered that religious opinion should afford a basis for different treatment by law? They held up their hands in horror at the murder and bombardment of Christians. But they were not murdered because they were Christians, but because they were insurgents, and were endangering the peace of Europe. He dared say the last man hung for murder was a Christian; but that did not prove that the courts of justice had set themselves against Christianity. Nor had the Powers, because they stopped aggressive fighting on the part of Christians, while they did not attack Turks, who were conducting themselves in a way deserving of the approval of Europe. He had made those remarks, because it would really do some of them good if they cleared their minds of cant in this matter. It was believed to be a popular thing, he knew, to butter up the Greeks and represent them as the finest fellows in the world. It was supposed that that sort of thing would go down in the country; and the Government were asked what they were going to do if the Greeks did not clear out of Crete. He hoped the Government would coerce them. They would commit a gross dereliction of duty if they did not compel this mischievous set of men to clear out of an island in which they had not the faintest business; or ran the risk of plunging Europe into war, by not loyally and fairly supporting their allies in the removal both of the Greeks and the Turks—the Greeks first, because they had no business there; and the Turks because, although the island belonged to them just as much as any part of our Empire belonged to us, they had shown themselves impotent to govern it.

MR. F. S. STEVENSON (Suffolk, Eye) remarked that, although it might be strictly correct to say that at no time was Crete connected with the kingdom of Greece, yet undoubtedly at the close of the great war of independence Crete was as free as Greece was, and had it not been for the action of the Powers of Europe at that time, Crete would have been connected with Greece in point of law as well as in point of fact, and the insurrection which had since taken place would by that means have been avoided. They desired further information on two points—as to the character of the proposed autonomy, and the nature of the proposed coercion. With regard to the proposed autonomy, it was undoubtedly the fact that, subject to the suzerainty of the Sultan, various forms of autonomy had, in times past, been tried in the Turkish Empire. The case of Samos could not be stated as on all fours with Crete, because Samos was a very small island, and the racial and religious differences did not exist there in the acute form in which they existed in Crete. Reference had also been made to the period during which Servia had a sort of autonomy under the suzerainty of the Sultan. Well, one of the events that occurred in 1862 was the bombardment of the town of Belgrade by the Turkish garrison which had been left in the citadel for the purpose of maintaining the nominal suzerainty of the Sultan in Servia; and if they left these Turkish soldiers as policemen in Crete they would have incidents of the same kind occurring again and again. They all, he hoped, had a desire to maintain the peace of Europe. But were the Government going the right way to maintain it by this arrangement, which could not possibly afford a permanent solution of the Cretan question, but, instead of removing difficulties, would create them. They did not recognise the existing facts. The Greek troops were in the island, and the great desire of the Cretans was to be connected with the kingdom of Greece. How did the Government intend to face these facts? Was it the intention of the Powers to send a force into the interior of Crete? To blockade the Piræus would be like locking the stable door after the steed had escaped; and would only stir up such a stormy feeling in Greece that it would have to find a safety valve in Southern Macedonia, and all the fleets in the world could not prevent that from taking place. With regard to the religious question in Crete, the animosity of the Mussulman minority against the majority had been fomented by the Turks. The Greeks had had experience in dealing with Mussulman minorities in Thessaly and in Epirus, and they were very well contented under Greek rule. If that was so, they were more likely, on racial grounds, to be content with Greek rule in Crete. If the Powers would act upon the suggestion to employ Colonel Vassos and his men as the police of the Powers instead of the Turkish soldiers they would approach much nearer to a settlement of the question. He had listened with amazement to the speech of the hon. and learned Member for Haddington, who referred to the Concert of Europe existing at the time of the battle of Navarino. But that was not a Concert in the present sense of the term, but a Concert of three Powers—England, France, and Russia—most keenly interested in the matter, who were not held back by anyone whose interest was not as great as the others. Then the hon. and learned Member referred to the Treaty of Berlin, as if that had been a liberating instrument. As a matter of fact, the Treaty of Berlin, in some important particulars, put the clock back. For instance, with regard to Asia Minor, there was a considerable tract of country in Armenia in which there would have been a material guarantee in the presence of Russian troops for the execution of reforms but for the Treaty of Berlin. The Treaty of Berlin put the clock back by establishing Eastern Roumelia, into which Turkey had still liberty to send her troops. When they looked back, he thought they would find that the European Concert on the whole, with one or two rare exceptions, had not been a liberating influence. Of course, they all admitted that if certain particular Powers had been brought to act together they might have been able to effect great and beneficial things, but he was afraid that if they looked back at the history of the last two years they could not see the prospect of any improvement in the future. He thought the time had arrived when this country should ask itself whether it was in every respect to go on acting in concert with Powers which had on many points made different aims from our own, and which exercised a retarding and a non-progressive influence. It did not follow that if they left the Concert of Europe with regard to Crete they left them on other questions. The history of Crete had been very peculiar. It had a history different from other portions of the Turkish Empire. They were now face to face with difficulties not to be found in other districts of the Turkish Empire. What was the nature of this autonomy? Was it to be complete autonomy? Was it to be a plébiscite ? Were the people of Crete to be allowed to say whether they wished to be placed under the Greeks or not? Were they prepared to have as Governor a member of the Greek Royal Family? Were they prepared to have Greek troops and not Turkish troops? It was said that a Note had been presented, and if that were so they would be face to face with the situation in an acute form. He thought that this country would on no condition approve of the forces of the country being used for the purpose of repressing the Cretan rising or against their gallant liberators when the Powers had failed.

On the return of Mr. SPEAKER, after the usual interval,

*MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northampton, E.) said the Debate had developed two remarkable points. There was the astounding version of the recent history of these events laid before the House by the right hon. Gentleman opposite, and there was the singular paucity of light thrown by the right hon. Gentleman on the ultimate issues of the policy Her Majesty's Government proposed to carry out. He wished to draw attention to an extraordinary omission in the history of these events as placed before the House by the right hon. Gentleman. They had all considered the Blue-books and the record of these events given in the Press, and they were perfectly well aware that the Sultan had adopted in the case of Crete with reference to the reforms alleged to have been agreed upon between himself and the Powers last August, which gave a momentary satisfaction to the unfortunate Cretans—the same policy which he had adopted in the case of reforms for Armenia. The same policy was clearly in the mind of the man whom the forms of the House did not permit an hon. Member to characterise as he would wish, and who had reduced the forms of civilised government to a mockery and banished even a semblance of humanity from the Eastern world. That policy had forced on the Cretans and on a people who were always in sympathy with their fellow-countrymen the absolute necessity of prompt and vigorous action in order to effect a change in the condition of Crete. The Cretans and the Greeks saw that the Powers were not taking action in order to make this new constitution a reality; in fact, they saw that the new constitution was dead before it was born, and, like all other constitutions offered to other parts of the Turkish Empire, a complete fraud and imposture. It seemed to him that their position imposed an imperative duty on the Greek people to act as they had acted. The other day he was talking to one of the few Englishmen who were really familiar with the island, and, speaking of the period following the desolating war of insurrection in 1867, which required 70,000 Turkish troops to crush it out and bring about what he supposed some of the supporters of the Government below the Gangway—he would not insult the Government by suggesting that they would say such a thing—might describe as the establishment of law and order in Crete, he said, after going through every part of the island, that he saw not a single house with a roof upon it, that whole villages were destroyed, and that hardly a family existed which had not had many of its members killed in that ruthless war. That was a state of things which the Greeks remembered more clearly and with more passionate feeling and resentment than we could feel here. They were near to the minds and hearts of the Greek people; they knew what the course of the Powers had been and how they had wholly failed to check the atrocities carried out by the Turks, to the direct order of the Sultan, in Armenia. [Mr. GIBSON BOWLES: "No, no!"] That was proved by the Dispatches of Her Majesty's Minister and Consuls.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES: Could the hon. Member give chapter and verse for his assertion?

*MR. SPEAKER: Armenia is not relevant to this Debate.

*MR. CHANNING said he was endeavouring to show that the Cretans and the Greeks might dread the intervention of the Turks, owing to the inactivity of the Powers in preventing the horrors in Armenia. In connection with the bombardment at Canea, the Under Secretary and other Members said that the Turks absolutely did nothing; but the hon. Member for Northampton had referred to the protest addressed by the Greek Government to this country. Those who had read the report of the Greek Commodore were aware that the statements of the English and allied Admirals were contradicted by the statement made to his own Government by the Greek Commodore. This statement was as much entitled to credence as the statements which had been given to the House by the right hon. Gentleman. Then there were the accounts of the correspondents of The Times and other eye-witnesses, describing the operations of the Turks against the Christians, the firing of the Turks and the Turkish ships on the Christians, and the attacks made upon them while engaged in carrying away their wounded. When he heard the astounding version of these events given by the right hon. Gentleman he was reminded of the well-known saying of Lord Beaconsfield, when he described the Bulgarian atrocities, though clearly established, as mere "coffee-house babble." What was the present situation in Crete? In Canea a force of 400 or 500 men had been landed; and that was the only force on shore capable of supporting the views of the allied Powers, and of maintaining law and order. The number of armed Mussulmans in Canea was many times as large, and this country, in conjunction with the Powers, was doing nothing to protect law and order, and to give security to life and property in Crete. The force was wholly inadequate to do this; and yet England was pledged to the Powers, if they insisted upon it, to destroy the only force now in Crete which could maintain law and order—the Greek troops, under Colonel Vassos, and the fleet, under Prince George—if the Greeks attempted to resist this new edict to leave Crete. In this matter he thought that the English people would support the views of Mr. Gladstone in condemning the policy of trusting to the Powers. They could take but one view of the Concert of the Powers—namely, that it had been to prevent good from beginning to end—that they had acted not only to paralyse the efforts of the people to effect their liberty, but had withdrawn all the checks on the worst excesses of what was evil. The Government were surely ashamed of the abominable event which took place on Sunday week? [Mr. CURZON: "Not a bit of it."] Then, he thought that the right hon. Gentleman would learn from the people whether they were ashamed of these deeds, and whether they resented a policy which was disgraceful to the arms of England, and which cast dishonour on the policy of the Government. He protested against any Concert of Europe in which England was dragged at the chariot wheels of a Tsar or an Emperor, and in which it took no part to see that life was made worth living for these poor people. He must say it was a significant contrast to note that when in South Africa it was a question of British supremacy, which found its outcome largely in the development of commercial undertakings and the amassing of large fortunes, which the German Emperor for a moment threatened, the soul of England, the England of the classes, the England of hon. Members opposite—[laughter]—was up in arms and ready to go to war with Germany. But when Germany adopted the policy, which she was apparently attempting to do now, of asking them to join in coercing one of the noblest efforts of a nation like the Greeks to free their compatriots, then, of course, they were at once to yield to the dictates of Germany and to become the willing instruments in a policy that was as cruel as it was infamous. The Greek organisation and forces in the island of Crete, placed directly in the hands of the Powers the very instrument which they could, and ought to use in order to produce peace and development of settled order there. In addition, it had the great advantage of being a force which could be controlled by the Powers. There would be no difficulty if they treated Greece as the mandatory of Europe in using this Greek force under strict European control. This seemed to be the natural and rational solution, and he did not see why England should not be strong enough to demand such a solution from the other Powers. If that solution were unavailable why should not they at least insist that Crete should be occupied by a European force and that the Turks should be absolutely removed from the island? That seemed to him the simplest and most natural course if England was not strong enough to carry out the policy which he had ventured to suggest. There was no part of the Blue-book which reflected so great honour on Lord Salisbury as the Dispatch in which he referred to his refusal to join in the blockade of Crete. ["Hear, hear!"] That was a brave and a wise act. Lord Salisbury referred in that Dispatch to the extreme danger of intrusting the people to Turkish rule in any form whatever. But suppose there was to be this autonomy which was foreshadowed by the Prime Minister, they had no guarantee whatever that the Powers would be able to control the Turks if they were left in the island, or that they would not have another hell upon earth in a few weeks which would defy the European Powers to deal with except at the risk of a general European war. England, in making her mighty Fleet the instrument of the will of the European Concert, was assuming a terrible and dangerous responsibility—a responsibility which he thought the people of this country would repudiate with indignation and resentment.

*Mr. GIBSON BOWLES said that the speech of the hon. Member who had just spoken, in spite of the calm assumption with which he professed to speak for the people of England, and in spite of the portentous scheme of foreign policy he had laid down, would not assist either the House or the Government in coming to a decision on this matter. One point he must deal with. The hon. Gentleman, in spite of the fact that the Under Secretary of State had, on the authority of the British Admiral on the spot, contradicted the rumours which had been circulated by newspaper correspondents with regard to the action of the Fleet, and the cause of that action and the antecedent circumstances, had thought fit, in the absence of his right hon. Friend—

*Mr. CHANNING: It was not my fault that the right hon. Gentleman was not present.

*Mr. GIBSON BOWLES said that was so, but it was his fault that he should have repeated calumnies that had been refuted. It was not creditable to the hon. Member to question the word of a British Admiral on the spot giving his account of the proceedings. He was pleased to hear the very business-like speech of the Under Secretary. There was only one feature of the speech that did not content him; that was when he looked across the Table and, smiling at the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition as one Roman augur might smile at another, complimented him on the dignity and moderation of his speech. He rather thought that that speech was inflammatory and mischievous, and, although the right hon. Gentleman deprecated any assertion that it was inopportune, he ventured to think, in spite of his authority, it was most inopportune. The situation in Europe was so grave and serious that he thought no light word should be said even by the humblest

Member of that House, who should always remember that he spoke to the ears of a listening Europe. The situation in Crete was not a situation that had accidentally grown up; it was a situation that had been created. For 50 years Greece had been filling the island of Crete with disorder and sending emissaries to it, not to attempt to bring that island into a peaceful and orderly condition, but to assist in the efforts which she fondly, but falsely, hoped would end in the final annexation of the island to herself. The right hon. Gentleman opposite said that the Greeks were good Samaritans; but the good Samaritan was a man who, going about his lawful business, found a victim of oppression and poured oil and wine into his wounds. But these Greeks were persons who, going about on unlawful business and finding a victim, poured, not oil and wine into his wounds, but gunpowder and vitriol. [Laughter.] The hon. Member for Northampton asked for chapter and verse as to the alleged unlawful expeditions and sending of arms and men to Crete, and then, having asked this, he, like jesting Pilate, who asked what was truth, went out without waiting for an answer. He would give him chapter and verse. If the hon. Gentleman would take the Turkish Blue-book, No. 7, 1896, and look at Pages 166, 170, 189, 209, 213, 237, 254, 279, 291, 295, 305, and 330—he spared him the extracts—he would see on the authority of the British Consul and of Captain Drury, of H.M.S. Hood that, between the 23rd of June and the 15th of August 1895, no fewer than nine Greek expeditions with arms and ammunition, filibustering expeditions, landed in Crete. Further, it would be found by adding up the numbers of men that they amounted, according to one version, to 1,000, and according to another version 1,500 men, raiders, filibusters—pirates, he might almost call them—and this was before any action was taken by the Greek Government. These were raiders who landed with arms and ammunition in Crete, and if hon. Members would refer to the pages he had mentioned, they would find indisputable evidence that while the Powers were engaged in formulating a new constitution, yet, at that very time, and because of that very fact, Greece was pouring men, arms, and ammunition into Crete to create disturbance there. He had said these men were raiders. He had heard the right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouth appealing to the moral law, and even to the law of nations against the wickedness of raiding in South Africa; he had heard the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Bodmin say that such was his joy when the raiders into the Transvaal were defeated by force of arms that he could have joined with President Kruger in singing a psalm of praise, and he should have thought that such a stern, unbending moralist as the right hon. Gentleman, the one "just man made perfect" in the House, would to the raiders from Greece have applied the same rule and judgment as he applied to the raiders from Mafeking; but apparently he had not sympathy against raiders unless the raids were against his fellow psalm-singers in the Transvaal. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouth drew a very proper and well known distinction between private raiding by the raiders' expeditions and the public action of Greece, and claimed that the public action of Greece was what he called "intervention." That was a large word. Piracy was an act of intervention with the desire to rob or kill without lawful authority or just cause, and the action of Greece came entirely within the line and real definition of the word piracy.

*Sir W. HARCOURT said the action producing casus belli by a regular Government was not piracy, as everybody knew.

*Mr. GIBSON BOWLES did not think that everybody did know that. Had the right hon. Gentleman forgotten that the Algerines were guilty of piracy even though they were carrying out the orders of the Dey, their lawful Governor, and that the Powers of Europe declared the slave trade, though conducted by the orders of a regular sovereign, piracy? Had he forgotten that a statute of the House had declared the slave trade piracy, and did the right hon. Gentleman wish to be, or require him to be, wiser than a statute?

*Sir W. HARCOURT said the slave traders were individuals, and the slave trade was not carried on by a Government.

*Mr. GIBSON BOWLES said if the right hon. Gentleman had gone up some of the oil rivers from the Bight of Benin, he would have found the trade conducted absolutely through and by the sovereign of the country, and he must know that under the Law of Nations one sovereign was as good as another sovereign. [Laughter.] The right hon. Gentleman claimed that the true remedy was the annexation of Crete to Greece, or, in other words, he claimed that an incendiary having set fire to the house should, for reward—or punishment—he thought it would be punishment, be allowed to annex the remainder of the property not destroyed. He did not think that was an encouraging proposition for the principles of public law and morality in Europe. This Cretan Question had not grown, it had been created, and the soil of Crete, unfortunately, was fertile for these troubles, and they needed little cultivation. Since Apostolic times the Cretans had borne an evil character which their history had justified. They were always rebels against any Government, and they would be still rebels. For 900 years they rebelled against the Romans, for 400 years they rebelled against the Venetians, and for 200 years they had rebelled against Turkey, and they would still rebel even though their sovereign were the hon. Gentleman the Member for Northampton. [Laughter.] He did not think that in this respect the European Concert deserved all the ill things that had been said of it during the evening. Undoubtedly there had been an honest attempt on the part of Europe to settle this difficulty. The effort was long and continued, and in August last it arrived at what was supposed to be success in the shape of a new constitution for Crete. This was arrived at by the exercise of all the wisdom of all the Powers, and it was accepted finally by the Turkish Government because it was recommended by the Powers. He did not know how you could get a new constitution for any island under better auspices. It was accepted, and it must have been to the right hon. Gentleman and the Government a startling surprise that the failure of that constitution took place before the ink was dry with which it was printed, and it might almost be said before it was printed, for its failure was announced before the Blue-book conveying the information of it was distributed in the House. Why did it fail? The right hon. Gentleman the Member for West Monmouth said, because the Turks opposd it and threw difficulties in its way. ["Hear, hear!"] Had he forgotten that the Turks had practically been turned out of the island by the European Concert? They were prevented from sending more troops to carry on their authority, and consequently were not in a position to put obstacles in the way of carrying out the constitution. It had scarcely been printed, and probably the Cretans knew as little about it as the House did to within five days ago. Undoubtedly it could not have been begun to be carried into practice, and to say that the Turks opposed it was to ignore the fact that there had practically been an evacuation of the country by Turkey, and practically a cessation of Turkish authority. Certainly, from the day the constitution was adopted. ["No, no!"] Who said "No?" Hon. and right hon. Gentlemen should read the Dispatches. In August last Consul Biliotti complained of the evacuation of the interior parts of Crete by Turkish troops, and pointed out the extreme danger of thereby causing great disasters in the island. It was not possible to say that Turkey exercised any considerable degree of authority at the time, or even before the time when the constitution was adopted. The Christians, when the constitution was brought to their knowledge, were profuse in expressions of gratitude. The Christian Deputies accepted the 14 articles in the name of the Christian population, they assured the Consul of the grateful acknowledgment of the Christian population, and expressed their anticipations of the effect of the new regulations as conducive to the peace and progress of the island in language not unlike the peroration of a Home Rule speech in the House of Commons. [Laughter.] There was every disposition to accept the constitution, and yet, in a few months, it was confessed and it proved to be, a most complete failure. And why did it fail? Not on account of the intervention of Turkey, not on account of any indisposition towards it on the part of the Christians, it failed entirely because, as soon as Greece saw there was a prospect of pacification of the island, as soon as she saw there was a prospect of the Cretans beginning for the first time in their history to live in peace and contentment, withdrawing from the agitation stirred up, Greece considered it was time to intervene, she threw aside the mask, gave up the flimsy pretexts of private raiding, private filibustering, assisted by Committees in the capital, and secretly fomented by persons of influence and supported by speeches in the Greek Parliament, Greece threw aside the mask and declared herself the enemy of Turkey, and without any allegation of a grievance against Turkey, or demand for redress, or declaration of war, sent forth what he still did not hesitate to call a piratical expedition under Colonel Vassos to the island of Crete. It was the Samaritan, it would be seen, that caused the trouble, as it was foreseen the Samaritan would cause trouble. It was not surprising that one Power in Europe foresaw the trouble and proposed the only practical means of preventing it, he alluded to the Austrian proposal for the blockade of Crete. It was a most practical proposal on the part of the Austrian Government, and he thought it matter for some regret that Her Majesty's Government did not feel themselves able—he was not questioning their decision—but by the light of recent events it was to be regretted that Her Majesty's Government did not accept that proposal. It would have had the advantage of preventing the trouble before it arose instead of forcing the Powers to deal with it after it had arisen, and would have spared both the Cretans and the Greeks a vast amount of trouble and of human life. A great deal of praise had been bestowed upon England for refusing that offer, and it had been suggested that England would never join in the coercion of Greece. That was an entire misapprehension of the position taken up by Lord Salisbury on the matter. In his Dispatch in reply to the Austrian proposal, on the 29th July 1896, Lord Salisbury first of all showed that the proposal to blockade as made was irregular in itself and difficult to carry out, and then he used these remarkable words:—

> "If Greece were to assume a hostile attitude to the Turkish Government, and make any aggression upon the independence or integrity of the Turkish Empire, the collective guarantee into which the Powers entered at the Treaty of Paris would become a matter of serious consideration, and if all the Powers resolved to give effect to it, I thought it quite possible that Great Britain might think that abstention would not be consistent with her engagements under that treaty."

That was exactly what had now occurred. Greece had assumed a hostile attitude to the Turkish Government, had made an aggression upon the independence or integrity of the Turkish Empire, and consequently, as Lord Salisbury pointed out, the collective guarantee of Europe had become a matter of serious consideration, the Powers had resolved to give effect to it, and Great Britain had thought that abstention would not be consistent with her engagements. The proposal of Austria to prevent the evil having been refused, the Turks having been prevented from occupying and policing the island or sending any real enforcement to Crete, and the Greeks being allowed to pour in, without restriction, arms and filibusters, of course the result was that state of anarchy and warfare which they now saw. To the 1,500 filibusters were added the 1,500 pirates under Colonel Vassos, and with these 3,000 added to the normal Cretan rebels, a large force was formed which was certain to lead to the outrage and bloodshed which followed. The latest development had been that very remarkable and, as he ventured to think, that most creditable instance of the new diplomacy which the Foreign Secretary had consciously or unconsciously borrowed from the Secretary of the State for the Colonies. One point alone he did not quite apprehend. He understood that of the four points of the Ultimatum to be addressed at once to Greece and Turkey, the third point was that Crete, although granted autonomy, should still remain under the sovereignty of Turkey.

*MR. CURZON: Suzerainty.

*MR. GIBSON BOWLES said he would not stay to inquire what exactly was the difference between sovereignty and suzerainty. The only thing he could not make consistent with that was the inspired commentary of the right hon. Gentleman himself, the scholiast of the Foreign Office, who had given them a commentary on the third point, which was that although there was to be autonomy in Crete it was not to be under the authority of the Sultan. He could not make that consistent with the third point as stated authoritatively to the House of Lords and to that House by the Leader. He had no doubt, however, that some explanation would be forthcoming in due time. He wished to insist upon one point, and it was this: that whatever arrangements they might be going to make for Crete, it was essential that that arrangement should recognise and maintain the integrity of the Turkish Empire. The Government held the even stronger view that not merely the integrity of the Turkish Empire but the status quo of the Turkish Empire should be maintained, because the Chancellor of the Exchequer, speaking on the 13th October last, said:—

> "The cardinal fact of the present political situation in Turkey was this, that Russia, in concert with Austria and with Germany, was determined to maintain the status quo of the Turkish territory. Well, that was the policy which had been the traditional policy of England, and if any single Power—if we—departed from that policy and attacked Turkish territory, as sure as he stood there we should be met by active resistance on the part, not merely of one, but of more than one European Power. We must start from the point that Turkish territory was to be maintained. If the Turkish Empire was to be maintained, reforms in the administration of the Turkish Empire were absolutely necessary. That was the view of the Government of England; that was the view of the people of England."

So that this autonomy that was to be granted to Crete must be consistent with the status quo of the Turkish Empire, and indeed if the Government were to adopt any other view than that they would at once not only separate themselves from, but would at once break up the Concert of Europe. He could not sympathise with the ridicule which had, he regretted to say, been poured that night upon the Concert of Europe. It was the only method by which they could act upon a question like the Cretan Question. But the Concert would be in the greatest difficulty in dealing with Crete. They had Greeks in the Island, they had insurgents and Mussulmans, and he did not quite know and could not imagine how the European Concert was going to pacify Crete unless it was prepared to take the island permanently into its own hands and be prepared not merely to have ships there, but to land armed forces in sufficient numbers. He recognised the difficulty of the situation, and would not add to it by any imprudent words. All he would say in conclusion was that this Cretan question, just as it had not arisen but had been created by Greece, so also it was not a question by itself. It was part and parcel of that great Eastern Question on the solution of which depended whether Austria, Hungary, Bavaria, Roumania, and Servia were to continue to exist; on the solution of which depended whether the Mediterranean, the Black Sea, Persia, and Asia Minor should remain in the hands of an unaggressive Power, or pass into the hands of the most ambitious and aggressive Power in Europe.

Mr. ARNOLD-FORSTER (Belfast, W.) desired to intervene in the Debate because he felt, and he believed others felt with him, that the speeches made by the hon. Member for Lynn Regis, the hon. Member for the Ecclesall Division of Sheffield, and peculiarly the speech made by the hon. Member for St. Albans, did not represent and ought not to be considered to represent the views of their Party. [Cheers.] He did not believe that there were 10 per cent. of the hon. Members on that side of the House who desired to associate themselves with the attacks which had been made upon the Greeks. ["Hear, hear!"] They had listened with pleasure and respect, and for his part with absolute acquiescence, to what had been said by the Under Secretary. His speech contained no censure of the Greeks, and it was the speech of a statesman. There was not one word in that speech of the tone which animated every sentence of the speeches to which he had alluded. The hon. Member for King's Lynn spoke of the Greek people as pirates, and the hon. Member for St. Albans said the Greeks stood condemned by the "Stock Exchange Year Book." That was an intolerable way of dealing with the question. He was no particular admirer of the Greeks as individuals; but he knew Greece and Turkey, and there was absolutely no comparison at all as to the conditions of the two countries, and it was their bounden duty to support the live civilisation of Greece as against the dead and effete civilisation of Turkey. It might be true that the King of Greece and perhaps the Greek community had done things which had exposed them to the censure of the Stock Exchange. If so, all he could say was that they had taken the most effectual method of cleansing themselves of the stain cast upon them. They had been told that they must find words of condemnation for what the Greeks had done. The Greeks had done precisely what every Englishman in similar circumstances would have done. They had, rightly or wrongly, gone to the rescue of the men and women who were their own kith and kin. Let them sweep aside all this travesty of argument about the analogy, or supposed analogy, between the King and Government and Parliament of Greece, and the action of a commercial company in South Africa. The Greeks entered upon their action in Crete at enormous risk. Politicians at the helm of the great nations of Europe might regard their action as incompatible either with the future of Greece or the welfare of Europe, but that was totally different from the spirit of censure which had been exhibited. The prevailing sentiment in this country did not condemn Greece—[Opposition cheers]—and it would endorse the policy of the Government on one condition only, that it would lead to the absolute liberation of Crete from the dominion of Turkey. The Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs had stated the policy of the Government with a lucidity and logical sequence which was beyond all praise. He had quite convinced him. He believed the maximum of good would result from the policy of the Government, but they wanted an assurance that they were pursuing it with the object he had indicated. Unionist Members could not go to their constituents and ask for their support unless they could convince them that the Government had in view the liberation of Crete from Turkey. He did not believe in the forecast of the hon. Member for the Ecclesall Division of Sheffield. The Turkish Empire could never be reconstituted or revivified. He wished to dissociate himself from the sentiments which had been expressed by a section—he believed it was only a small section—of his Party, and associate himself with the sentiments of the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs; and, in the belief that the Government intended to bring about the emancipation of Crete from Ottoman rule, as soon as possible, he supported their policy.

Mr. JAMES BRYCE (Aberdeen, S.) regretted some of the speeches from hon. Members opposite, and he should be sorry to think they represented the general feeling of the Conservative Party. He believed that among their constituents were many who felt strong sympathy with the action of Greece, and were anxious that the conduct of the Government should be animated by sympathetic regard to the position of Greece. The Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs did not make it clear that the proposals of the Government had been accepted in their entirety by the other Powers.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: They have been. He said so.

Mr. BRYCE said he was glad to hear that. Then the Under Secretary did not give a clear idea of what was meant by "administrative autonomy." Would it include the appointment of a Christian Governor, whom it would be out of the power of the Sultan to dismiss or recall; and for what period would he be appointed? Then, what provisions were to be made for the constitution of the gendarmerie. Before Greece withdrew her forces from Crete she would expect to know what was to be secured to the Christian population there. The Under Secretary eulogised the conduct of the Turkish troops in Crete, but the Blue Book stated that in July they made raids on Christian villages, set fire to houses, and cut down trees. Other depredations were also spoken of. The Consular reports showed that the Mussulman troops could not be relied on. It was stated in the Blue-book that the Turkish troops witnessed a series of cruel and unprovoked murders without trying to prevent them. After evidence like that he thought the House would feel that these Turkish troops ought not to be intrusted with the preservation of order, and that they would be useless for the purposes of police or pacification. The Under Secretary had not told them how long the Turkish troops were to be kept in Crete, and this was a serious matter. They had been told that the Turkish troops only obeyed their officers in the case of the Armenian massacres; but if they did so once they might do so again, and were they to understand that if the Turkish troops remained they were to be entirely officered by Europeans? The condition of the island was very grave; the whole of the interior was in the hands of the insurgents, and the country was of so mountainous a character that it would be a very difficult task to subdue them. Did the Government propose to let loose the Turkish troops into the interior of the island? He suggested that by far the best course, if the Powers insisted on continuing their occupation, would be to make use of the Greek troops for the preservation of order. Not a word had been said against the Greek troops; they were the troops of a civilised Power —["hear, hear!" and laughter]—they were on their good behaviour in this matter, and they possessed knowledge which it was impossible for any foreign gendarmerie imported from Montenegro or elsewhere to possess. If the Powers wished to restore peace it would be far better to make the Greek troops the mandatories of Europe rather than the Turkish troops. He was glad that the Under Secretary had not joined in any censure of Greece, for Greece was entitled to the great credit of having done what the Powers ought to have done long ago. It was owing to the neglect by the Powers of the provisions of the Treaty of Berlin that the condition of Macedonia was so dangerous. They were now told that Crete was to receive "administrative autonomy," but those words were not mentioned until the Greeks had entered the island. ["Hear, hear!"] He did not believe they would ever have peace in Crete until she was united with her mother-country. For the last 30 years there had hardly been a year, or even a month, in which shiploads of Cretan refugees, driven out by Turkish oppression, had not been landed on the coast of Greece. He hoped the union of Crete with Greece would not be long delayed. The Powers apparently wished to retard its accomplishment, but the best way to remove the cause of danger was to remove the cause of discontent. What had the Concert of Europe accomplished? It was the Concert of Europe that, during the last two years, had secured immunity for the Sultan of Turkey in his policy of massacre. [Cheers.] The Concert of Europe, as the Under Secretary had said, was composed of very different Powers with very different aims and entertaining very different views of their own interests. Some Powers had no care for Crete; some had no respect for the will of the people; some had said that their first object was to preserve the integrity of the Turkish Empire, and to preserve it apparently by maintaining still longer a rule which the Christian subjects of the Sultan had found intolerable. But we were not one of those Powers. [Cheers.] We were a free people. [Cheers.] We believed that the revolt of the Cretans and the intervention of Greece on their behalf were amply justified, and we desired the extinction, as soon as possible, over as large an area as possible, of the rule of the Turk, which had everywhere proved a desolating and blighting rule. [Cheers.] He joined in warning the Government that the country would expect that, in any consultation they might hold with the other Powers of Europe, their influence should be exercised in securing for all the subjects of Turkey the maximum of freedom, the release of as many Christian people as possible from the direct rule of the Sultan, and that the utmost consideration should be shown to Greece, who, in its intervention in Crete, had been animated by the best motives, with which the people of this country heartily sympathised. [Cheers.]

COLONEL SAUNDERSON (Armagh, N.) congratulated the House on the marked difference in tone between the speeches of hon. Members on the Opposition side in criticising the Government and their speeches on the subject on former occasions. ["Hear, hear!"] It was now felt that the position of affairs in Crete was of so grave a character that the violent language which had been used on former occasions was unsuited to the situation. But his main reason for rising was because it was assumed by hon. Gentlemen opposite that sympathy with Greece was only to be found on their side of the House. [Opposition cries of "No, no!"] He had heard it said by several Members, and especially by the hon. Member for Northampton. Perhaps those hon. Gentlemen got that idea from the speeches made by three or four hon. Members on the Ministerial side, who were almost alone in being unqualified admirers of the Sultan and his rule. [Laughter.] He was not afraid to state that he had always sympathised, and that he now entirely sympathised, with Greece. [Cheers.] Greece was now acting a part which Englishmen would act in similar circumstances. [Cheers.] If there were an island 60 miles from our coast—the same distance as Ireland—[laughter]—and if men of the same race and the same religion as ourselves suffered the persecutions to which the Cretans had been subjected, he ventured to say that no man calling himself an Englishman and worthy of the name would hesitate for one moment to adopt the course the Greeks had followed in regard to Crete. [Cheers.] But the real difficulty in the situation was the present attitude of Greece. ["Hear, hear!"] If Greece now acted in a precipitate and unreasonable manner she would destroy whatever hope there was of accomplishing the object she had in view. ["Hear, hear!"] If Greece could be got to withdraw her troops from Crete the main difficulty of the situation would disappear, and the fault he found with the scheme proposed by his right hon. Friend the Under Secretary—which, it must be remembered, was not the policy absolutely of Her Majesty's Government, but the policy of the Concert of Europe—was that it made it hard for Greece to comply. ["Hear, hear!"] It should be the duty of this country to do all that was possible with the view of making it easy for Greece to retire from Crete. ["Hear, hear!"] What was the defect in the scheme proposed which would make this important object difficult of attainment? Why, that it was proposed, or suggested, to leave the maintenance of order in the island to Turkish police. [Opposition cheers.] It was idle to expect that the Greeks would approve of any such arrangement. ["Hear, hear!"] If the European Powers wanted to make it easy for Greece to retire from Crete, the withdrawal of the Turkish and Greek troops should take place at the same time. [Cheers.] He confessed that he had no confidence whatever in Turkish police, and he believed that very few persons had confidence in them. ["Hear, hear!"] The history of the immediate past did not justify, on the part of the House of Commons, much less on the part of Greece or of the Cretan people, any feeling of confidence whatever in Turkish police or in Turkish officers. Such an arrangement would practically still give Turkey power over the island; and, in view of both the present and the future, he would not abide by it if he were a Cretan or a Greek. [Cheers.] Why had the Powers of Europe taken up this question? As far as he could see, they were governed by two motives—suspicion of each other and self-interest. ["Hear, hear!" and laughter.] If that was so, if it was for their own objects and aims that the Powers were interfering to pacify Crete, then he would say, let them pacify the island at their own expense; and he thought that that policy ought to be pursued by the Concert of Europe and the Government. Let the Concert of Europe say that it would undertake the pacification of Crete—would undertake to maintain the authority of the law and the security of life and property—and then all excuse would be taken away from Greece for refusing to withdraw her troops. If such a line as that were taken peace would probably be secured to Crete; time given to the people to organise themselves into a civilised nation, and, as the years went by, Greece, if she could only exercise patience, would see, what he believed the majority of the English people desired to see, the fruition of her hopes in the annexation ultimately of the island to the mother-country. [Cheers.]

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.), who was received with loud Ministerial cheers on rising, said: As this Debate has gone on for a considerably longer period than was anticipated either by the Leader of the Opposition or by myself when it began, and as there is still some business to transact before 12 o'clock, the House probably will allow me to intervene at this stage in order to answer certain questions that have been put to the Government since the able and exhaustive speech of my right hon. Friend the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs. [Cheers.] Now, various Members on the other side, doubtless with different degrees of conviction, have attacked the Concert of Europe. The Concert of Europe, it is said, may be all very well as far as it goes, but what has it done either for Crete or for Greece, or for Europe as a whole, during the years it has been in existence? Sir, I take up that challenge—[cheers]—and I say that, whether we consider the action of the Concert of Europe in regard to the particular places situated in the Eastern part of Europe, or whether we regard it in relation to the peace of Europe as a whole, the services it has done during the last few years had been incalculable to mankind and to civilisation. [Cheers.] I do not, of course, deny—who can deny?—that the Concert of Europe, powerful, useful, and effective instrument though it be, is an instrument which, from the nature of its constitution, must work slowly, and, from that fact, must, under some circumstances, work imperfectly. ["Hear, hear!"] That none of us who sit on this Bench, and no impartial observer outside party politics, would be disposed for a moment to deny. But when the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Aberdeen tells us that the European Concert has not only so far been useless, but has in certain respects been absolutely noxious—when he goes the length of telling us that but for the European Concert it would have been possible for this country to exercise pressure upon the Porte in favour of the good government of the subjects of the Porte—then I must tell the right hon. Gentleman that he is mistaken. [Cheers.] An attempt on the part of this country during the last two or three years to exercise separate and independent pressure upon the Porte outside the Concert of Europe would not only in my judgment have broken up that Concert, but it would have been rendered absolutely ineffectual by the opposition of other Powers of Europe, who would have felt themselves naturally absolved from all loyalty to the general arrangement which by our action would have been destroyed. [Cheers.] So much for the objections to the Concert of Europe. Now I ask whether it be true, as has been stated over and over again in this Debate, that so far as Crete itself is concerned, the action of the Powers has been useless up to the present time, and that if now, at the eleventh hour, Europe has determined to give autonomy to Crete, that determination is the result simply of the action of the Greek power, and that if Europe had stood aside and had never intervened, Greece, having a free hand, would have brought about that desirable result, it might be months, it might be years ago. That is not the fact. [Cheers.] If Europe had stood on one side and had left Turkey and Greece to fight out the destinies of Crete together, is there a man in this House who doubts for one moment that Crete, instead of being as she is now, upon the very verge and edge of receiving complete autonomy under a Turkish suzerainty, would have been ground down under the heel of the Ottoman dominion, and that Greece would have been absolutely powerless—[cheers and cries of "No, no!"]—to obviate that disastrous result? [Cheers.] So much for the effects of the Concert of Europe in Asia and in Crete. What has been the result of the Concert of Europe in Europe itself? [Cheers.] It is an easy criticism to say that if the Concert of Europe had been more rapid in its unanimity, quicker in its action, more dexterous, more rapid in its decisions, this evil or that evil might have been avoided. I dare say it might have been. But without the Concert of Europe would Europe now be at peace? [Cheers.] It is impossible, of course, to give mathematical demonstrations of what would have occurred in a particular condition of affairs which condition of affairs has not actually existed; but, if mathematical demonstration is impossible, there is, I believe, not one responsible statesman in any country in Europe, whether he belongs to the Triple Alliance, or to France, or Germany, or any other of the Powers concerned, who does not recognise the critical and dangerous character of the crisis through which Europe has been passing during the last three or four years, and who does not hold it as a cardinal article of his faith that it is the Concert founded; if the Concert of Europe be alone, which has preserved Europe from the untold evils of a general war. [Cheers.] If these contentions of mine be well founded; if the Concert of Europe be innocent, as I believe it to be innocent, of any of the evils that have happened in the Asiatic dominions of Turkey; if its action has been in the highest degree beneficial to Crete, and, as we hope, will be in the highest degree beneficial to other populations of Turkey in the future; and if, in addition to all these benefits, it has given peace to Europe—then I have vindicated, and vindicated completely, the enormous advantage which the Concert of Europe has given to mankind, and I have laid before the House the strongest reason which exists for our doing all that we can, consistently with our other duties, to maintain that Concert unimpaired so far as we are concerned. [Cheers.] I pass from these general observations to the more detailed questions and criticisms which have been put to the Government by hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite, and here I must be permitted to say that in this Debate it is fair and right to ask us for principles; it is not fair and it is not right to ask from us detailed statements. I think the Opposition are amply justified in requiring us to lay down in clear and unmistakable language the lines of policy which we desire to adopt, but when they ask us for the detailed method by which that policy is to be carried out they must remember the general difficulties of the situation, they must remember that we are by hypothesis acting with five allies, and that some agreement as to details must be come to with them before these details are announced in this House or elsewhere. Let me illustrate that general proposition by two main questions which have been put to us by hon. Gentlemen opposite. The right hon. Member for Aberdeen was very anxious as to the nature and character of the autonomy which we desire should be given to Crete, and he asked whether there was to be a Christian Governor, whether that Governor was to be irremovable, and what his position would be. I should not say that Crete had autonomy at all unless there was a Christian Governor or, at all events, if it did not depend on the Cretans themselves whether their Governor was Christian or not. [Cheers.] I am not in a position to tell the House what is to be the Constitution of Crete, but I am in a position to tell the House that by autonomy, subject to the suzerainty of the Porte, we mean a form of Government familiar in the Turkish Empire, in which the Sultan and the Porte will not have the power of intervening in the local affairs of the country at all—[cheers]—and that broad declaration of policy will, I hope, be sufficient to satisfy both the right hon. Gentleman and other Members of the House who are naturally and justifiably anxious as to the views we take of the future government of the island. The other question which has naturally interested the House is as to the position of the Turkish forces in the island. The Turkish force as an efficient military organisation will, I presume, be in any case only a transitional factor in Cretan history. But we are asked, not what the future is to be when the Cretan constitution is in working order, but what the condition of Crete is to be during that transitional stage which must elapse before a complete constitution is granted. A lurid picture has been drawn by hon. Gentlemen opposite of what may be expected from the Turkish soldiers during that period. We have been told that in Armenia in recent times, in European Turkey in times not very far gone by, the Turkish soldiers have rendered themselves guilty of such atrocities that the notion of leaving Crete under their uncontrolled power is one which cannot for a moment be tolerated. Though I understand that, on the whole, the conduct of the Turkish troops in Crete has been exemplary during the last year, during recent events, still I perfectly understand and sympathise with the views expressed by the Cretans, whose opinions I have endeavoured shortly to describe, and I can assure hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite, and I can assure my hon. and gallant Friend who spoke last, that we are as alive as they are, and he is to the absolute necessity of seeing that under any circumstances the Turkish soldiers in Crete shall be under the control of the Powers whatever be the exact day or month on which or in which the last of them is required to leave the island. [Cheers.] That is not, I admit, a detailed statement, but it is a general statement of policy, and with a general statement of policy I trust that both sides of the House will, on the present occasion, be contented. If I may venture to add one other consideration, one not without its weight, to what I have stated on this subject, I would remind the House that at this moment the Mussulman population is in a minority—relatively speaking, an insignificant minority—and if you could suppose all the Mussulman troops were withdrawn, and no power, no gendarmerie, established in the island, undoubtedly the first result would be a great massacre of Mussulmans by Christians—a result which, I believe, would be equally abhorrent on both sides of the House. ["Hear, hear!"] However, I pass from those two broad questions as regards the future of Crete to answer a question put specifically by the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition, and repeated by all those who have supported him. The right hon. Gentleman has said over and over again, "Autonomy for Crete is all very well, but why not hand over Crete to Greece?" I am the last person to make any attack upon any foreign nation whatever, and I may say that individually I have always felt the strongest sympathy for the welfare of the small free States in the Balkan Peninsula and in the East of Europe, and the most earnest wish that they may do all for the happiness of their population and the progress of humanity in that part of the world which their best friends expect of them; but when the Leader of the Opposition told us that all these States, by which I suppose he meant Servia, Bulgaria, and Roumania, look to Greece as their leader—

*SIR W. HARCOURT: I beg pardon. I certainly never thought it, and I do not think I ever said it.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: What was the phrase? He said they looked to Greece.

*SIR W. HARCOURT: Not the States that have been emancipated; the States that have not been emancipated. [AN HON. MEMBER: "What States?"] I intended, of course, populations.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Of course, I accept the right hon. Gentleman's version of his own speech, but a speech in which he talked about States that do not exist seems to me a very curious speech. [Cheers.] I have enumerated all the States that are in existence, but, of course, I do not wish to press the right hon. Gentleman on that point, because I really only brought it forward in order to remind the right hon. Gentleman of an episode in his own political career or in the political career of a Government of which he was a distinguished member, which would explain why it is that in our judgment it would be dangerous to hand over Crete to be an integral part of the Greek Kingdom. In 1886 the right hon. Gentleman and his friends came into power; it was immediately after the State of Eastern Roumelia was joined to Bulgaria, and formed the community which is at present ruled over by the Prince of Bulgaria. The result of that junction—in my opinion a very fortunate and happy junction of populations—["hear, hear!"]—was to excite great jealousy in the Greek community, which naturally re-acted on the Greek Government. The Greek Government of the day proceeded to arm and to threaten the Turkish Empire with a view of getting out of the Turkish Empire, I suppose, some quid pro quo for the increase of dominion which had been given to Bulgaria. The English Government, of which the right hon. Gentleman was a member, and of which the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Aberdeen, who last spoke, was the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and the Concert of Europe proceeded to inform the Greek Government that this menace of the peace of Europe would not be tolerated—[Ministerial cheers]—and that it was the duty of Greece forthwith to disarm. The Greek Government of that time, a Government quite as anxious for freedom as I believe the present one is, and animated by the very same motives, proved recalcitrant. The right hon. Gentleman and his colleagues, adhering to their opinion and acting with the Concert of Europe, proceeded to inform the Greek Government that under those circumstances force must be used. [Ministerial cheers.] And force was used, and under the auspices of the right hon. Gentleman and the Member for Aberdeen and his colleagues upon that Bench, not excluding the right hon. Member for Montrose—[cheers]—the whole coast of Greece from east to west was blockaded by the forces of Europe. [Cheers.] Europe did that for the preservation of peace and in the interests of mankind—[cheers]—and, Sir, what Europe did then, and what the right hon. Gentleman did then, we are justified, if occasion seems to demand it, in doing now—[prolonged cheering]—in order to promote and further the same great cause. It surely is no news to any Gentleman who interests himself in these matters to know that if Crete, instead of being given—as it will be given by our plan—complete freedom as a part of the general Ottoman dominions, is added to Greece, in that event Servia, Bulgaria, Roumania, Albania, and Montenegro—all these States and populations would feel that there was a disturbance of the status quo which required them, in as far as they are independent States, to mobilise their armies, to prepare for eventualities, and to occupy, it may be this or it may be that portion of the Turkish Empire; and, be it remembered, these are not States all arrayed in common accord against the Turkish Empire, they are rivals one with another. [Cheers.] And if, at a time like the present, we were to disturb the status quo, as the right hon. Gentleman desires us to disturb it, we should, without adding one tittle of freedom to Crete, imperil the whole peace of the East of Europe; and the peace of the East of Europe cannot be imperilled, as everyone knows, without imperilling the peace of even greater and more important portions of European civilisation. [Cheers.] I hope I have justified the course which the Government have pursued. [Loud cheers.] I can assure the House that freedom and good government have no more earnest advocates in this House or in this country than the Members of Her Majesty's Government. [Cheers.] We are advocates of freedom. [Cries of "Oh!"] In the history of the world, Sir, freedom and peace have not always proved compatible. But at the present crisis, and with regard to the affairs now under the consideration of the House, we believe, and believe most firmly, that the cause of peace is the cause of freedom—[cheers]—and that the cause of freedom is the cause of peace. We believe that no heavier responsibility can be taken upon himself by any man in this House than to urge the Greek Government—of whose motives I make not a word of complaint—to urge the Greek Government, now that the object of freedom in Crete has been attained, for ends which, from the nature of the case, must be selfish ends, to imperil in the future interests extending far beyond the dominions of the Greek population. The right hon. Gentleman, in his elaborate peroration this evening, brought in the parable, to which allusion has been more than once made, of the good Samaritan and the man who fell among thieves. Sir, the good Samaritan would not have been through all these 18 centuries held up as a model for admiration if, as an incidental result of his good action, he was going to add largely to his estate. [Prolonged cheering.] If it be true—and I doubt not that it is true—that the Greek public were animated by generous emotions, by generous sentiments, and by a generous policy in all that they have done, let them reflect that their object, as far as Crete is concerned, has now been absolutely attained—[cheers and cries of "No!"]—and that they lay themselves open to the suspicion by further action that they have not been animated by pure motives alone, but that there was an admixture of national ambition in the course which they have pursued. ["Hear, hear!"] I do not believe that that is the case. I believe that as soon as it is understood by the Greek public that Europe is determined to give autonomy to Crete, and that any further action on the part of the Greeks will imperil the general stability of European affairs, then they will see that duty and patriotism equally require them to withdraw from the position which hitherto, from the highest motives, they have taken up. May that be the policy which they adopt. In the meantime, the course which we have before us is a plain and simple course, and it is a course which we shall pursue for the benefit of Greece itself, for the benefit of Crete, for the benefit of East Europe, and, above all, for the benefit of the peace of Europe, which is the greatest interest of mankind. [Loud cheers.]

MR. JOHN MORLEY (Montrose Burghs), who was received with Opposition cheers, said: I am sure there is no dissent from the claim which the right hon. Gentleman has made for himself and his Government, that they are lovers of freedom and of peace. I cannot imagine any British Government which should be other than lovers of freedom and of peace. But we cannot forget that at this moment it is not at all impossible—some think that it is only too probable—that the effect of the policy which Her Majesty's Government are now pursuing will be to endanger peace, and that it has already done so. [Cheers and cries of "No!"] No one who listened to the speech of the Under Secretary and to his account of the state of Crete, and realised to himself the possiblity that Greece may refuse to evacuate the island—no such one could avoid the feeling that the cause of peace is at this moment exposed to most serious risk and danger. Everyone who listened to the speech of my right hon. Friend who moved this Motion will agree that in that speech, and in all that has been stated from this Bench, we have endeavoured to avoid giving—and I hope that I shall continue to avoid giving—a party complexion to this Debate. [Cries of "Oh!"] I think all of us here feel and recognise all that the right hon. Gentleman so eloquently and forcibly said as to the possible dangers that may arise from rash advice given in this House or rash action taken outside. We recognise the critical condition of these circumstances as fully as the right hon. Gentleman, and if there are aspects of the policy of the Government which we think imprudent and ill calculated to carry out the ends the Government have in view, that does not arise from party considerations but from our reading of the situation. The right hon. Gentleman secured the loud cheers of his friends behind him by a reference to the events of 1886. I am not going to dwell upon those events. [Ironical laughter.] I chanced to be a Member of the Cabinet whose actions the right hon. Gentleman criticised. [The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: "Described."] Yes, but there was an innuendo. [The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY: "You are quite right."] The coercive measures taken against Greece in 1886 were taken under a totally different state of circumstances from those which now exist—[cheers]; but as the right hon. Gentleman made a point of the coercive action taken by us, which was very different from that to which I think Her Majesty's Government will have to resort if their views are insisted upon, I may remind him that no less a person than the Prime Minister has expressly said, in a dispatch now in the hands of hon. Gentlemen, that the circumstances in 1896 were entirely different from the circumstances under which our Government acted in 1886. ["Hear, hear!"] The Austrian Government reminded Lord Salisbury of what had taken place ten years ago, and Lord Salisbury replied: "The distinction between the two appears to me very marked;" but the right hon. Gentleman now assumes, for the sake of his argument, that the circumstances of 1886 and 1897 are identical—a statement which Lord Salisbury has in advance repudiated. [AN HON. MEMBER: "Read on."] He says: "If Greece were to make any aggression upon the independence or integrity of Turkey—" [Ministerial cheers.] Yes, but that has been denied by the Under Secretary; it has never been stated that Greece has been guilty of aggression. Greece has intervened just as the other Powers have intervened. [Loud dissent.] The more the settlement of 1886 is examined the less I think will it be found that there is any parallel with the condition of things under which Her Majesty's Government are now acting. The right hon. Gentleman began with a vindication, with which I do not quarrel greatly, of the Concert of Europe. I admit that great perils might arise from any departure from that Concert, but, when it is said that the Cretans might still be ground down by Turkish domination were it not for the Concert of Europe, it is not explained how the Ottoman Government could have got its troops into Crete. It was not denied by the right hon. Gentleman that such is the position of Crete that were the Admirals agreed Turkey could not have landed, as she did in 1862, the large number of troops which would be required to pacify the whole of the interior of the island. ["Hear, hear!"] The right hon. Gentleman implied that we had gone too far in asking for details. The right hon. Gentleman said that we had a right to demand from the Government a clear exposition of their principles and of the general line of their policy, but that to ask for details was going too far, because the Government were acting in concert with five other Powers and because the details were not yet fully settled. Yes, but the immediate point before every Member of the House and before Greece is this. The Greeks will say: "When you require us to evacuate Crete it is of no use to give us general principles or lines of policy. We cannot undertake to evacuate Crete or to retire from the enterprise we have entered upon until we know, not only the general principles and the lines of your policy, but the details," which the right hon. Gentleman rather complains of us to-night for asking Her Majesty's Government to give us. ["Hear, hear!"] This is a case in which the whole worth of the settlement to be arrived at will depend upon details. Therefore we have a full right to ask Her Majesty's Government for some further particulars, with regard to which Her Majesty's Government have not given us one glimpse, of the kind of autonomy, how far and how wide it is to be, which they propose to give to Crete. ["Hear, hear"!] The right hon. Gentleman said that there were two main questions which he felt bound to answer. One was as to the nature of the autonomy which was to be conferred upon Crete. He, however, did not give us any answer to that question except by making use of a very vague and unsatisfactory phrase. Then the second question related to autonomy. I can quite understand that the details of the scheme of autonomy are not yet settled; but I would remind the right hon. Gentleman that what we understand Her Majesty's Government to mean now is a complete reversal of the policy which was announced by Lord Salisbury. The policy which was announced by Lord Salisbury as being carried out by the Powers was one of automony preceding coercion. Lord Salisbury—it may not be his fault—appears to have been baffled in carrying that policy out, because we are now told that the Greeks are required to evacuate Crete before they are told what is to be the scheme of autonomy which is to be conferred upon Crete. ["Hear, hear!"] If the Powers had agreed upon a scheme of autonomy which the Cretans would be justified in accepting, there is no reason why the right hon. Gentleman should not have given us some information with respect to it to-night, or should not have foreshadowed what kind of autonomy it was. Another important point upon which we desire information is how order is going to be maintained in this distracted island. Upon that point the right hon. Gentleman has no information whatever to give us. Are we to suppose that Turkish troops or Turkish police, or both, are to be used for maintaining order where they have so signally failed in doing so? My right hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen has read page after page from the Blue-book in which the action of these Turkish troops is only too plainly written. I cannot suppose that in that case the Cretans will have fair play, or that it is an argument that will induce the Greeks to evacuate the island in compliance with the determination arrived at by the Concert of Europe. I will not go back to what the Under Secretary said, that these troops were very good unless their officers ordered them to be bad; but I would remind both him and the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury, that they have given us no details whatever, not even any general indications, of the way in which this force is to be disciplined and maintained. ["Hear, hear!"] A more extraordinary device was never heard of. Here you have got Turkish troops ordered not to obey their own Turkish masters. They are to be under a sort of Condominium, as my right hon. Friend said, and we do not know who is going to pay for them. I think we might fairly have b een told at all events, that the Government have thought out fully this extraordinary device. ["Hear, hear!"] After all, in my judgment, the most important points in the Debate to which the attention of the Government should be given, are to be found in the speeches made, not on this side of the House, but on the other side, by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bodmin, the Member for North Armagh, and the Member for Belfast. It is well worth their while to take warning by those speeches. ["Oh, oh!" and "Hear, hear!"] My right hon Friend the Member for Bodmin, speaking, as he always does, with perfect freedom—[Ministerial cheers]—and imperfect responsibility, took a very definite view as to the danger that Her Majesty's Government would be running if they used the military forces of the Crown in the coercion of Greece. I think my right hon. Friend the Member for West Monmouth used language which is very proper—language that any of us should use upon this question. My right hon. Friend warned the Government that they were walking into a pass which led them they knew not where, but which might lead them to ulterior action which would undoubtedly be condemned by the bulk of the people of this island. ["Hear, hear!"] I for my part shall be very careful not to use any language about Greece beyond the language of admiration for the services she has rendered to humanity and her own race. [Cheers.] I agree with what was said by the Under Secretary, that anyone incurs a great responsibility in this House or this country who ventures to give advice to Greece either one way or the other. I think he would incur a very grave responsibility, and I am sure that advice, in one direction or the other, given in this House or in this country would fail with the Government of Greece, because they are face to face with a very complex and difficult and urgent set of circumstances, and those circumstances will have—must have—far more effect upon them than any words spoken by a friend in England. Therefore, we leave it where my right hon. Friend put it. We warn the Government of what was said by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bodmin, that they are apparently committing themselves to courses which may lead them into action which I am perfectly sure they will find even their own friends, their own general supporters in the country, look upon with grave doubt, and, in many cases, with profound and loud condemnation. ["Hear, hear!"] As to what may ultimately happen to Greece, it may be, as my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen has said, that the very first act that the first assembly chosen under your system of autonomy brings into operation will be to pronounce for annexation to the kingdom of Greece. That, in my judgment, would be a very happy consummation. [Cheers.] It is the natural consummation, it is the consummation which ought to have taken place but for misguided policy on the part of Great Britain in 1828 and 1830, and if that end comes it will be the end which lovers of humanity and civilisation in those distracted parts would most earnestly desire. ["Hear, hear!"] I think it will be agreed on the whole that we have avoided giving to this discussion anything like a party complexion. ["Hear, hear!"] We admit the difficulties in which the Government have been working, but we do not believe that they have taken the best way to meet and to solve those difficulties. ["Hear, hear!"] We look with the greatest doubt and dissatisfaction on the scheme which Lord Salisbury and the right hon. Gentleman have announced to-night, and to which apparently they adhere. We fear that there are grounds for apprehending that we are to-night only talking of the beginning of what may prove to be a most formidable set of transactions; and we do not think that Her Majesty's Government, so far as at present informed of their position, have taken up a position which will best enable them to grapple and deal with the new aspects which those transactions may by-and-by assume. That being our view, we have stated the opinions we hold. We have warned the Government of the dangers they are incurring, and we have listened almost with pain to one or two of the speeches from the other side. The speech of the hon. Member for St. Albans was one, I am quite sure, that no Gentleman on the Front Bench can agree with. The hon. Member said that if you want to know the Greek character and worth, the true measure of Greek aims, you must look to the "Stock Exchange Yearbook." [Laughter.] Language of that kind was received with loud approval by hon. Gentlemen opposite. Whatever may be the true ancient Greek character or the modern Greek character, I do not believe any one opposite will deny that, whatever may take place in future, the action of Greece, even at the eleventh hour, has in fact promoted that settlement—["No, no," and cheers]—and the more satisfactory the settlement is the more credit would be due to Greece. ["No," and cheers.] We are satisfied with the discussion that has taken place, and my right hon. friend will not divide the House. ["Oh, oh," and Ministerial cries of "Divide!"]

*SIR W. HARCOURT said it was not his intention, and he set out by indicating that it was not his desire, to take a Party division on the question. He asked the leave of the House to withdraw the Motion. [Cheers and cries of "No!"]

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

SITTING OF THE HOUSE (ASH WEDNESDAY).

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY moved, "That this House do meet To morrow at Two of the clock."

MR. HERBERT LEWIS (Flint Boroughs) protested against what had become more and more of an anachronism. He should ask the First Lord of the Treasury to grant a return showing how many Members had taken advantage of this opportunity to attend church. (Laughter.)

MR. SAMUEL EVANS (Glamorgan, Mid) said that if the Government were anxious to pass their Education Bill, as they professed, they ought to be obliged to any one who protested against the loss of two valuable working hours in to-morrow's sitting. What connection there was between Ash Wednesday and Derby Day he failed to understand. They were anxious to debate the Voluntary Schools Bill. Their anxiety did not spring from the same motives as that of hon. Gentlemen opposite. They were anxious that the country should see as early as possible the monstrosity of this Bill. The Government, on the other hand, said they desired to pass it.

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member is not speaking to the Question.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS said the Government, by this Motion, were taking two very useful hours during to-morrow which they themselves had allocated towards the discussion of the Voluntary Schools Bill. If his hon. Friend divided the House, he would be very pleased to tell with him and to vote against the Motion.

The House divided:—Ayes, 246; Noes, 81.—(Division List, No. 60).

MOTION.

PRISONERS' PERSONAL CORRECTION PROHIBITION.

Bill to prohibit the Personal Correction of Prisoners, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Joseph A. Pease, Mr. Broadhurst, Mr. Burt, Mr. John Burns, Mr. Lloyd-George, Sir Thomas Carmichael, Mr. Dillon, and Mr. John Redmond; presented accordingly, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Tuesday 30th March, and to be printed.—[Bill 148.]

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS BILL.

Considered in Committee.

[The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, in the Chair.]

Progress 1 March—SECOND DAY.

Clause 1,—

AID GRANT TO VOLUNTARY ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

(1.) For aiding Voluntary Schools there shall be annually paid out of moneys provided by Parliament an aid grant, not exceeding in the aggregate five shillings per scholar for the whole number of scholars in those schools.

(2.) The aid grant shall be distributed by the Education Department to such Voluntary Schools and in such manner and amounts, as the Department think best for the purpose of helping necessitous schools and increasing their efficiency, due regard being had to the maintenance of voluntary subscriptions.

(3.) If associations of schools are constituted in such manner in such areas and with such governing bodies representative of the managers as are approved by the Education Department, there shall be allotted to each association while so approved.

(a) a share of the aid grant to be computed according to the number of scholars in the schools of the association at the rate of five shillings per scholar, or, if the Department fix different rates for town and country schools respectively (which they are hereby empowered to do) then at those rates; and

(b) a corresponding share of any sum which may be available out of the aid grant after distribution has been made to unassociated schools.

(4.) The share so allotted to each such association shall be distributed as aforesaid by the Education Department after consulting the governing body of the association, and in accordance with any scheme prepared by that body which the Department for the time being approve.

(5.) The Education Department may exclude a school from any share of the aid grant which it might otherwise receive, if, in the opinion of the Department, it unreasonably refuses or fails to join such an association, but the refusal or failure shall not be deemed unreasonable if the majority of the schools in the association belong to a religious denomination to which the school in question does not itself belong.

(6.) The Education Department may require as a condition of a school receiving a share of the aid grant, that the accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the school shall be annually audited in accordance with the regulations of the Department.

(7.) The decision of the Education Department upon any question relating to the distribution or allotment of the aid grant, including the question whether an association is or is not in conformity with this Act, and whether a school is a town or a country school, shall be final.

MR. W. O. CLOUGH (Portsmouth) moved "That the Chairman do report Progress, and ask leave to sit again."

Question put. The Committee divided:—Ayes, 57; Noes, 189.—(Division List, No. 61.)

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs), on behalf of Mr. HERBERT LEWIS (Flint Boroughs), moved in Subsection (1) to leave out the words "in the aggregate."

MR. SAMUEL EVANS rose, but, it being Midnight, the Chairman left the Chair to make his Report to the House.

Committee report Progress; to sit again To-morrow.

SALMON FISHERIES (IRELAND) ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday, 30th March.

LAND LAW (IRELAND) (No. 2) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday, 23rd March.

JURIES DETENTION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

LAW OF EVIDENCE (CRIMINAL CASES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

TRUSTS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

MILITARY WORKS (MONEY) BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (ALDERSHOT AND FARNBOROUGH) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

BERRIEW SCHOOL BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday.

MILITARY LANDS ACT (1892) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till Thursday.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Standing Committee on Trade, etc. [17th February], further adjourned till Thursday.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till this day.

House adjourned at Two minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 3rd March 1897.

The House met at Two of the clock.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS BILL.

Considered in Committee.

Progress 2nd March—THIRD DAY.

[The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, in the Chair.]

Clause 1,—

(1) For aiding Voluntary Schools there shall be annually paid out of moneys provided by Parliament an aid grant, not exceeding in the aggregate 5s. per scholar for the whole number of scholars in those schools.

(2) The aid grant shall be distributed by the Education Department to such Voluntary Schools and in such manner and amounts as the Department think best for the purpose of helping necessitous schools and increasing their efficiency, due regard being had to the maintenance of voluntary subscriptions.

(3) If associations of schools are constituted in such manner in such areas and with such governing bodies representative of the managers as are approved by the Education Department, there shall be allotted to each association while so approved,

(a) a share of the aid grant to be computed according to the number of scholars in the schools of the association at the rate of 5s. per scholar, or, if the Department fix different rates for town and country schools respectively (which they are hereby empowered to do) then at those rates; and

(b) a corresponding share of any sum which may be available out of the aid grant after distribution has been made to unassociated schools.

(4) The share so allotted to each such association shall be distributed as aforesaid by the Education Department after consulting the governing body of the association, and in accordance with any scheme prepared by that body which the Department for the time being approve.

(5) The Education Department may exclude a school from any share of the aid grant which it might otherwise receive, if, in the opinion of the Department it unreasonably refuses or fails to join such an association, but the refusal or failure shall not be deemed unreasonable if the majority of the schools in the association belong to a religious denomination to which the school in question does not itself belong.

(6) The Education Department may require as a condition of a school receiving a share of the aid grant, that accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the school shall be annually audited in accordance with the regulations of the Department.

(7) The decision of the Education Department upon any question relating to the distribution or allotment of the aid grant, including the question whether an association is or is not in conformity with this Act, and whether a school is a town or a country school, shall be final.

Amendment proposed [3rd March] to leave out from sub-section (1) the words "in the aggregate:"—(Mr. Lloyd-George).

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the clause."

MR. HERBERT LEWIS (Flint Boroughs) resumed the Debate on the Amendment. He said that in his view the words "in the aggregate" were either entirely unnecessary, and therefore mere surplusage, or that they had an effect which would not appear on the first reading of the clause. The Solicitor General had stated, in reply to the noble Lord the Member for Rochester, that the words "in the aggregate" governed the words "not exceeding," and that therefore the former words would be sufficient to prevent any diminution whatever of the grant in the course of the year. He should like to ask the Solicitor General whether the insertion of those words really had that effect, and if they had, on what ground they had that effect?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL (Sir ROBERT FINLAY, Inverness Burghs) thought the words "in the aggregate" should certainly be retained. He did not think they were superflous in the sense that they made a little clearer what was the meaning of the section. The meaning of the section was that the amount of the grant was to be the aggregate five shillings per scholar, for the whole number of scholars in these schools, and if they left out the words the only possible effect would be to make a little less clear what the intention of the section was.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) said they understood from the Attorney General the other evening that if the words "in the aggregate" were omitted, then, in any year in which Parliament came to the conclusion that the whole of this money would not be required in that particular year, even if they voted that amount, it would not necessarily have to be spent in that year. If the words "in the aggregate" were left in the section the Committee were given to understand by the Attorney General that every year the same sum must be granted, and every year the same amount must be expended, for the purposes of the Bill. From the point of view of the Opposition, and without for a moment saying there were not a large number of necessitous schools requiring the aid grant, he considered the effect of the words upon the basis upon which the Government founded their Bill. If the words were included would they compel the Government of the day in a future year, whether the whole of the amount were required or not for necessitous schools, to expend the whole amount? Nothing could, of course, bind the House of Commons for a future year; but would it be necessary, under this clause, that the whole sum should be spent whether it was required or not? The point he had in his mind was this. It was possible that these necessitous schools, having received large sums for years to come, though necessitous now might subsequently become self-supporting if their subscriptions did not fall off, as it was anticipated they would not; and, under such circumstances, would the whole of the money necessarily be devoted year by year to its present purpose, whether actually required or not?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL said he did not think the Attorney General had put the interpretation on the words which had been attributed to him, and he had not used words in that sense. Under the clause, of course, they could not bind Parliament in future Sessions, but it would be a most unusual thing if, this Act being passed in these terms, this grant of money were refused. If this money were voted by Parliament, amounting in the aggregate to 5s. per scholar, the Education Department would have no right to refuse to spend the money in the year; it would have to be appropriated in the manner prescribed among the associated and unassociated schools. The Clause did not depend on the words "in the aggregate," but, as conducing to clearness, the words should remain.

MR. SYDNEY GEDGE (Walsall) said he had given Notice to move the omission of the words, because they seemed to him to be ungrammatical and contradictory. "An aid grant not exceeding in the aggregate 5s. per scholar;" but 5s. was not the aggregate; 5s. was the rate per scholar, not the total. He thought the words should be struck out; but the point was not worth ten minutes' discussion.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS (Glamorgan, Mid) said he had felt a similar difficulty in construing the words. He could not see that the words made grammar or sense, and certainly he did not see, after the explanation of the Solicitor General, that the words were in any degree useful. According to that explanation the intention of the clause was that the full sum should be spent, and it would be obligatory on the Education Department to spend the full amount of £600,000 odd in the year. He was glad to have this explanation at last; he had pressed for it some weeks ago. He did not complain that the hon. and learned Gentleman did not then give an answer; no doubt he wanted to give the point further consideration. There was no doubt now that the intention of the Government and their construction of the clause was that the Education Department would have to spend this sum of £600,000 odd each year; and really this was not the maximum, but the minimum, sum that would have to be annually spent. In thinking over what might have been the intention of the draftsman in putting in the words "in the aggregate," it struck him they were put in in order to make the proposal clear that a round sum should be fixed, but should not be distributed according to the number of scholars in each school. But the point did not require a lengthy discussion, and after what the Solicitor General had said it would be well to omit the words, which had given rise to difficulty in the minds of Members on either side.

MR. R. W. PERKS (Lincolnshire, Louth) said, as the words were admitted to be surplusage, they should be struck out.

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL said he did not say they were surplusage; he said they made the meaning of the clause more clear.

MR. PERKS said the meaning was clear without the words; they had been condemned as ungrammatical, and were admitted not to be necessary. Why, then, cumber an Act with surplus words? He should have thought that probably the object of the words would be to show the intention that certain schools should not get more than a sum at the rate of 5s. per head. The Solicitor General admitted the words were useless and worthless—["No, no!"]—and were simply put in to make the meaning doubly clear, but the latter portion of the clause made the meaning perfectly clear without the words.

Question put, "That the words 'in the aggregate' stand part of the clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 157; Noes, 79.—(Division List, No. 62.)

MR. SAMUEL EVANS moved, after the word "aggregate," to insert the words—

> "the sum per scholar contributed by voluntary subscriptions for each such school in each year and in any event not exceeding."

He contended that he had sound and solid ground for this Amendment, which he might be pardoned for thinking was of a most important character. The principle of the maintenance of Voluntary Schools was based at the outset upon the schools being maintained in great measure by voluntary contributions. The settlement of 1870 would never have been arrived at but for the fact that the supporters of national and sectarian schools were able to point to the large measure of support which those schools had already received, and were continuing to receive, from the voluntary contributions of the parents and of the churches to which the schools belonged. The settlement of 1870 was allowed to remain undisturbed until 1876, when for the first time it was conceded that at any rate the whole principle of equal voluntary contributions need not be maintained; and when the 17s. 6d. limit was arrived at, so far a concession was made to those who contributed to the schools by voluntary contributions. But that principle, which was introduced in 1876 was absolutely and entirely at variance with the settlement of 1870, and that was pointed out by Lord Hartington, in his speech upon an Amendment with regard to the 17s. 6d. limit, in the course of which he said:—

> "Since the Second Reading a clause has been introduced (the 17s. 6d. limit) which altogether abandons the principle hitherto adopted by Parliament, that assistance should be given to denominational schools only in proportion to the voluntary contributions."

That principle was spoken of in the present day, but the Government had turned their backs upon it. They had expressed a pious opinion on the subject which was to be found in the second sub-section, and which ran, "due regard being had to the maintenance of voluntary subscriptions." If due regard was to be had to the maintenance of voluntary subscriptions he submitted to the Committee it was necessary to look at the amount of those voluntary subscriptions in any school before they came to the conclusion that that school ought to be helped at all. They ought not to take into consideration the number of scholars in average attendance in any of those schools, which had not helped themselves by these Voluntary subscriptions. If a school existed in which there was no voluntary subscriptions at all, they had no right to take the number of scholars in that school into consideration in arriving at the aggregate amount they were to give to the schools. He admitted that the result of the acceptance of the Amendment would be in a large measure to reduce the amount which was to be applied. The way the Amendment would work would be this: If the voluntary contributions in any one school amounted to 5s. per head of the scholars in average attendance, then that school could be taken into consideration in arriving at the amount which was to be granted by the Department. If the voluntary contributions only amounted to 2s. 6d. per head for the children in average attendance, then the school ought only to be taken into consideration so far as the half-crown would go, so that that would limit the grant proposed by the Bill. The effect of such an Amendment would be that if there were schools where there was no voluntary contributions at all, those schools ought not to be taken into account in any way whatever, because they had done nothing to help themselves. The raison d'être of this

Bill was the intolerable strain, but there was no intolerable strain in a school where there was no strain at all. If there was no voluntary contributions there was no strain upon the voluntary contributors. The number of schools throughout England and Wales, where there were no voluntary subscriptions, was 1,061; the number in which the amount contributed was less than 1s. per child, was 674; the number where the amount was less than 2s. 6d., 1,095; and the number in which the amount was less than 5s., 1,967. The result, therefore, of the Amendment would be that there would be a limitation upon the money which was to be granted by Parliament, and to be expended by the Education Department in proportion to the number of schools where the voluntary subscriptions were under 5s. per head. So far as Wales itself was concerned, greater efforts had been made even by the National Society, for the maintenance of their own schools, than was the case in England. The figures for the Welsh counties were very interesting. The hon. Member was quoting the figures when—

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS (Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, Cumberland, Penrith) said he did not see their relevancy. The sole point before the Committee was whether average attendance or voluntary subscriptions should be the basis of the aggregate amount of the aid grant.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS said he would not go further into the figures. His object was to show the financial result of his Amendment, and to what extent, in the part of the country he knew best, the limitation would be made in the amount of the grant. But there were a few other figures he wished to give to show the injustice done to the taxpayers if the Government took into account the scholars in average attendance. He would take five towns in Glamorganshire. In Swansea the National Schools annual voluntary subscription amounted to £33 7s. 10d., the average attendance was 2,068, and the schools would get, under the Bill, £516 10s. At Aberavon the voluntary subscription was £25 15s. 8d., the average attendance 388, and the amount to be received at 5s. per scholar was £97. At Aberdare the voluntary contribution was £89 0s. 5d. per annum, average attendance 1,226, new aid grant £306 10s. At Cardiff the Bill would be to the advantage of the Roman Catholics. To those schools there was contributed £139 7s. 5d., the average attendance was 1835, and under the Bill at 5s. a scholar those schools would be entitled to £458 15s. At Duffryn the voluntary subscriptions were £15 per annum, the average attendance 815, and under the Bill the schools there would be entitled to £203, so that in this instance they multiplied by thirteen the amount of the voluntary subscriptions.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.) rising to order, asked whether the hon. Member's remarks were relevant? The subscriptions had nothing to do with the aid to be given to individual schools, but only with the aggregate amount of the grant.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said he understood the hon. Member was using these instances as an argument to show that the total amount would be reduced.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS contended that the figures he had given showed the injustice of the proposals of the Government.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said it was arguable that a school ought not to receive more from the State than it derived from voluntary subscriptions; it was also arguable that the total amount to be given to Voluntary Schools should not exceed the total amount of voluntary subscriptions to those schools. It was also arguable that the State should not contribute by way of State aid grant more than the schools themselves provided by way of voluntary contributions. What, however, was not arguable was the Amendment of the hon. Gentleman, who proposed that they should limit the aid to Voluntary Schools where the voluntary subscriptions were below 5s. per scholar, and that where they exceeded that amount there should not be a pro tanto allowance. This he held was not arguable, and therefore he would not take up the time of the Committee by discussing it.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs) regretted that the First Lord of the Treasury should have treated the Amendment so slightingly. He evidently did not understand the Amendment. The result of every aid grant to the Voluntary Schools would be that the voluntary subscriptions would steadily go down. The right hon. Gentleman had not answered a single argument of his hon. and learned Friend. Unless some such Amendment as this was introduced, the tendency of the Bill must necessarily be to limit the amount of the voluntary subscriptions. If the Amendment were carried, pressure would be brought to bear upon schools which did not pay voluntary contributions up to 5s. to bring their subscriptions up to that point. The result of legislation hitherto had been that subscriptions had steadily gone down. In 1870 the proportion of the subscription to the total income of the school was 49 per cent.; at the present moment it was 17 per cent. If they passed this Bill in its present form the subscriptions would become something like 12 or 15 per cent. The result of the special aid grant of 1891 was that parental subscriptions had gone down steadily. Every additional grant voted by the House of Commons to the Voluntary Schools had reduced the amount of the voluntary subscriptions. Some inducement or pressure ought to be brought to bear from outside upon the schools which did not bring up their subscriptions to the amount which would entitle them to a grant of 5s. a head. His hon. Friend had quoted four of the principal towns in Wales where the amount contributed by the Imperial Exchequer to the Diocesan Association would be very materially reduced. At the present moment the voluntary subscriptions in those towns did not amount to anything like the amount which would entitle them to the full grant of 5s. per head. The contribution of the Imperial Exchequer to the Association in that diocese would be reduced to something like one-third. Every possible inducement should be placed by Parliament in the way of raising the subscriptions, and consequently raising the efficiency of these schools. It was assumed that each one of these schools would join an association, but was that so? The Education Department could only exclude a school from any share in the aid grant upon grounds which were deemed to be sufficient. Supposing a National, Catholic, Wesleyan or British School refused to join the Association, the Department might say that there was no sufficient reason for excluding that school, and under the first sub-section of this clause the aid grant would be paid direct to that school. The Amendment, he contended, ought to be carried in the interests of the Voluntary Schools themselves, and of the necessitous schools, and, above all, in the interests of the children.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield) said the further they travelled in the discussion on the clauses of the Bill the more discoveries they made. ["Hear, hear!"] They had supposed that the words of this clause were intended to induce the managers of the schools to maintain, if not increase, their subscriptions, but they were now told that that was not the intention, and that they had relation to the aggregate of the schools, and not to the individual schools. The result would be that the school which had had no voluntary subscriptions, or very inadequate voluntary subscriptions, would get a share of the grant to which it was not entitled.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said the hon. Member was anticipating the discussion which would arise on the next sub-section.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS said he would add to the reasons why this principle should be insisted upon, the sufficient reason that the amount of support which was given by the managers of these schools was a test of their sincerity and interest, and unless they submitted to that test they had no right to insist on the continued management of their schools. Public schools, supported by public money, but managed entirely by private persons, were an anachronism of which the House ought not to approve.

*MR. JOSEPH A. PEASE (Northumberland, Tyneside) did not think the Committee understood the real effect of this Amendment. Taking 175 children as the average number of children in a Voluntary School, and 4,797 as the number of the schools which at present received less than 5s. per head in average attendance, the effect of the Amendment would be to reduce the grant from £620,000 to £409,000. The poorer people of this country, particularly in the north of England, with which he was connected, were often Catholics. The Catholics in his district were not as able as other bodies to afford subscriptions to maintain their schools, and, on account of their poverty, were less able to pay even 5s. per head than other denominations. He had pledged himself to support increased aid being given by the State under suitable conditions. Though the conditions were absent in the proposals of the Government, yet he was unable to vote for a reduction of the amount, as he desired to see relief given to the poorer classes, who had made sacrifices in the interests of education.

MR. REGINALD McKENNA (Monmouth, N.) said he had still an open mind in regard to the Amendment. The Bill was for the purpose of assisting necessitous schools, and in arriving at the amount of money which Parliament was to provide for that purpose two factors were taken. The first was the grant of 5s. per head, which had no relation to the necessity of the schools, but was arrived at by the Chancellor of the Exchequer as the amount that could be voted. The second factor was not the number of scholars in necessitous schools, but the number of scholars in Voluntary Schools. If he were assured that the degree of necessity of each Voluntary School was in no way to be measured by the amount of its voluntary subscription he would be compelled to vote against the Amendment.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I can give the hon. Gentleman the assurance he desires. There is no certain relation between the priority of a school and the amount of its voluntary subscriptions.

*MR. CHARLES HARRISON (Plymouth) said that if the Amendment were not adopted there would be an amount voted which would be larger and in excess of the amount which, under the Bill as now drawn, could under any circumstances be possibly applied. The "aid grant"—that was to say, in other words, "the aggregate total sum"—was to be distributed by the Bill, as now drawn, subject to conditions, one of which fundamental conditions was that a school must have some voluntary subscriptions, because unless there were some voluntary subscriptions, the condition of paying due regard to the maintenance of Voluntary Schools would be incapable of application. He construed the Bill, as now drawn, as preventing any school not having voluntary subscriptions from participating in the aid grant, and if that were so, then the aggregate total would, if the Amendment were not adopted, amount to a sum for which no purpose was assigned by the Bill, or which could be employed under the Bill.

MR. BRYNMOR JONES (Swansea Boroughs) confessed that at first he did not see the extreme importance of the Amendment, and he had approached it from somewhat the same point of view as his hon. Friend the Member for North Monmouth. But the answer given to his hon. Friend by the First Lord of the Treasury had convinced him that he ought to vote for the Amendment. The right hon. Gentleman had admitted that the amount of money to be granted to each school was solely to be decided by the number of its scholars.

MR. T. R. LEUTY (Leeds, E.) said that Parliament in its dealings with grants of public money for the assistance of the Voluntary Schools had hitherto acted on the principle that if those schools were to be protected from the undue competition of the Board Schools, and the private managers were to retain the management in their own hands, there was to be a quid pro quo in the form of a contribution of some of the cost of management. The Government now proposed to act on the principle of counting heads, and to discourage the giving of subscriptions to those schools. He had no admiration whatever for the relics of the system of keeping up voluntary subscriptions. It was a fine on poverty which pressed especially hard on the Catholic Schools. On conditions, he should be ready to see the system abolished altogether; but let Government either make the thing a reality or say at once that they were going to give public money regardless of subscriptions. The Government should remember that for the first time a grant was being given without its being in lieu of something else. This was an aggregate sum, which would go into the pockets of the aggregate Conservative Party.

MR. D. F. GODDARD (Ipswich) pointed out this Amendment had nothing to do with the distribution of the money, but simply affected the means of arriving at the aggregate sum to be distributed. Therefore the poor schools would not be fined any more than other schools. No doubt, however, the aggregate sum would be decreased by the Amendment. The proposal to take into account all the schools which were called Voluntary, whether they raised subscriptions or not, and to arrive in that way at the sum to be distributed, was most unreasonable.

MR. A. J. MUNDELLA (Sheffield, Brightside) said that the Amendment would not affect the distribution of the grant at all, but simply the amount to be collected for the purposes of distribution. For a year or two the great effect would undoubtedly be to reduce the total amount of the grant; but the poor schools would still get their due proportion. But what would be the ultimate effect of the Amendment? He should support the Amendment, not because he wished to reduce the grant, but to secure some correspondence between the amount of the grant given to each school and the amount of subscriptions raised by that school. In this, he was but echoing speeches which had been made over and over again on the other side of the House. The right hon. Member for Dartford had said, "We must support our Voluntary Schools more liberally than in the past." In the Lancashire towns there would be no difficulty in raising subscriptions to 5s. a head; and if the subscription were made the basis of the calculation for the grant, the effect in a year or two would be to raise the whole of the Voluntary Schools subscriptions up to the 5s. point. The schools would benefit enormously from this, and the teachers would no longer be sweated. No one who really believed in the need for Voluntary Schools should hesitate to adopt the Amendment.

MR. F. A. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.) said that he should support the Amendment. In most districts the subscriptions to Catholic Schools were larger than those to the Church Schools. The Amendment was a protest against the outrage to common sense implied in asking that the total number of children in the Voluntary Schools should be made the basis for calculating the total grant. Schools which had no subscriptions whatever, and which were supported entirely out of the pockets of the taxpayers, were to be included in order to increase the total sum to be given to these diocesan associations for the purpose of propagating high Anglicism. It was one of the greatest scandals of the Bill.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS said that the hon. Member for the Tyneside division misapprehended the effect of the Amendment. The schools mentioned by the hon. Member would not be excluded from any share of the grant. Their share would be proportioned to the amount of their subscriptions. The effect of the Amendment would be that those schools which had no subscriptions would have no share of the grant to be divided by the Association to which it belonged. The grant to the other schools in the Association would not thereby be diminished; but there would be a strong inducement to schools with no subscriptions to raise them. According to the amount they raised, they would share in the grant.

Mr. J. W. LOGAN (Leicester, Harborough) rose to address the Committee, when

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY claimed to move: "That the Question be now put."

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS withheld his assent, because he was of opinion that the Committee was prepared shortly to come to a decision without that Motion. [Opposition cries of "Hear, hear!"]

Debate resumed.

Mr. LOGAN said he understood that the object of the Amendment was to induce the subscribers to Voluntary Schools to increase, or at least to continue, their subscriptions. ["Hear, hear!"] He was not in favour of Voluntary Schools at all, and therefore he could not support the Amendment. He looked forward to the time when the nation would decide that it was in its own best interests that it should provide all the money necessary for the education of the children of the country.

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: The last remark of the hon. Member is totally irrelevant to the question before the Committee. [Ministerial cries of "Hear, hear!"]

Mr. LOGAN said he simply wished to point out that he could not support the Amendment, because one of its objects was to induce the subscribers to those schools to increase their subscriptions, and, as he had said, he looked forward to the day when the whole cost of education would be provided by the country. [Ministerial cries of "Order, order!"]

Mr. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.) said he could not agree with the line of argument taken by the hon. Member for the Harborough Division, and heartily supported the Amendment. He did so on educational grounds, for he concurred with the opinion expressed by the hon. Member for Carnarvon that, if the Amendment were agreed to, it would act as an educational stimulus to the Voluntary Schools. [Opposition cries of "Hear, hear!"]

Mr. EDWARD CARSON (Dublin University): I claim to move: "That the Question be now put." [Ministerial cheers and Opposition cries of "No!"]

Question put, "That the Question be now put."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 266; Noes, 109.—(Division List, No. 63.)

Question put accordingly, "That those words be there inserted."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 96; Noes, 296.—(Division List, No. 64.)

The announcement of the numbers was received with Ministerial laughter.

Mr. JAMES LOWTHER (Kent, Thanet) asked what course he should pursue with regard to the fact that on the Division on the Closure he had voted in the wrong Lobby. [Laughter.]

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS said the right hon. Gentleman should have called attention to the matter after the Division referred to. At present there was no course open to him; but on the occasion the only thing to do under the circumstances was to take measures to avoid passing the Tellers. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS proposed to leave out the word "five," in order to insert instead thereof the word "four." This, he said, would reduce the allowance per scholar to the sum proposed in the Bill of last year. The bonus to Voluntary Schools was now fixed at £620,000, so that by the addition of the shilling as compared with last year, the bonus was increased by £150,000. He moved the reduction, not because he thought that schools which were not under the control of the ratepayers were entitled to any public money, but because they had gone so far. These schools were sectarian in the past, and they were to remain sectarian. If he followed the dictates of his own judgment and conscience he would not give such schools a single penny. He submitted that no case had been made out for the increase on the Bill of last year.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY, opposing the Amendment, said that in his judgment 5s. was not at all too much. He might go farther and say that it was too little. ["Hear, hear!"] At present the average expenditure throughout England and Wales was about £2 per head in Board Schools, and about £1 9s. in Voluntary Schools, leaving a balance of 11s. He thought that showed that the 5s. left many wants unsatisfied.

MR. A. H. DYKE ACLAND (York, W.R., Rotherham) said that he confessed, when he bore in mind the condition of things that prevailed in England and Wales with regard to the voluntary system of education, he was not much surprised at the opinion which had been expressed by the hon. Member for Mid Glamorgan. There could be no doubt that there were particular districts in Wales in which a condition of things existed that could hardly be understood in England, and which justified hon. Members from Wales in looking at this question from their own point of view, and feeling very strongly indeed upon it. In England we were not accustomed to a state of things in which nine-tenths of the population, who were Nonconformists, were compelled to send their children to schools that were under the management and control of a religious denomination with which they had no connection. As to the point whether this grant should be at the rate of 4s. or 5s. per head, he confessed that he had no desire to limit the grant to either amount. He had been satisfied last year with a 4s. grant, and he was satisfied this year with a 5s. grant. He hoped that the Government would be able to show that this 5s. grant would secure the efficiency of these necessitous Voluntary Schools. This grant would undoubtedly raise the total sum given by the State for educational purposes, and he hoped that it would not at the same time reduce the amount of the subscriptions of the Voluntary Schools. For his own part, he had never grudged State grants for Voluntary Schools, subject to reasonable conditions. He thought, however, that if 5s. were given to Voluntary Schools to be pooled for the necessitous schools, an equal sum ought to be given to Board Schools all round, which might also be pooled in the same manner, for the benefit of necessitous Board Schools. He thought that if the Government were to impose conditions in relation to this grant which might be thought reasonable by a large number of hon. Members on both sides of the House, there could be no objection to this 5s. grant. ["Hear, hear!"]

*SIR JOSEPH PEASE (Durham, Barnard Castle) said he was very much in favour of the view of the right hon. Gentleman the First Lord of the Treasury, that a 5s. grant was not too much for either Voluntary or other schools. He had had a great deal to do with Voluntary Schools during his life, and he thought that they deserved assistance. But unless they received from Her Majesty's Government some greater token than they had hitherto had, that they were prepared to meet the wishes of the Opposition, that they would attach reasonable conditions to the grant, he should feel himself bound to vote for the Amendment. As matters stood at present, he could not help regarding this 5s. grant as an additional endowment of the Church of England, Under this proposal the Church of England would receive some £400,000 per annum. [An hon. Member: "£600,000."] No; the balance would go to the other religious denominations. What proof had they that the Church of England held any adequate supervision over the religious teaching given in the Church of England Voluntary Schools? He was not prepared to endow the Church of England with an annual sum which, if capitalised, would amount to £12,000,000, and which, after all, the parents of the children and the taxpayers of the country would have to contribute unless certain conditions were laid down as to the management of the schools by those who thus contributed. He trusted that those who were interested in education would try and keep their minds as clear as possible from sectarian influences, and would keep in view the interests of education. So far from this grant of 5s. being too much, in his opinion it was too little, because the whole of our system of education was very much behindhand when compared with Switzerland or with that of Germany. Why could not the Government come forward and get rid of all the difficulties of this question by following the advice of the right hon. Gentleman, and taking a broader view of the matter? Why should not the Board Schools receive the same consideration as the Voluntary Schools?

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Member, but the question of the Board Schools is not before us. The question is whether the grant shall be 5s. or 4s. per head.

*Sir J. PEASE said that of course he should bow to the ruling of the right hon. Gentleman in the Chair. Unless the Government gave the Committee some satisfactory assurance as to the conditions to be attached to this grant, he should certainly vote for the Amendment, because he was unwilling to endow the Church of England unconditionally with the large sum he had referred to. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. COURTENAY WARNER (Stafford, Lichfield) said that he had placed upon the Paper an Amendment similar to that which had been moved by his hon. Friend the Member for Mid Glamorgan. He had no desire to injure the work of the Voluntary Schools, and his object in putting down his Amendment was to secure the distribution of this money among the really necessitous schools of that class, and to increase the amount of the grant which they would receive from 5s. to £1 per head. If the Board Schools were to have anything, a great deal more money would be required than was provided by this Bill. He did not think that the necessitous schools would suffer by this grant being reduced to 4s. per head. They had to take care that, in making this grant, they would not be conducing to the falling off in the amount of subscriptions. Four shillings would be quite enough to relieve the necessitous schools throughout the country from what was called the intolerable strain; whereas it would at the same time leave a certain amount to be found by subscriptions. It had been said that this Bill amounted to an endowment of the Church of England. He hoped it would not be a general endowment all round, but that the Government would see that their money went only in relief of necessitous schools.

*Sir JOHN BAKER (Portsmouth) said he could not support the Amendment, because he thought the question on which the difference of opinion arose was not so much the amount of the contribution as the belief that its administration would not be of such a character as would justify the grant of public money. He had always supported what was called Voluntary Schools in every possible way, and he could not therefore vote for a reduction of the grant, for if he did that he would possibly be doing something to limit the usefulness of these schools in the future, and probably hindering a grant of a larger sum from the Exchequer to other schools.

*Mr. EDWARD STRACHEY (Somerset, S.) thought the Welsh Members were justified in the Amendment, not only as Welsh Members, but as Radicals, and that English Radicals would be right in supporting them against any proposal to give more money to Voluntary Schools, unless it were accompanied by adequate popular control. [" Hear, hear ! "] In a large number of those schools there was a kind of popular control in the fact that there was a large body of subscribers; but the proposals of the Government would have the direct effect of reducing the number of subscribers, and would increase the danger of having more one man schools in the country. [" Hear, hear ! "] For these reasons he found it necessary to go into the Lobby with his Welsh friends, not because he objected to giving more money to Voluntary Schools, which he believed had their place and work in the Education system side by side with Board Schools, but because he held that if more money was given to them there must at the same time be some local control. So long as the Government opposed any form of local control, he should oppose any further grant of public money to Voluntary Schools. [" Hear, hear ! "]

Sir FRANK LOCKWOOD (York) said he gathered that there was not much difference of opinion between his hon. Friend who had just sat down and himself. Notwithstanding the views he held, his hon. Friend was unable to exercise sufficient self-denial to prevent him going into the Lobby with their mutual Welsh Friends. He held the views his hon. Friend held, but he should exercise self-denial on this occasion; but his hon. Friends from Wales must not suppose that he did not sympathise with the view they took, having regard to the exceptional circumstances by which they found themselves surrounded. The Government were responsible, rather than his hon. Friends, for this Amendment, for they had given absolutely no reason whatever for fixing the grant at 5s. The First Lord of the Treasury had not said a single word in justification of it. He did not for one moment complain that the sum was too great. He had no wish to deal with Voluntary Schools in a niggardly spirit, but he did hope that there would be some reciprocity in this matter—[" hear, hear ! "]—and that when other than Voluntary Schools were dealt with, the Government would deal with them in as liberal a manner as they were now dealing with Voluntary Schools. [" Hear, hear ! "] Hon. Members had continually, in the course of the Debate, expressed the desire that voluntary subscriptions should be maintained at their present rate, and he hoped that before the Bill passed into law something might be done to insure the maintenance of subscriptions. That was another reason why he was anxious that this sum of 5s. should remain in the Bill, in order that when they have to deal with Amendments in that regard, they might impress on the Government that something ought to be done to stimulate private subscriptions when such a large sum of public money was being allocated to this particular class of schools. Although he was not very sanguine that they would be able to induce the Government to do that, he thought they ought to be in a position to point out that Voluntary Schools were being generously treated, and that subscribers ought, therefore, to extend their generosity. He was most anxious, therefore, that the grant should be a liberal one, and for that reason he should vote against the Amendment.

Sir WILLIAM HART DYKE (Kent, Dartford) said that if hon. Members on his side of the House had not taken much part hitherto in the discussion of Amendments, it was because those Amendments had not been deserving of much consideration. He assured the Committee that when important questions like that of the distribution of the money under the association system were reached there would be nothing in the nature of a conspiracy of silence on the Ministerial side of the House. The right hon. Member for Rotherham had told them that there was a feeling of bitterness among the Members from Wales on account of the character of many of the schools in the Principality. He would ask the Committee whether they were prepared to ask the taxpayers of this country to spend millions in order to construct schools in place of Voluntary Schools merely because thirty Welsh Members felt that they had a serious grievance? Many hon. Members opposite had said that they would be willing that a grant of 5s. or even 6s. should be given if it could thereby be rendered certain that the schools would gain in efficiency. They might, he thought, feel fairly confident that that would be the result, because the Education Department was to be the arbiter in the matter of the application of the money. That Department, it should be remembered, had administered millions annually to the satisfaction of the country at large. If he thought that the associations of schools were to be intrusted with the distribution of the grant without the guidance and control of the Education Department he should not support the Bill. It was because he had complete confidence in the control of the Department that he was content. Hon. Members from Wales said that they did not know how much per scholar might be granted to schools. Of course no man could say how much per head would be granted. That was a question which must be determined by the Education Department.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS observed that the right hon. Gentleman was not confining himself to the point, which was the difference between 4s. and 5s.

SIR W. HART DYKE replied that as this was the first time he had ever been called to order in that House, he need hardly say that he at once bowed to the ruling of the Chair. The hon. and learned Member for York had complained that the right hon. Gentleman in charge of the Bill had never explained by what process of calculation the sum of 5s. had been arrived at. For his part he surmised that the sum of 5s. was the nearest estimate that the Education Department could make of the sum required by necessitous schools. But possibly the Department had arrived at a larger estimate, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer had intervened and prevented its acceptance.

SIR F. LOCKWOOD observed that they had not heard that that had been the experience of the Department, either from the First Lord of the Treasury or from the Vice President of the Council.

SIR JAMES WOODHOUSE (Huddersfield) said that he should vote against the Amendment, as he was anxious that the amount which the Government wished to give to the Voluntary Schools should not be diminished. He would, however, appeal to the Government to assent to conditions which would insure that the grant should be applied for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of schools and the remuneration of teachers. Conditions of that kind were inserted in the Bill of last year. The First Lord of the Treasury had told them that at present the average expenditure throughout England and Wales was about £2 per head in Board Schools and about £1 9s. in Voluntary Schools, leaving a balance of 11s. The difference in the remuneration of teachers accounted for 8s. 9d. or 8s. 10d. out of this balance. He proposed to move an Amendment on this subject, and he trusted that the Government would see their way to accept it, as it embodied the conditions which they thought right to insert in the Bill of 1896.

MR. PERKS said that, unlike some of his hon. Friends, he did not propose to support the Government on this question. Abundant reasons had been given why this extra shilling should not be granted. The saving of one shilling proposed by the Amendment represented an annual sum of £155,000, which, capitalised by 40 years' purchase, represented upwards of £6,000,000. The Committee were being asked to vote for the Voluntary Schools a sum which, capitalised, more than doubled the total sum spent on all the Voluntary School buildings in the country. The annual sum of £625,000 represented £24,000,000, and nobody had ever alleged that the total amount spent in the erection of the Voluntary Schools exceeded £11,000,000. If they voted this 5s. endowment for the support of these schools they would be making a present to the Voluntary School managers of upwards of £24,000,000. He would remind the Committee that the late Archbishop of Canterbury, at the annual meeting of the National Society last year, declared that a grant of 4s. was quite enough. Why did not the Government act on the view of the late Archbishop? It had been suggested that they would get some small concessions by-and-by from the Government, but he did not entertain any such illusory hope himself. ["Hear, hear!"] There had been too many indications that the Government meant, by the exercise of the Closure or by other means, to pass this Bill without altering a single line of it.

MR. ALBERT SPICER (Monmouth Boroughs) said that this was a question that appealed to the people of the country. His hon. Friends would not move the Amendments they did, which the right hon. Gentlemen said were not worth consideration, unless they felt that those who sent them there had sympathy with their views. He well knew that the Voluntary Schools needed this help, and more than this; but he complained of the way in which this Bill was being forced through—[ironical laughter]—and of the way in which those who were responsible for presenting the Education Estimates to the House were declining to take any part in the discussion. Hon. Members had been promised that Amendments would be favourably entertained, but up to the present he had seen no disposition evinced in this direction. He supported the Amendment, not because he thought the Voluntary Schools did not need more help, but as a protest against the way in which the Bill was being treated by hon. Gentlemen opposite.

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH (Anglesey) said the question was whether or not the 5s. grant was enough for the Voluntary Schools. A greater authority on this point than the late Archbishop of Canterbury was the Government, who thought that 4s. was enough last year. What were the circumstances which had occurred since last year to render the extra shilling necessary? Was there any mystic efficacy about the 5s. which had recommended it to the attention of the Government? Had it not rather been chosen by chance and multiplied by another figure chosen by chance?

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON thought that some reply should be given by the Government to the question as to what was the basis upon which 5s. had been fixed instead of 4s., and why £620,000 was stated to be needed for necessitous Voluntary Schools.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I can add nothing to the speech I have already made. The hon. Member was not in the House when I spoke. [Cheers.]

MR. ABEL THOMAS (Carmarthen, E.) pressed for a statement of some definite reason why 5s. had been fixed upon as the right amount. Surely the Education Department were in possession of the figures which had been acted upon.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY rose in his place and claimed to move, "That the Question be now put."

Question put, "That the Question be now put."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 291; Noes, 124.—(Division List, No. 65.)

Question put accordingly, "That the word 'five' stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 320; Noes, 94.—(Division List, No. 66.)

And, it being Half-past Five of the clock, the CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS proceeded to interrupt the business.

Whereupon,

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY claimed to move, "That the Question 'That the words of the Clause down to the word "to," in line 10—("The Aid Grant shall be distributed by the Education Department to")—stand part of the Clause' be now put." [Opposition cries of "Oh, oh!"]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: It is only right that I should say, in accepting this Motion, that I have satisfied myself that if it should be carried it would not cut out a single Amendment of any substance. Nearly three pages of the Amendments that follow are out of order. ["Hear, hear!"] I think it is only due to the Committee that I should give my reason for accepting the motion. These Amendments are for the most part excluded by the ruling of Mr. Speaker on the notices of Motion for Instructions on going into Committee. ["Hear, hear!"] Some of the Amendments are in the wrong place, and the two or three that remain are really not Amendments of substance. I therefore accept the Motion.

Question put, "That the Question 'That the words down to the word "to," in line 10, stand part of the Clause,' be now put."

MR. SAMUEL EVANS (seated, and with his hat on), as a matter of order, drew the Chairman's attention to the words of the Standing Order in reference to the application of the Closure. It was provided that the Motion for closing Debate might be moved on the interruption of business for a decision on any question consequent thereon. He submitted that this question was not consequent upon the Closure moved at half-past five.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS said the Standing Order provided that the Closure might be moved on the interruption of business, and the interruption of business was when he announced the numbers of the last Division.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS said the point of order he wished to have determined was whether the Closure could be put on any question not under discussion when the Closure was moved. The question the right hon. Gentleman now desired to have put was that the clause down to a certain word should stand part of the Bill. Would the Leader of the House be in order if he moved the Closure on the clause or even on the whole of the Bill?

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I must decline to give an opinion in answer to the hon. Member's question as to all the clauses, but certainly the right hon. Gentleman would be in order if he moved that the question be put that the whole clause stand part of the Bill. If it is in order to move the whole clause clearly it is in order to move a portion of the clause.

Question put, "That the Question 'That the words of the Clause down to the word "to," in line 10, stand part of the Clause,' be now put."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 280; Noes, 111.—(Division List, No. 67.)

Question put accordingly, "That the words of the Clause down to the word 'to,' in line 10, stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 282; Noes, 105.—(Division List, No. 68.)

Whereupon,

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS left the Chair to make his report to the House.

Committee report progress; to sit again To-morrow; and, it being after Six of the clock, Mr. Speaker adjourned the House without Question put.

House adjourned at Twenty-five minutes after Six o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday, 4th March 1897.

LORD FARNHAM (CLAIM TO VOTE FOR REPRESENTATIVE PEERS FOR IRELAND).

Ordered and directed, That a Certificate be sent by the Clerk of the Parliaments to the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland, stating that the Lord Chancellor of the United Kingdom has reported to the House of Lords that the right of the Lord Farnham to vote at the elections of Representative Peers for Ireland has been established to the satisfaction of him the said Lord Chancellor; and that the House of Lords has ordered such Report to be sent to the said Clerk of the Crown in Ireland; and it is hereby also ordered, That the said Report of the said Lord Chancellor be sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland.

SAT FIRST.

The Viscount Gough sat first in Parliament after the death of his father.

THOMPSON'S DIVORCE BILL [H.L.].

House in Committee (according to order). Bill reported without Amendment. Standing Committee negatived; Bill to be read 3ª To-morrow.

RETIREMENT OF VESTRYMEN AND AUDITORS (LONDON) BILL [H.L.].

LORD MONKSWELL, in moving the Second Reading of this Bill, said the Measure passed their Lordships' House last year, but was not equally fortunate in the other House. It was based on the principle that there might be too much of a good thing. No doubt it was a good thing for the ratepayers of London to have occasionally an opportunity of recording their votes, but most people thought that at present there were too many opportunities of that kind given to the ratepayers. There were elections for the London County Council, the School Board, the Board of Guardians and the Vestry. The suggestion of the Bill was that the law with regard to Vestry elections should be assimilated to that now in force in respect of the election of Guardians. At present one-third of the vestrymen went out every year, and the consequence was that every year there was the election of a certain number of vestrymen. Guardians, however, had been empowered to petition the County Council to be allowed to have their elections triennially instead of annually, and every Board throughout the metropolis had availed themselves of the permission, and now Guardians were elected once in three years instead of annually. The Bill proposed that any Vestry might petition the London County Council that their elections should be held triennially, that the members should all go out together every three years instead of one-third of them annually. No doubt the London County Council would be perfectly ready to grant any request of that kind that might be made to them. He begged to move the Second Reading of the Bill.

LORD HARRIS said the Bill was practically in the same form in which it left their Lordships' House last year, and the Local Government Board had no objection to its proceeding.

Bill read a Second time, and committed to a Committee of the Whole House To-morrow.

LAND TRANSFER BILL [H.L.].

THE LORD CHANCELLOR (LORD HALSBURY), in moving "That this Bill be now read a Second time," said: This Bill is in substance the same as those which have so frequently passed this House. Substantially the same Bill has been read a Second time in the other House without a Division. The only point which seems to require explanation at this stage is why the Bill is not word for word the same as on previous occasions. It may be remembered that the late Government, after passing the Bill through this House, and reading it a Second time in the other House without a Division, referred it to a Select Committee in order (at the request of the solicitors) to take evidence on the subject. The solicitors' evidence was taken; and events afterwards happened which stayed all further proceedings. I have thought it desirable to meet at once the criticisms to which my learned Friend's Bill was subjected by the solicitors before the Select Committee, and I think it will be found that every defect which was pointed out in the existing Land Transfer Act has been removed. The Bill now stands in this position. There is one quarter, and one only, from which opposition to the Measure has been experienced. I have taken the most prompt and unreserved steps to disarm that opposition as far as the system to which the Bill applies is concerned. Only one point remains—namely, the principle of compulsion; not compulsion any longer for a system open to objection, but for a system amended so as to have the approval of the objectors. On that point also I have gone as far as possible. The scheme proposed by the Bill is to proceed by the most gradual steps, and to act in a limited area to begin with, and only to proceed by the light of experience, and after full notice to any district likely to be affected. I cannot but hope that my endeavours to reconcile the only objectors to this Measure will be met in a similar spirit, and that we may not be reduced in another Session to deal with the subject in a controversial manner. We are sometimes charged with want of speed as law reformers, but, in truth, such of us as desire reforms of this kind are often surprised that we cannot obtain more assistance in passing our Measures from the lay classes who are oppressed by the unreformed procedure. I ought not to conclude without calling attention to the Report on the system of land transfer in other countries, which was laid on the Table last Session, and which shows with what ease and success the registration of title is made use of in a large part of the world. At this stage I have no more to say than that the matters contained in the Bill are practically set forth in the memorandum prefixed to the Bill, and to ask your Lordships to give the Bill a Second Reading.

An Asterisk (*) at the commencement of a Speech indicates revision by the Member.

*Lord THRING said it was now more than 40 years since he was first engaged in land transfer. This Bill would complete the edifice, it would make land transfer easy and feasible, and he trusted the House would read it a Second time. He could not imagine any objection to the Measure. With respect to compulsion, he admitted that some 20 years ago the late Lord Cairns and himself, when preparing a Bill, thought compulsion was not necessary, because they believed that the common sense of landowners would lead them to register. He was aware it was often asked of lawyers why they did not carry land transfer into practical effect, but he assured those who put such a question that no effort had been spared, especially by successive Lord Chancellors, to make the system of land transfer complete and satisfactory. He hoped their Lordships would pass the Bill, which, he was confident, would do more to relieve depressed landlords than those ambitious schemes which were so much talked about and pressed forward. [" Hear, hear!"]

Lord HERSCHELL said that this was substantially the same Bill that had been introduced on several occasions. He had so often expressed his views upon the subject that he would not do more now than express the hope that the Bill would ultimately pass into law. [" Hear, hear!"]

The Earl of KIMBERLEY said he was profoundly convinced that there was perhaps nothing more required by owners of land than an efficient system of land transfer. Those who would look at the reports which had come from other countries would find that not only was there a cheap, efficient, and speedy system there, but also that it had been found that no danger had arisen from the Acts. In these circumstances he most sincerely hoped that this Bill, or, at all events, some other efficient Bill, would pass through Parliament.

Read 2^a (according to Order), and committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

IRISH MAILS.

*The Earl of BELMORE rose to ask the Postmaster General whether, when the accelerated mail service to Ireland should have come into operation, whereby the mails then due at Dundalk about 8 a.m., were expected to be due there before 7.30 a.m., provision would be made for forwarding the mails for Enniskillen, Cavan, and other places in the north-west of Ireland, so as to do away with their detention at Dundalk which at present existed, and which would be otherwise considerably aggravated. He said he believed that in about a month's time the new accelerated mail service between this country and Ireland would come into force, and that about an hour would be gained between London and Dublin, about 25 minutes, he understood, upon this side, and about 35 minutes in the sea passage. At present the mails going to the north of Ireland left the Dublin Station of the Great Northern Railway of Ireland at a quarter before seven, and they were carried direct to Belfast and Londonderry, and certain towns between those places and Dublin. The mails which went in the direction of the north-west went by a branch line from Dundalk, formerly called the Irish North Western Railway, which was now a branch of the main system of the Great Northern of Ireland, and were detained nearly an hour at Dundalk, and then they went on by a stopping train, called the boat train, as it was connected with the steamer from Greenore to Holyhead. Under the altered system the mails would arrive at 26 minutes after seven, instead of a little after eight. Unless some change were made by the Post Office, the mails to the north-west would be delayed between an hour and an hour and a-half. As regarded Enniskillen and Cavan, which were both about the same distance from Dundalk, the train reached the former at 11.25, and the latter about 11.20. The time left for answering letters was about half an hour, but under the new system, if the mails could be sent off at once, they would have about three hours. He had been in private communication with the manager of the Great Northern, who was an old friend, and he found it was impossible to interfere with the nine o'clock train from Dundalk, owing to its being in connection with Greenore, and necessary for the traffic from Newry and places north of Dundalk. There could be no acceleration of that train; and the only remedy was to put on an extra train. That was a question of terms with the Post Office. All the business people in that part of the country were very anxious that that should be done, and, therefore, he asked the noble Duke if he could see his way to approach the Great Northern so that the extra train might be put on?

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL (The DUKE of NORFOLK): The point raised by the noble Earl is only one point in a larger scheme for the acceleration of the mails which is at present engaging earnest attention, and I feel I cannot do more than read to him the answer I have prepared. The matter referred to is being considered in connection with the revision of the Irish day mail services consequent on the acceleration of the mail service between England and Ireland. I shall not fail to place before the railway company the strong desire that exists for improvement, in the hope that some arrangement may be found to be practicable. I am glad to hear that the noble Earl is on terms of friendship with the general manager of the Great Northern of Ireland, and I trust that pressure will be made use of. I trust, also, that with the efforts to give every facility, those who have influence will not be slow to point out that it will be to their own interest that the companies should do everything they can to carry out this acceleration.

VISCOUNT CLIFDEN: Can the noble Duke tell us when the general scheme of acceleration will come into force?

THE DUKE OF NORFOLK: On the 1st of April.

WORKING MEN'S DWELLINGS BILL [H.L.].

A Bill to provide facilities for the acquisition by working men of their own dwellings—was presented by the Lord Norton, for the Earl Vane (M. Londonderry); Read 1^a; to be printed; and to be read 2^a on Tuesday next. (No. 24.)

House adjourned at Ten minutes before Five o'clock, till To-morrow, a Quarter-past Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 4th March 1897.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

DUBLIN PORT AND DOCKS BOARD BILL.

Read a Second time, and committed.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND) PROVISIONAL ORDERS (No. 1) BILL.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny) had on the Paper the following Notice of Motion:—

> "That it be an Instruction to the Committee to insert provisions in the Bill for the extension of the Municipal Franchise to all Parliamentary voters having qualification in the municipal borough of Kilkenny, except lodgers, and to such women as would, but for their sex, have been Parliamentary voters (other than lodgers), and to provide that the lodgers' lists of the Borough shall be revised and made up by the same persons and about the same time as the Parliamentary register."

*MR. SPEAKER: The Instruction of the hon. Member is out of order. The Provisional Orders (No. 1) Bill merely enables the town of Kilkenny to take compulsory powers to acquire land for waterworks. An Instruction proposing to extend the municipal franchise would be out of order on that Bill, and therefore I cannot put it.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: On the point of order, may I point out that a similar Instruction was carried last Session in regard to the Dublin Corporation Bill, which only proposed to give power to the Corporation of Dublin to charge for water which they were previously empowered to sell. This is a Bill for the construction of waterworks which will cost the citizens £60,000, and out of a population of over 11,000 there are only 247 persons entitled to vote in the municipal borough. I might also remind you, Sir, that, in the case of Armagh, last Session a similar Instruction was put upon the Paper. It was withdrawn, and in the Committee, without the knowledge of this House, clauses extending the franchise to Armagh were inserted. In view of these circumstances I was in hopes that you would see your way to allow the House to pass this Instruction, which is not opposed. I have an assurance by the Government that it is not opposed. The Corporation of Kilkenny have passed resolutions unanimously in its favour—and the Corporation is composed of four political parties—and the citizens have also, by resolution, approved it.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER (Kent, Isle of Thanet): The hon. Gentleman says this Instruction is unopposed. I came down to the House to oppose it, and should have persisted in my opposition had it not been ruled out of order.

*MR. SPEAKER: I am quite clear that it is out of order. As to the case of Armagh, which the hon. Gentleman mentions, the Instruction was not withdrawn until I had ruled it out of order. In the course of the Debate on the Second Reading the hon. Member who put down the Instruction asked me whether it was in order. I said it was not, and that is the reason it was withdrawn. What happened in Committee upon that Bill was not brought under my notice. If it had been, I might possibly have had something to say on the subject. As far as any statement in this House as to what took place in the Committee is concerned, I hear it now for the first time. As regards the Dublin Corporation Bill, the hon. Member who moved that Instruction gave me an assurance very similar to that which has just been given by the hon. Member for Kilkenny—namely, that it was an unopposed Instruction, and was moved by general consent; and, as it was an Instruction on a matter which had been much debated in the House, and as I understood from what was stated in the House, without any contradiction, that it was in the nature of a compromise on a subject which it was desirable to settle, and as everyone was agreed upon it, I allowed the Instruction to pass. But I expressly stated that I doubted very much whether it was in order, and that nothing, except the assurance that the Instruction was unopposed, would have induced me to have allowed it to pass. Therefore it cannot in any way be taken as a precedent, and certainly the results of allowing it to go on are not such as to encourage further experiments in the same direction. I am quite clear that this Instruction is out of order.

QUESTIONS.

INCOME TAX FORMS.

Mr. HUDSON KEARLEY (Devonport): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the object of Income Tax Form No. 8, list of all persons employed, to be delivered by persons employing others (whether paid by weekly wages or otherwise), under penalties, and what is the meaning of the note stating that the penalty is not incurred by omitting to include in the list the names of persons whose total incomes respectively do not exceed £160 a year; and whether employers are expected to question all servants and workmen not returned for as to their private means; if not, whether he will cause the wording of the instructions to be altered, so as to make it clear that the responsibility of the employer in respect of this list is limited to making a true return of salaries over £160 paid by himself to his servants?

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Bristol, W.): The form to which the hon. Member refers is issued under the authority of Section 50 of the Act 5 and 6 Vict., cap. 35, and the note is inserted because of the proviso to that section, which enacts that no one who is required to deliver such a list shall be liable to penalties for the omission of the name of any person in his employ, if it shall appear to the Commissioners for executing the Act that such person is entitled to total exemption from income-tax. I am unable to agree with the hon. Member that the responsibility of the employer is limited as he suggests. It seems to me that the law requires that, if the employer wishes to omit from the list the name of any person in his employ, he should use reasonable means to satisfy himself that the person is entitled to exemption.

VOLUNTEER BATTALIONS (ALDERSHOT).

Sir HOWARD VINCENT (Sheffield, Central): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War if it is intended to allow provisional and other battalions of Volunteers to proceed to Aldershot for instruction in the bank holiday week in August from the metropolis and elsewhere, and in such case if definite notification thereof can be made as early as practicable, having regard to the necessity for zealous Volunteers in public and commercial offices to make arrangements several months beforehand to take their annual holiday at that period, and so devote it to the service of the country?

*The UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR (Mr. Brodrick, Surrey, Guildford): The 2nd inst. was the day when the proposals of Volunteer corps as to their annual camps were due at the War Office. Their applications will be considered without delay, and those for permission to go to Aldershot will be acceded to as far as circumstances will allow. Notification will be made as early as possible.

PIERS (IRELAND).

Captain DONELAN (Cork, E.): On behalf of the hon. Member for West Clare (Major Jameson), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, whether, in reference to the statement that the piers at Kilrush, Liscannor, and Carrigaholt, in West Clare, were built out of Imperial Funds, and not out of Irish funds, he will inquire if this is the case; and, if he finds it is not so, will he recommend a grant out of Imperial funds to make these piers effective?

The CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. Gerald Balfour, Leeds, Central): The total cost of the erection of the piers at the places named in the Question was £33,324, of which £7,868 was provided by grants out of Imperial funds, £15,101 by grants out of Church funds, and £10,355 from local sources. I have already stated, with reference to the construction of piers by means of Exchequer grants, that it is not now the practice to provide such expenditure in the Annual Estimates, but that the Government were always prepared to inquire into and consider each case on its own merits. With reference to Liscannor pier, the only circumstance calculated to raise a question as to its effectiveness for fishery purposes was a complaint made some time ago that the harbour was being filled with sand. The Board of Works had deepened it previously to handing the pier over to the Grand Jury, and the duty of maintaining the harbour at a proper depth rests with that body. I am dealing with Kilrush pier in reply to the next Question of the hon. Member.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: On behalf of the hon. Member for West Clare (Major JAMESON), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, whether, with reference to Question on the subject of pier at Kilrush, he will specially consider the need of expenditure on Kilrush pier and harbour owing to the increasing importance of the trade of this town both in respect to fishing and other commercial enterprise?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: No money could be provided for the improvement and extension of the existing pier at Cappagh, Kilrush, from repayments of loans under the Sea Fisheries (Ireland) Act of 1883, because the need for the extension is a commercial need unconnected with fisheries. The question whether it is possible or desirable for the Government to assist in carrying out the extension from any other source is now under consideration.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS (EXAMINATIONS).

MR. HERBERT ROBERTS (Denbighshire, W.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War how many Volunteer officers have passed the examination in all the following subjects: Tactics, field fortification, military topography, organisation and equipment, and military law; in accordance with paragraph 356 in the Volunteer Regulations 1896; and whether, in view of the importance of the examination, he will issue a Return giving the names of the successful officers?

*MR. BRODRICK: Three, Sir, in accordance with the Regulation in Section 356 recently issued.

ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY (PENSIONS).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN (Kilkenny): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland what is the amount of pension to which a sergeant and a head constable of the Royal Irish Constabulary are respectively entitled to on retirement after 21, 30, and 40 years' service?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Head constables and sergeants are entitled to pensions of $\frac{22}{50}$ths of their pay after 21 years' service, and to $\frac{2}{3}$rds of their pay after 30 years' service. There is no increase in the pension rate beyond $\frac{2}{3}$rds except in the cases of a few men who were appointed to the force before the 10th August 1866.

NATIONAL SCHOOL TEACHER'S PENSION (IRELAND).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether he is aware that Miss Margaret Ryan, who served with distinction under the Board of National Education for 44 years, 10 years of which she was head mistress of Templemore National School, 8 years as head mistress of Kilkenny Model School, and 26 years as organiser of Convent National Schools, has been granted on her retirement a pension of only £77 10s. per annum; (2) whether Miss Ryan was entitled according to the rules of the service, as administered in the case of other teachers of less distinguished services, to a pension of £90 per annum for 40 years' service as head mistress; (3) whether he is aware that Miss Ryan resigned the position of head mistress of Kilkenny Model School at the repeated and urgent request of the officers of the National Board of Education in order to take up the position of organiser of the Convent Schools; (4) is he aware that, in addition to these distinguished services, Miss Ryan educated and passed to the grade of first class nearly 40 teachers, who subsequently became distinguished in the service of the Board of National Education; and (5) whether, under the circumstances of the case, he will recommend the Board of National Education to reconsider Miss Ryan's claim to an increase of pension as has been done in the case of Dr. Joyce and others who more recently retired?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The facts appear to be as stated in the first paragraph. Miss Ryan left the Model School service in 1862, and in her new position of organiser of National Schools her case fell within the scope of the Civil Service Superannuation Act of 1859. The Teachers' Pension Act, under which she might have qualified for a higher pension had she remained in the Model School service, was not passed until 1879, 17 years after she had left the Model School service. The Commissioners of National Education have no knowledge of the facts alleged in the third paragraph. Her acceptance of the position of organiser was purely voluntary on her part. The Commissioners see no reason for questioning the accuracy of the statement in the fourth paragraph. There is no analogy, I am informed, between the case of Miss Ryan and that of Dr. Joyce.

LIGHTSHIPS (IRELAND).

MR. J. L. CAREW (Dublin, College Green): On behalf of the hon. Member for Dublin, St. Patrick (Mr. W. FIELD), I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he can state up to what date the Board of Trade surveyors were employed in the supervision of repairs to the hulls, masts, and riggings of lightships under the jurisdiction of the Irish Commissioners; whether he can state why their services were dispensed with; and whether he can state under whose supervision the work is now carried out, and what was their practical experience of modern and composite shipbuilding at the time of their appointment?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE (Mr. C. T. RITCHIE, Croydon): Up to 1890, the Board of Trade surveyors were, on the application of the Commissioners of Irish Lights, from time to time employed in the supervision of repairs to lightships under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners. Since that date no further applications for the services of these surveyors have been made to the Board of Trade by the Commissioners, who, in 1890, informed the Board that they considered that their lately appointed foreman shipwright was in every way able to take full charge of the work under the Inspector of Lights. I have no information as to what had been the practical experience of those officers as to modern and composite shipbuilding, but evidence on this head can no doubt be elicited at the official Inquiry which I have ordered to be held into the loss of the lightship Puffin.

MR. CAREW: On behalf of the hon. Member for Dublin, St. Patrick (Mr. FIELD), I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether, seeing that the Irish lightships are not supplied with boats fitted with air tanks such as merchant vessels are compelled to carry, the Board of Trade will cause the Irish Lights Board to supply equally seaworthy boats to their lightships as are common to merchant vessels?

MR. RITCHIE: The question whether Irish lightships are properly equipped with boats and other life-saving appliances is one that will no doubt be fully gone into at the official Inquiry which I have ordered to be held into the loss of the lightship Puffin. When the report of that Inquiry has been received, the Board of Trade will be prepared to consider with the Commissioners of Irish Lights any recommendation which the Court may make on this subject.

MR. CAREW: Will the right hon. Gentleman say whether the Inquiry will be held, and when?

MR. RITCHIE: The Inquiry was ordered to be held some time ago, and a great many arrangements had to be made with regard to the witnesses, so that it is not possible to say when the Inquiry will be commenced.

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: Will the right hon. Gentleman say where it will be held, and whether he does not think it desirable to hold it in Queenstown, where most of the witnesses live?

MR. RITCHIE: I answered the question as to where it would be held some time ago. It strikes me that it was at Cork, but I cannot say.

SUCK DRAINAGE SCHEME.

MR. JAMES O'KELLY (Roscommon, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether his attention has been called to the statement, made by Mr. Commissioner

O'Brien, at Castlerea Session of the Land Court on the 17th ult., that the Suck drainage scheme had cost a great deal more than the benefit it had produced on the land; and, whether the Government will take steps to relieve the heavy taxation imposed upon the tenants in the Suck drainage district?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have seen the statement purporting to have been made by Mr. Commissioner O'Brien on the occasion referred to. I am unable to say whether Mr. O'Brien based these remarks, if correctly reported, on personal examination or on anything beyond the opinions expressed at public meetings. The tenants are charged only with the estimated value of the actual improvements effected in their holdings by the Drainage Works, and I have no evidence before me that this estimated value is incorrect.

RECRUITING AREAS (COLONIES).

CAPTAIN PIRIE (Aberdeen, N.): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether, having regard to the changes about to be made in the British Army, and to the fact that in many cases our territorial recruiting areas do not suffice for the demands made upon them by their territorial regiments, the Government will give serious consideration to a proposal to create regimental districts in the several greater Colonies of the Empire, especially, in view of the popular sentiment in favour of such a proposal recently exhibited in Canada, and in commemoration of the 60th anniversary of Her Majesty's reign.

*MR. BRODRICK: A proposal of the nature referred to in the question has been received from Canada and has been referred to the Canadian Government for an expression of their opinion upon it. Her Majesty's Government are fully alive to the desirability of encouraging such tendencies on the part of the Colonies, but it is obvious that any steps in this direction must need very careful consideration before action is taken.

CORDITE (H.M.'S SHIPS).

MR. SYDNEY GEDGE (Walsall): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether inasmuch as when, on the 2nd ult., a hundredweight of cordite was fired in the open air in Woolwich Arsenal, twelve other hundredweights securely done up in twelve separate cases, and not in contact with the hundredweight which was intentionally fired, instantly detonated, and that the detonation was of the true shattering nature characteristic of nitro-glycerine and gun-cotton, and made a hole in the solid ground some 15 feet deep, it is intended to put it inside big guns or to carry it on board Her Majesty's ships?

*THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE WAR OFFICE (Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS, Birmingham): The circumstances of the late experiment were not quite as stated in my hon. Friend's question. Twelve metal cases, each containing about 130lb. of small cordite not made into cartridges were stacked together, forming a pile in close contact. One was fired, whereupon the mass exploded. These cases were not, however, packed with cordite under service conditions—that is, with cartridges made up of the sized cordite in use for heavy guns. Cartridges of cordite will continue to be used and carried on board Her Majesty's ships.

BANDSMEN ASSAULTED (SCOTLAND).

MR. WILLIAM JOHNSTON (Belfast, S.): I beg to ask the Lord Advocate if his attention has been called to a decision of the magistrates at Airdrie, on the 25th February, when 13 young men, members of the Bellshill Conservative Flute Band, were fined five shillings each or three days' imprisonment for playing the "Protestant Boys" and the "Boyne Water;" and whether playing Protestant tunes in the streets is contrary to the laws of Scotland; and, if so, whether he is prepared to assent to an alteration of the law?

THE LORD ADVOCATE (Mr. GRAHAM MURRAY, Buteshire): On February 6th the Bellshill Flute Band passed through Holytown playing airs of no local significance. [Laughter.] On arrival at Marion street, Mossend, an entirely Roman Catholic quarter, they struck up airs of "Kick the Pope"—[laughter]—and those mentioned in the question. [Renewed laughter.] Some excitement followed, and eventually a Roman Catholic assaulted two bandsmen and was arrested, the band thereafter retiring to a public-house. [Laughter.] Several of the men referred to were charged with behaving in a noisy and disorderly manner and with parading the streets playing those tunes with the premeditated purpose of provoking and exasperating, whereby a breach of the peace was committed and they were convicted and sentenced. The Roman Catholic was charged with assault, was convicted and sentenced. I see no reason whatever to call in question the magistrates' decision in either case. [Cheers and laughter.]

MR. JOHNSTON: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman how they decided on premeditated intentions? [Laughter.]

[No reply was given.]

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION (ANNUAL GRANT).

SIR JOHN MOWBRAY (Oxford University): I beg to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has considered a petition, numerously and influentially signed, presented to him in 1896, in favour of an annual grant by Parliament for the promotion and development of the system of higher education, commonly known as University Extension, and in particular asking that such grant should be administered by the four central authorities of the University Extension movement, namely, the Oxford Delegacy, the Cambridge Syndicate, the London Society, and the Victoria Committee, and also by the two Extension Colleges at Reading and Exeter; and, whether he is prepared to recommend to Parliament to make any such grant?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER: I have carefully considered the petition referred to, but have not felt able to recommend to Parliament a grant for the general work of University Extension. Such a grant would be a new departure, for the work is of an entirely different character from that which is done by individual colleges. The two Commissioners who recently visited the University colleges which receive Parliamentary grants, the President of Magdalen College, Oxford, and Professor Liveing, of Cambridge, by my directions also investigated the two Extension Colleges at Reading and Exeter. They reported that these Colleges, though doing good work in many respects, were as University Colleges in an experimental stage, and they did not consider that they had as yet arrived at a position in which a grant could properly be given.

TRAMPS (IRELAND).

MR. W. JOHNSTON: On behalf of the hon. Member for North Fermanagh (Mr. RICHARD M. DANE), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland is he aware that it is a common practice for tramps to seek shelter for the night in the union workhouses in Ireland, when on their way from town to town, upon a false plea of destitution; and that in the week ending 17th February in the present year the names of over 40 tramps were on the books of the Irvinestown Union, and for the week ending 24th February a similar number; and, whether any power rests with the workhouse officials to refuse such well-known tramps admission; if not, will the Irish Government take steps to have the law amended?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The fact is as mentioned in the first part of the question, though the same state of things unfortunately prevails, I understand, in England as in Ireland. The number of tramps relieved in the Irvinestown Workhouse for the weeks ended 20th and 27th February were 23 and 22, respectively. The official returns are made up at the close of each week and do not give the numbers and the dates mentioned in the question. Workhouse officers can refuse admission to any persons not considered destitute, and they have also the power to prosecute under the Vagrant Act 1847 any tramps going from union to union for for the purpose of obtaining relief. The Local Government Board have frequently drawn the attention of Boards of Guardians to the powers possessed by them in this respect.

IMPERIAL MUSEUM, CALCUTTA.

MR. M. M. BHOWNAGGREE (Bethnal Green, N.E.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether a German gentleman was recently appointed to an important position in the Imperial Museum at Calcutta; whether, before filling up that post, the Government of India had made any endeavour to find a native of India competent to fill it; and whether, with reference to this appointment and any other similar appointments to which Indian gentlemen of education and special attainments would seem to justly have the first claim, any correspondence has taken place during the past few years between the Secretary of State for India and the Government in India; and, if so, will he place such correspondence upon the Table of the House?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, Middlesex, Ealing): In the early part of last year the trustees of the Indian Museum at Calcutta, after making inquiries, decided, subject to the approval of the Government of India and of the Secretary of State in Council, to appoint Dr. Bloch for a term of five years to the post of first assistant on account of his very exceptional qualifications for the performance of the special duties attached to it. The Government of India recommended the appointment for approval. The Secretary of State in Council, after careful consideration, decided not to withhold his sanction, but intimated his opinion that the post was one which might appropriately be filled by a qualified native of India, and that in future candidates for such appointments should in the first instance be sought among graduates of the Indian Universities. I shall be ready to lay on the Table the correspondence to which the hon. Member refers if he will move for it.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS BILL (EVENING CONTINUATION SCHOOLS).

MR. H. HOBHOUSE (Somerset, E.): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education if he will consider the advisability of repealing the 17s. 6d. limit for evening continuation schools as well as for elementary day schools?

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University): The Committee of Council have had this matter under consideration, but it cannot be dealt with in the Bill now before the House.

Mr. M. M. Bhownaggree.

NORTH EASTERN RAILWAY (ADDITIONAL POWERS) BILL.

MR. W. E. M. TOMLINSON (Preston): I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the Board of Trade have had their attention directed to sub-section 4 of clause 9 of the North Eastern Railway (Additional Powers) Bill; whether he is aware that the effect of the construction of the works authorised thereby will be to destroy the shelter now afforded to small craft entering and leaving the Hull Docks, thereby rendering the use of the docks for canal-borne traffic impossible or difficult; and whether, having regard to the probable consequent discouragement to traffic on canals, the Board of Trade will issue a special Report upon the Bill?

MR. RITCHIE: The proposals contained in the Bill referred to are receiving the careful consideration of the Board of Trade, and a Report with respect thereto will be presented at an early date.

LAND COURTS (IRELAND).

Mr. D. MACALEESE (Monaghan, N.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) if he is aware that, on the 22nd ult., the registrar of No. 3 Sub-Land Commission Court sent a list of decisions in cases, previously heard at Armagh, to be posted on the notice board of the courthouse in that town; and that almost immediately after this list had been posted a person connected with an Armagh newspaper removed the list from the notice board, and carried it away, much to the inconvenience of those desirous to inspect it; (2) is this a case in which a prosecution would lie; and, if not, will he give instructions that in future registrars of Land Courts in Ireland shall send copies of decisions to all solicitors engaged in the cases?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The facts appear to be substantially as stated in the first paragraph. The list was returned, however, to the courtkeeper on the following day by the gentleman who had taken it away. No proceedings lie in the case, and the Land Commissioners do not propose to issue directions as suggested, as, under existing circumstances, solicitors engaged in cases can, on application, at present obtain information as to the decisions, either from the deputy registrars or from the office of the Land Commission.

MR. JAMES DALY (Monaghan, S.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether he can state when the Sub-Commission promised over a month ago will sit to fix fair rents in cases listed for moving from the Shirley Estate, county Monaghan; and whether he can give the names of the Sub-Commissioners who will try these cases; are they Ulster farmers; or what knowledge have they of land in Ulster?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The Sub-Commission Court will commence its sittings for cases arising from this district on the 18th inst. The Court will consist of Mr. Edge, Q.C., Judicial Commissioner, and Messrs. Patterson and Mowbray, lay Assistant Commissioners. The hon. Member will be able to obtain from the Return, which will be laid on the Table to-day, information as to the localities in which the two latter gentleman acquired a practical experience of land.

MR. MICHAEL AUSTIN (Limerick, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if, having regard to the number of applications to fix fair rents in the liberties and county of Limerick, and to the urgency of their circumstances, he will direct an immediate sitting of the Land Commissioners in that county for the disposal of such applications?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: A Sub-Commission Court will probably hold a sitting early in April for cases arising in the County Limerick. The number of cases received since November, when a Court last sat, is comparatively few. I have no power to control the arrangements made by the Land Commission.

JAMESON RAID (PRESIDENT KRUGER'S CLAIM).

GENERAL RUSSELL (Cheltenham): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he is in a position to state to the House the exact amount of the claim made by the Government of the South African Republic on account of moral and intellectual damage; and whether he has received any details of these and the other claims; and, if not, whether, before seriously considering them, he will obtain such a detailed and classified statement, and will lay it upon the Table of the House?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Mr. J. CHAMBERLAIN, Birmingham, W.): I have no information beyond what I gave to the House on February 18, except a telegram from Lord Rosmead dated February 25, giving the Dutch words used for "moral and intellectual damage," in what Lord Rosmead calls the "additional claim for £1,000,000."

ENTERIC FEVER (INDIA).

GENERAL RUSSELL: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether his attention has been called to the great increase of enteric fever in India; whether the medical authorities can give any explanation for this increase; and whether the Government propose to take any steps for the better enforcement of sanitary regulations at the various stations where this complaint has recently been most prevalent?

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: I have noticed with regret the increase of enteric fever in India, the causes of which are still very obscure. The Government of India have adopted various measures for improving the sanitation and water supply of cantonments, and the question as to the means of checking this disease is one which is constantly engaging their attention.

SALISBURY PLAIN (TENANT FARMERS).

MR. E. A. GOULDING (Wilts, Devizes): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether the Government have taken into consideration the necessity of giving full and adequate compensation to any tenant farmers who may be disturbed through the purchase of a portion of Salisbury Plain for military purposes, in respect of land laid down to pasture, or other agricultural improvements which have been carried out by them?

*MR. POWELL-WILLIAMS: It is hoped and believed that only a small number of tenants will be disturbed; but adequate compensation will be given in all cases where disturbance takes place. This has not been lost sight of in the negotiations which have been carried on and are progressing.

STEAMSHIP "UTOPIA" (CLAIM AGAINST OWNERS).

MR. J. G. BAIRD (Glasgow, Central): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether his attention has been called to an important shipping case which has been before the law courts of Naples for the last five years, and is still pending, in which the owners of the steamship Utopia are being sued, in formâ pauperis, for compensation for the loss of life of a number of Italian emigrants through the sinking of the Utopia in Gibraltar Bay after collision with the ram of H.M.S. Anson; whether he is aware that the owners have been held responsible without being allowed to adduce evidence, and have been refused the limitation of liability prescribed by the Italian Code; and what steps the Government proposes to take in the circumstances, the case being one of exceptional importance to British shipping?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Mr. G. CURZON, Lancashire, Southport): The case of the Utopia has been brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government. They understand that it is about to come before the Court of Appeal at Naples; and, agreeing with my hon. Friend that it is one of exceptional interest to British shipping, they have instructed Her Majesty's Consul carefully to watch the proceedings and to furnish a report thereupon.

CERTIFICATED TEACHER'S DISMISSAL (GAWBER, NEAR BARNSLEY).

MR. J. H. YOXALL (Nottingham, W.): I beg to ask the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education (1) if he has received information that at Gawber, near Barnsley, a certificated teacher, described a year ago by the Vicar as a very worthy man, a scrupulous, steady, conscientious, and persevering teacher, who has been successful in satisfying the requirements of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, and, according to the Diocesan Inspector, has raised the school to an excellent standard of efficiency, religious instruction having been given in a thoroughly satisfactory manner, who has helped in the Sunday school, played the church harmonium and trained the choir, has nevertheless been dismissed upon the ground, as alleged by the Vicar, that he does not possess the First Class Drawing Certificate, although he does possess the Special Drawing Certificate, and for the past three years has obtained the "Excellent" report and grant for teaching drawing; (2) whether the Vice President is aware that the villagers, in public meeting assembled, have unanimously protested against the dismissal; and, (3) whether anything can be done to give effect to the wish of the villagers that the teacher should be retained?

SIR J. GORST: The teacher referred to has been for five years at Gawber school, and has obtained satisfactory reports from H.M.'s Inspector. He has the Special Drawing Certificate, and for the past three years the school has obtained the "Excellent" grant for drawing. Otherwise, the Committee of Council have no information as to the statements in paragraphs (1) and (2) of the Question; but they would be unable in any case to interfere with the discretion of the managers in regard to the dismissal of a teacher. I have just heard from the managers that the teacher in question has accepted a post elsewhere.

CHILDREN'S METROPOLITAN ASYLUMS BOARD.

MR. B. L. COHEN (Islington, S.): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board if he will lay upon the Table of the House the answers he has received from the guardians of the Metropolitan parishes to the draft order prepared by the Local Government Board for placing certain classes of children under the care of a new central authority in London?

THE PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. HENRY CHAPLIN, Lincolnshire, Sleaford): In a large proportion of the communications I have received I was asked to defer a decision until a conference was held on the subject. This conference was held on the 26th ult., and resolutions were passed by large majorities to the effect (1) that it was desirable that separate provision such as is indicated in the draft order should be made for certain special classes of children, and (2) that it should be urged upon the Local Government Board, before constituting a new board, to consider whether the duties created by the new order might not with advantage be conferred on some existing authority or authorities. At the conference referred to every board of guardians and the managers of each district school in the Metropolis were represented by delegates, and I have received no communication from any board of guardians on the subject since the conference took place.

MR. COHEN asked if the answers received from the guardians could be laid on the Table.

MR. CHAPLIN said he did not think further information could be obtained, but he would see what could be done.

MR. T. LOUGH (Islington, W.) asked if the right hon. Gentleman would consider favourably the recommendation to reconsider the decision to constitute a new authority rather than give the work over to one of the existing authorities.

MR. CHAPLIN replied that the whole matter was under consideration.

CHELSEA HOSPITAL.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War, in view of the fact that when pensioners are admitted as inmates of Chelsea Hospital they forfeit their pensions and are only granted an allowance of 2d. a day, whether steps will be taken to revise this rule, with a view to more generous treatment of old soldiers whose lives have been worn out in the service of their country?

*MR. BRODRICK: The money payment to in-pensioners of Chelsea Hospital has recently been doubled, and, in the interest of the men, it is not considered desirable to make it greater than at present. The evidence taken by a recent Committee, over which Lord Belper presided, shows that there is an increasing desire on the part of pensioners to obtain admittance to the Hospital; and it is beyond question that the advantages of the men in the Hospital are in excess of those enjoyed by similar pensioners outside.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether he is aware that some of the tombstones in the old grave-yard of Chelsea Hospital are in a very dilapidated condition; and whether it is intended to put them in repair, or to utilise this disused burial-ground for the benefit of the public?

*MR. BRODRICK: It is in contemplation to repair some of the dilapidated tombstones this spring, when all chance of frost is passed.

COLCHESTER BARRACKS.

MR. JAMES ROUND (Essex, Harwich): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether any further extension of barracks is contemplated at the camp at Colchester; and when the rebuilding of the existing wood huts will be completed?

*MR. BRODRICK: An extension of the camp at Colchester is not in contemplation. The existing huts are to be replaced by permanent buildings; but, as only a portion can be dealt with at one time, the completion of the work will occupy a considerable period.

TRUNK TELEPHONE SYSTEM (SCOTLAND).

MR. J. W. CROMBIE (Kincardineshire): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether the trunk line of telephone passing through Bervie will be made available to the inhabitants of that town for communication with Glasgow and the north?

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. R. W. HANBURY, Preston): I understand that a local telephone exchange has not yet been opened in Bervie, and, until this has been done, it would be premature to consider the question of a connection with the trunk telephone system.

EVICTED TENANTS (IRELAND).

MR. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether he can now state the number of applications which have been made to the Land Commission by evicted tenants under Section 47 of the Land Law (Ireland) Act 1896; the result of these applications; the names of the landlords on whose estates the applications have been made and the number of applications on each estate; how many tenants have been restored to their holdings under Section 47; and (2) whether the Government propose to take any further steps to carry out the policy of that section?

Mr. GERALD BALFOUR: The number of applications received by the Land Commission under the 47th Section of the Act of 1896 is 447. In twelve of these cases the applications were consented to by the landlord; in 295 cases objections were made by the landlord; in 69 cases the applications were refused as not coming within the provisions of the section; and in six cases the applications have been withdrawn. The remaining 65 applications are still pending. No tenants have yet been reinstated under this section. As I have already intimated to the hon. Member, it would be undesirable that the names of the landlords on whose estates these applications have been made should be published. The answer to the last paragraph of the question is in the negative.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY OF IRELAND.

Mr. CAREW: On behalf of the hon. Member for Dublin, St. Patrick (Mr. Field), I beg to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he is aware that on the Great Northern Railway of Ireland, on Monday 8th February, Signalman C. Farrell was taken ill and Signalman J. Gannon, his mate, came on duty in his place at 8 a.m., although he was not due on till 4 p.m., and he was kept on constant duty from Monday 8th until Sunday 14th, day and night, without any relief; and that this has occurred more than once at Navan Junction; and, whether, in view of the passengers' safety, he will prevent its repetition?

Mr. RITCHIE: The manager of the Great Northern of Ireland Railway telegraphs to the Board of Trade that Farrell was taken suddenly ill and his mate was called upon to take the night duty which was very light. The stationmaster believing the signalman would be well immediately did not ask for relief for a day or two, but immediately this was known relief was given for the few days. Gannon had not to work night and day, but 16½ hours. There are, as far as I can gather from the time table, only 18 trains passing in the course of the 24 hours, but 16½ hours is too long for any man to be on duty, and I shall ask the Great Northern of Ireland Company to impress upon their stationmasters the propriety of asking for relief men to supply the places of servants incapacitated by illness.

TILLETT, Mr. BEN (IMPRISONMENT IN BELGIUM).

Mr. H. BROADHURST (Leicester): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he is in a position to make a statement to the House as to the negotiations between this country and Belgium relating to the recent imprisonment of Mr. Ben Tillett?

Mr. CURZON: The Belgian Government have agreed to the suggestion of Her Majesty's Government that the claim for compensation put forward by the latter in the case of Mr. Tillett should be referred to arbitration.

INDIAN FAMINE.

Sir WILLIAM WEDDERBURN (Banffshire): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether his attention has been called to the statements of Reuter's Correspondent that in the poorhouse at Nagpur deaths occur daily, and that in one village in the Central Provinces over twenty deaths from actual starvation had occurred before 4th February; and whether he is in possession of any information as to the total deaths from famine up to date?

Lord GEORGE HAMILTON: I have seen the statements to which the hon. Member refers, but they are associated with explanations which are as worthy of attention as the statements themselves. The second set of famine papers, which have been in the hands of the printers for ten days and which will soon be ready, contain all the information I have received regarding famine mortality, including a comparative statement of the total deaths in the Central Provinces from all causes for the years 1895 and 1896.

Mr. SWIFT MACNEILL (Donegal, S.) asked when the noble Lord could answer the Question, and whether at Nagpur deaths were not occurring daily?

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: There must be a lapse of time between the collection of statistics in India and their arrival here, and that cannot be reduced to less than three months. If there is exceptional mortality I have directed the Indian Government to inform me.

MR. MACNEILL said he really must press the noble Lord as to whether, aye or no, deaths were not taking place at Nagpur daily. [Ministerial cries of "Order."]

*MR. SPEAKER said the question had already been answered.

INDIAN COUNCIL.

SIR WILLIAM WEDDERBURN: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for India whether, in filling up the approaching vacancies in the Indian Council, he will consider the expediency of appointing an experienced and representative Indian?

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON: The suggestion which the hon. Baronet puts forward is one which I have already considered, but I have not been able to find that association of recent administrative experience and general representation of native views sufficiently combined in one individual to enable me to act upon it.

LIMERICK (NIGHT WATCH).

MR. MICHAEL AUSTIN (Limerick, W.): I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) if his attention has been drawn to a letter, dated 22nd February 1897, from Sir Andrew Reid to the Town Clerk of Limerick, in which he stated that, in the event of the existing night watch of the city of Limerick being replaced by the constabulary, the existing free quota of police assigned to that city would not be sufficient to perform the additional duties of night protection, and that extra police should be appointed; (2) upon what basis Sir Andrew Reid calculated that the yearly sum of £1,325 would be required for such an additional duty; (3) whether he is aware that similar duties (night protection) are performed in Cork and Waterford without any charge to the local rates; and on what grounds, as suggested by Sir Andrew Reid's letter, special legislation would be required to place Limerick in the same position as the other Irish cities mentioned occupy; and (4) whether it is the duty of the Royal Irish Constabulary to protect day and night the persons and property of the inhabitants?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have seen the letter referred to, which is to the effect mentioned in the first paragraph. The cost to the Corporation was estimated on a basis of an extra force of 30 men, which number was mentioned in 1885 as the extra force required to enable the Royal Irish Constabulary to take over the duties. In Cork and Waterford the free force of the Constabulary is sufficient to perform a certain amount of beat duty at night as well as by day. Such work as can be performed by the free quota is done without charge to local rates; and this is also the case in Limerick, where, however, the free quota is not sufficient to perform night duty to the same extent as in Cork or Waterford. In Limerick the duty at night devolves by statute on the night watch.

LIMERICK CANAL AND SHANNON SERVICE.

MR. MICHAEL AUSTIN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland if he will explain why, contrary to the custom heretofore acted on, the wages due to the lock-keepers on the Limerick Canal and Shannon Service are not paid on the 2nd or 3rd of each month; is he aware that in some cases at present arrears of two months' pay occurs before one month's service is paid, although receipts for payment must be given in advance; and whether he will direct regular monthly discharge of wages to be made in future?

MR. HANBURY: The collectors on the Shannon Navigation retain their salaries out of the rents, tolls, and other monthly receipts in their hands, as far as the sum collected will cover them. About 4-7ths of the amount of the salaries is so retained. The receipts for their salaries are forwarded with their monthly accounts, and if, in any case, the collection has not been sufficient to pay the salary, the balance is forwarded to them. The Board of Works have been unable to find any instance in which arrears of two months' pay have accrued before the payment of one month's service is paid.

Recently there has been remissness on the part of some collectors who delayed their accounts, and this has had the effect of deferring payment. The delay in furnishing the accounts is being made the subject of investigation, which it is hoped will lead to punctuality on the part of the collectors, and the consequent payment to them of balances of salary without delay.

TRUCK ACT (METROPOLITAN DISTRICT RAILWAY COMPANY).

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been drawn to the old notice of fines posted on the District Railway, and to the new notice which has recently been posted on the same line, headed Truck Act, 1896; whether he is aware that in the old list for the first and second offences it is stated that only a caution would be given, while in the new list it says that a fine is to be inflicted in all cases; and that the highest fine stated in the old list did not exceed 2s., while the lowest fine posted under the new Truck Act is 5s., ranging up to 20s.; also, that this latter new scale of fines has been adopted by all the leading railway companies; and, if so, whether he can do anything to secure its abolition?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Sir MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY, Lancashire, Blackpool): I have seen these two notices, with copies of which the hon. Member has been good enough to supply me. The new one is that adopted by several of the leading railway companies, but not by all of them; the fines specified in it are, I am advised, illegal, being in contravention of the provisions of the Truck Act of last year—["hear, hear!"]—and I am communicating with the companies on the subject.

SCOTTISH RIFLES (5TH VOL. BATT.).

MR. JOHN WILSON (Falkirk Burghs): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for War whether orders have been given for the disbandment of the 5th Volunteer Battalion Scottish Rifles, with headquarters at Airdrie; if he is aware that no reason has been given for this step, and that no fault has been found with the battalion other than the unavoidable delay in filling up the vacancy caused by the forced resignation of the late commanding officer, Colonel Forrest; is this delay the warrant for the order, which has aroused serious indignation in the locality; and will he agree to suspend action until a full inquiry into the whole circumstances is held? The hon. Member further asked the Under Secretary of State for War if he was aware that, at the unanimous request of the officers of the 5th Volunteer Battalion Scottish Rifles, Major Black, of Airdrie, was nominated as commanding officer on the 19th October 1896, and submitted to the War Office for approval; has this nomination reached the War Office, and for what reason has that appointment not hitherto been made; is he aware that several officers have as recently as in January last received their commissions, who, if disbandment is insisted upon, will suffer loss and damage; and what action he proposes to take in the matter?

*MR. BRODRICK: Orders have been given for the disbandment of this Volunteer battalion, as, in the opinion of the military authorities, after most careful investigation, the reports on its discipline, and other circumstances connected with the corps, made no other course possible. Major Black's nomination for the command was considered, but he was not recommended for the appointment by those responsible. The only officer appointed in the present year is a surgeon-lieutenant, and only two were appointed in 1896.

MR. J. WILSON (Falkirk Burghs) asked whether the right hon. Gentleman was aware that the last annual inspection took place on June 20 last, and that the inspecting officer reported favourably on the discipline of the corps?

*MR. BRODRICK: No, Sir; I should not question any observation which the hon. Member may make as to the Report, but there were other circumstances which have come to light ranging now over two years, which have been carefully considered by the military authorities, and which point to a lack of discipline and efficiency in the corps.

MR. J. WILSON (Falkirk Burghs): May I ask the right hon. Gentleman whether he would produce the Inspecting Officers' Reports for the last ten years?

*Mr. BRODRICK: I have not the least objection to showing my hon. Friend the Reports on the inspection of the corps, but I would point out that the Reports of the inspection are not the only Reports on which the War Office has to act. Various irregularities in the administration of the corps have come to light, but I am most reluctant to enter into details which may give pain to individuals. ["Hear, hear!"]

ARMY HORSES.

Mr. J. C. FLYNN (Cork, N.): I beg to ask the Financial Secretary to the War Office whether he can now state the number of horses purchased by the military authorities in Ireland during the years 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896 respectively; also the number purchased respectively in Canada and in foreign countries during the same years?

*Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS: Since April 1, 1887, the total number of horses bought has been 15,018, of which 9,139, or nearly 61 per cent., have been purchased in Ireland.

Captain DONELAN: Is it not the fact that horses bought in Ireland are far superior in appearance and endurance to horses purchased abroad? [Laughter.]

Mr. FLYNN: Will the hon. Gentleman be able to give me a return of the respective numbers in the years mentioned in my Question?

*Mr. POWELL-WILLIAMS: The respective numbers in the years named bear about the same proportion as the total proportion—namely, 61 per cent. I shall have no objection whatever to furnish the hon. Member privately with the details for each year, if he desires them.

Mr. PATRICK O'BRIEN: Will the hon. Gentleman say how many horses have been bought in foreign countries during the same period, and how many of them are alive to-day?

[No answer was given.]

WEST HAM (ELECTRIC LIGHT).

Mr. H. V. DUNCOMBE (Cumberland, Egremont): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether, having reference to a correspondence which appeared in the public press relating to the adjudication on tenders for an electric lighting installation at West Ham, and a Resolution of the Town Council of West Ham to request the Local Government Board to make an inquiry into the circumstances, the Local Government Board have resolved to institute the inquiry requested?

Mr. CHAPLIN: The Local Government Board have no authority under which they could undertake such an investigation as has been suggested, and the Board have informed the Electric Construction Company, who have been in communication with them on the subject, that if they consider that an offence has been committed under the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act, 1839, they might either themselves institute a prosecution or submit a statement of the facts to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

"COSTA RICA" PACKET CASE.

Mr. J. F. HOGAN (Tipperary, Mid): I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have received official notification of the award of the arbitrator in the case of the Costa Rica Packet; and, if so, whether he has any objection to communicating the terms of the decision arrived at?

Mr. CURZON: The award of the arbitrator in the Costa Rica Packet case has been received, and is to the following effect: To Captain Carpenter a sum of £3,150 is awarded; to the officers and crew of the Costa Rica Packet £1,600; and to the owners of that vessel £3,800; with interest for all damages at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, from November 2nd, 1891. The above sums, together with the costs of the arbitration, fixed at £250, are to be paid by the Netherlands Government.

SICKNESS AMONG SCHOOL CHILDREN (COUNTY DONEGAL).

Mr. MACALEESE: On behalf of the hon. Member for North Donegal (Mr. Thomas B. Curran), I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, whether the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland will issue instructions to the Examiner of Inishowen, County Donegal, to take into account the prevalence of influenza and other sickness in that locality?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: The Examiners for Results Fees cannot depart from the provisions of the Rules under which no allowance can be made for epidemics in allotting the marks on which those fees are paid. But, on the general question of diminished attendances of pupils, owing to epidemics, every consideration possible within the limits of the Board's Rules, and of the Acts under which payments are made, will be given to the claims of the schools of the locality referred to, when the School Returns setting forth the causes of low average come to be dealt with.

MUNICIPAL VOTERS ACT (AUGHNACLOY).

MR. MACALEESE: I beg to ask the Attorney General for Ireland (1) whether his attention has been called to the case of Aughnacloy, which is a town under the Towns Improvement Act, 17 and 18 Vict., c. 103; (2) is he aware that by the last census the population of Aughnacloy was only 1,100, and that it has since then been gradually decreasing, although the Towns Improvement Act requires a population of 1,500 for its application; and (3) under these circumstances, will he state whether the town commissioners and the town court are legally constituted, and what authority exists in the place for the revision of the Municipal Voters Act?

*THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. J. ATKINSON, Londonderry, S.): My attention has been called to the case mentioned in the Question, and also to the fact that by the last census the population of the town of Aughnacloy only amounted to 1,100. I have no means of ascertaining whether the population has since decreased. The Town Improvement Act only requires that a town before it can adopt that Act should have a population of 1,500, but makes no provision for the case of the decline of the population below that limit after the Act has been adopted. Aughnacloy had a population of the prescribed number when it adopted the Act, and is, in my opinion, still governed by its provisions.

MR. MACALEESE: Will the right hon. Gentleman answer the last paragraph of the Question?

*THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND: I have answered the last paragraph. This town is, in my opinion, still under the operation of the Act.

MR. MACALEESE was understood to ask what was the proper authority in this case?

*THE ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR IRELAND: The same authority that exists in every case under the Towns Improvement Act.

SERVANTS' HOMES AND AGENCIES.

MR. S. WOODS (Essex, Walthamstow): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention has been drawn to the recent disclosures made in the Marylebone Police Court with respect to servants' homes and agencies, in the case of Curtis-Bennett, with a view of remedying and rendering the repetition of such cases impossible; and whether he will consider the advisability of licensing all servants' agencies and homes so as to bring them under the control of the police.

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: I have seen the report of a case recently brought before Mr. Curtis-Bennett, which is, no doubt, the one referred to in the Question. The police occasionally receive complaints against houses of this kind, and I will ask the Commissioner to make further inquiry. On the information before me at present, however, I have no reason to suppose that a system of licensing is desirable.

PRISON CLERKS (PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS).

MR. WOODS: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is aware that W. H. Scriven, Chief Clerk at the County Prison, Chelmsford, acted as poll clerk at the Parliamentary elections in Romford on 1st February, and at Walthamstow on 3rd February 1897; and whether it is legal for Government officials to act in such capacities during a Parliamentary Election.

SIR MATTHEW WHITE RIDLEY: The facts are as stated, but I am not aware that it is illegal for a Government official to act in this capacity. I may add that the work was undertaken by the officer while on leave, and did not therefore conflict with the discharge of his official duties; and that, not being an act of political partisanship, it did not infringe the rules which govern in this matter the servants of the Crown. ["Hear, hear!"]

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY (IRELAND).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland whether the order which was submitted by the Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy in Ireland to the Lord Chancellor for approval to empower the official assignees of the Court of Bankruptcy in Ireland to act as official liquidators of public companies did, when first submitted by the Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy, also provide for empowering the official assignees to act in any other capacities than official liquidators; and, if so, in what other capacities?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: Any communications that may have passed between the Lord Chancellor of Ireland and the Judges of the Court of Bankruptcy in reference to the framing of the proposed Order before its publication in the Gazette must be regarded as confidential, and therefore I cannot give the hon. Member the information which he desires.

MARYBOROUGH GAOL (PRISONER FITZHARRIS).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: On behalf of the hon. Member for Dublin, St. Patrick (Mr. FIELD), I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, with regard to the allegation that Fitzharris, a prisoner in Maryborough Gaol, has only recently recovered from a very serious illness, and has had a relapse, whether he will appoint an independent medical inquiry to be made regarding the condition of Fitzharris?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: With the permission of my right hon. Friend, I will reply to this question. It is the case that this convict had been suffering from influenza, and that he had a relapse; but, in the opinion of the General Prisons Board, the ailment was not dangerous, and the convict now appears to be convalescent. There are no grounds for ordering an independent medical inquiry into the case, as suggested.

QUEEN'S REIGN (VISIT OF COLONIAL PREMIERS).

MR. VICTOR CAVENDISH (Derbyshire, W.): I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies if he can give any information as to the number of Colonial Premiers who have accepted the invitation to attend the celebration of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: Acceptances have been received from the following six Premiers:—The Premiers of Cape Colony, Newfoundland, Victoria, Queensland, Tasmania, and Western Australia. The Premier of Canada, while stating the proposal will be heartily taken up, has requested to be allowed to consult his colleagues before giving a definite reply. The late Premier of Natal was compelled to decline the invitation on the ground of health, but it has been renewed to his successor. Answers are shortly expected from the two Premiers last mentioned, and from the remaining three, the Premiers of New South Wales, South Australia, and New Zealand.

BURIAL GROUNDS.

MR. H. C. STEPHENS (Middlesex, Hornsey): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether he is aware that under the operation of Section 15 of the Burials Act 1855, c. 128, whereby it is provided that land purchased and used for burial purposes by local authorities shall not be liable to re-assessment, wealthy authorities owning burial grounds in adjoining poor parishes absorb rateable area, and pay a very small proportion of the rates for poor, sanitary, district, school board, and county, which, but for Section 15 of the above Act, they would have to pay; and, whether, as cases of great hardship exist, he will cause a return to be made of authorities having burial outside their own area within the intent and powers of the Burials Act 1855, c. 128?

MR. CHAPLIN: Under Section 15 of the Burials Act 1855, land acquired by a burial board for the purpose of a burial ground (with or without any building erected or to be erected thereon) is, while used for such purpose, not to be assessed to any county, parochial, or other local rates, at a higher value than the value at which it was assessed at the time it was acquired. I have no doubt that the result is that lands used as burial grounds are in many cases assessed at a lower rate than would otherwise be the case. If my hon. Friend will give notice of a Motion for the return which he desires the matter shall be considered.

Mr. FREDERICK WILSON (Norfolk, Mid): I beg to ask the President of the Local Government Board whether his attention has been called to the fact that the Parish Council of Guilden Morden, Cambridgeshire, having recently adopted the Burials Acts, purchased land for a burial ground and raised £200 by loan; will he explain on what grounds, although an inspector from the Home Office and the medical officer of health for the district inquired fully into all questions relating to the sanitary suitability of the site, the Local Government Board caused a second inquiry to be made by a special inspector when the application was made for sanction to the loan; and whether with a view to economy, he will take steps to prevent in future the holding of two inquiries where one would suffice?

Mr. CHAPLIN: So far as the Local Government Board are aware there was no public inquiry as to the proposal to acquire the land in question except that which was held by the Inspector of the Board. It is no doubt very desirable that in such cases the visits of two Inspectors of different departments should be avoided, and I will communicate with the Home Secretary on the subject.

MUZZLING DOGS.

Mr. STEPHENS: I beg to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether, having regard to the importance of preventing the further development of rabies, and to the slight advantage and consequent difficulty under present circumstances of maintaining the muzzling order in the county of Middlesex, he will as soon as possible give effect to his statement that a muzzling order for the whole of the Metropolitan area would be issued by the Board of Agriculture; and whether he can now give the date when such order will be issued?

*The PRESIDENT of the BOARD of AGRICULTURE (Mr. Walter Long (Liverpool, West Derby): The new orders which I have it in contemplation to make with regard to rabies will be issued with the least possible delay, but I would point out that those orders are intended to give effect to the recommendation of the Departmental Committee that a determined and systematic attempt should be made to stamp out rabies not only in the Metropolitan area but throughout the United Kingdom. The adoption of this policy involves the settlement of several difficult questions which are now engaging my active consideration, but, in any event, adequate notice of the new requirements must be given to the public before they can take effect. In these circumstances I have suggested for the consideration of the Middlesex Council whether the most convenient course to be taken by them during the interim would not be that their regulations should be brought into harmony with those now in force in the other districts comprised within the Metropolitan area.

Mr. STEPHENS asked whether the right hon. Gentleman meant that the Middlesex County Council should take off the order now?

*Mr. LONG: The Middlesex County Council must take the course which in their judgment is the best in the interests of those over whom they have jurisdiction. I think that it might be more convenient that there should be an interregnum.

CRETE.

Mr. FLYNN: I beg to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (1) whether the Foreign Office have received any official information concerning the mutiny of the Turkish gendarmerie at Canea, and the murder of their officer, Colonel Suleiman Bey; and that the mutineers also fired at Major Bor, a British officer appointed to re-organise the gendarmerie; and (2) whether, in view of these occurrences, the British representative will urge upon the Powers the advisability of withdrawing the Moslem troops and gendarmerie as a condition precedent to the withdrawal of the Greek troops?

Mr. CURZON: Official information has been received that on the evening of the 2nd instant about forty Albanian Zaptiehs belonging to the old gendarmerie mutinied owing to non-payment of their arrears of pay. When ordered to disarm in presence of a detachment of the allied forces in occupation of the town, the mutineers opened fire, killing their colonel, Suleiman Bey, and wounding about six other persons, including one Italian seaman. The foreign forces were compelled to fire, and wounded five gendarmes. The mutineers were disarmed, and three ringleaders arrested. In answer to the last paragraph, Her Majesty's Government cannot assume the responsibility for giving advice that would in all probability be immediately followed by the most deplorable loss of life in the island.

MR. FLYNN: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman whether the Collective Note sent to the Porte mentioned the withdrawal of the Turkish troops as a gradual withdrawal?

*MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! That does not arise out of the question.

CAPTAIN DONELAN: May I ask the right hon. Gentleman whether these mutineers formed part of the force to protect the inhabitants of Crete?

MR. CURZON: No, Sir; these mutineers, as we understand, form part of the old Turkish gendarmerie, and not of the new International gendarmerie, which has been organised since the autumn of last year, and which is under the command of Colonel Bor.

MR. JAMES LOWTHER (Kent, Thanet): I wish to ask the right hon. Gentleman whether it is the case that a considerable number of the Christian members of the new gendarmerie deserted with their arms and joined the insurgents? [Laughter.]

MR. CURZON: I have no information to that effect.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (Sheffield, Ecclesall) asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (1) whether he had any information regarding the Mussulman inhabitants and Turkish troops beleaguered at Candamos; and (2) whether the artillery used in the attack was supplied by the Greek invaders?

MR. CURZON: There are four ships of the allied fleets at Selinos. The captains have orders to do what lies in their power to disengage the besieged Mussulmans at Candamos. This has been notified by the Admirals to the Greek Commodore for the information of the commanders of Greek troops, holding them responsible if Candamos Mussulmans were massacred. The Greek Vice Consul at Canea, who has denied that Greek troops are at Candamos, has received orders from his Government to go to Selinos and try to liberate the Mussulmans besieged at Candamos.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: Will the right hon. Gentleman be good enough to answer the last paragraph of my question?

MR. CURZON: I have answered it to the best of my ability, in that part of my reply in which I said that the Greek Consul had denied that Greek troops were at Candamos, and if not Greek troops, I suppose not Greek guns.

*SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT (Monmouthshire, W.): I beg leave to ask the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs a Question of which I have given him private notice—namely, whether his statement in this House on Tuesday last that the Powers are in absolute agreement, and that the Government had received the full and formal assent of the Powers to the scheme of policy of Her Majesty's Government, is to be taken as applying to the agreement of the Powers as to the withdrawal of the Turkish troops from Crete?

MR. CURZON: As regards the actual words I used in the Debate referred to, I did not use the words "formal assent." I used the words "full assent."

*SIR W. HARCOURT: You were so reported in The Times.

MR. CURZON: Yes; I was misreported in the papers as having used the word "formal." I used the word "full." Inasmuch as the form of autonomy guaranteed by the Powers to Crete is described by them as an absolutely effective autonomy it is certain that they are in agreement with Her Majesty's Government that the Turks shall retain no military control or influence over the island.

*SIR W. HARCOURT: I also desire to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he will state to the House the exact terms of the Collective Note presented by the Powers to the Sultan. We have had the terms of the Collective Note presented to the Greeks, but not the terms of the Collective Note presented to the Sultan; and particularly what are the conditions agreed upon by the Powers as to the withdrawal of the Turkish soldiers from Crete, as to the religion of the Governor to be appointed, and whether the Collective Note of the Powers declares the intention of the Powers to enforce such conditions upon the Sultan?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.): I am afraid I cannot answer the questions of the right hon. Gentleman, because we have not heard from Constantinople whether the Collective Note has been submitted to the Porte. I believe there has been some interruption in the telegraphic communication. But I propose to lay on behalf of the Government—or my right hon. Friend the Under Secretary will do so—the text of both Notes as soon as they are received. Perhaps that will be the most convenient way to proceed.

*SIR W. HARCOURT: The right hon. Gentleman will excuse me for pressing him. If he can give us a statement upon this question of the agreement as to the terms of the withdrawal of the Turkish troops, he will see the great effect it must have on the action of the other Power—I mean Greece.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Yes; but I am afraid it would be very improper for me to give what I believe to be the terms which will be submitted to the Porte until we know they have been actually submitted. I am sorry I am not able to give the information to-day. I had fully expected to be able to do so, but for the reason I have indicated, I am not in a position to do so.

*SIR CHARLES DILKE (Gloucester, Forest of Dean): Is it not possible to give the House the Greek Notes?

MR. CURZON: What Notes?

*SIR C. DILKE: There was one of February 10, to which the right hon. Gentleman referred in his speech the other night.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman will put a question down with regard to this matter for to-morrow. Meanwhile, I may repeat that the texts of the two Notes—one Greek and the other Turkish—will be laid on the Table of the House as soon as we are in a position so to lay them.

Sir W. Harcourt.

CLARE ASSIZES (DIMINUTION OF CRIME).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether his attention has been directed to the address of Chief Baron Pallas, at the opening of the Clare Assizes, in which his Lordship pointed out that there were only seven cases to go before the Grand Jury; that there were no offences of an agrarian character in the county, except a few threatening letters; and that the authorities were able, in consequence of the improved condition of the county, to considerably reduce the extra police force during the past year; and (2) whether, in consequence of this very satisfactory condition of the county, he will recommend His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant to reconsider the cases of the Glendree prisoners, and others who have been imprisoned for a great number of years for alleged agrarian offences, with a view to their release during Her Majesty's Jubilee Year?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: I have read a newspaper report of the learned Judge's address to the Grand Jury at the opening of the Clare Assizes, in the course of which he alluded to the gradual improvement in the state of the county, and to the fact that it had been found possible in recent years to effect a reduction in the extra police establishment of the county. As regards the second paragraph, I am unable to see any reasons for dealing with the kind of crimes for which these prisoners were convicted with any peculiar leniency.

COUNTY COURT JUDGE (COUNTY DOWN).

MR. PATRICK O'BRIEN: I beg to ask the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (1) whether Mr. Walker Craig has been promised the appointment of County Court Judge for county Down, in which capacity it will be his duty to revise the Parliamentary register; (2) whether he is aware that Mr. Craig was the Unionist candidate for Down in the last general election, and has since been selected as the Unionist candidate for South County Down at the next election; (3) whether there is any precedent in England or Ireland for appointing a political partisan as Judge in a county where he was a Parliamentary candidate, and whether it is intended to give Mr. Craig the appointment; if so, whether an opportunity will be afforded for discussing the matter in this House before the appointment is finally made?

MR. GERALD BALFOUR: It would be altogether irregular to announce the intentions of the Executive with regard to an appointment before that appointment is made. In the meantime, the second and third paragraphs appear to be irrelevant to the question of the appointment of a County Court Judge for the county Down.

WEST INDIA AND CAPE MAILS.

SIR EDWARD CLARKE (Plymouth): I beg to ask the Secretary to the Treasury, as representing the Postmaster General, whether the Post Office authorities intend to alter the present practice of sorting letters from the West India and Cape mails in a travelling post office en route for London, and have determined that the country letters shall be detained at Plymouth for sorting, and the London letters be sent straight to London; what is the reason for this decision; and, whether he will undertake that such change will not be made without full opportunity being given to the Chamber of Commerce and Mercantile Association at Plymouth to point out the strong objections on public grounds to any such change?

MR. HANBURY: The Postmaster General has already explained to the hon. and learned Member in a letter that there is no scheme for discontinuing altogether the present practice of sorting in a travelling post office mails from the West Indies and South Africa landed at Plymouth. It will be readily understood, however, that the amount of benefit to be derived from railway sorting varies considerably, according to the time of day or night at which the mail packets may arrive; and as it has been found that costly arrangements for sorting in a travelling post office have sometimes been carried on without adequate advantage in the delivery of letters, the Post Office is considering the question of restricting this sorting to those cases in which there will be a distinct gain to the mails. Such a restriction would not in any way prejudice the postal accommodation of Plymouth; but any representations on the subject from the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce shall receive careful consideration.

JUDGES (TRANSVAAL).

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: I beg to ask the Secretary of State for the Colonies (1) whether the Volksraad have passed a law making the Judges of the High Court of the Transvaal subject to resolutions of the Volksraad, and giving the Boer Executive power to dismiss the Judges; (2) whether the High Court have formally protested against this violation of judicial independence, and have suspended their sittings till May; and (3) whether the Outlander lawyers recently imprisoned at Pretoria have been threatened with exile because they have protested against this new law?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: As regards the first and second questions of my hon. Friend he is substantially accurate in his facts, though not verbally correct. As regards the third I have no information.

SIR E. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT: Will the right hon. Gentleman be good enough to point out the verbal inaccuracies?

MR. J. CHAMBERLAIN: I wished to spare the House that. [Opposition laughter]. It is not, for instance, verbally accurate to say that they have "suspended their sittings till May." What they have done is to say that they will administer the law until the 5th inst., when the present term ends, and will await the decision of the people. The next term begins on June 1. There are other trifling inaccuracies of that kind. [Opposition laughter.]

ONE-MAN COMPANIES.

MR. HERBERT LEWIS (Flint Boroughs): I beg to ask the Attorney General whether the attention of the Government has been drawn to the recent case of a one-man company, practically consisting of a single individual, and formed by him to take over his own business, and through which he continued to trade for his own benefit under limited liability; and also to the Judgment of the House of Lords (reversing that of the Court of Appeal), in which it was held that debentures issued to himself by such individual were validly secured upon goods supplied to the company by ordinary trade creditors, which had not been paid for, and were entitled to take priority in the distribution of the company's assets arising from the sale of such goods over the claims of the creditors who had supplied them; and, whether, seeing that such cases are of frequent occurrence, the Government will take immediate steps to check the abuses thence arising?

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (Sir RICHARD WEBSTER, Isle of Wight): I am fully alive to the necessity that exists for an amendment of the law in relation to trading companies. I would point out to the hon. Member that a Bill has already been introduced in the House of Lords by the Board of Trade and is now before the Standing Committee on Law, which will give an opportunity of dealing with the matter to which the question refers.

SIR W. HART DYKE (Kent, Dartford): Arising out of that answer, may I ask my hon. and learned Friend whether he is aware that under the Act passed last year, the Light Railways Act, one individual may become a light railway company? [Laughter.] I propose myself to start a railway on those lines, and I should like to know whether I am likely to be harshly dealt with? [Laughter].

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL: I do not think there is much connection between the two subjects. The question of the hon. Member on the other side of the House refers to debentures issued for the purpose of raising money by these trading companies, which are really one-man companies.

CORNISH MINING INDUSTRY.

MR. A. STRAUSS (Cornwall, Camborne): I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he is prepared to support a proposal for a Select Committee to inquire into the depression in Cornish mining, and report on the measures that should be taken for improving the mining industry of Cornwall?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I have to say that I am aware of the greatly depressed condition of the mining industry in Cornwall, and of course the Government would be very glad to do anything they could to alleviate that distress or mitigate that condition. Perhaps my hon. Friend will allow me to consult the Home Secretary on the subject with him to see whether anything would be gained by appointing the Royal Commission he desires.

IMPERIAL TAXES (IRELAND).

MR. LOUGH: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he has noticed that the amount collected for Imperial taxes in Ireland in the year ending 31st March 1894, the last year included in the Report of the late Royal Commission, was £7,568,649; and that, according to Return No. 337, issued in August 1896, the amount exacted in the year ending 31st March 1896 was £8,034,384, being an increase of £465,735 over the amount pronounced, with the practical unanimity of the late Commissioners, to be two and three-quarter millions in excess of what Ireland could justly pay: and whether, as he has announced his intention of appointing another Royal Commission, which will take some time to report, the Government is prepared to undertake that such financial arrangements shall be made this year as will at least prevent any sum in excess of the revenue of 1894 being collected in any one year in Ireland until a definite decision has been arrived at upon the report made by the late Royal Commission?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I think the hon. Gentleman has mistaken the nature of the argument advanced by the late Royal Commission in support of their conclusions. As a matter of fact, the disparity between what Ireland does pay and what in the opinion of the late Commission she ought to pay is less now than it was at the time the late Commission reported.

MR. LOUGH: But, leaving aside any error in the figures, will the Government arrange that, pending the consideration of the question whether the taxation of Ireland shall be reduced, no increase of taxation will take place?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I hope the hon. Gentleman will put down on the Paper any question on the subject which he desires me to answer.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

MR. WOODS: I beg to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the Government intend to introduce their promised Employers' Liability Bill on an early date; and, if so, about what date will it be introduced?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: I am afraid it is not possible in the present condition of public business for me to name a day on which the Employers' Liability Bill will be introduced.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS BILL.

Considered in Committee.

[The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, Mr. J. W. LOWTHER, in the Chair.]

[PROGRESS, 3RD MARCH.—FOURTH DAY.]

Clause 1,

"(1) For aiding Voluntary Schools there shall be annually paid out of moneys provided by Parliament an aid grant, not exceeding in the agregate 5s. per scholar for the whole number of scholars in those schools.

"(2) The aid grant shall be distributed by the Education Department to such Voluntary Schools and in such manner and amounts as the Department think best for the purpose of helping necessitous schools and increasing their efficiency, due regard being had to the maintenance of voluntary subscriptions.

"(3) If associations of schools are constituted in such manner in such areas and with such governing bodies representative of the managers as are approved by the Education Department, there shall be allotted to each association while so approved,

"(a) a share of the aid grant to be computed according to the number of scholars in the schools of the association at the rate of 5s. per scholar, or, if the Department fix different rates for town and country schools respectively (which they are hereby empowered to do) then at those rates; and

"(b) a corresponding share of any sum which may be available out of the aid grant after distribution has been made to unassociated schools.

"(4) The share so allotted to each such association shall be distributed as aforesaid by the Education Department after consulting the governing body of the association, and in accordance with any scheme prepared by that body which the Department for the time being approve.

"(5) The Education Department may exclude a school from any share of the aid grant which it might otherwise receive, if, in the opinion of the Department, it unreasonably refuses or fails to join such an association, but the refusal or failure shall not be deemed unreasonable if the majority of the schools in the association belong to a religious denomination to which the school in question does not itself belong.

"(6) The Education Department may require as a condition of a school receiving a share of the aid grant, that the accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the school shall be annually audited in accordance with the regulations of the Department.

"(7) The decision of the Education Department upon any question relating to the distribution or allotment of the aid grant, including the question whether an association is or is not in conformity with this Act, and whether a school is a town or a country school, shall be final."

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS ruled out of order a number of Amendments, including the following Amendment standing in the name of Mr. F. A. CHANNING (Northamptonshire, E.):—In Sub-section (2) after the word "Department," to insert,—

"And for the purpose of determining with respect to every county the number of schools which are to be deemed to be necessitous, and the proportion of such aid grant as may be payable to each such school, the Education Department shall, on the passing of this Act, hold such local inquiries by inspectors of the Department or otherwise, and call for such returns from School Boards or school attendance committees or other local authorities, and require such accounts with vouchers from the managers of any schools as may in their opinion be necessary, and shall publish a list of all schools determined to be necessitous, and the proportion of such aid grant to be assigned to each such school in respect to the average attendance in such school."

MR. CHANNING, on a point of order, suggested that, from the wording of the Sub-section, there could be no objection to an Amendment authorising the Education Department to take steps for the grant to be distributed independent of the associations.

THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: The hon. Member's Amendment is out of order, because it is in the wrong place. It ought to come at the end of the sub-section or as a new clause.

MR. ELLIS GRIFFITH (Anglesey) moved in Sub-section (2) to leave out from the word "to" to the end of the sub-section, in order to insert the words, "all voluntary schools at the rate of five shillings per scholar in average attendance."

He said that the object of the Amendment was to provide that the 5s. grant should be paid direct to the schools; and one of its great advantages was that it would remove from the Bill these proposed associations of schools. If the grant were paid direct, it would be enjoyed by the best schools in the country as well as by the worst, and thus an injustice to the schools which had done the best for education would be prevented, for under the scheme of the Government it was the worst schools which would be subsidised. He knew it had been said that many of the poor Voluntary Schools would be shut up if aid were not afforded to them; but he did not believe that that was said bonâ fide. It was simply a threat to blackmail the taxpayers. As to the Boards of Managers in connection with Voluntary Schools, those bodies were not thought highly of in Wales; but whatever they were, these proposed associations would simply be composed of their representatives—that is, the representatives of unrepresentative men. Surely it would be better to deal with the men themselves, however unrepresentative and incapable they might be. Another advantage of the Amendment was that the country would be saved the expense, friction, and strife inseparable from these associations, which were now to be compulsory. In the Bill of last year they were to have been voluntary, and what had happened since last year to induce the Government to abandon the voluntary principle? There was a suggestion in the Bill that the Department might make different rates for town and country; but, in any case, the money ought to go direct to the school instead of being pooled by an association. The Vice President of the Council had said, "Parliament had set before it the task of devising some means of replacing the School Board system in rural districts where it had been a failure by some better system." He supposed that this clause would hardly be defended on that ground. The existing machinery at the command of the Department was amply sufficient for the purposes of this Bill, without the creation of these associations. By accepting the Amendment, the Government would have an opportunity of showing a generous and conciliatory spirit, and of removing one of the blots of the Bill. He begged to move.

Mr. Ellis Griffith.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR, Manchester, E.) said the hon. and learned Gentleman was probably justified, according to the Rules of the House, in referring to the associations which were dealt with later on in the Bill, but it would probably not be for the convenience of the Committee that they should, at the present stage discuss the special machinery by which distribution, according to merit or need, should be carried out; but they should confine themselves to the question whether they ought to distribute according to fixed amount, irrespective of need, or whether they should, through the machinery in the Bill or some better machinery, attempt to discriminate between different schools and different parts of the country. The answer to the Amendment was a very simple one. In his first argument the hon. and learned Gentleman was wrong in point of fact. Our educational legislation had always, from 1870 onwards, recognised that schools might require more money from the Treasury if they were specially situated. There was the provision in Section 97 of the Act of 1870, under which a considerable sum of public money was annually given to schools for no other reason whatever than that they were situated in districts where the rateable value was exceedingly small; and, in addition to that, there was the well-known provision in the Act of 1876, by which small schools in fact received an immense exceptional endowment at the hands of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In these circumstances the hon. and learned Gentleman would, he thought, feel himself forced to abandon his first position—namely, that the Government were now introducing some inequality in the treatment of different schools according to the necessities of these schools. Coming to the second argument, which, if he might say so without offence, seemed to be no argument at all, he held that schools had no primâ facie title whatever to public money. They were only entitled to public money, in his judgment, when they were necessitous; if they were not necessitous they could not be said to have even a primâ facie claim to the grant of 5s. to each scholar in average attendance. If the Government had brought forward any plan of this kind they would have been denounced not only in the House but from one end of the country to the other as squandering public money, by their own confession and avowal, on schools that did not require the money—[" hear, hear!"]; and he, for his part, felt so much the strength of that argument that he was willing to fight the question of the machinery by which the distribution was to be made rather than adopt the simpler, and, no doubt, easier plan of simply dividing the money equally among all Voluntary Schools according to the number of children in average attendance. He felt the strongest objection to the plan suggested from two opposite points of view—that of the Chancellor of the Exchequer or the public taxpayer, and the point of view of the Voluntary Schools themselves. He objected to the Amendment from the point of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, because he did not wish to see public money given to schools which did not require it; and he objected to it from the point of view of the schools, because he thought 5s. per scholar was very much too little for many schools, and therefore, unless some schools which did not require it were not given a full amount, there would be no surplus to give to those schools, to which it was in the highest degree to the public advantage that greater assistance should be granted. The broad case of the Government was, he submitted, unanswerable, or, if it was to be answered at all, it could only be by showing later on that no machinery could be devised under which their end could be attained.

MR. A. H. D. ACLAND (York, W.R., Rotherham) was not quite so sure that if the Bill had contained a proposal to give the grant all round in the first instance, the Government would have been denounced up and down the land. At all events, in last year's Bill such a proposal was made, and he could not recall many denunciations about the Bill on that account. What the Opposition protested against in laying this alternative scheme before the House was the compulsory association of schools. A great many of the most experienced men in this country who understood this problem best, and who did not by any means belong to one political party, were firmly convinced that, try as they would, it was quite impossible to draw any distinction between necessitous and non-necessitous schools, and yet such a distinction and definition was the very basis, as he understood it, of the Bill. Comparing the case of the average Lancashire school with that of the average London school, no one could doubt that the former was more necessitous than the latter. Therefore, if they were to be equally treated under this Bill, the Lancashire schools should receive 7s. 6d. of the grant and the London schools 2s. 6d. The same comparison would apply to the dioceses of Canterbury and Chester—one of them ought to be a 7s. 6d. diocese and the other a 2s. 6d. diocese; and if the Government were to give each of them the 5s. grant they would be laying themselves open to the charge which they made against the Opposition of proposing to give 5s. equally to those schools which did not want it and to those schools that wanted more. There was no attempt made in the Bill to divide the country into necessitous and non-necessitous areas. It was impossible to lay down any principle for the distribution of the grant between necessitous and non-necessitous schools. The difficulties of laying down such a principle of distribution had been very clearly pointed out in The Times during the early stage of the Debate upon this Bill. The right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council had pointed out that if a great number of schools stood out of the association it would be an impossible task to form such associations, and that the power of refusing the grant to those schools which declined to join the associations would have to be pretty freely used if the associations were to be prevented from falling to pieces. In other words, that meant that schools would have to be compelled to join the associations if they desired to participate in the grant. How were they going to use compulsion as between parish and parish? The Times, in a leading article published on February 16, wrote:—

> "If, in two neighbouring parishes, one school kept up in a state of solvency and efficiency by the liberality of the squire and the parishioners is recommended for only a small grant, while another, where the subscriptions are niggardly, obtains a large amount of relief, on the ground that it is necessitous, what is likely to be the result? It will be hardly consistent with human nature if the parish in which the subscriptions are adequate and liberal is not tempted to bring down its contribution to the level at which it can claim a larger share of the grant."

["Hear, hear!"] If such a levelling down process were to be adopted, the Voluntary Schools would not only lose a large portion of their subscriptions, but they would be so reduced as to claim the 5s. grant all round as a right. In adopting the principle of a varying grant they were making a new departure. The Act of 1870 gave an equal grant, and so did the Free Education Act of 1891. There were, of course, the exceptional cases of very small schools having from 60 to 90 scholars, in sparsely-populated districts, which required additional assistance to enable them to pay their teachers. But this grant of between half and three-quarters of a million was to be given to all the Voluntary Schools on the understanding that it was to be apportioned between necessitous and non-necessitous schools according to their requirements. But who was to decide what was a necessitous and what was a non-necessitous school? In one parish they might say that they had for years watched with interest the growth of their school, that they had never allowed it to fall behind in regard to efficiency, and that they had constantly appealed to their friends for assistance in order to prevent deficiencies in the accounts, with the result that, by means of careful management, they had been able to maintain their school in excellent condition. Such a parish would ask why in these circumstances they were not to be assisted, and why, in view of all the facts, they were to lose the grant instead of being rewarded for the exertions they had made in order to maintain the efficiency of their school. They might say that they wished to teach cookery and cottage gardening, or other subjects of study, but were prevented from doing so by want of funds; and they might ask why they were to be treated less generously than the neighbouring parish which had neglected their school and had allowed it to become necessitous. In his view, if the compulsory principle were to be eliminated from the Bill the greater part of the sting would be taken out of the Measure. He was not often the depositary of the views of those who were represented by hon. Members opposite, but during the last few weeks he had received an extraordinary number of communications from Conservatives, Churchmen, and clergymen, who were all opposed to him in politics, complaining of the compulsory character of the Bill, which would strike a blow at independence by forcing them into associations. He believed that this complaint was amply justified. ["Hear, hear!"] The result of the adoption of such a compulsory principle would be to make the managers of the schools extremely discontented, and to drag the schools down to a level of inefficiency. ["Hear, hear!"] Why should they not adopt the principle of enabling groups of Church schools to join together? That would put an end to discontent, while the richer schools would be willing to give their portion of the grant to aid the necessitous schools. What did they intend to do with regard to endowed schools in reference to this grant? If they refused the grant to a school on the ground that it was endowed, they would be practically alienating a part of the endowment of the school and handing it over to another parish. ["Hear, hear!"] For whom was this compulsory association necessary? He could hardly believe that it was necessary for the Roman Catholics, in fact, he was not sure that they would get any advantage at all out of it; he was perfectly confident that they could do all they desired to do by voluntary association. ["Hear, hear!"] Was it demanded by the British schools? Did they want to be associated together and dole out the money by compulsion? Was it desired by the Wesleyans? He did not believe there was a demand for it from either of these two quarters; so that the demand was solely made in the interests of Church schools, though he believed that a great many of the managers of these schools did not at all like the suggestion that they should be compelled to enter into association. He believed that many of the Bishops were very anxious for this, but he thought they were misled in supposing that even with the most benevolent intentions they could work compulsory association as they had hitherto worked voluntary funds. ["Hear, hear!"] The task imposed on these associations by the Bill was to draw up a schedule of schools in their areas and submit it to the Education Department. Each association was to be responsible for distinguishing between schools and schools over an area containing, perhaps, 1,000,000 people, and for presenting a scheme—which to many of the schools would be extremely unsatisfactory—to the Education Department, who would act as their bankers and send out the money to the various schools. He was perfectly confident that the line taken by Canon Barker, Archdeacon Wilson, and by the Northern Counties Voluntary Schools Defence Association, was the right one. What did the latter body say? They said they wanted to omit the word "necessitous" altogether, and to substitute the word "those," the feeling being that all Voluntary Schools which satisfied the demands of the Education Department and were efficient in themselves should have from public sources the full sum necessary to maintain that standard. Did that not mean that they wanted to get rid of the compulsory character of association? As far as he could understand it, they required something much more like a grant all round. ["Hear, hear!"] But there were even wider reasons from his point of view, reasons in the broader interests of education. It had been lightly suggested that the Education Department had admirable representatives in the country villages who could grapple with this task to a large extent. It would be a most thankless task, and he should be very sorry to see the inspectors, who were now welcomed in all schools, involved in it. ["Hear, hear!"] They had plenty of work to do of a practical educational kind, and were not at all fitted for work so difficult in its character and so dangerous to their own influence. The proposal of the Bill would also involve the officers of the Department in an enormous amount of work which would divert them from their regular duties; and the character of these officers would be altered the moment they were involved in the difficult task of distinguishing between schools. It would make the association unpopular, and it would to a large extent make religious bodies unpopular. It would raise a new cry against religious bodies which it was not desirable to raise, and it would make it much more likely that a demand would be made to upset arrangements in the future. He felt quite certain that the proposal made on his side of the House for a grant all round and a modification of that grant only where it was desired among schools which had grouped themselves to help one another, was the better one. A grant all round and voluntary association were much more likely to lead to a permanent settlement than the scheme of this Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] He felt no hesitation in saying that, so far as permanent settlement went under this Bill, the House would do much more wisely to adopt a scheme such as that, than to try and force into association schools which did not want to go into association. It would avoid the irritation that would be involved in taking away money from schools that thought they were entitled to it, and he sincerely believed that when these associations had done their best to distinguish between school and school, they would find that in 90 per cent. of the cases it would be almost impossible to do so, and they would demand the very scheme now being put before the House of equal grants all round. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. G. C. T. BARTLEY (Islington, N.) said that he agreed that from the sentimental point of view it would be desirable to adjust this new grant in proportion to the necessities of schools, but those who had had to do with schools would acknowledge at once that, practically speaking, when they had got association, it would be impossible under any fair system to adjudicate between school and school. ["Hear, hear!"] Although some schools were better off than others, the schools that were better off were anxious to spend more money in useful and legitimate objects, which they were only prevented from doing by want of funds. It seemed to him that compulsory association would involve an immense amount of friction. The main object of each school would be to get as much as it could. ["Hear, hear!"] In the case of voluntary association an altogether different spirit would be displayed. He had heard it said that some schools were to get 10s., 12s., or even more, while others were to get nothing. He was quite sure that no such an arrangement would follow compulsory association. The association would meet, each school would desire to have its full quota, and the result would be that every school would get 5s. ["Hear, hear!"] That, he acknowledged, was not a desirable plan, and speaking with some practical knowledge on the subject, he said that in his opinion a compulsory system of association would lead to assimilation, and the only possible solution of the difficulty would be to recommend that every school should have 5s. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. HENRY BROADHURST (Leicester) said that if the Amendment were accepted, and this portion of the Bill omitted, much of the opposition to the Bill would undoubtedly be removed, or at least largely modified. They would prefer rather that the money should be more under the control of the central authority which was known, than under the control of a newly-constituted body which they did not know and which they very much feared. He objected to the association altogether. It appeared to be forgotten by the Leader of the House that there were large communities in this country not associated with the Church of England who had consciences and religious convictions. More than half a million of Nonconformist children were driven at the present time into Church Schools; and under this clause the control and the authority of the Church over these schools would be enormously increased. This was one of the reasons why they so strongly opposed this portion of the Bill. No one knew exactly what the machinery was to be, and as it appeared in the Bill it seemed to him to be full of confusion. An intense feeling of suspicion and alarm existed in the minds of Nonconformists with regard to this unknown body of associations. Nonconformist schools had not asked for this Bill; they did not want it and they did not support it. On the contrary, the largest and most influential Nonconformist bodies in the country were almost entirely opposed to the Bill; and it was reasonable to ask the Government to pay some attention to their wishes and feelings. But Nonconformists had received no consideration from the Government, and he urged that this was not a wise policy for the Church itself or for its future interest or position. He supported the Amendment on the ground of religious equality and freedom, and in order that Nonconformists might be released from the bigotry and despotism which would be exercised by the clergymen in the villages in the allocation and management of the fund which was contributed by all classes of the community.

Mr. G. C. T. Bartley.

*MR. ERNEST GRAY (West Ham, N.) said that the Amendment involved two questions which were separate and distinct: (1) the fixed grant as against the variable grant, and (2) compulsory federation. In his judgment the first was the only question which should be raised now. Anyone who had knowledge of the needs of schools would not only agree that this new grant should be distributed in varying proportions between school and school, but would regret that the existing grants now paid were not distributed on the same principle. He admitted that the grants to the poorer schools should be larger than the grants to the rich schools. If there were one great merit which attached to the proposed grant in this Bill it was the attempt which was being made to differentiate between the needy and the rich schools. Whether this attempt could be achieved was a different question, but he certainly did not think it would be attained by the machinery in the Bill. ["Hear, hear!"] When the question of compulsory association was brought forward he should not hesitate to offer opposition to the proposals outlined in the Bill. Whether it was possible or not, in considering the principle of the fixed as against the varying grants, to distinguish absolutely between the necessity of one school and another school, he would not now inquire; but it was perfectly possible for the Education Department, by means of its inspectors, to lay down a series of rules having reference to the average attendance in schools under which the whole grant might be well distributed. He could not understand how in the speeches of some Ministers the suggestion should be made that the larger grant should be given to schools in urban districts rather than to schools in rural districts. ["Hear, hear!"] Again, if the Education Department had to revise all the schemes it might as well frame them, and he thought that the proposal would lead to a large amount of friction in many localities. Owing to the large number of schools that would be under the control of each association he thought that the machinery provided would be almost unworkable, in addition to being exceedingly expensive, as well as leading to the diversion of a large proportion of the voluntary subscriptions from the schools. All the best Voluntary Schools would, he felt sure, send up vigorous protests against the proposed machinery.

MR. J. M. PAULTON (Durham, Bishop Auckland) said that in this case they had to choose between waste and injustice, and, for his part, he was inclined to think that the lesser of the two evils would be a certain amount of waste, which, he quite admitted, would result from the operation of a fixed grant all round. But, to his mind, the important thing in the whole matter was the question of efficiency, and it did seem to him that, under the proposal of the Government, every sort of discouragement would be given to those schools which had done most to deserve recognition. In short, under this system they would give most to those who deserved least. The principle of compulsory association appeared to him to be a very doubtful and dangerous experiment. Under Section 7 of the Act of 1891 the schools had had the opportunity of forming associations, and they had done so only to a very slight extent, if, indeed, at all. Obviously, if this principle was so desirable, they would have availed themelves of it to a much greater extent; and, if it was not desirable, surely it was a dangerous thing to put it into compulsory operation. The School Guardian had pointed out that the advantage, from their point of view, of this principle of compulsory federation was not alone, and it would give a means of distributing the money. It said:—

> "They"—the associations—"will prove useful in many other ways. At present there is little control over individual schools. The Board of Management may any day close their school or surrender it to the School Board without consulting anybody. The association would be able to exercise a supervision which would render such independent action on the part of the management practically impossible."

Was that the way this principle of association was going to be worked? There was nothing whatever, so far as they could see, to prevent it from being so worked. Not only on its merits was it desirable that they should adopt the Amendment, but he thought it was also most important that they should enable the Committee, by adopting it, to get rid of the difficulties and the dangers of this principle, which, he felt sure, would never be satisfactorily worked.

VISCOUNT CRANBORNE (Rochester) said he should like to say one word as to the attitude of the Church of England, so far as he was acquainted with it, upon this question of federation. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Rotherham said he had received a large number of letters from warm supporters of the Church and of the Government protesting against these provisions in the Bill. He thought it was always a very suspicions thing when the arch-enemy of Voluntary Schools was the recipient of the confidences of supporters of the Government and of Voluntary Schools in the country. He confessed that he viewed that correspondence with a certain amount of suspicion. He could say with absolute confidence, because he knew, that to a very small extent had protests been received by the National Society, and, indeed, it was not surprising, because the National Society itself had passed the strongest resolutions in favour of this part of the Bill. He did not know whether hon. Gentlemen recollected that it was an essential part of the scheme put forward at the Church House in the winter that the special aid should be paid to federations, and, as far as he knew, it was not opposed by any very large section, and it was certainly adopted as the programme of the Church as represented by that meeting of enormous importance. He did not believe there was any very large section, with, perhaps, one exception, of those who took an interest in the welfare of Voluntary Schools, who had in any way signified their protest against the federation clauses of the Bill. He did not think that voluntary federations had been an entire failure; but he thought they had been partially, and for very obvious reasons. However much in theory the supporters of Voluntary Schools, whether rich or poor, might approve of federation, when it came to the actual point of sharing a sum of money, which they might keep themselves, with others, he thought it was expecting too much of human nature, even of clerical human nature, to be entirely unselfish in this respect. He was not at all sure if he were a manager that he should feel entitled to enter into a voluntary federation of this kind. He should hold his position as a trustee; and what right had a trustee to part with the money granted to him by Parliament, to be administered under that trust for the needs of a particular school in a particular parish, for other schools in other parishes? He saw immense difficulties in the way of the success of voluntary federation. As to the necessity of discriminating between school and school, it was so obvious that he did not think it was seriously denied by anybody. Let him give an illustration to the Committee. Take the five school districts which appeared in the Return for the county of Oxford. In the first case, the cost per child was £3 2s.; in the second, £3 10s.; in the third, £1 12s.; in the fourth, £3 7s.; and in the fifth, £2. Was it not absurd to give exactly the same assistance to the case of a school which only paid £1 12s. and to the case of a school which paid £3 10s.? That was manifestly absurd. Some kind of discrimination there must be. He had never defended the provisions of the Bill as perfect, none of these methods of discrimination as between association and association were perfect, and until his hon. Friends realised that a certain mixture of rate aid should accompany the aid proposed in the Bill there could not be a perfect discrimination. Until they had realised the advantages of the proposal put forward by the Church of England, he was content with what he could get. He recognised the desire of the Government to make this discrimination. The right hon. Gentleman the Member for Rotherham, said one effect would be that there would be a desire on the part of subscribers, when less than the 5s. grant was awarded them by the association, to diminish subscriptions. He could not conceive any such foolish policy. A certain amount of discretion ought to be reasonably expected. An association would take into consideration the warm efforts made by subscribers, special regard would be had to unselfish efforts made, and, certainly, the first consideration would be not to diminish sources of present income. Everything must be done to maintain these subscriptions, valuable in themselves, and valuable as implying moral support. He did not apprehend any such danger as the right hon. Gentleman had indicated. He believed that this provision could be wisely and strictly administered, all regard being paid to the consideration that subscriptions should not suffer. He should vote most cordially against the present Amendment, for he believed that this discrimination was absolutely essential to the proper working of the Bill.

Mr. H. H. ASQUITH (Fife, E.) regarded this as one of the first important Amendments that could be presented, and could not agree with the noble Lord that the sole question raised was the expediency of providing a fixed sum. He could not dissociate from the questions raised by the Amendment the compulsory machinery proposed to be constituted, and which, in his view, would certainly lead to disastrous results from the point of view of educational efficiency, and from the point of view of regular and equitable distribution of money contributed by the taxpayers. It was quite true that the Amendment as it stood, and in the form in which it appeared before the Committee, might have the possible result that some of the money might go to schools having no practical need of it. No schools were so prosperous or in an educational condition so ideally perfect that they could not make a sufficient use of this 5s. grant, no one would deny that; but he agreed that there were a certain number of schools where there was no urgent need for this additional sum, therefore it might be that in some cases a fixed grant might lead to something of the nature of waste. But the Committee had to choose between alternative proposals, between this comparatively slight risk and the demonstrable administrative evil of inequality by the method of distribution proposed. The Government might have proposed, as had been pointed out, that the sum granted by way of relief should be an amount proportionate to the number of children in necessitous schools. They might have supplemented that by a definition in the Bill—he would not undertake the task, he would rather leave it to a better draftsman—of what a necessitous school is, and what were the criteria of necessity. The Government could not put that into an Act of Parliament, but they would give to associations throughout the country the determination of a question which, as a matter of drafting they could not solve for themselves. The Government might have adopted that plan, and he did not envy them the task, but if they had done so they would be in a logical and intelligible position. What was their position? A sum was to be distributed, the amount of which had no relation whatever to the number of children in necessitous schools, it was proposed to be arrived at by a process nobody had yet explained. The sum the Chancellor of the Exchequer could afford was arrived at by the number of the children in Voluntary Schools, and that sum was to be distributed among necessitous schools. But then the Government refused to give a definition of necessitous schools, and proposed to intrust to a perfectly irresponsible authority, an authority compulsorily constituted, the determination of what schools fell or did not fall within the category of schools to be relieved, the Educational Department having a superintending but absolutely illusory authority. If the Department exercised that authority in a practical and effective sense not only would it impose vast additional work—and the Department was already overladen, as they knew on the authority of the Vice President, and incapable of transacting the business it had at present—but by bringing inspectors and officials into contact with local jealousies and local rivalries with which they were unfitted to deal, there would be prejudiced that universal belief now prevailing in the impartiality of the Department. How did the matter stand? A sum of money was aggregated, not on the ground of necessity at all, and distributed among necessitous schools, there being no definition of necessitous, and the instrument of distribution was to be not the Education Department or an authority responsible to Parliament, but these associations, to be formed in some manner not yet defined, throughout the country. ["Hear!"] The noble Lord had defended the compulsory association, and he said managers would not go into association voluntarily, that it would not be in human nature to do so. He implied that human nature would not permit any clergyman or set of managers of any particular denominational school, being willing, voluntarily, to part with any of the amount that might come to them.

VISCOUNT CRANBORNE said he explained that trust deeds would stand in the way.

MR. ASQUITH said the noble Lord first argued on the broad ground of human nature, and his view of the matter was that managers of Voluntary Schools, if left to themselves, apart altogether from their trust deeds, would feel themselves so constrained to look exclusively to the interests of the schools with which they were connected, that even the important considerations of supporting denominational education would not induce them to give up a shilling of the grant to relieve the urgent needs of other schools. That being the noble Lord's idea, he recognised the necessity for compulsion. Human nature was to be coerced, and managers were to be forced to associate whether they desired to do so or not, at the risk of losing that which they honestly believed ought to be given to the schools with which they were connected. With that idea he did not agree, he took a broader, more elastic view of the conduct likely to be pursued. He recognised the probability of voluntary association among schools of the same denomination, and that there would be sufficient public spirit and zeal for education to bring about an amicable arrangement for distribution according to needs. On another point raised by the Amendment he invited explanation. The proposal in the Bill was bad from the point of view of the taxpayer, it was still worse from an educational point of view. What answer could be made to the argument urged by his right hon. Friend, that if this money was granted to exclusively necessitous schools it was putting forward a bribe or a premium to schools that had raised themselves above the level of the necessitous to reduce themselves to the category of those entitled to the relief? Take the case of the two schools side by side, one of which, by the strain of an excessive effort of generosity on the part of a not always rich but often very poor clergyman who had contributed out of his own means far in excess of what duty required, had been kept in a state of efficiency largely by the self-sacrifice and spontaneous zeal of the clergyman and a few supporters. That school was not inefficient, and it would not get a halfpenny. In the next parish, owing to the neglect of the clergyman and want of zeal on the part of the parishioners, there was a school which had been allowed to come into the category of an inefficient or necessitous school, and because of its inefficiency it was entitled to a share of this grant. How could they contend that where they had a state of things in which one of these schools was rewarded for its inefficiency and the other punished for its efficiency the effect of the Measure would not discourage educational zeal and lower the standard of the Voluntary Schools? ["Hear, hear!"] That was, to his mind, even a more important consideration than that which related to the point of view of the taxpayer, and on the ground that this was a most improvident and irresponsible surrender on the part of Parliament of the control over the expenditure of public money, and on the ground that it was putting a premium on educational inefficiency and want of zeal, he should heartily support the Amendment. [Cheers.]

Mr. C. A. CRIPPS (Gloucester, Stroud) remarked that there was one part of the right hon. Gentleman's argument with which he thoroughly agreed, and that was that the present Amendment was really a discussion of the most important portion of the Bill. But when the right hon. Gentleman put it on the one side as waste, and on the other as a system of inequitable distribution, he admitted the argument, so far as waste was concerned, but he thought the argument was easily answerable so far as an inequitable distribution was concerned. The reason why this portion of the Bill should be supported as an essential part of the Government's proposal was that it was so drawn as to insure, as far as possible, equitable distribution, and to maintain the control of Parliament, because he thought, upon this point, the right hon. Gentleman had misunderstood the provisions of the Bill itself. Before dealing with the proposal itself, there was one other argument to which he should like to refer, and that was what the right hon. Gentleman had called the education argument. He supposed so little public spirit in the managers of Voluntary Schools and so little zeal on their part in the interests of real education, that they would throw away funds and bring themselves to a condition of poverty in order—having brought themselves to that condition—that they might get some of this 5s. grant. He appealed to the right hon. Gentleman on what he called the argument applicable to human nature, was it in accordance with human nature that they should throw away money with one hand on the chance possibility of picking it up with the other, and were they to do that in the case of voluntary education, in which he, at any rate, gave credit to the voluntary managers for having at heart efficient religious education in this country? As to the proposal itself, it was of the very essence of the Bill that relief should be given by discrimination to necessitous schools. If they went outside the principle of helping schools which wanted help he thought there was much to be said, as had been argued by hon. Gentlemen on the opposite side, by treating all schools, whether Voluntary or Board Schools, in the same way, as regarded the Parliamentary grant. But if they were not going to do that—and that was not proposed to be done at the present moment—what was the only fair test they could make? It was, whether the schools were Voluntary or Board Schools, that Parliament was asked to come forward and help their necessities in order that the efficiency of education in their necessitous schools might be increased and advanced. If hon. Gentlemen succeeded in taking the word "necessitous" out of the Clause, they would then say that there was no principle as regarded the Government proposal for helping education at the present moment. They might have taken the principle of "necessitous" and applied it both to Board Schools and Voluntary Schools, but once take that word out and it appeared to him they had no sound argument for giving the grant to non-necessitous Voluntary Schools that would not equally apply to the giving of it to non-necessitous Board Schools, because the test, as he said, was the necessity of the additional money in order to insure in the case of the poor schools, whether Board or Voluntary, a more efficient system of education. The right hon. Gentleman opposite asked what was meant by a necessitous school? He thought the answer was easy enough. A necessitous school was one in which the funds, from whatever source derived, were insufficient to provide an efficient education, having regard to the cost of education so far as that particular school was concerned. If they took that definition, which was the only true one, then everyone who was in favour of enhancing the efficiency of education at the present time ought to vote for an increased Parliamentary grant, where the funds were insufficient for bringing about an efficient and adequate system of education. That was the real basis of the demand now made for the Voluntary Schools. It was not made for all Voluntary Schools, but for all necessitous Voluntary Schools, because in those cases, without they had further aid the interests of education might suffer. On the principle of discrimination he could not help thinking that the right hon. Member for Fife had not observed what the real proposals were. The association which it was proposed to set up had nothing to do, either with the local management, or with the question of local subscriptions. If it had he, for one, should be opposed to it, because he believed that if they set up by compulsion an association which superseded local management as regarded their Voluntary Schools they would do very much to injure the management itself, and certainly destroy a large number of voluntary subscriptions. The principle of association, however, had nothing to do with local management, it merely had to do with the distribution of the proposed 5s. grant. It was limited to that, and to that alone. Let him point to a second way in which the power of the association was limited. It was not accurate to say that this money was to be distributed by an irresponsible federation or association. It was to be distributed by the Education Department, and the only force of the association was that the Education Department might be advised by it in an admittedly difficult manner. The right hon. Gentleman said he objected to the Government proposal, because they were dealing with the taxpayers' money without retaining the control of Parliament. The answer was that the right hon. Gentleman had not appreciated the proposal. The whole responsibility as regarded the distribution was thrown upon the Education Department, who would be responsible in respect of this 5s. grant, just as they were at the present moment as regarded the sum of nearly 30s. a head distributed to Voluntary and Board Schools alike. Again, this had been described as a compulsory association. But the only compulsion was that in Sub-section (5), which was merely that the school must not refuse unreasonably, according to the opinion of the Education Department, to join one of these federations or associations. The true basis of it was that it was to be an association entered into for the purpose merely of distributing this 5s. grant, and the only risk that was run by the schools which did not join in it was lest they should lose the five shillings, supposing their conduct was held to be unreasonable. If they looked at the proposal from that point of view, he said the associations of the Bill ought to be most cordially supported as one of the most essential factors for making this great Government scheme of assisting Voluntary Schools of the greatest utility when the Bill was first passed and as regarded education in the future. The right hon. Gentleman had said they must not have waste. In order to secure that, they must have discrimination, and, as the right hon. Gentleman had said, Parliament must retain control. Parliament did retain control, because the fund was to be distributed by the Education Department. On the question of association he believed that a large number of Members would be agreed, when they appreciated what was really proposed by the Government, that it was no interference with local management, or the question of local subsriptions, but merely an association that might advise the Education Department to distribute this sum of five shillings in the most efficacious way for promoting the efficiency of education. When these points were understood, he thought the proposal of the Government ought to have the most cordial support of all who were really interested in the future of education, and he should certainly vote most heartily, and without any misgivings, against the Amendment.

Mr. J. H. YOXALL (Nottingham, W.) said that if a necessitous school was, as the hon. and learned Member for Stroud defined it, a school the income of which, from whatever cause, was insufficient to meet the claims upon it, then there were hundreds and thousands of such schools. Could a school be regarded as necessitous when a tithe was taken by the clergyman for rent? There were thousands of schools where, under good management, the sum received from the State would be ample if it were not "milked" in that way. As it was, such schools were now defined as necessitous. He believed that a year after the Bill was passed there would be two necessitous schools for every one that now existed. It had been suggested that Voluntary School managers might throw away local income to get more State income. It was a question of local contributors withholding local income. [Cheers.] A Tory squire and Churchman, and a great supporter of Voluntary Schools, had written to him saying he had conferred with other subscribers, and he assured him that what would happen would be that subscribers to Voluntary Schools not strictly necessitous would say, "Why should we go on subscribing when, if we withdraw our subscriptions, the maintenance of the schools will fall on the State?" If so, necessitous schools would multiply, and practically every Voluntary School in the country would become necessitous, and 5s. per head would have to be allotted all round. If it were provided that the withdrawal of existing subscriptions should prevent any claim for State aid under the Bill, the catastrophe might be averted, but they had no assurance that there would be any such safeguard. There were other modes of differentiation than those in the Bill. There might be differentiation of the grant between school and school, or the Education Department might have a sliding scale of grants, giving more per child the smaller the school, and less per child the larger the school. The differentiation proposed by the Bill was bad. It would reduce all schools to the same level, and 5s. per head would have to be given all round.

Lord EDMUND TALBOT (Sussex, Chichester) wished to correct the impression left by the speech of the right hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. Acland) that Catholics did not favour the priciple of the association of schools. The Catholic Bishops recently issued a statement, signed by all of them, on this Bill, in which the following occurred:—

> "We welcome the proposal to establish associations that will secure an equitable grant in aid and promote the general advancement of public elementary education."

So that the Catholics of this country, headed by their Bishops, warmly approved of the principle of association contained in the Bill.

Mr. J. H. Yoxall.

Sir JAMES JOICEY (Durham, Chester-le-Street) contended that the definition given of necessitous schools would be of no use whatever to the associations to be formed under the Bill, and they would have as much difficulty as the Government in deciding what were necessitous schools. As to the Bill not interfering with local management, he thought the Bill would give the associations a large controlling influence. If a school did not comply with the desires of the association as regarded religious education it was quite possible the majority in the association would do all in their power to prevent it from getting any portion of the grant. Besides, this would undoubtedly tend to create a larger number of necessitous schools, which did not exist at the present time. He was a large contributor to Voluntary Schools—one of the largest in the House—and he regarded with some alarm the prospect of schools to which he largely subscribed not getting the 5s. to which they were entitled. Why, in many instances, were voluntary subscriptions given? Often to prevent the formation of Board Schools—[cheers]—the subscribers thinking Board Schools were more expensive. ["Hear, hear!"] Most of the subscribers, when they found the schools were not to have their share of the £620,000, would be inclined to say, "We will discontinue our subscriptions, and the result will be that a large number of the schools will be compelled to appeal to the Board Schools, or become Board Schools instead of Voluntary Schools." He defied anyone to give an accurate description of a necessitous school. The Bill in its present form would cause untold difficulties and quarrelling in various localities. It was impossible to put the task of deciding what were necessitous schools on the inspectors. They had work enough to do, and they were constantly getting into difficulty with the managers of the various schools, and if the powers proposed were put into their hands they would increase their difficulties. In his opinion, it was unwise to make it compulsory for every school to join an association. He could not see why a school, which had been maintained up to the present by voluntary subscriptions should not be entitled to this grant as well as any other which might not have been carried on efficiently, owing to a want of private funds. He hoped the hon. Member would press his Amendment to a division. If the Bill was passed, without some other means of distributing the money than the provision with regard to associations, it would give great dissatisfaction in the country, and he believed these schools would become Board Schools to a large extent.

*Mr. HENRY HOBHOUSE (Somerset, E.) said the discussion, which for the last two hours had been on the desirability of compulsory association, was quite foreign to the issue now before them. ["Hear, hear!"] There was nothing about associations in the sub-section they were discussing, or in the Amendment. With regard to the compulsory character of the association, they need not deal with that until they came to Sub-section (5) of this clause, when they would have had more time to make up their minds as to that very important, and, he must say, difficult question. He was somewhat surprised at the support which the Amendment had received from the front Opposition Bench. They were now told, and he believed for the first time from that Bench, that the desirable plan, if they gave the money at all, was to give it as a dole without any discrimination whatever. The inevitable effect of the Amendment would be, that this very large sum would be distributed equally per head among all schools, whether in the West End or the East End, whether in poor or wealthy districts, whether the schools were small or large, or were heavily endowed or not endowed at all. He submitted that they would make a very great mistake, both from a financial and an educational point of view, if they abandoned once for all any power of discrimination between necessitous and non-necessitous schools. ["Hear, hear!"] He believed there were various ways that might be adopted of devising machinery for reserving some power of discriminating between the amounts to be granted to various schools; but this was not the time to discuss that machinery. If they refused to give any power of discrimination to the Education Department or to any other authority, the inevitable result would be a great deal of waste. He should, without hesitation, vote against the Amendment.

Sir HENRY FOWLER (Wolverhampton, E.) said the hon. Member had declared himself a very strong advocate of discrimination, and had indicated that, at some future time, they should be better able to discuss the best mode of deciding that question. He had, however, thrown no light upon that scheme, although he had intimated the possibility that he might suggest another scheme. He ventured to think that now was the proper time to raise this question. If they could, by some certain and infallible process, ascertain what schools needed the money most it would, no doubt, be the wisest course to give those schools the money. But they had to take this scheme, with all the imperfections not only of human and clerical nature, but of House of Commons nature. They must necessarily see whether the machinery suggested by this Bill justified them in departing from what had been the uniform practice in distributing grants for education. A grant of money for education had in that House always been distributed either on the principle of capitation or because the merit and efficiency of a school entitled it to a grant. They had never, until the present occasion, raised the question of the income of the school or the income of those by whom the school was supported. The Bill, however, introduced a new principle—they were going to give public money to necessitous schools. Until that night they had never had a definition from the other side of "necessitous." The First Lord of the Treasury did not give them a definition; he told them that in the Act of 1870 there was a definition of necessitous schools, and that under Section 97 of that Act provision was made out of the public Exchequer for necessitous schools.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY said it was true that he referred to Section 97 of that Act, but he did so to remind the Committee that the contention first advanced by the Mover of this Amendment, and now repeated by the right hon. Gentleman, had really no foundation, and that Parliament had not gone on the principle of distributing a fixed grant apart from the necessities of the schools to which the grant was given.

SIR H. FOWLER apologised for misunderstanding the right hon. Gentleman, but pointed out that what Parliament did in 1870 was to recognise the necessitous school districts—["hear, hear!"]—not the necessitous schools. There was a vital distinction between the two. ["Hear, hear!"] When Mr. Forster inserted that clause into his Bill, his contemplation, and that of the Government of that day, was that the additional cost of education would be met by a 3d. rate. At that time the subscriptions of the voluntary subscribers represented about one-third of the cost of the school, the actual average being something over 7s. The clause was introduced in order that, where a rate of 3d. in the pound would not produce 7s. 6d. per head of all the children in the schools, the Government out of the grant were to make up the difference between the rate and the 7s. 6d. That was the definition, if he might so express it, of the Parliament of that day of a necessitous School Board district. They were not now dealing with the School Board districts, however, but with Voluntary Schools. The hon. Member for the Stroud Division said it was an essential part of this scheme that the money should be given to necessitous schools only. They joined issue upon that point. They contended that it was impossible to discriminate as to what was a necessitous school. They might say that there was a class of subscribers that were necessitous, or a class of subscribers that would not give what they ought to give—which he thought was the more general rule—["hear, hear!"]—and they might give the money to that class of subscribers, but that was not giving it to necessitous schools. An hon. Member just now defined a necessitous school as a school in which the funds were insufficient to defray the cost. But there was a question behind that—namely, why they were insufficient. ["Hear, hear!"] His hon. Friend the Member for Durham had told them of a wealthy coalowner who handsomely subscribed to the Voluntary School of the district for the economical motive of keeping out the School Board. Under the Bill that school was not a necessitous school, because there were sufficient funds to pay the expenses. But if there was a wealthy coalowner in the next parish who did not give anything to his school, that school was to be subsidised at the rate of 5s. per child in attendance. If that were so, it was probable that the first wealthy coalowner would drop his subscription to his school, which would then become necessitous, and would receive an extra grant under the Bill. [Laughter and cheers.] This was a question that he did not desire to approach in any controversial spirit. The House had determined that this £620,000 was to be given for the relief of Voluntary Schools, and the question now before them was whether the machinery of compulsory Associations was a preferable or even a practical mode of carrying out that desire. He should like to say in passing that he did not agree with the assumption that the Government were wrong in having admitted that there was a stronger case for urban schools as against rural schools. He agreed with the Government in that view. In towns where there were School Boards, there was a far greater pressure on the Voluntary Schools than on similar schools in the rural districts, where there were no School Boards. That question came to the front immediately they proceeded to deal with necessitous schools. What the managers of schools in all the large towns desired was to increase their expenditure in order to make the schools better, and he believed this 5s. per head would be as much wanted by the best Voluntary Schools in towns as it would be by the most impecunious Voluntary Schools in country districts. The hon. Member for Stroud had said that the object of forming the Associations was to insure the equitable distribution of the grant. Then why was that not set out in the Bill? The Government did not prescribe in the Bill the formation of the Associations. They had not sufficient confidence in the wisdom of the Associations to make the formation of the Associations compulsory. Their form was left entirely optional, and Associations thus constituted were to have practically the distribution of the money. And why? The Vice President of the Council had said that if the Department had the distribution of the money it would break down under the labour of deciding which schools were necessitous and which schools were not necessitous. It was, indeed, impossible that the Department could do it, and so they were reduced to this—that those irresponsible Associations would have the ultimate and final power of distributing this money. It was said that the Department would hear appeals. If that were so, he thought the Department would soon find appeals would be so numerous that it would be far better for them to undertake the distribution of the grant. Every school that would not get a grant would think itself injured and would therefore appeal. What was the objection of giving a grant all round? The new Associations would not be strong enough to say that a certain class of schools should have only 2s. per head and that another class should have 10s. per head. The managers of the schools would not submit to such discrimination. He thought, therefore, they were entitled to ask the Government frankly what they mean as to the constitution of those Associations. The Bill was vague and uncertain. It was an essay. It was a theory. The whole working part of it was left out of the Bill altogether. If the Government thought this a vital part of their scheme to which they intended to adhere, they must have made up their minds as to what the framework of these Associations was to be; what was to be their constitution; what was to be their powers: what responsibility they would have to Parliament; how Parliament was to exercise that responsibility; whether there was to be a general scheme of the Education Department to apply to all Associations and to be laid on the Table of the House for discussion. He thought that it would save time if, before they went any further into this Bill, the Government gave the Committee their views on this important question of the machinery for the distribution of the money.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said that the right hon. Gentleman opposite, with, he was sure, the best intentions, had recommended the Committee to make this the opportunity not merely for a general consideration of the machinery of the Bill as to the distribution of the money, but for a detailed consideration of the plan of the Government. In the observation he had already had the honour of making to the Committee, he had said that he would confine his remarks, as he did rigidly, to the consideration of the questions whether they ought to give this money according to the needs of the schools to whom it was to be given, or whether they should confine themselves to the grossly imperfect plan of giving 5s. per head all round. He still thought the Committee would have been well advised if they had followed the advice which he then gave them. But, of course, he recognised that it was strictly in order to this Amendment to ask whether the particular machinery the Government had proposed for the distribution of the money was good or was not good. But inasmuch as that point must be inevitably raised on later Amendments dealing with the associations, he would suggest, in the interest of the rapid discharge of business, the orderliness of Debates, and the avoidance of repetition, that they should as far as possible postpone till then all dealing with the details of the plan of the Government in regard to the Associations. He would not even criticise the phrase, so often inaccurately used, that these associations were to be compulsory. He would leave that until the time came to move Amendments practically raising that issue, and he would appeal to the Committee to bring this particular branch of the subject as to the distribution of the money to an early termination in order that they might come to the important questions that would, he admitted, have to be raised before they passed the three sub-sections of the clause. But he would deal with some of the points raised by hon. Gentlemen opposite. They had been told that they could not define necessitous schools, and that it was beyond the power of the draftsman to do so, and they were also told that the scheme of the Bill would involve injustice, and bring about a state of things approaching something like disorder. He confessed that these gloomy forebodings did not influence his judgment in the least. ["Hear, hear!"] On the other hand, he did not pretend that he looked forward with absolute foreknowledge to the future of those associations, or to the distribution of the grant. He admitted that undoubtedly the task that would be thrown on the associations would be one of some difficulty, and that it would demand on their part the exercise of public spirit and uncommon devotion to a common cause. ["Hear, hear!"] But, in the circumstances granted, was the task of discrimination one that it was impossible to accomplish fairly and justly? ["Hear, hear!"] He thought not. In his judgment, the framework of the Bill was so contrived that it would obviate the danger of assisting schools where the poverty was, as it were, self-made, and that it would not operate as the right hon. Member for Fife had stated, as an inducement to schools to make themselves "necessitous" in order to participate in the grant. ["Hear, hear!"] He was aware that some hon. Gentlemen opposite, apart altogether from any Party feeling, did look forward with some apprehension to the attempt about to be made in favour of discrimination between the schools. But, after all, was not the experiment worth making? ["Hear, hear!"] If the Committee agreed to the Amendment just as it was, they would give up for all time any hope of carrying out the plan proposed, and hon. Members must admit that that plan of accomplishing the object in view was the best that had been devised. ["Hear, hear!"] If, as he hoped, and firmly believed, the difficulties of the task were not beyond the patriotism and public spirit of the managers of the schools, nor beyond the administrative capacity of the Education Department, the advantage of retaining the Bill in its present form would be that there would be no squandering of the public money. [Cheers.] For those reasons he would earnestly press upon the Committee not to accept the Amendment, which would seriously mutilate a Measure that otherwise he sincerely believed would prove to be of incalculable benefit to education generally. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE (Carnarvon Boroughs) said the proof that the Government had no confidence in the public spirit of Voluntary School managers was shown by the fact that the managers were penalised by Sub-section (5) if they refused to enter the projected associations. In Section 97 of the Act of 1870 there was a distinct principle for ascertaining whether a district was necessitous. The district must be one in which a 3d. rate did not produce a certain amount. Again, in the Act of 1876, to which the Government was always referring, there was a principle laid down—the necessitous district was defined by a population limit. Where the population of a district within two miles of the school was less than 300, and there was no other public elementary school recognised by the Department, the Act provided that a special Parliamentary grant should be made to the school. But in this clause the Government were making a distinction on a principle entirely opposed to that of the Act of 1870 or of 1876. They were discriminating in favour of the towns as opposed to the country districts in favour of the districts of large rateable value and population, as against the districts of small rateable value and population. The noble Lord the Member for Rochester had said that if he were the manager of a Voluntary School, and the question were left to his discretion, he should not vote for any portion of the grant payable to his association being taken from his school to be given to a more necessitous school. The noble Lord said that he did not think it would be right to do so. And yet the noble Lord was going to support a Bill which would compel managers to do the very thing which the noble Lord thought it would be wrong for them to do.

SIR JAMES FERGUSSON (Manchester, N.E.) said that the hon. Member had referred to the case of Manchester as a town in which the subscriptions per scholar were not up to the average over the country. This was an argument which had been exposed over and over again. The explanation was that in Manchester a very much larger proportion of the population sent the children to Voluntary Schools, and where the subscriptions were low, the population was exceedingly poor.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE pointed out to the Committee that there were eight schools in Manchester where the subscriptions were above the average, and that, under the Bill, they would suffer for the benefit of the others.

SIR J. FERGUSSON said that it was perfectly evident that only an authority well acquainted with the district would be qualified to judge of the best manner of distributing the grant.

MR. ALBERT SPICER (Monmouth Boroughs) said that the hon. and learned Member for Stroud and the First Lord of the Treasury had repeatedly insisted on the fact that these associations would have nothing to do with the local management of schools, but only with the distribution of the grant. Being a member of a Voluntary Church, he had had some experience of somewhat analogous conditions, and he was sure that the Government did not clearly apprehend what the effect of these associations would be. If there were to be discrimination between school and school, it was inevitable that sooner or later local management would be touched. Any association wishing to distribute the grant according to the necessities of its different schools must make inquiries to get at the facts. They would find all sorts of circumstances existing. For instance, they might find in one school district that a Broad Church squire refused to subscribe to the school because it was conducted on the principles of a High Church clergyman; and the association would be bound to refuse aid to any school which did not meet reasonable local requirements. The Government were discriminating from the wrong end. If they had admitted some principle of local control all might have been well. But this they had persistently refused.

Sir FRANCIS POWELL (Wigan) denied that the deputation of Lancashire Members, to whom reference had been made, were opposed to the principle of association. It would be unfair, he thought, to those who desired to see this Bill passed that such a statement should go without contradiction.

Mr. R. W. PERKS (Lincolnshire, Louth) hoped he was right in gathering from what the First Lord of the Treasury had said that the Government might not, at some later stage of the discussion, be indisposed to seriously consider the abandonment of the compulsory form of association of schools. As to the question of the aid grant, or, as some people called it, the 5s. dole, the scheme for discretionary distribution or favouritism, or picking and choosing between school and school, had been very carefully considered by the Committee who had charge of all the Wesleyan schools, and who had to consider the interests of something like 300,000 Wesleyan children in Anglican elementary schools. Although the Committee embraced some political supporters of the right hon. Gentleman, they came unanimously to the conclusion that there was no just and equitable method of differentiating between school and school. There was one point which did not seem to have occurred to the Leader of the House, and that was the view which the parents might take of this question. Some schools might receive out of the public funds 25s. or 26s. per head, while other schools might get 32s., 33s., 34s., or 35s. Was it not extremely probable that the parents of those children in the schools receiving the lesser amount, would seriously complain that less was being spent upon the education of their children, than upon those in the schools receiving larger sums. Already protests were being made against the scheme of federation, even by the managers of Voluntary Schools. The Worcester Herald had gone to the trouble of ascertaining the opinions of Voluntary School managers in and around Worcester, and it had been ascertained that no less than one-fourth of the managers in that district strongly repudiated the system of compulsory association. And leaders of opinion in the Church of England like the Bishop of Hereford, Canon Barker, and Archdeacon Wilson had joined in repudiating this portion of the Bill. He wished that at some later stage of the discussion the Government would announce that this cumbrous and unnecessary machinery would be dropped.

Mr. COURTENAY WARNER (Staffordshire, Lichfield) said that the system of federation was impossible in practice. The First Lord of the Treasury had spoken about some virtuous individual who would see to the interests of the schools, but that individual would not be able to vote against his own school getting a large grant, however rich that school was. There was nothing to show which school was to get large help and which school was to get small help, and the result must be that every member of an association would be pledged to do all he could to benefit his own school.

The FIRST LORD of the TREASURY claimed to move, "That the Question be now put."

Question put, "That the Question be now put."

The Committee divided: Ayes, 224; Noes, 90.—(Division List, No. 69.)

Question put accordingly, "That the words 'to such Voluntary Schools' stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 228; Noes, 88.—(Division List, No. 70.)

On the return of the CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS, after the usual interval,

*SIR JAMES WOODHOUSE (Huddersfield) moved, in Sub-section (2), to leave out all the words after "schools," to the end of the sub-section, and to insert

"in accordance with regulations which will insure that it shall be applied—

"(a) in improving the teaching staff as regards number, qualification, or salary; and so far as it is not in the opinion of the Education Department required for that purpose—

"(b) in the payment of the teaching staff, the provision of special teachers whether on the permanent staff or not, and in the improvement of the eduaction of pupil teachers; and

"(c) in the improvement of the educational fittings and apparatus of the school, and in otherwise increasing its efficiency."

He said that the sub-section of the Bill now under consideration dealt with the distribution of the grant, and he was encouraged to move the Amendment by the fact that, in the only speech which the Vice President of the Council had delivered on the Bill, the right hon. Gentleman used these remarkable words:—

"I am quite certain that any Amendment which merely goes to secure that this State-aid grant shall be used merely for the purpose of promoting and improving the education of the country will be welcomed by the Government."

It was true that the right hon. Gentleman spoke, as he said, in the absence of the First Lord of the Treasury, but he could not doubt that, when he used those words, he not only spoke the mind of the Education Department, but really represented the collective wisdom of the Government. This grant might be applied in one of three ways. In the first place, it might be applied in promoting educational efficiency; in the second place, it might be applied in relieving voluntary subscribers; and in the third place, it might be wasted altogether. The last course was not at all an improbable one, and constituted a real danger, as was evidenced by what the Duke of Devonshire said when he received a deputation of Church dignitaries in November 1895. On that occasion the Lord President said:—

"another objection to the increase of the grant is that in some cases it does not appear to be needed, and would therefore involve a very considerable waste of public money."

That contention had been put forward on more than one occasion by those on his side of the House; and he was glad to have the high authority of the Lord President of the Council that that was a danger which ought to be specially guarded against. He wanted to see these provisions in the statute itself. It was a precaution which the Government felt in providing for the application of a lesser grant last year. No one had made more clear than the Duke of Devonshire and the Vice President the necessity of a provision of this character. The Duke of Devonshire said:—

"It seems to me there is a real danger unless any increase of a fixed grant should be guarded very carefully; it is rather difficult to see how any increase would be used for the purpose which you desire—the placing of Voluntary and Board Schools on an equal footing."

He was referring to the contention that the Church was unable to continue the expense of keeping the Voluntary Schools in an efficient state, because of the competition and the inequality which existed between Voluntary and Board Schools. A no less remarkable declaration was made by the Vice President in November last, when he said:—

"Unless effective precautions were taken a grant would do little to relieve the financial difficulties of managers; it would be swallowed up in relieving subscribers, and there would be nothing left for managers to spend on the schools."

It was in consequence of these declarations that he invited the Committee to put into the Bill what one of the Education Ministers called "careful safeguards," and what the other called "effective precautions," against any misapplication of the money to other purposes than the promotion of educational efficiency. During the last few weeks two very important bodies had been considering this subject, both strongly representing the interests and necessities of Voluntary Schools—the Northern Association of Voluntary Schools and the Northern House of Convocation. Both of these bodies pressed for the deletion of certain words in the sub-section; what were they? The words were, "Due regard being had to voluntary subscriptions." Why was this asked? Was it because they thought that, by retaining them, educational efficiency would be promoted? No; they could only surmise that the reason for the deletion of the words being asked was a fear that the money could not be applied to the relief of voluntary subscriptions. The Dean of Manchester said that he wanted the words "due regard" deleted—

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: I do not exactly see how the question of voluntary subscriptions arises on the Amendment of the hon. Member.

SIR J. WOODHOUSE said his point was this: If the money was not applied as he proposed—namely, to educational efficiency—it would be applied to the relief of voluntary subscriptions.

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: The question of "due regard" is one which can be debated at a later stage. It is obviously inconvenient to debate it now, because the Amendment raises a totally different question.

*SIR J. WOODHOUSE said a grave suspicion was raised in their minds that unless this money was protected in the Bill by express statutory provisions it would go to relieve voluntary subscriptions. Those safeguards, therefore, ought to be introduced in the Bill. What was the ground on which the Ecclesiastical authorities had asked for this grant? The Archbishop of Canterbury said that the necessity for it had arisen on two grounds, (1) because of the competition of the Board Schools; and (2) because of the insufficient staffing and teaching in the Voluntary Schools. He complained that the School Board spent too much on buildings, and that they spent too much on salaries—an argument which came very badly from a former head master of one of their public schools in receipt of a very large salary. He also read a letter from a teacher of a very important Voluntary School, who complained of the School Board competition, and said:—

> "We are better off than most Voluntary Schools, for although we get nothing from voluntary subscriptions, we receive 15s. per head in school fees. Voluntary Schools will never compare favourably with School Boards until they are similarly staffed. I have not one trained certificated assistant; my rivals have nothing else. When my ex-pupil teachers gain their certificates their ambition is to get into a Board School, and my pupil teachers do the same."

That was the case placed by Dr. Temple before the Government as the reason why they should have this additional aid, and he now asked the Government to embody in this Bill that which would insure that the money should be applied for the purposes and on the grounds upon which it was asked by that deputation which waited upon the Lord President and Lord Salisbury. Upon the question of the comparative efficiency of Board Schools and Voluntary Schools, the Royal Commission came to this conclusion:—

> "There is no doubt that, if the results of Government inspectors are a fair test of the efficiency of schools, the Board Schools are much more efficient than the Voluntary Schools."

The statistics showed that that was true in a remarkable degree. Take, for instance, the proportions of certificated teachers. In Board Schools every head master was not only a certificated teacher, but 53 per cent. of the teachers and assistant teachers were certificated, against only 21 per cent. in Voluntary Schools. Then there was the question of discipline and organisation. The highest grant was awarded by the Department as a measure of the efficiency of the school as a whole, and 88 per cent. of that was obtained in Board Schools, and only 75 per cent. in Voluntary Schools. Again, if they took accuracy of knowledge and general intelligence, which was the basis on which the principal grant was awarded, the two systems yielded this result: 67 per cent. in Board Schools, and 40 per cent. in Voluntary Schools. Then as to the training and education of pupil teachers. The test of relative efficiency was the proportion of student teachers who obtained first-class certificates, and in that the proportion for Board Schools was 20 per cent. and in Voluntary Schools it was only 9 per cent. He was anxious that this money should be applied to more adequately remunerating the teachers, to increasing their number, and to increasing their efficiency, by getting more certificated teachers, and in that way to the improvement of the standard of education throughout the country, which should be the great object of that House in awarding money for educational purposes. That this question of the salary of teachers was a very important one was made clear by the memorial of the Voluntary teachers themselves. They said:—

> "The average salary of head teachers in Voluntary Schools is very much less than that of head teachers in Board Schools. In the case of masters it is 34 per cent., and in that of mistresses 58 per cent., while the salaries of certificated assistant teachers in the two classes of schools show even a greater disparity, the masters receiving 46 per cent. less and the mistresses 62 per cent. less than assistant teachers in Board Schools, whose duties and responsibilities are of precisely the same character."

With that remarkable statement before them could the Committee doubt the wisdom and the necessity of laying down in that Bill the direction that the money was applied to equalise that great disparity? The Royal Commission said:—

> "The most important subject of our inquiry, that which lies at the root of all educational progress, is the quality of the teaching and the character of the teacher. We owe a duty to him and to the children to secure that their work shall be done with no external hindrances, with the best appliances, and with well adapted premises. But after all the most important factor in the success of the school is the teacher."

He wanted this money applied to the removal of those hindrances, to obtaining the best appliances, and to securing those well adapted premises which the Royal Commission said were so essential for the success of their educational progress in this country. In putting forward this argument he was but stating in much more imperfect language what was stated by the Vice President himself in the only speech with which he had honoured them during the consideration of this Bill. He was quite sure if the Government accepted this Amendment it would be appreciated in the country irrespective of Party, because it would convince the country that the Government were serious in their desire that this money should be applied in a proper manner.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said the hon. Member had referred to a statement made by his right hon. Friend the Vice President that the Government would be willing to accept any Amendment which would have for its result the improvement of education in the Voluntary Schools. He entirely agreed with that. He also agreed that there was no difference as to the object they had in this particular matter. The only question between them was whether the Bill would be improved by the words proposed by the hon. Member. He presumed the hon. Member considered it an alternative proposal.

SIR J. WOODHOUSE said the words he proposed were the same as in the Bill of last year.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY did not deny that the hon. Member's account of what efficiency consisted of was a very fair account, but he failed to see that the words in the Bill would not carry out all that the hon. Member desired to achieve. He did not think that it was necessary to enumerate what efficiency consisted of. The hon. Member in his Amendment did enumerate the elements of efficiency as they occurred to his mind, but he still had a fear, and he swept up the unknown by introducing the words, "and in otherwise increasing efficiency." The last words of his Amendment, therefore, included everything that he set out at length in the first lines of the Amendment. The Government believed that they attained the same end by the phrase in the Bill.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) said they were dealing simply with the best way in which the money could be applied. As regarded the obligation, there was no difference of opinion between them—it was simply a question as to the best way in which the idea could be expressed. His hon. Friend thought that specific words should be put in with a specific purpose. They were this year dealing with a larger sum than last year, and there was practically no control at all, and they now found the Government unwilling to accept words which they themselves proposed last year. What they wanted was to be clear on two points. They wanted to be quite certain that none of this money goes into the pockets of subscribers; and, secondly, they wanted to be assured that the money should really go to increasing the efficiency of Voluntary Schools. They knew quite well, as had already been pointed out over and over again, that the Bill as it stood gave such vague directions that there would be the greatest difficulty in seeing that this money was properly applied. They wanted the Department to take the question of subscriptions into account. They had a great suspicion, they had great doubts, they had fears, that in dealing with these schools the increased grant would, directly or indirectly, lead to the diminution of subscriptions. They were therefore especially interested at that moment, not in putting into the Bill vague and unmeaning words, which gave them no guarantee that this £620,000 would go to promote efficiency; they wanted to make sure that the money would be applied to the improvement in the teaching of these schools. Everyone who knew anything about elementary education, everyone who was in any way concerned with the voluntary system, knew quite well the weak spot and where the strain was greatest. That weak spot was with regard to the teaching. They knew that the teachers were underpaid and overworked. ["Hear, hear!"] The strain was not so much upon the managers, but upon the teachers. It was to that point that relief ought to go. If they wanted to assure that the money should go to the promoting of efficiency—and efficiency was really in question—why should they not state it specifically? He felt bound to say that he could not follow the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the House in his argument that the words of the Bill were clearer than the Bill of last year. They wanted the teaching class improved, and they wanted the condition of the teachers improved. They were not opposing the amount of money to be given, or whether it was applied to certain schools or all round; they wanted the weak spot dealt with and the teaching improved. They knew very well that the strain was on the teachers, and the strain was greater than it was in Board Schools.

*MR. WALTER HAZELL (Leicester) observed that the Amendment would make more clear the object which the Government said they had in their mind. If any form of words could be adopted which would make it more sure that this grant would go towards the provision of more efficient education and further appliances, a higher paid and a larger staff, then, he thought, much good would be done. There was one point he should like to refer to. Most hon. Members were aware of the scope of the Fair Wages Resolution of the House. Were they not at the present time sanctioning an anomaly? Here is a body of men who were carrying on their work under the control of a Government Department, and with money which, in the case of Voluntary Schools, was mainly provided by Parliament, and in the case of Board Schools largely by Parliament, and merely by the accident of their being in Voluntary Schools instead of Board Schools, their salaries were much lower. It was most undesirable that public servants should be coming before Parliament with claims for higher salaries oftener than could be avoided. He would ask the House whether, in face of the Fair Wages Resolution, it was not stultifying itself by permitting a system to continue a day longer than was necessary, by which two groups of public servants, with the same qualifications, performing the same duties, and both equally efficient, should be paid on an arbitrarily different scale of emolument. Believing that this Amendment would help to raise the salaries in Voluntary Schools, he cordially supported it.

MR. REGINALD McKENNA (Monmouth, N.) hoped the right hon. Gentleman would reconsider his determination not to accept the Amendment, which really served a most admirable purpose. It indicated to the associations what was the meaning of this extra grant. It was not to be used in defraying the ordinary expenditure of the school, but in meeting the increased expenditure which had been incurred by improving the teaching staff. That was to say, the money was not to be spent merely upon maintaining the existing staff, apparatus, and requirements of the school, but exclusively for the purpose of improving the efficiency of the school. There was a further reason for the acceptance of the Amendment. If hon. Members would turn to Sub-section (4) of the clause they would find that the associations were to prepare schemes which were to be sanctioned by the Department before the money allotted to them would be distributed by the Education Department. The Committee of Council on Education had, through the Vice President, expressed their opinion as to what the schemes should be. The right hon. Gentleman stated on the Second Reading of the Bill, that

> "The scheme will not only have to indicate the amount of public money to be allotted to each of the constituent schools, but it will also have to prescribe the purposes for which the money so allotted shall be used by the schools."

That was to say, the scheme put forward by the association would have to embody such terms as those presented in the Amendment. Was it not the most reasonable thing in the world that the Committee should suggest, by introducing this Amendment, the terms of the scheme and the idea of Parliament as to what the basis of the action of the association should be? It ought to be made clear that it was for the very objects embodied in the Bill of the right hon. Gentleman of last year that this money was specially demanded, and for those objects alone. For these reasons he supported the Amendment.

Mr. ALFRED HUTTON (York, W.R., Morley) remarked that up to the present it had been illegal for the managers of schools to devote public moneys of this character to the payment of debts which had been incurred in the erection of permanent buildings, or in connection with the carrying on of the schools. According to the present Bill, however, it would be perfectly legitimate for an association to use money for the purpose of repairing or adding to existing buildings. This was an exceedingly important matter, and it seemed to him that the money granted by this Bill might be used in the same way as that in which, in some cases, the 10s. fee grant had been used, because the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Dartford (Sir William Hart Dyke), who had been responsible for the Education Department in that House, had admitted that the money received under the Fee Grant Act 1891, had been used for the particular purpose of paying off debts previously incurred. Diocesan associations existed at the present time, and he had no doubt the Diocesan Board would look for the money to be obtained from this Bill to enable them to pay debts they had already incurred in the maintenance and repair of existing buildings for which they had made themselves responsible. The Government ought to take some precautions to prevent such an allocation of public money. ["Hear, hear!"] He thought the Leader of the House had too much confidence in the ability of the associations to put the money to the right uses, but if this Amendment were accepted it would give an assurance not merely to the Committee but to the country at large that the money would be used for the purpose for which Parliament intended it. The noble Lord the Member for Rochester (Viscount Cranborne) had said that the chief strain at the present time was upon the teaching—the difficulty being to provide adequate salaries in order to attach efficient teachers to the Voluntary Schools. If that was the case, what objection could there be on the part of the noble Lord or of the Government to give, at any rate, some directions to the associations that they might allocate the money to such an object. He was convinced that if the Government would accept this or some similar Amendment, which would not absolutely limit the allocation of the money to the narrowest possible channel, but would give the association some indication of the purpose the House of Commons had in granting this money, they would be giving considerable satisfaction to the House and to the country. [Opposition cheers.] It was a serious matter that this huge sum of public money should be left so largely in the discretion of irresponsible bodies. There might have been some excuse for leaving the matter open if these bodies had been of a responsible character, but being of an irresponsible character there was a fear that they might not use the money as it ought to be used. The Government would render the cause of Education and even Voluntary Schools a great service if they would give some indication of how this money was to be spent for the benefit of education and of the schools they desired should be supported by this Bill. [Opposition cheers.]

*Mr. CHARLES HARRISON (Plymouth) pointed out that the words of the Amendment were identical with those used in the Bill of the Government of last year. Inefficiency arose undoubtedly and admittedly from an inefficient teaching staff. The Bill of 1896 specified that the first item of application of the money for curing the inefficiency should be by its application to improving the teaching staff as regards the qualification or salary. Those objects had priority over all others, and the Bill of 1896 provided, so far as the fund might not be required for that particular purpose, then it should be applied in the order set out in the present Amendment for remedying the deficiencies in the school by applying the balance generally in payment of the teaching staff, the provision of special teachers, whether on the permanent staff or not—an object which would not fall within the provisions of the clause as now drafted—the improved education of pupil teachers, and the improvement of the educational fittings and apparatus of the school, and it was only by the 5th Sub-section in the Bill of 1896 provided that the surplus which remained, if any, should alone be applied by the Education authority at their discretion. Until these objects had been fulfilled, no general discretion arose as to the application of the money. Its application embraced objects beyond the words mentioned in the present Bill, and as the grant in aid allotted to a particular school under the scheme of the Bill might not be in fact sufficient, it was essential that the order of application should be laid down by the statute. This was effected by adopting the terms of the Amendment, the language of which and the objects of which were more extensive and were not the same as those intrusted to the Department under the words in the present Bill. If this Amendment were accepted, the money could not be applied to any other purpose whatsoever. But under the words of the present Bill, which were "increasing their efficiency," no order of priority was given by which the money might be applied for any one or other of the numerous causes which made the particular inefficiency, and the object of the Amendment was to say that, having regard to the inefficiency, they should cure that inefficiency, first by applying the grant to the improvement of the teaching staff, and then to the other objects mentioned in the Amendment. For these reasons he strongly supported the Amendment.

MR. A. J. MUNDELLA (Sheffield, Brightside) said this was one of the most important Amendments which had been submitted to the Committee, and it was one which he should have thought would have been welcomed on the opposite side of the House. Throughout the country the supporters of the Bill had proclaimed that their sole object was to improve the efficiency of the Voluntary Schools, and everyone of them when he addressed his constituents would say that that was the object of the Bill.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: To relieve the intolerable strain.

MR. MUNDELLA: Had the right hon. Gentleman no ulterior object in mind when he spoke of the intolerable strain? About this time last year they had under discussion a Bill introduced by the Vice President of the Council, and which he declared had for its object the efficiency of all the schools. He specially pointed out that the grant of 4s. per head was earmarked for the purpose. How was it earmarked? In the very words of the Amendment. [Cheers.] The First Lord of the Treasury knew how important it was to specify in the Bill in what respect it was intended to improve the efficiency of the schools, and that the first condition of efficiency was that there should be efficient teachers. When the Government set out in a clear, lucid, and specific manner in the Bill of last year the requirements of the schools, why did they content themselves with the mere expression of a pious opinion this year? Why did the Government object to the words of the Amendment?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: Because they were surplusage.

MR. MUNDELLA: Were they surplusage last year? No one but the right hon. Gentleman would say so, and if he could spend a week in the Education Department he would not say they were surplusage. Efficiency was the crux of the whole question, and it depended on the efficiency and sufficiency of the teaching staff in elementary schools. On the Second Reading of the Bill of last year they were promised by the Vice President of the Council that "any Amendment which really goes to secure that this State aid grant shall be used for the purpose of promoting and improving the education of the country will be welcomed by the Government." They now welcomed such Amendments by a conspiracy of silence. [Cheers and counter cheers.] We had arrived at a period of the 19th century when, if anything was required in the British House of Commons, it was that it should spare no effort and no money to raise the character of the education of the country. Nothing was so vital to the public interest of this country or its future productiveness and prosperity as improved schools, and the very key to improvement was an improved teaching staff. The right hon. Gentleman had ridiculed the words of the Amendment as surplusage. That was treating the matter with levity. [Cheers.] It seemed that the House of Commons no longer existed for debate and deliberation, but merely to register the fiat of a Minister. They were not permitted to make any improvements in this Bill; so far from Amendments being welcomed they were rejected with almost silent contempt. ["Hear, hear!" and cries of "No."] It would be the duty of those who sat on that side of the House, and it would be his duty as one who supported Mr. Forster in carrying the Act of 1870 through the House, to let the world know, and to let his countrymen know—[ironical cheers]—that the compromise had been broken, and that that valuable Measure had been injured and all but destroyed by the action of the Government. They would also expose to the country what they were not allowed to discuss in that House.

[At the conclusion of the right hon. Gentleman's speech, there were Opposition cries of "Gorst."]

*MR. HOBHOUSE thought his right hon. Friend had been a little hard upon them on that side of the House. There was surely no question of breaking the compromise of the Act of 1870. Many of them had exactly the same object in view on that subject as the right hon. Gentleman had. He desired that this money should go to increase the efficiency of the schools. It was really a question of words—whether the words should be more general or more specific. If the exact words proposed by the hon. Member were here inserted, it would make this sub-section a very bad specimen of drafting. [Mr. MUNDELLA: "Government drafting."] He quite admitted there would be some advantage in specifying the particular objects, and if that could be done by the addition of a few words in a later sub-section he should have no objection to it, although he did not think that in the interests of education it was at all necessary. It was perfectly well known both to officers of the Education Department and to managers of Voluntary Schools and their representatives on the Boards of Association in what the efficiency of a school consisted. It consisted, in the first place, in the efficiency of the teachers, and they could not get good teachers without paying them a fair salary. The Inspectors of the Department would no doubt have the power when they went round to audit the accounts of seeing that the money had been actually applied to the proper purposes. The Government had not altered their opinion as to the objects to which this money was to be applied, but they could hardly be blamed, after their recent experience, for having chosen that form of words which would provoke the least discussion.

*MR. CARVELL WILLIAMS (Notts, Mansfield) said the Amendment was opposed on miserably inadequate grounds. He believed these words would strengthen the Education Department, which was constantly engaged in struggles with local authorities, in order to secure efficiency in the schools. Perhaps the hon. Member who had just sat down did not know the difficulties which the Inspectors sometimes had in presenting honest and honourable reports. The requirements of the Education Department in regard to buildings, fittings, and appliances were the constant subject of complaint by the managers of the schools. When this Bill was passed the Department would be entitled to be even more exacting in the future than it had been in the past. By the insertion of the words in the Amendment they could so strengthen the Education Department that it would have clear statutory authority for the requirements it would make, which would render the future course of the Department more easy. The hon. Member for Huddersfield had made out an unanswerable case in support of the contention that the Voluntary Schools as a general rule were inferior to the Board Schools. The candid friends of the Voluntary Schools admitted that. They say, "Let us put funds at the command of the managers, and they will show that their schools can be made as good as the Board Schools." The Amendment would take those gentlemen at their word, and it would give to the Education Department the right to require from the managers of the Voluntary Schools evidence that their teaching was efficient. He was sure no friend of education would regret the insertion of the Amendment.

He was also sure that many real friends of education would deeply regret that the Government had refused to accept it.

MR. YOXALL said the objection of the First Lord of the Treasury to the Amendment was that it was lengthy, verbose, and expressed its object in a roundabout way. The hon. Member for Somerset had said that if short form of words were proposed he must support it. He, therefore, asked the First Lord whether, as both sides were anxious that the money should be spent for the improvement of the teaching staffs, he would agree to insert after "increasing their efficiency," the words "particularly by improving the number, qualification, and remuneration of the teaching staffs." That form of words was short and unmistakeable, and met all the objections of the First Lord. Without the insertion of some such words they would have no security that the money would be spent to increase the efficiency of the Voluntary Schools. What was the condition at the present moment of the teaching staffs of the Voluntary Schools? In thousands of those schools throughout the country there was only one adult teacher and he had usually to teach twelve different subjects in six or seven different classes. He had often asked the teachers of such schools what they would do if they had an additional revenue of £40 a year, and the answer invariably was that they would get an additional teacher. There were some 12,000 teachers in the Voluntary Schools who had no academic qualification; no certificate of professional efficiency, except that they were 18 years of age, and the inspectors allowed them to teach. There were probably 20,000 teachers in the Voluntary Schools who were little more than children. In fact, the Voluntary Schools were largely worked by child labour—youths of 15 or 16 years of age, who taught all day and studied all night. There were 25,600 certificated teachers in the Voluntary Schools. Of those only 698 had salaries of £200 a year; 11,759 got less than £75; 2,006 got less than £50; 1,096 got less than £45; and 367 got less than £40. The houses of many of those teachers had only four rooms—

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: Order, order! I do not think that that comes within the scope of this Amendment.

MR. YOXALL said he would not press that point further. He would only urge in conclusion that if they wanted to make the teaching in the Voluntary Schools more efficient they would have to improve the condition of the teachers.

*MR. H. C. F. LUTTRELL (Devon, Tavistock) said that if the real object of the Bill was to improve education by the efficiency of the schools, rather than to bring the Voluntary Schools into competition with the Board Schools, he could not see why the Government should hesitate to accept the Amendment, which was proposed for the only purpose of improving the teaching staff and raising the character of the school. ["Hear, hear!"] The only objection they had heard from the other side against the Amendment came from the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the House, who contended that it was a surplusage. Hon. Members who supported it, however, were of a contrary opinion. The Bill had many faults, but no one could accuse it of being too lengthy—then why this undue care about printers' ink? By contending that the Amendment was a surplus Amendment the Government practically admitted that their Bill was a surplice Bill, and if that were so its effect would be only to assist parsons, Bishops, members of the Church of England. [Loud Ministerial cries of dissent.] Well, he would not say members of the Church of England alone, but of religious denominations, and he urged that education should not be made in any way a matter of religious denomination. Unless the Amendment, or some other Amendment to the same effect, was passed, the operation of the Bill would be to assist the religious denominations through giving to the projected associations, which would be largely influenced by denominational opinions, the opportunity of framing what arrangements they pleased. If they wished to have the children of the country well taught, they must have good teachers. On the grounds he had stated he strongly supported the Amendment. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. BARTLEY thought the Committee had been engaged for two hours in discussing a matter which involved merely a difference between "tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum." [Cries of "Oh, oh!" and laughter.] The words in the Bill were such as the Education Department thought best for the purpose of helping the necessitous schools, and at the same time of increasing their efficiency. The matter came within charge of the Department, and it must be acknowledged that hitherto they had acted impartially—["hear, hear!"]—and knew, at least as much as hon. Members opposite, what were the best means of promoting the efficiency of the schools. ["Hear, hear!"] He thought it would be much better if the Committee passed on to the consideration of some more substantial Amendment, and left a matter of comparative detail of this kind to the Education Department. ["Hear, hear!"]

SIR H. FOWLER said there was a great difference between the statements of the Government last year and this year as to what they regarded as essential for the improvement and efficiency of education in the schools. Last year, in justifying the grant of 4s. per head, they promised over and over again that the money was to be applied exclusively for the improvement of education. ["Hear, hear!"] That was said in the House; but what was said out of doors? In shoals of letters to certain papers grave dissatisfaction was expressed with the Government because no relief was offered to the schools. What those people wanted was not an increase of educational efficiency, but an increase of relief to the schools. [Cheers.] The Government had brought in a short Bill, as they said, and it was urged that the matter was only a question of drafting. It was not a question of drafting; it was a question of meaning. [Cheers.] The keynote of last year's Bill had been left out, and general words had been inserted in this Bill which might mean anything or nothing. Nobody had justified this alteration of the action of the Government. The hon. Member for Nottingham had suggested a much shorter form of words, which conveyed, though not so fully, the meaning of the provision of the Bill of last year, but the Government would have none of that. Let the Committee distinctly understand what they were going to vote upon. The Opposition were voting for this money to be spent in the improvement of the teaching staff, and in improving the efficiency of the schools. [Cheers.] Those who supported the Government would be voting against those objects. [Cheers.]

Mr. Bartley.

THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL (Sir JOHN GORST, Cambridge University), who was received with Ministerial cheers and loud ironical cheers from the Opposition Benches, said that he had risen to put the right hon. Gentleman right on a matter of fact—[laughter]—and to save him from making an unintentional misrepresentation. In the Bill of last year, it was quite true, the purposes for which the special aid grant was to be spent were specifically set out. But last year the distribution of the specific aid grant was intrusted, not to the Education Department, but to a new education authority which was created by the Bill, and which had no previous educational experience. [Opposition cheers and laughter.] Such an authority would have stood much in need of Parliamentary guidance. [Opposition cheers and laughter.] But in the Bill of this year the distribution of the special aid grant was intrusted, not to a new education authority, but to a very old and experienced education authority—the Committee of Council. [Opposition cheers and laughter.] Therefore this year the Bill very rightly laid down in general terms that the grant was to be distributed by the Education Department in such a manner as the Department thought best for increasing the efficiency of the schools. [Cheers and cries of "No!"] He supposed that there was no authority in the country which was better fitted to judge of the due order in which the various methods of expenditure should be placed—to say in one particular case that the payment of the teachers should come first and that in another case the provision of apparatus should come first. He thought that the Committee and the Government might properly, in a matter of that kind, having given a direction that the money was to be spent in increasing the efficiency of the schools, leave the particular manner in which it was to be spent to the discretion of the Education Department. [Cheers.]

*MR. ROBERT CAMERON (Durham, Houghton-le-Spring) said that he was glad to find that on this Amendment, which was by far the most important on the Paper, both sides were in practical agreement on principles, though differing in details. The phrase "for increasing the efficiency of the schools" was a very general and vague phrase, which might cover much or little. He wished to see it converted into definite propositions. Only last week the Secretary of the Voluntary School Teachers' Association in his neighbourhood waited on him to urge that the main part of this money should be earmarked for the teachers' salaries and the providing of school apparatus. They feared that the money would be devoted to other purposes. He had had nine years' experience as Chairman of one of the largest School Boards in the country; and he had noted that when that Board advertised for teachers they received scores of applications from the masters of Voluntary Schools. He often asked them privately why they wished to make the change, and their answer was that under a School Board they were freer, had better pay, and better security for the future. The Bill should contain specific provisions for securing efficiency, and efficiency meant, as well as good management, well-trained and well-paid teachers, with an assured and independent position. Without those conditions the profession of the schoolmaster would never rank as it was worthy to rank. The country had spent millions on education, and had a right to see that value was given to it for this additional grant.

MR. ACLAND said the Vice President of the Council, whose intervention in the discussion in Committee for the first time they welcomed—[HON. MEMBERS: "No, the second time"]—he had previously only made a remark and not a speech—stated that the reason why the words of last year defining the object for which this grant should be given were not now needed was that the bodies who were to do the work under the Bill required less guidance than the authorities contemplated by the Measure of last year. Let him read one or two words of the Bill which came a little after those the right hon. Gentleman read, because they bore on the local authorities of this year:—

> "The share so allotted to each association shall be distributed as aforesaid by the Education Department after consulting the governing body of the association."

What were the instructions which the governing body of the association were to follow? What were they to do when they considered the recommendations which they were about to make to the Education Department as to the distribution of the grant? What was the guidance which the Bill gave them as to the particular direction in which this grant was to be given? They were to distribute the grant "as aforesaid." Why should not the words "as aforesaid" guide this new body, which required as much guidance as the authority under the Bill of last year—["hear, hear!"]—perhaps more—[cheers]—which would be as new to this kind of work as the County Councils; why should they not find, when they looked upwards in the Bill from the words "as aforesaid," the detailed words of last year's Bill, telling them what their duties really were? It seemed to him that if the Vice President's words carried force they had a much stronger application to the Amendment as it was laid before the Committee now than they could have had last year. ["Hear, hear!"]

MR. HAROLD RECKITT (Lincolnshire, Brigg) asked the Committee for that indulgence which was always extended to a Member when addressing it for the first time. He wished to intervene in the Debate, because the constituency he had the honour to represent was almost entirely served by Voluntary Schools. His experience was, that the people in agricultural districts suffered very materially from the fact that the salaries of the teachers in the Voluntary Schools were insufficient. From that cause alone Voluntary Schools in the agricultural districts were very often unable to gain that amount of Imperial aid, in the shape of grants, which they would otherwise obtain. ["Hear, hear!"] He was one of those who supported this Amendment, in order that the efficiency of teaching in our agricultural districts should be increased. In more than one Voluntary School with which he was personally connected the teachers suffered from the fact that they had to teach four and five standards in the same day in various classes and under various circumstances. They were put into competition with the town schools, where the staff was sufficient to give one teacher for each standard. The grants which were earned by each set of schools during the year were calculated upon the same basis of examination; and it was not surprising that, under those circumstances, it was much less in the agricultural districts than in the towns. Care should be taken that this additional aid grant should be devoted to increasing the salaries of the teachers, increasing the general efficiency, and improving the apparatus of country schools, and not used for making up a diminution of subscriptions. The First Lord of the Treasury had stated that it was the purpose of the Bill that more money should go to the towns than to the country. From his own experience, he should say that the standard of education in the country at the present time required more raising than it did in the towns. ["Hear, hear!"] Personally he thought that 5s. per head per child in the agricultural districts was absolutely insufficient to raise the standard of education to anything like that which it had attained in the towns at the present time. ["Hear, hear!"]

Mr. CHARLES MORLEY (Breconshire) said that, under the clause as it stood at present, money might be applied to the Voluntary Schools for two purposes; it might be applied for helping necessitous schools, and it might also be applied for increasing their efficiency. He wanted to know whether, under the clause, the money might be voted or used or applied for extending or increasing the existing buildings of a school, or for liquidating existing debts.

Mr. J. A. PEASE (Northumberland, Tyneside) asked the Vice President of the Council why, if he recommended the general terms of the Bill, he promised to the House only 10 days ago that any Amendment which really tended to the promotion and improvement of education would be welcomed by the Government? He, at any rate, considered that the use of those words committed the Government to accepting any Amendment which promoted efficiency. Those who were in favour of putting into practical effect the efficiency of education in our schools would vote for the Amendment, and those who were in favour of the relief of voluntary subscribers would vote with the Government.

Question put, "That the words 'and in such manner' stand part of the clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 259; Noes, 119.—(Division List—No. 71.)

Mr. Harold Reckitt.

The announcement of the figures was received with opposition cheers.

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS: The next Amendment not out of order stands in the name of the hon. Member for Mid Glamorgan (Mr. Samuel Evans). I confess that I do not quite understand what the Amendment means. [Laughter.] If it means that the Education Department is to have no discretion as to the mode in allotting the amounts, but is to allot the 5s. grant all round, it is out of order. [Laughter.] But if it has any other meaning, then it may be in order, and perhaps the hon. Gentleman will explain it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS (Glamorgan, Mid) moved in Sub-section (2) to leave out the words "and amounts." He said that he was proposing to leave out those words for the purpose of having some explanation from the right hon. Gentleman the Vice President of the Council as to what the words meant. [Laughter.] The meaning of the words as they stood appeared to be that the Department would have the ultimate decision as to what amounts were to be given to any individual school. In Sub-section (4) it was said that the grant should be distributed by the Department after consulting with the governing body or the association. If the association was to decide the proportion to be given to individual schools, he did not quite see the meaning of the words in the present sub-section, as he did not understand how the Department was to exercise a discretion in the matter if it had to obey the dictates of the association. On the other hand, if the Department were to have a discretion, he failed to see what the functions of the association were to be. If, however, the Committee had had from the Government any definition of what a necessitous school was he would probably not have moved the Amendment. It must be obvious to the Committee that it was necessary to have some kind of definition or explanation of that term.

*The CHAIRMAN of WAYS and MEANS said he failed to see the relevancy of the hon. Member's remarks.

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS contended that the words "and amounts" must be governed by the words "for the purpose," and the purpose expressed in the clause was that of helping necessitous schools. He would ask the Vice President or the First Lord of the Treasury to explain how it came to be necessary that the Department should have any discretion at all in fixing the amount to be given to necessitous schools.

MR. JOHN DILLON (Mayo, E.) called attention to what he considered a serious contradiction in the Bill. In this sub-section the Department was given, what seemed to him, a very proper discretion to distribute the grant in proportion to the necessities of the schools, and there was no limitation placed on that discretion. But in a later portion of the clause a very serious limitation was placed on the discretion of the Department, a limitation which prevented them from discriminating between association and association. He would like to know whether the Department would have an absolute discretion between school and school all over the country, or whether they would be compelled to give without any discretion, 5s. per head to all associations without reference to the question whether the schools in one association were more necessitous than the schools in another.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY said he understood the question of the hon. Member who had just sat down, but he did not understand the Amendment. There would be no discretion in the Department as between association and association; that was to say, they would have to give 5s. per scholar to every association in respect of all the schools in the association. The hon. Member for Mid Glamorgan would, he thought, see that nothing was to be gained by omitting the words.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON thought that the reply of the right hon. Gentleman was not very clear. It was obvious that gross inequality would be created between district and district as well as between denomination and denomination.

MR. SAMUEL EVANS again pressed for an explanation as to the meaning of the words, and contended that there would not be much danger if they were omitted from the clause.

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: The meaning is that the Education Department is to settle the amount to be given to the schools.

MR. PAULTON asked whether the words "and amounts" related to the amount to be paid to the schools or the associations?

THE FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY: The schools.

MR. REES DAVIES (Pembrokeshire) pressed for further explanation as to the meaning of the words.

Question put, "That the words 'and amounts' stand part of the Clause."

The Committee divided:—Ayes, 260; Noes, 100.—(Division List, No. 72.)

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE rose to move an Amendment, notice of which did not appear on the Paper—[Ministerial cries of "Oh, oh!"]—namely, in Sub-section (2) to omit the words "as the Department think best," in order to insert instead thereof the words "as provided by scheme to be formulated by the Department, and laid before Parliament." The words in the Bill to which he objected were perfectly inconsistent with the 3rd and 4th sub-sections. The 2nd sub-section provided that the grant

> "shall be distributed by the Education Department to such Voluntary Schools, and in such manner and amounts as the Department think best."

This gave absolute discretion to the Department as to the manner and amount in distribution, but the next sub-section limited the authority just given, and declared that as between association and association there should be absolutely no discretion at all. As a matter of order he submitted that either the 3rd sub-section was out of order, or these words were out of order. He did not, however, press that, but contended, as matter of argument, the words were inconsistent because so far from the Department having absolute power to distribute as it might think best, the 3rd sub-section provided that each association was to receive the full amount granted, on the basis of 5s. for every child attending the schools, thus taking away all the discretion of the Department as between one association and another. Then the 4th sub-section modified and limited the authority of the Department as between one school and another, for the scheme which would determine the amount each school was to receive was to be prepared not by the Department but by the association. If the phraseology of the 2nd sub-section meant anything it conferred an absolutely despotic authority on the Department in the distribution of the money. It was followed by the 3rd sub-section limiting that authority as between associations, and then the 4th sub-section further cut down the discretion of the Department as between schools. This was to make absolute nonsense of an Act of Parliament. The words he proposed to substitute for the unlimited power to be conferred on the Education Department, provided that the Department should formulate a scheme for the purpose of making the distribution, submit the regulations to the House of Commons, and lay them upon the Table of the House so that the House should have an opportunity of discussing them, if necessary modifying them, and, if not satisfied with them as a whole, of rejecting them. He said that this was the first time such powers had ever been attempted to be conferred on any Government Department. Under the Act of 1870 grants of public money were made to schools for educational purposes, and, although the schools had only to receive the grant on conditions which would have regard to the merit and efficiency of the schools alone, still the House of Commons was so jealous of any power being conferred upon a Government Department with regard to the expenditure of public money, that it insisted on the regulations governing the expenditure of that money being laid on the Table of the House for one month before they came into operation. He said that this precedent ought to be followed in the present case. By Section 97 of the Act of 1870, the conditions required to be fulfilled by an elementary school in order to obtain the annual Parliamentary grant were to be those contained in the Minute of the Education Department in force for the time being. First of all the Section went to the extent of laying down principles with regard to what should be contained in the Minute, and then it provided that no Minute should be deemed to be in force until it had lain for not less than a month on the Table of both Houses of Parliament. He asked the Government why they had departed from that precedent in this particular case? If ever there was a case when such a precedent should have been rigidly adhered to, it was the present. He said this was a dangerous power to confer upon any Government Department, and it was the first time in the history of Parliament that that course had been adopted. There was another point with regard to the Act of 1870. Section 97 dealt with necessitous schools, and there was a provision that money should be given to necessitous Board Schools. [Cries of "Oh!"] He knew hon. Members opposite did not care to hear much about necessitous Board Schools, and he was not at all surprised to hear them grunting. [Ministerial cries of "Withdraw!"]

*THE CHAIRMAN OF WAYS AND MEANS: That is not a Parliamentary expression, and I must call upon the hon. Gentleman to withdraw it.

MR. LLOYD-GEORGE asked to be allowed to withdraw the expression.

It being midnight, the Chairman left the Chair to make his report to the House.

Committee report Progress; to sit again upon Monday next.

MILITARY WORKS (MONEY) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

PUBLIC HEALTH (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [5th February] further adjourned till Monday next.

LAW OF EVIDENCE (CRIMINAL CASES) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

TRUSTS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (ALDERSHOT AND FARNBOROUGH) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

BERRIEW SCHOOL BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

MILITARY LANDS ACT (1892) AMENDMENT BILL.

Committee deferred till Monday next.

METROPOLITAN AND OTHER POLICE COURTS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday next.

SUPPLY.

Committee deferred till To-morrow.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Committee deferred till To-morrow.

REGISTRATION OF PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday, 16th March.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS (PERSONS IN CHARGE) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Motion for Committal to Standing Committee on Trade, etc. [17th February] further adjourned till Monday, 15th March.

PLUMBERS' REGISTRATION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday, 19th March.

RATING OF MACHINERY BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday, 21st April.

SUCCESSION (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Thursday next.

MARRIAGE WITH A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday, 7th May.

RIVERS POLLUTION PREVENTION BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

POOR LAW OFFICERS' SUPERANNUATION ACT (1896) AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

LICENCES (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Tuesday next.

CEMETERIES RATING BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

ALIENS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday, 17th March.

SHOPS (EARLY CLOSING) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

SHOPS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

WORKING MEN'S DWELLINGS BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday, 17th March.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (COUNTY COUNCIL CLERKS) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday next.

PRISON MADE GOODS (IMPORTATION) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday, 31st March.

ARCHDEACONRY OF LONDON (ADDITIONAL ENDOWMENTS) BILL.

Adjourned Debate on Second Reading [24th February] further adjourned till To-morrow.

LABOURERS' COTTAGES (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday, 29th March.

SOLICITORS (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday, 17th March.

APPOINTMENT OF HIGH SHERIFFS (IRELAND) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Wednesday, 17th March.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT (1894) AMENDMENT BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Monday next.

ESTATES TAIL BILL.

Second Reading deferred till Friday, 12th March.

JURIES DETENTION BILL.

Mr. LLOYD MORGAN (Carmarthen, W.), in moving the Second Reading of this Bill, explained that its object was to prevent juries from being locked up all night in cases of felony.

Bill read a Second time, and committed for Monday next.

LICENSING EXEMPTION (HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT) BILL.

Second Reading deferred till To-morrow.

MOTIONS.

MERCHANT SHIPPING (UNDERMANNING).

The PRESIDENT of the BOARD of TRADE (Mr. C. T. Ritchie, Croydon) asked for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Merchant Shipping Act 1894, with respect to the power of detention for undermanning.

Mr. T. LOUGH (Islington, N.) said the House ought to be given some explanation of the objects of those Bills.

Mr. RITCHIE: I do not think it is usual in cases of this kind to give an explanation. ["Hear, hear!"] Of course, on the Second Reading the Bills will be fully explained.

Leave given; Bill presented accordingly, amid cheers, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Wednesday next, and to be printed.—[Bill 149.]

FOREIGN PRISON MADE GOODS.

Bill to prohibit the importation of Foreign Prison Made Goods, ordered to be brought in by Mr. Ritchie and Mr. Secretary Chamberlain; presented, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Thursday next and to be printed.—[Bill 150.]

SOLICITORS (MAGISTRACY).

Bill to enable Solicitors of the High Court to act as County Justices, ordered to be brought in by Sir Albert Rollit, Sir Henry Fowler, Sir Robert Reid, Mr. Fry, Mr. McArthur, Mr. Warr, and Mr. Skewes-Cox; presented, and Read the First time; to be Read a Second time upon Wednesday next, and to be printed. —[Bill 151.]

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS (FAIR WAGES RESOLUTION).

Ordered, that Mr. Jackson and Mr. Parker Smith be discharged from the Select Committee on Government Contracts (Fair Wages Resolution).

Ordered, that Mr. Aird and Sir William Arrol be added to the Committee.—(Sir William Walrond.)

MERCHANDISE MARKS ACTS.

Return ordered,

"setting forth all prosecutions which have been instituted by the Board of Trade under the Merchandise Marks Act since January 1888 to the end of 1896, showing the name of the prosecutor; name and calling of the defendant; the place of hearing; the nature of the goods and alleged bad marking; the section of the Acts under which action was taken; the decision of the Court; the fine (if any) inflicted, and, if carried to appeal, the result of the appeal."—(Sir Albert Rollit.)

House adjourned at a Quarter after Twelve o'clock.

[INDEX.

INDEX

TO

THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

(AUTHORISED EDITION).

VOLUME XLVI. FOURTH SERIES.

SECOND VOLUME OF SESSION 1897.

EXPLANATION OF ABBREVIATIONS.

Bills Read 1ª, 1°, 2ª, 2°, 3ª, 3°. Read the First, Second, or Third Time.
1R., 2R., 3R. Speech delivered on First, Second, or Third Reading.
Adj. Adjourned.
A. Answer.
c. Commons.
Com. Committee.
com. Committed.
Intro. Introduction.
l. Lords.
Obj. Objections.
Obs. Observations.
Pres. Presented.
Q. Question.
Rep. Reported.
R.P. Report Progress.
Reso. Resolutions.

The Subjects of Debate, as far as possible, are classified under General Headings, e.g. :—

- AFRICA
- AGRICULTURE, BOARD OF
- ARMY
- CIVIL SERVICE
- COLONIES
- CUSTOMS, EXCISE, AND INLAND REVENUE
- EDUCATION DEPARTMENT
- FOREIGN OFFICE
- HOME DEPARTMENT
- INDIA
- IRELAND
- LABOUR QUESTIONS
- LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE
- LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD
- MERCHANT SHIPPING
- MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS
- METROPOLIS
- NAVY
- PARLIAMENT
- POST OFFICE
- RAILWAYS
- SCOTLAND
- SUPPLY
- TRADE, BOARD OF
- WALES
- WAYS AND MEANS

ABRAHAM, Mr. WILLIAM, Cork County, N.E.
Army Estimates: £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 836
Bridgetown Abbey, Cork Feb 15, 391
Evicted Tenants, Ireland Mar 1, 1332, 1333

Accidents
Explosion, H.M.S. Howe, Qs. Capt. Donelan; As. Mr. Macartney Mar 2, 1444

ACLAND, Right Hon. A. H. DYKE, Yorkshire, W.R., Rotherham
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 430; Feb 25, 1164, 1167; In Com. Mar 1, 1354, 1368, 1373, 1397, 1398; Mar 3, 1553; Mar 4, 1617, 1665

ACLAND-HOOD, Captain Sir A. F., Bart., Somerset, Wellington
Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 280, 292, 294

Administration of Crown Lands (Wales)
Mr. Brynmor Jones (Notice of Motion) Feb 16, 502

ADMIRALTY
First Lord—Mr. G. J. GOSCHEN
Secretary—Mr. W. G. E. MACARTNEY
Civil Lord—Mr. J. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN
(See NAVY)

AFRICA

- Akassa Garrison, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 708
- Benin Expedition, Qs. Sir J. Colomb; As. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 18, 723; Feb 22, 964
- British
  - South Africa Company, Cost of Imperial Troops, Qs. Mr. T. Bayley, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Powell-Williams, Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 174
  - Trade, Liberia, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1128
  - Uitlander Population, Transvaal, Q. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 25, 1142
- Cape and West India Mails, Q. Sir E. Clarke; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 4, 1609
- Chamberlain (Mr.) and President Kruger, Q. Lord Loch; A. Earl of Selborne Feb 9, 1
- Jameson Raid
  - Cape Inquiry, Q. Mr. Bryn Roberts; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 26, 1264
  - Indemnity, Qs. Mr. James Roche, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 18, 726
  - President Kruger's Claim, Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. James Roche; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 22, 875. Q General Russell; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 4, 1585
  - Prisoners at Holloway, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 21
- Judges, Transvaal, Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 4, 1610
- Liberia, British Trade, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1128
- Mission to King Menelik, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. J. M. Maclean; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1143
- Outrage at Balliana, Reported, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 396
- Reform Prisoners, Pretoria, Qs. Mr. J. M. Maclean; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 18, 727; Feb 26, 1262
- Royal Niger Company, Qs. Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 19, 778
- Slavery in Zanzibar, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 19, 780. Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1131
- Stokes (Mr.), Execution of, Q. Mr. H. D. Greene; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 717
- Transvaal
  - British Uitlander Population, Q. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 25, 1142
  - Jameson Raid (see above)
  - Judges, Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 4, 1610
  - Recent Legislation, Q. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 2, 1444
- Zanzibar, Slavery in, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 19, 780. Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1131

Agricultural Population

- Mr. Atherley-Jones (Notice of Motion) Mar 2, 1429

AGRICULTURE, BOARD OF

President—Mr. WALTER H. LONG

- Agricultural
  - Holdings, Q. Mr. G. Lambert; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 25, 1144
  - Improvements, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. Gilhooly; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1133
  - Rate, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Kilbride; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1341
  - Statistics, Q. Mr. J. Rankin; A. Mr. W. Long Feb 16, 503
- Agricultural Rates Act 1896: Amending Order, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. T. W. Russell Feb 19, 789. Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, Sir C. Dilke, Sir W. Harcourt, Mr. Gibson Bowles; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir R. Webster, Mr. T. W. Russell Feb 22, 882
- Cattle
  - Importation of, Ireland, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 2, 1431
  - Sale of, Stirling, Q. Mr. J. McKillop; A. Mr. W. Long Feb 12, 272
  - Slaughter of, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 162; Feb 12, 268
  - Weighing, Scotland, Q. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; A. Mr. W. Long Feb 15, 389
- Horse-breeding
  - Commission, Dublin, Qs. Colonel McCalmont, Mr. J. C. Flynn, Mr. P. O'Brien, Captain Donelan; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 859
  - Ireland, Qs. Colonel McCalmont; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1128; Mar 1, 1336
- Muzzling Dogs, Qs. Mr. H. C. Stephens; As. Mr. W. Long Mar 2, 1442; Mar 4, 1603
- Pleuro-Pneumonia (South East Essex), Qs. Major Rasch, Sir J. Leng; As. Mr. W. Long Feb 22, 872
- Rabies, Qs. Mr. J. Bigwood; As. Mr. W. Long Mar 1, 1346
- Sale of Cattle, Stirling, Q. Mr. J. McKillop; A. Mr. W. Long Feb 12, 272
- Slaughter of Cattle, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 162; Feb 12, 268
- Weighing Cattle, Scotland, Q. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; A. Mr. W. Long Feb 15, 389

AKERS-DOUGLAS, RIGHT HON. A. (First Commissioner of Works, Parks, and Public Buildings), Kent, St. Augustine

- British South Africa Committee Feb 18, 719
- Cyclists
  - Hyde Park Feb 22, 863
  - Mall Mar 1, 1337
- Hampton Court Green Mar 1, 1336
- Queen's Reign, South Kensington Museum Feb 11, 175
- Richmond Park Feb 25, 1122
- Westminster Hall Feb 22, 864

ALLAN, Mr. WILLIAM, Gateshead

- Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R, Feb 17, 646, 647

ALLAN, Sir HENRY M. HAVELOCK-, Bart. (see HAVELOCK-ALLAN)

AMBROSE, Dr. ROBERT, Mayo, W.
- Castlebar Union Feb 18, 712
- Congested Districts Board (Ireland) (Compulsory Purchase Powers) Bill, Intro. Feb 9, 27
- Tolls, Newport (Mayo) Mar 2, 1432

America
- American Passenger Traffic, Police at Queenstown, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien ; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 869
- Cable
  - Canada to Australia, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan ; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 22, 878
  - Communication, Bermuda to Jamaica, Q. General Laurie ; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 170
- Cuba, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien ; [Mr. Speaker ;] As. Mr. Curzon Mar 1, 1346
- Mail Service, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan ; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1331
- North Atlantic Load-line, Q. Mr. J. G. A. Baird ; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 1, 1329
- West India
  - Mails, Cape and, Q. Sir E. Clarke ; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 4, 1609
  - Sugar Commission, Q. Sir C. Dilke ; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 155

ANCASTER, EARL OF (Lord Great Chamberlain)
- Dismissal of Mr. John Bull Feb 15, 376

Appointment of High Sheriffs (Ireland) Bill
c. Intro., Mr. E. H. Carson ; Read 1° Feb 26, 1267

Archdeaconry of London (Additional Endowments) Bill
c. 2R., Mr. Alban Gibbs, 1101 ; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 1101 Feb 24

Armenia
- Affairs in Northern Syria, Qs. Mr. J. Bryce ; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 724
- Armenian Refugees, Cyprus, Q. Mr. Bryn Roberts ; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 12, 264
- Statement
  - French Minister, by, Q. Mr. J. Bryce ; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1142
  - French Yellow-book, in, Qs. Mr. Gibson Bowles ; As. Mr. Curzon Mar 2, 1441

ARMY
Secretary of State—Marquess of LANSDOWNE
Under Secretary of State—Mr. BRODRICK
Financial Secretary—Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS
- Akassa Garrison, Q. Sir C. Dilke ; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 708
- Artillery
  - Horses, Q. Sir C. Dilke ; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 12, 264
  - Officers, Royal Marine, Q. Sir J. Colomb ; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 22, 868
  - Solent and Clyde, Firing, Q. Mr. D. N. Nicol ; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 26, 1255

[cont.

ARMY—cont.
- Barracks Act 1890, Q. Mr. T. R. Buchanan ; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 22, 881
- Barracks
  - Colchester, Q. Mr. J. Round ; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1590
  - Dublin Royal, Q. General Russell ; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 11, 159
- Barry Island Fort, Q. Major Wyndham-Quin ; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 9, 18
- Brigade of Guards, Qs. General Laurie, Captain Bagot, Sir H. Vincent, Colonel Lockwood ; As. Mr. Brodrick Feb 12, 265
- British
  - South Africa Company, Cost of Imperial Troops, Qs. Mr. T. Bayley, Mr. P. O'Brien ; As. Mr. Powell-Williams, Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 174
  - Troops in India, Health, Q. Mr. R. Cameron ; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 25, 1141. Q. Captain Pirie ; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 1, 1340
- Cairn at Finner, Donegal, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien ; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 18, 712
- Chelsea Hospital, Qs. Captain Donelan ; As. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1589
- Colchester Barracks, Q. Mr. J. Round ; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1590
- Conveyance of Troops, Scotland and London, Q. Mr. J. McKillop ; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 9, 18
- Cordite
  - Experiments, Woolwich Arsenal, Qs. Mr. H. Labouchere ; As. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 11, 172
  - H.M.'s Ships, Q. Mr. Sydney Gedge ; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Mar 4, 1579
- Crimean Veteran : Brennan (John), Late 41st Regiment, Q. Mr. J. O'Kelly ; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 26, 1259
- Dublin Barracks, Royal, Q. General Russell ; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 11, 159
- Duke of York's Military School, Q. Mr. E. Strachey ; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 12, 267
- Estimates : Supply, Qs. Dr. Farquharson, Sir C. Dilke ; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 414
- Fraudulent Enlistment : George Smith, Q. Mr. T. Lough ; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 392
- Government Powder Magazine, Purfleet, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill ; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 16, 509
- Health of
  - Army in India, Qs. Major Rasch, General Russell ; As. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 18, 703
  - British Troops in India, Q. Mr. R. Cameron ; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 25, 1141. Q. Captain Pirie ; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 1, 1340
- Home Defence and the Volunteers, Q. Earl of Minto ; A. Duke of Devonshire ; [Obs. Earl of Kimberley ;] Feb 11, 131
- Horses, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn, Captain Donelan, Mr. P. O'Brien ; As. Mr. Powell-Williams Mar 4, 1597
- Hospital Accommodation, Sierra Leone, Q. Mr. C. Bill ; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 15, 399
- Indian Staff Corps, Q. Sir H. S. King ; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 9, 6

[cont.

ARMY—cont.

- Infantry Recruits, Chest Measurement, Q. Major Rasch; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 2, 1430
- King's Royal Rifle Corps, 8th Battalion, Q. Mr. D. Sullivan; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 1, 1328
- Lee-Metford Rifle
  - Manchester Volunteers, Q. Sir W. Houldsworth; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 25, 1135
  - Volunteer Rifle Ranges, Qs. Earl Spencer; [Obs. Earl Stanhope;] As. Marquess of Lansdowne Feb 18, 667
- Medical Service, Qs. Mr. T. R. Buchanan; As. Mr. Powell-Williams, Lord G. Hamilton Feb 18, 725
- Military Manœuvres Bill, Q. Mr. A. M. Brookfield; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 414
- Military Manœuvres, Grant to Officers, Q. Sir A. K. Rollit; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 19, 790
- Military Works Bill, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 11, 154. Q. Mr. T. R. Buchanan; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 22, 879
  (For Debate see Title of Bill)
- Officers
  - Examinations, Volunteer, Q. Mr. J. H. Roberts; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1575
  - Grant to, Military Manœuvres, Q. Sir A. K. Rollit; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 19, 790
  - Royal Marine Artillery, Q. Sir J. Colomb; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 22, 868
  - Warrant, Good Conduct Medal, Q. Mr. C. Colston: A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 18, 721
- Ordnance Store Department, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 25, 1135
- Pensions, Special Campaign, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 9, 5
- Purfleet, Government Powder Magazine, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 16, 509
- Queen's Reign, Colonial Troops, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 1, 1331
- Recruiting Areas, Colonies, Q. Captain Pirie; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1579
- Regimental Territorial Titles, Qs. Mr. Massey-Mainwaring, Sir H. Vincent; As. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 15, 403
- Retired Pay, Q. Mr. A. O'Connor; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 11, 183
- Rifle Corps, King's Royal, 8th Battalion, Q. Mr. D. Sullivan; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 1, 1328
- Royal
  - Barracks, Dublin, Q. General Russell; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 11, 159
  - Engineers, Discharge, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan: A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 15, 398
  - Marine Artillery Officers, Q. Sir J. Colomb; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 22, 868
- Salisbury Plain
  - Protection of Ancient Monuments, Q. Mr. C. Colston; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 25, 1144
  - Tenant Farmers, Q. Mr. E. A. Goulding; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Mar 4, 1586
- School, Military, Duke of York's, Q. Mr. E. Strachey; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 12, 267
- Scots Greys, Q. Mr. Orr-Ewing; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 16, 515
- Scottish Rifles, 5th Volunteer Battalion, Qs. Mr. J. Wilson (Falkirk); As. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1595
- Sierra Leone, Hospital Accommodation, Q. Mr. C. Bill; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 15, 399

[cont.

ARMY—cont.

- Soldiers' Effects Fund, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 11, 179
- Solent and Clyde, Artillery Firing, Q. Mr. D. N. Nicol; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 26, 1255
- Special Campaign Pensions, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 9, 5
- Troops
  - British, in India, Health of, Q. Mr. R. Cameron; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 25, 1141. Q. Captain Pirie; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 1, 1340
  - Colonial, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 1, 1331
  - Conveyance of, Scotland and London, Q. Mr. J. McKillop; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 9, 18
  - Imperial, Cost of (British South Africa Company), Qs. Mr. T. Bayley, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Powell-Williams, Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 174
- Volunteers
  - Battalions, Aldershot, Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1574
  - Cadet Corps, Q. General Laurie; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 26, 1252
  - Drill Halls, Aberdeen, Q. Captain Pirie; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 976
  - Home Defence, and, Q. Earl of Minto; A. Duke of Devonshire; [Obs. Earl of Kimberley;] Feb 11, 131
  - Manchester, Lee-Metford Rifle, Q. Sir W. Houldsworth; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 25, 1135
  - Officers, Examinations, Q. Mr. J. H. Roberts; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1575
  - Rifle Ranges, Lee-Metford Rifle, Qs. Earl Spencer; [Obs. Earl Stanhope;] As. Marquess of Lansdowne Feb 18, 667
  - Scottish Rifles, 5th Battalion, Qs. Mr. J. Wilson (Falkirk); As. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1595
- Warrant Officers, Good Conduct Medal, Q. Mr. C. Colston; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 18, 721

ARMY ESTIMATES 1897-98

£894,000 for Clothing Establishments and Services

In Com., Sir C. Dilke, 840; Mr. Brodrick, 841; (Motion withdrawn, 841) Feb 19

158,774 Land Forces (Number of)

In Com., Mr. Brodrick, 319, 327, 333, 334, 335, 336; Sir C. Dilke, 327, 335, 336; Sir J. Fergusson, 333; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 334; Sir J. Colomb, 334, 335; Mr. W. J. Galloway, 337, 344, 345; Captain Jessel, 338; Colonel Welby, 339; Sir F. Fitz-Wygram, 342; Mr. Powell-Williams, 344, 345; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 345; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 349; Mr. H. Labouchere, 351, (Amendt.) 355, 358, 359, 360; [Chairman, 355;] Mr. J. Dillon, 355; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 358, 359, 360, 361; Sir W. Lawson, 360; (Division, 361); Captain Pirie, 361; General McCalmont, 361; Mr. J. McLeod, 362; (Agreed to, 363) Feb 12. Report Feb 15, 495

ARMY ESTIMATES—cont.

£295,800 for Medical Establishment, Pay, etc
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 12, 364
Report: Dr. Farquharson, 495; Mr. A. F. Jeffreys, 496; Mr. Brodrick, 497, 498; Colonel Lockwood, 498; Captain Pirie, 498; Mr. H. V. Duncombe, 498; Mr. J. Burns, 498 Feb 15
Reso. Agreed to Feb 15, 498

£118,600 for Military Education, Establishments
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 19, 846. Report Feb 22, 963

£553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances
In Com., Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 364; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 364; R.P. 364 Feb 12
In Com., Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 792, 797, 800; Mr. T. Lough, 793; Sir E. T. Gourley, 793; Mr. C. Colston, 794; Colonel Wyndham Murray, 794; Sir J. Fergusson, 795; Colonel Blundell, 795; Mr. Brodrick, 796, 799, 801, 803; Captain Bethell, 796, 799; Dr. Tanner, 797, 802; Viscount Cranborne, 798, 802; Mr. Vesey Knox, 801; Major H. F. Bowles, 803. Vote Agreed to, 803 Feb 19. Report Feb 22, 960

£5,937,800 for Pay, Allowances, etc.
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 12, 364. Report Feb 15, 495

£2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies
In Com., Mr. J. H. Dalziel, 828, 839; Sir R. U. Penrose FitzGerald, 828; Mr. J. C. Flynn, 828, 830, 840; Mr. A. F. Jeffreys, 829; Mr. Powell-Williams, 830, 832, 833; Mr. J. Gilhooly, 832; Mr. J. Lowles, 832; Mr. D. Kilbride, 832, 833, 834; Mr. T. P. Whittaker, 835; General Goldsworthy, 836; Mr. W. Abraham (Cork), 836; Mr. Brodrick, 838; Dr. Farquharson, 840; (Division, 840); [Chairman, 840;] Dr. Tanner, 840. Vote Agreed to, 840. Feb 19
Report: Mr. J. C. Flynn, 961, 962; Mr. Powell-Williams, 962 Feb 22
Reso. Agreed to Feb 22, 962

£54,800 for Sundry Miscellaneous Effective Services
In Com., Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 846; Mr. Powell-Williams, 847; Dr. Tanner, 847; (Division, 847). Vote Agreed to, 847 Feb 19. Report Feb 22, 963

£639,000 for Transport and Remounts
In Com., Dr. Tanner, 823; [Chairman, 823, 825;] Colonel Murray, 823; Mr. T. Lough, 823, 826; Colonel Welby, 823; Mr. J. C. Flynn, 824, 825, 826, 827; Mr. Powell-Williams, 825, 826, 827; Mr. Vesey Knox, 826; Mr. J. Lowles, 827. Vote Agreed to, 828 Feb 19

[cont.

ARMY ESTIMATES—cont.

£639,000 for Transport and Remounts—cont.
Report: Mr. J. C. Flynn, 961; Mr. Powell-Williams, 961; Dr. Tanner, 961 Feb 22
Reso. Agreed to Feb 22, 961

£627,200 for Volunteer Corps, Capitation Grant, Pay, and Allowances
In Com., Sir C. Dilke, 812; Sir H. Vincent, 814; Mr. A. M. Brookfield, 817; Mr. Brodrick, 819; Mr. H. Samuel, 821; Mr. Tomlinson, 821; Mr. Vesey Knox, (Amendt.) 822; (Division, 823). Vote Agreed to, 823 Feb 19. Report Feb 22, 961

£2,069,200 for Warlike and Other Stores, Supply and Repair
In Com., Motion withdrawn Feb 19, 841

£1,016,400 for Works, Buildings, and Repairs
In Com., Major Wyndham-Quin, 841, 845; Mr. T. R. Buchanan, 842; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 843; Colonel Welby, 843; Mr. P. J. Stanhope, 843; Sir J. Colomb, 844; Mr. Brodrick, 844, 846; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 845, 846; Mr. Vesey Knox, 846; Dr. Tanner, 846. Vote Agreed to 846 Feb 19. Report Feb 22, 962

£76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances
In Com., Mr. R. T. Hermon-Hodge, 803; Mr. W. F. D. Smith, 804; Mr. Vesey Knox, (Amendt.) 804, 811; Dr. Tanner, 805, 810; Mr. Powell-Williams, 806, 811; Mr. H. Labouchere, 807; Sir F. Fitz-Wygram, 808; Lord A. Compton, 808; General Laurie, 808; Mr. T. P. Whittaker, 809; Colonel Welby, 809; Mr. Pryce Jones, 810; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 810; (Division, 811); Sir W. Lawson, 812; (Division, 812). Vote Agreed to, 812 Feb 19. Report Feb 22, 960

ARNOLD-FORSTER, Mr. H. O., Belfast, W.
Army Estimates: 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 349
Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 294
Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1512

ARRAN, Earl of
Cahir, Speech at Feb 12, 261

ASCROFT, Mr. R., Oldham
Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 74, 79

ASHBOURNE, LORD (Lord Chancellor of Ireland)
Cahir, Speech at Feb 12, 258

ASHER, Mr. ALEXANDER, Elgin Burghs
Trunk Telephone Lines, Scotland Feb 12, 272

ASHMEAD-BARTLETT, Sir ELLIS, Sheffield, Ecclesall
- British Uitlander Population, Transvaal Feb 25, 1142
- Crete Feb 9, 22, 23; Feb 15, 404, 405; Feb 16, 532; Feb 19, 786, 788; Feb 22, 887, 888; Feb 23, 984, 985; Feb 25, 1147; Feb 26, 1265, 1266; Mar 1, 1339, 1340; Mar 2, 1448, 1449; Mar 4, 1605, 1606
- Crete
  - Action of British Ships Feb 22, 915, 916
  - Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1475, 1479
  - Mussulmans in Feb 18, 722
- Jameson Raid, President Kruger's Claim Feb 22, 875
- Judges, Transvaal Mar 4, 1610
- Transvaal Mar 2, 1444

ASQUITH, Right Hon. H. H., Fife, E.
- Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 4, 1628, 1629

ATHERLEY-JONES, Mr. LLEWELLYN A., Durham, N.W.
- Agricultural Population Mar 2, 1429
- Judicature Acts Feb 23, 987, 989, 992, 1001, 1013
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 449, 451

ATKINSON, RIGHT HON. JOHN, (Attorney General for Ireland), Londonderry, N.
- Clonbain "Whiteboy" Case Feb 15, 411; Feb 16, 511
- County Surveyors (Ireland) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 12, 367
- Jurymen's Expenses, Ireland Feb 25, 1129
- Londonderry Corporation Stock Feb 22, 866
- Municipal
  - Franchise, Ireland Feb 9, 16
  - Voters Act, Aughnacloy Mar 4, 1599, 1600
- Parish Records, Ireland Feb 9, 11
- Town Courts Mar 2, 1442

AUSTIN, Mr. MICHAEL, Limerick, W.
- Land Courts, Ireland Mar 4, 1585
- Limerick
  - Canal and Shannon Service Mar 4, 1594
  - Night Watch Mar 4, 1593

Australasia
- Cable, Canada to Australia, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 22, 878
- Mail Contracts
  - Australia, Qs. Mr. J. F. Hogan; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 397; Feb 22, 867
  - Indo-China and Australia, Qs. Sir J. Leng; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 158; Mar 2, 1438
- Slavery, New Hebrides, Qs. Mr. S. Smith; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 2, 1433

BADEN-POWELL, Sir GEORGE S., Liverpool, Kirkdale
- Colonial Premiers, Visit to London Feb 23, 978
- Liberia, British Trade Feb 25, 1128
- Marine Insurance Policies, Stamp Duty Feb 25, 1135
- Solent, Artillery Firing Feb 25, 1129

BAGOT, Captain J. F., Westmorland, Kendal
- Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 266
- Carlisle Gaol, Death of Prisoner Feb 11, 166

BAILEY, Mr. JAMES, Newington, Walworth
- Murder on London and South Western Railway Feb 22, 879

BAIRD, Mr. J. G. A., Glasgow, Central
- North Atlantic Load-line Mar 1, 1329
- S.S. Utopia, Claim against Owners Mar 4, 1587

BAKER, Sir JOHN, Portsmouth
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 457, 461; In Com. Mar 1, 1370; Mar 3, 1556

BALCARRES, Earl of, Lancashire, N., Chorley
- Prison Officers Feb 26, 1253

BALFOUR, RIGHT HON. ARTHUR J. (First Lord of the Treasury), Manchester, E.
- Agricultural Holdings Feb 25, 1144
- Army Estimates
  - 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 358, 359, 360, 361
  - £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 12, 364
- Bequest to Nation by Lady Wallace Mar 1, 1346
- Board Schools
  - Financial Aid Feb 15, 411
  - Necessitous Feb 11, 187
- Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 311, 312
- British Trade and Foreign Competition Feb 9, 25
- Business of the House
  - Sitting of the House, Ash Wednesday Mar 2, 1533
  - Supply (Estimates)
    - Army Feb 15, 414, 415
    - Civil Service Feb 18, 728, 729
    - Civil Service (Supplementary) Feb 22, 886
    - Naval Feb 26, 1266
    - Scotch Feb 15, 414
- Cornish Mining Industry Mar 4, 1611
- County Surveyors (Ireland) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 12, 367

[cont.

BALFOUR, Right Hon. ARTHUR J.—cont.

- Crete Feb 15, 406, 407 ; Feb 16, 524 ; Feb 23, 984 ; Feb 25, 1147, 1150, 1151, 1152, 1153 ; Mar 1, 1348, 1349 ; Mar 4, 1607
- Crete
  - Action of British Ships Feb 22, 890, 896, 897, 898, 899, 901, 926
  - Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1450, 1514, 1518, 1523
- Criminal Law Amendment (Ireland) Act, 1887 Feb 15, 413
- Elementary Schools, Rating Feb 9, 25, 26 ; Feb 12, 279, 280
- Employers' Liability Bill Feb 9, 25 ; Mar 4, 1613
- Established Church (England and Wales) Feb 9, 42, 43, 45
- Financial Relations, Great Britain and Ireland Feb 11, 184 ; Feb 12, 279 ; Feb 16, 517 ; Feb 18, 727 ; Feb 22, 884, 885, 886 ; Feb 23, 982
- Imperial Taxes, Ireland Mar 4, 1612
- India
  - Famine Feb 23, 980
  - Imported Woollen Goods Feb 9, 26
- Law of Evidence (Criminal Cases) Bill Feb 11, 187
- Military Manœuvres Bill Feb 15, 414
- Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 771
- Necessitous Board Schools Feb 11, 187
- Prosecution of Mr. Ivory Feb 11, 186
- Queen's Reign, National Holiday Feb 11, 186
- Rating Commission Feb 16, 517, 518
- Salisbury Plain Feb 25, 1144
- School Teachers, Superannuation Mar 2, 1445
- Sugar Refining Industry, United Kingdom Feb 11, 185
- Usury Laws Feb 15, 412
- Voluntary Schools
  - Rating Feb 15, 413
  - Scotland Feb 16, 516
- Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 188, 195, 196, 200, 2R. 229, 230, 236, 240 ; Feb 15, 442, 478, 479 ; Feb 16, 575, 592, 593, 594 ; Feb 25, 1160, 1162, 1171, 1175, 1202, 1211, 1212, 1216, 1228, 1230, 1237 ; In Com. Mar 1, 1353, 1359, 1362, 1363, 1364, 1367, 1368, 1371, 1372, 1373, 1374, 1375, 1378, 1380, 1381, 1382, 1395, 1396, 1404, 1406, 1408, 1409 ; Mar 3, 1544, 1548, 1551, 1553, 1562, 1563 ; Mar 4, 1616, 1638, 1641, 1646, 1651, 1652, 1658, 1669, 1670
  - Answers to Questions Feb 23, 980, 981

BALFOUR, RIGHT HON. GERALD W. (Chief Secretary for Ireland), Leeds, Central

- Agricultural Rate, Ireland Mar 1, 1341
- American Passenger Traffic, Police at Queenstown Feb 22, 869
- Ballybot Licensing Sessions Feb 25, 1134
- Ballymena Land Commission Court Feb 11, 182
- Ballyshannon Union, Clerk's Salary Feb 22, 877
- Baltimore Fishery Pier Feb 22, 870
- Bankruptcy Court, Ireland Feb 25, 1127
- Bann Drainage Feb 23, 968
- Bantry Bay, Illegal Trawling Feb 12, 267
- Barrow Drainage Mar 1, 1327

[cont.

BALFOUR, Right Hon. GERALD W.—cont.

- Belfast Police
  - Acting Sergeants Feb 12, 273
  - Musgrave Street Barracks Feb 9, 13 ; Feb 19, 784
- Board of Guardians, Listowel Feb 18, 710, 711
- Cahir Estate, Ireland Mar 1, 1345
- Caretakers, Ireland Mar 1, 1323, 1324
- Castlebar Union Feb 18, 712
- Cattle, Ireland
  - Importation of Mar 2, 1431
  - Slaughter of Feb 11, 163
- Christian Brothers Schools Feb 19, 782, 783
- Clare
  - Assizes, Diminution of Crime Mar 4, 1608
  - Police Protection Feb 18, 720
- Clongorey Estate, Kildare Mar 1, 1344
- Consecration of Bishop of Killaloe Feb 9, 17, 18
- Convent and Monastery Schools, Ireland Feb 26, 1259
- County Court Judge, Down Mar 4, 1609
- Court of Bankruptcy, Ireland Mar 4, 1601
- Cullenagh Mountain, Tipperary Feb 26, 1260
- Distress
  - Belmullet Union Feb 22, 887
  - West of Ireland Feb 9, 16
- Donegal
  - Labourers Acts Feb 18, 713
  - Sickness among School Children Mar 4, 1599
- Drainage
  - Bann Feb 23, 968
  - Barrow Mar 1, 1327
  - Suck Scheme Mar 4, 1579
- Educational Endowments, Ireland Feb 25, 1130
- Education, Ireland Feb 11, 181 ; Feb 12, 277
- Election of Coroner, Tipperary Feb 18, 720
- Evictions
  - Farm, Westport Feb 25, 1131
  - Monaghan Feb 23, 977
  - Tenants, Ireland Mar 1, 1332, 1333 ; Mar 4, 1591
- Fermanagh
  - Land Sub-commission Feb 18, 719
  - Riot Feb 18, 717
- Fishery Piers (see Piers below)
- High Sheriff, Carrickfergus Feb 25, 1137
- Horse-breeding
  - Commission, Dublin Feb 22, 859, 860
  - Ireland Feb 25, 1128 ; Mar 1, 1337
- Illegal Trawling, Bantry Bay Feb 12, 267
- Importation of Cattle, Ireland Mar 2, 1431
- Industrial School Contracts, Ireland Feb 25, 1127
- Judicial Rents, Ireland Mar 1, 1333, 1334
- Kerry Bog Slide Feb 16, 506
- Kildare, Clongorey Estate Mar 1, 1344
- Labourers Acts, Donegal Feb 18, 713
- Land
  - Commission
    - Ballymena Court Feb 11, 182
    - Ireland Feb 23, 969 ; Feb 25, 1138 ; Feb 26, 1250, 1251
    - Kildare Applications Feb 11, 159
    - King's County Feb 11, 184
  - Courts, Ireland Mar 4, 1584, 1585
  - Sub-commission
    - Cavan Feb 19, 781
    - Fermanagh Feb 18, 719
- Licensing Sessions, Ballybot Feb 25, 1134
- Limerick Night Watch Mar 4, 1594

[cont.

BALFOUR, Right Hon. GERALD W.—cont.

- Listowel Board of Guardians Feb 18, 710, 711
- Loan Fund Societies, Ireland Feb 12, 277, 278; Feb 16, 508; Feb 22, 861, 862; Feb 23, 975; Feb 25, 1140
- Local Taxation, Ireland Feb 11, 182
- Magisterial Districts, Ireland Feb 18, 716
- Magistrates, Ireland Feb 25, 1130; Mar 1, 1322
- Maryborough Gaol: Prisoner Fitzharris Feb 22, 876; Mar 4, 1601
- Massereene Estate, Police Protection Feb 22, 871
- Monaghan
  - Eviction Feb 23, 977
  - Sanitary Arrangements, Clones Feb 12, 275
- Musgrave Street Police Barracks, Belfast Feb 9, 13; Feb 19, 784
- National
  - Education Board, Ireland Feb 11, 168
  - Schools, Ireland Feb 22, 879
  - School Teachers, Ireland
    - Character and Salaries Feb 12, 263, 264
    - Pension
      - Fund Feb 16, 510; Mar 1, 1335
      - Miss Ryan Mar 4, 1577
    - Residential Rates Feb 23, 967
- Newbliss
  - Court-house, Orange Lodge Feb 16, 510
  - Petty Sessions Feb 11, 175
- Pawnbrokers, Ireland Feb 9, 17
- Petty Sessions
  - Courts, Ireland Feb 25, 1129
  - Newbliss Feb 11, 175
- Piers, Fishery
  - Baltimore Feb 22, 870
  - Ireland Feb 26, 1263; Mar 4, 1574, 1575
  - Tramore Mar 1, 1325
- Police
  - Belfast
    - Acting Sergeants Feb 12, 273
    - Barracks, Musgrave Street Feb 9, 13; Feb 19, 784
  - Patrol, Skibbereen Feb 23, 969
  - Protection
    - Clare Feb 18, 720
    - Massereene Estate Feb 22, 871
  - Queenstown, American Passenger Traffic Feb 22, 869
  - Royal Irish Constabulary (see below)
- Poor Law Relief (Ireland) Bill Feb 18, 713; Mar 2, 1445
- Private
  - Bill Legislation Feb 11, 181
  - Lunatic Asylums, Ireland Mar 2, 1441
- Rabies, M'Govern's Treatment Feb 11, 157
- Riot, Fermanagh Feb 18, 717
- Royal Irish Constabulary Pensions Mar 4, 1576
- Sanitary Arrangements, Clones, Monaghan Feb 12, 275
- Schools
  - Christian Brothers Feb 19, 782, 783
  - Convent and Monastery, Ireland Feb 26, 1259
  - Endowment, Ireland Feb 18, 719
  - Industrial, Contracts, Ireland Feb 25, 1127
  - National, Ireland Feb 22, 879
- Sickness among School Children, Donegal Mar 4, 1599
- Slaughter of Cattle, Ireland Feb 11, 163; Feb 12, 269

[cont.

BALFOUR, Right Hon. GERALD W.—cont.

- Suck Drainage Scheme Mar 4, 1579
- Supply: £12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1277, 1281, 1282
- Tipperary
  - Cullenagh Mountain Feb 26, 1260
  - Election of Coroner Feb 18, 720
- Tolls, Newport (Mayo) Mar 2, 1432
- Tramore Fishery Pier Mar 1, 1325
- Tramps, Ireland Mar 4, 1582
- Unions
  - Ballyshannon, Clerk's Salary Feb 22, 877
  - Belmullet, Distress in Feb 22, 887
  - Castlebar Feb 18, 712
- Vaccination Act, Ireland Feb 25, 1136

BARRY, Right Hon. A. H. SMITH (see SMITH-BARRY)

BARTLEY, Mr. G. C. T., Islington, N.

- Great Northern Railway Bill, 2R. Feb 25, 1114
- London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 689
- North British Railway, 2R. Feb 22, 853
- Supply: £30,151 for Trustee Savings Bank and Friendly Societies Deficiency (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1299, 1301
- Telephone System Mar 1, 1343
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 25, 1194; In Com. Mar 1, 1366, 1403; Mar 4, 1622, 1662

BAYLEY, Mr. THOMAS, Derbyshire, Chesterfield

- British South Africa Company Feb 11, 174
- Crete Feb 23, 984; Feb 25, 1150
- Slavery in Zanzibar Feb 25, 1131
- Vaccination, Repeated Prosecutions Feb 16, 505

BEACH, RIGHT HON. SIR MICHAEL E. HICKS, BART. (Chancellor of the Exchequer), Bristol, W.

- British South Africa Company Feb 11, 174
- Cable Communication, Bermuda to Jamaica Feb 11, 170
- Education
  - Grant, Scotland Feb 11, 183
  - Votes Feb 15, 400
- Egyptian Government, Grant in Aid Feb 15, 410
- Half-sovereigns and Farthings Feb 22, 857
- Income Tax Forms Mar 4, 1573
- Land Tax Feb 11, 187; Feb 16, 504; Mar 2, 1433
- Marine Insurance Policies, Stamp Duty Feb 25, 1135
- Military Works Bill, In Com. Feb 22, 950, 951, 956
- Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1038
- Queen's Reign, Coinage Mar 2, 1436

[cont.

BEACH, Right Hon. Sir M. HICKS—cont.
  Supply
    £40 for the Mint, including Coinage (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1274
    £30,151 for Trustee Savings Bank and Friendly Societies Deficiency (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1300, 1301
  Trustees Savings Banks, Scotland Feb 25, 1123
  University
    Colleges, Government Grant Feb 22, 871
    Extension, Annual Grant Mar 4, 1581
  Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 9, 21; Feb 11, 178
  West Indian Sugar Commission Feb 11, 155

BELMORE, Earl of
  Irish Mails Mar 4, 1568

BETHELL, Captain G. R., Yorkshire, E.R., Holderness
  Army Estimates: £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 796, 799

BHOWNAGGREE, Mr. M. M., Bethnal Green, N.E.
  Imperial Museum, Calcutta Mar 4, 1582
  Indian Famine
    Mortality Feb 23, 979
    Silver Hoards Feb 9, 19

BIGWOOD, Mr. J., Middlesex, Brentford
  Rabies Mar 1, 1346

BILL, Mr. CHARLES, Staffordshire, Leek
  Highways Bill, Intro. Feb 9, 27
  Hospital Accommodation, Sierra Leone Feb 15, 399
  Parliamentary Publications, Members' Postage Feb 15, 398

BLUNDELL, Colonel H. B. H., Lancashire, S.W., Ince
  Army Estimates: £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 795
  Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 317

Borough Justices' Clerks Bill
c. Intro., Sir A. K. Rollit; Read 1° Feb 17, 663

BOSCAWEN, Mr. A. S. T. GRIFFITH- (see GRIFFITH-BOSCAWEN)

BOULNOIS, Mr. EDMUND, Marylebone, E.
  London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 675, 676, 698
  Richmond Park Feb 25, 1122

BOUSFIELD, Mr. W. R., Hackney, N.
  County Councils (Qualification of Women) Bill, Intro. Feb 17, 663
  Distress from Want of Employment Committee Feb 19, 779, 780
  Weights and Measures Feb 19, 779

BOWLES, Major HENRY F., Middlesex, Enfield
  Army Estimates: £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 803

BOWLES, Mr. T. GIBSON, Lynn Regis
  Agricultural Rates Act (1896) Feb 22, 883
  Alabama Claims Feb 26, 1253
  Armenia Mar 2, 1441, 1442
  Business of the House: Naval Estimates Feb 26, 1266
  Collisions at Sea, Fishing Boats Mar 1, 1331
  Crete Feb 15, 408; Feb 19, 787; Feb 23, 982, 983; Mar 2, 1446
  Crete
    Action of British Ships Feb 22, 904
    Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1485, 1501, 1504, 1506, 1510
  Jameson Raid Indemnity Feb 18, 726
  London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 695
  Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 748
  Naval Instructors Feb 18, 705
  Navy Estimates
    £507,000 Additional Expenditure (1896-97) Feb 26, 1269
    £5,775 13s. for Naval Defence Act (1889) (Excess Expenditure) Feb 26, 1272
  Neutrals in Time of War Feb 25, 1124, 1125
  Rams, Warships Feb 18, 706
  Supply
    £6,800 for Inland Revenue (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1307
    £40 for the Mint, including Coinage (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1274
    £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1291
    £95,434 for Teachers' Pension Fund, Ireland Feb 26, 1303

BRIGG, Mr. JOHN, York, W.R., Keighley
  Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1068
  Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 772; In Com. Feb 22, 937
  Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 200; Feb 25, 1136, 1226

British South Africa Company (see AFRICA)

British Troops in India (Health of)
  Major Rasch (Notice of Motion) Mar 1, 1352
  (For Questions see INDIA)

BROADHURST, Mr. HENRY, Leicester
  Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 81
  Tillet (Mr. Ben), Imprisonment in Belgium Mar 4, 1592
  Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 1, 1389
    Mar 4, 1623

BRODRICK, Right Hon. WILLIAM St. JOHN F. (Under Secretary of State for War), Surrey, Guildford
Army Estimates
  £894,000 for Clothing Establishments and Services Feb 19, 841
  158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 319, 327, 333, 334, 335, 336
  £295,800 for Medical Establishment, Pay; Report Feb 15, 497, 498
  £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 796, 799, 801, 803
  £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 838
  £627,200 for Volunteer Corps, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 819
  £1,016,400 for Works, Buildings, and Repairs Feb 19, 844, 846
Artillery
  Horses Feb 12, 264
  Solent and Clyde, Firing Feb 26, 1255
Barry Island Fort Feb 9, 18
Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 265, 266, 291, 292, 294, 297, 303, 310
Chelsea Hospital Mar 4, 1589, 1590
Colchester Barracks Mar 4, 1590
Crimean Veteran: Brennan (John), late 41st Regiment Feb 26, 1259
Duke of York's Military School Feb 12, 267
Government Powder Magazine, Purfleet Feb 16, 509
Infantry Recruits, Chest Measurement Mar 2, 1430
King's Royal Rifle Corps, 8th Battalion Mar 1, 1328
Lee-Metford Rifle, Manchester Volunteers Feb 25, 1136
Military Manœuvres, Grant to Officers Feb 19, 791
Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 733, 751, 756, 760; Feb 22, 880, In Com. 933, 936, 942, 945, 946, 949, 955, 958, 959
Officers
  Grant to, Military Manœuvres Feb 19, 791
  Volunteers, Examinations Mar 4, 1575
Ordnance Store Department Feb 25, 1135
Queen's Reign, Colonial Troops Mar 1, 1331
Recruiting Areas, Colonies Mar 4, 1579
Scots Greys Feb 16, 516
Scottish Rifles (5th Vol. Batt.) Mar 4, 1596, 1597
Solent and Clyde, Artillery Firing Feb 26, 1255
Volunteers
  Battalions, Aldershot Mar 4, 1574
  Cadet Corps Feb 26, 1252
  Manchester, Lee-Metford Rifle Feb 25, 1136
  Officers, Examinations Mar 4, 1575
  Scottish Rifles (5th Battalion) Mar 4, 1596, 1597

Brookfield, Mr. A. M., Sussex, Rye
Army Estimates: £627,200 for Volunteer Corps, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 817
Military Manœuvres Bill Feb 15, 414

Brunner, Sir John T., Bart., Cheshire, Northwich
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 1, 1400

Bryce, Right Hon. James, Aberdeen, S.
Affairs in Northern Syria Feb 18, 724, 725
Armenia Feb 25, 1142
Crete Feb 22, 889; Feb 25, 1148; Mar 1, 1338
Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1513, 1514
Dardanelles Feb 26, 1261
East London Water Bill Feb 26, 1248
Scottish Fishery Cruisers Mar 1, 1335
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 638, 639, 652
Trade Dispute, Manchester Feb 12, 271

Buchanan, Mr. T. R., Aberdeenshire, E.
Army Estimates: £1,016,400 for Works, Buildings, and Repairs Feb 19, 842
Army Medical Service Feb 18, 725, 726
Barracks Act (1890) Feb 22, 881
Business of the House (Estimates)
  Civil Service Feb 18, 728
  Civil Service (Supplementary) Feb 11, 179
Military Works Bill Feb 22, 879; In Com. 950, 951
Rating Commission Feb 11, 178

Burdett-Coutts, Mr. W. L. A. B., Westminster
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 697

Burials Bill
c. 2R., Mr. R. Cameron, 1045; Mr. J. C. Williams, 1050, 1057, 1058, 1078; Mr. Griffith-Boscawen, 1056, 1057, 1058, 1064; Mr. J. G. Talbot, 1060, 1064; Mr. R. W. Perks, 1062, 1064, 1065, 1079; Mr. Jesse Collings, 1063; Sir F. S. Powell, 1065; Mr. J. Brigg, 1069; Mr. J. W. Sidebotham, 1071; Mr. R. Purvis, 1073; Mr. W. Woodall, 1074, 1075; Viscount Cranborne, 1075, 1076, 1078, 1079, 1086; Mr. J. H. Lewis, 1079, 1096; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 1080; Mr. Tomlinson, 1083; Sir H. Fowler, 1084, 1086, 1093; Sir Matthew White Ridley, 1090, 1093; Mr. Johnson-Ferguson, 1094; Mr. J. H. Roberts, 1097; (Division, 1098) Feb 24
2R. negatived Feb 24, 1101

Burns, Mr. John, Battersea
Army Estimates: £295,800 for Medical Establishment, Pay; Report Feb 15, 498
County Surveyors (Ireland) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 12, 367
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 680, 681, 682
Military Works Bill, In Com. Feb 22, 943
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bills, 2R. Feb 17, 631, 637, 638, 650

Burt, Mr. Thomas, Morpeth
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 650

Business of the House (see Parliament: Lords; Commons)

BUXTON, Mr. SYDNEY C., Tower Hamlets, Poplar
East London Water Bill, 2R. Feb 26, 1246
Supply
£14,980 for Colonial Services, including South Africa (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1299
£153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1288
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 1, 1363, 1374, 1387, 1388, 1389, 1398, 1399; Mar 3, 1538, 1562; Mar 4, 1652, 1669

CALDWELL, Mr. JAMES, Lanark, Mid
Beam and Otter Trawling Feb 15, 390
Icelandic Fisheries Feb 15, 391
Post Office Savings Bank Accounts Feb 15, 390
School Board Elections, Scotland Feb 15, 409; Feb 16, 512
Stornoway Mail Feb 15, 391
Supply
£16,617 for Repayment to the Local Loans Fund Feb 26, 1306
£4,500 for Temporary Commissions (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1304
Trusts (Scotland) Bill, 2R. Feb 12, 366

CAMERON, Mr. ROBERT, Durham, Houghton-le-Spring
British Troops in India, Health Feb 25, 1141
Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1045
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 4, 1664

CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN, Right Hon. Sir H., Stirling Burghs
Army Estimates
158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 345
£553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 12, 364
£1,016,400 for Works, Buildings, and Repairs Feb 19, 845, 846
Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 303, 307, 310, 312, 317
Crete, Action of British Ships Feb 22, 925
Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 765
Standing Committees, Chairmen's Panel Mar 1, 1321
Supply: Scotch Estimates Feb 15, 413
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 583, 593
Weighing Cattle, Scotland Feb 15, 389

CAMPBELL, Mr. JAMES A., Glasgow and Aberdeen Universities
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 9, 21

CAREW, Mr. J. L., Dublin, College Green
Clongorey Estate, Kildare Mar 1, 1344
Dublin Corporation Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 613
Great Northern Railway Company, Ireland Mar 4, 1591
Irish Mails Feb 11, 159
Land Commission, King's County Feb 11, 184
Lightships, Ireland Mar 4, 1577, 1578
Maryborough Gaol: James Fitzharris Feb 22, 875, 876
Slavery in Zanzibar Feb 19, 780

CARLILE, Mr. W. W., Bucks, N.
Local Taxation Account Feb 18, 727

CARSON, Right Hon. EDWARD H., Dublin University
Appointments of High Sheriffs (Ireland) Bill Feb 26, 1267
Educational Endowments, Ireland Feb 25, 1130
Land Sub-commission, Ireland Feb 18, 719
Public Works Loans, Ireland Feb 26, 1257
Solicitors (Ireland) Bill, Intro. Feb 26, 1267
Supply: £12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1277, 1280
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 3, 1552

CAVENDISH, Mr. V. C. W., Derbyshire, W.
Queen's Reign, Visit of Colonial Premiers Mar 4, 1602

CAYZER, Mr. C. W., Barrow-in-Furness
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 651, 652

CHALONER, Captain R. G. W., Wiltshire, Westbury
East India, Officers of General List Feb 16, 501

CHAMBERLAIN, MR. J. AUSTEN (Civil Lord of the Admiralty) Worcestershire, E.
Greenwich Age Pension Feb 9, 10
Naval College, Dartmouth Feb 22, 875

CHAMBERLAIN, RIGHT HON. JOSEPH (Secretary of State for the Colonies), Birmingham, W.
British Uitlander Population, Transvaal Feb 25, 1142
Cable, Canada to Australia Feb 22, 879
Colonial Premiers, Visit to London Feb 23, 978; Mar 4, 1602
Gibraltar, Drainage Works Mar 2, 1435
Jameson Raid
Cape Inquiry Feb 26, 1264
Indemnity Feb 18, 726
President Kruger's Claim Feb 22, 875; Mar 4, 1586
Judges, Transvaal Mar 4, 1610
Pilot Service, Falkland Islands Feb 23, 968
Queen's Reign, Visit of Colonial Premiers Feb 23, 978; Mar 4, 1602
Reform Prisoners, Pretoria Feb 18, 727; Feb 26, 1262
Slavery, New Hebrides Mar 2, 1434
Supply: £14,980 for Colonial Services, including South Africa (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1298
Transvaal
British Uitlander Population Feb 25, 1142
Jameson Raid (see above)
Judges Mar 4, 1610
Recent Legislation Mar 2, 1444

CHANNING, Mr. F. A., Northampton, E.
British South Africa Committee Feb 19, 783
Business of the House (Estimates)
Civil Service Feb 18, 728
Civil Service (Supplementary) Feb 22, 886
Copyholders, Ground Game Mar 2, 1433
Crete Feb 23, 982, 983; Feb 25, 1144, 1146, 1148, 1150; Feb 26, 1264, 1265
Crete
Action of British Ships Feb 22, 917
Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1500, 1501, 1504
Death of a Post Office Servant Feb 22, 873, 874
Employers' Liability Bill Feb 9, 25
Military Works Bill, In Com. Feb 22, 937, 954
Supply: £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1283, 1292; Mar 1, 1412
Sutton-in-Ashfield School Board Mar 1, 1328, 1329
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 415, 426; Feb 25, 1154; In Com. Mar 1, 1371, 1383, 1399, 1405; Mar 3, 1550; Mar 4, 1614

CHAPLIN, RIGHT HON. HENRY (President of the Local Government Board), Lincolnshire, Sleaford
Adulteration of Food Mar 1, 1341
Brisley (Norfolk) Parish Council Feb 25, 1139
Burial Grounds Mar 4, 1602, 1603
Casual Wards, Metropolis Mar 1, 1322
Children's Metropolitan Asylums Board Feb 9, 11; Feb 18, 705; Mar 4, 1588, 1589
Local Taxation Account Feb 18, 727
Manchester, "Church Ley" Feb 18, 722
Rating Commission Feb 11, 179
Vaccination Prosecutions Feb 11, 173
West Ham, Electric Light Mar 4, 1598

CHARITY COMMISSION
Parliamentary Charity Commissioner—
Mr. J. GRANT LAWSON
Marshall's Charity, Norfolk, Q. Mr. T. L. Hare; A. Mr. Grant Lawson Feb 11, 182

Chelsea Water Purchase Bill
c. Read 1° Feb 10, 69

Christchurch Inclosure Allotments Bill
l. 2R., Lord Halsbury, 1309, 1314, 1318, 1319; Lord Hobhouse, (Amendt.) 1309, 1314, 1319; Lord Herschell, 1315, 1317; Earl of Morley; 1317; Lord Thring, 1318; (Division, 1320) Mar 1
Read 2ª Mar 1, 1320

Church Patronage Transfer Bill
c. Intro., Mr. Stanley Leighton; Read 1° Feb 19, 792

Church Patronage Transfer Bill. [H.L.]
l. Pres., Archbishop of York; Read 1ª Mar 1, 1321

City of London Sewers Bill
c. 2R., Mr. C. Harrison, 140; Mr. T. Lough, 142; Sir F. Lockwood, 144, 146; Mr. J. W. Lowther, 146; Mr. W. O. Clough, 147; Mr. Alban Gibbs, 148; Sir W. Harcourt, 149; Colonel Hughes, 151; (Division, 151) Feb 11
Read 2° Feb 11, 151

CIVIL SERVICE
Supply: Estimates
Scotch, Q. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 413
Supplementary, Q. Mr. T. R. Buchanan; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 179. Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing, Mr. T. R. Buchanan, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 18, 728. Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 22, 886
Temporary Employment, Q. Mr. H. Kimber; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 862

CLANCY, Mr. J. J., Dublin County, N.
Financial Relations, Great Britain and Ireland Feb 9, 4; Feb 16, 517; Feb 23, 981

CLARKE, Sir EDWARD G., Plymouth
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 25, 1204
West India and Cape Mails Mar 4, 1609

Clerical Incomes (Taxation)
Mr. J. Round (Notice of Motion) Feb 23, 965

CLIFDEN, Viscount
Crete Feb 15, 370
Irish Mails Mar 4, 1570

CLOUGH, Mr. W. O., Portsmouth
City of London Sewers Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 147
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 2, 1535

COGHILL, Mr. D. H., Stoke-upon-Trent
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 194

COHEN, Mr. B. L., Islington, E.
Children's Metropolitan Asylums Board Feb 9, 11; Mar 4, 1588, 1589
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 692
London County Council (General Powers) Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 153

COLLINGS, RIGHT HON. JESSE (Under Secretary of State for the Home Department), Birmingham, Bordesley
Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1063
Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill, Intro. Feb 15, 415
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 635, 636, 637, 638, 642, 646, 647, 653

Colomb, Sir John C. R., Great Yarmouth
- Army Estimates
  - 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 334, 335
  - £1,016,400 for Works, Buildings, and Repairs Feb 19, 844
- Benin Expedition Feb 18, 723; Feb 22, 964
- Crete Feb 22, 888
- Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 755, 756, 761
- Royal Marine Artillery Officers Feb 22, 868

COLONIES

Secretary of State—Mr. J. Chamberlain
Under Secretary of State—Earl of Selborne

- Australasia (see that Title)
- Bermuda to Jamaica, Cable Communication, Q. General Laurie; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 170
- British
  - South Africa Company, Cost of Imperial Troops, Qs. Mr. T. Bayley, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Powell-Williams, Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 174
  - Uitlander Population, Transvaal, Q. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 25, 1142
- Cables
  - Canada to Australia, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 22, 878
  - Communication, Bermuda to Jamaica, Q. General Laurie; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 170
- Chamberlain (Mr.) and President Kruger, Q. Lord Loch; A. Earl of Selborne Feb 9, 1
- Colonial Premiers, Visit to London, Qs. Mr. J. F. Hogan, Sir G. Baden-Powell; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 23, 977. Q. Mr. V. Cavendish; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 4, 1602
- Gibraltar Drainage Works, Q. Mr. E. Robertson; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 2, 1435
- Jameson Raid
  - Cape Inquiry, Q. Mr. Bryn Roberts; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 26, 1264
  - Indemnity, Qs. Mr. James Roche, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 18, 726
  - President Kruger's Claim, Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. James Roche; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 22, 875. Q. General Russell; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 4, 1585
- Judges, Transvaal, Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 4, 1610
- Pilot Service, Falkland Islands, Q. Mr. J. W. Sidebotham; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 23, 968
- Queen's Reign
  - Colonial
    - Premiers, Visit of, Qs. Mr. J. F. Hogan, Sir G. Baden-Powell; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 23, 977. Q. Mr. V. Cavendish; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 4, 1602
    - Troops, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 1, 1331
- Recruiting Areas, Colonies, Q. Captain Pirie; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1579

[cont.

COLONIES—cont.
- Reform Prisoners, Pretoria, Qs. Mr. J. M. Maclean; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 18, 727; Feb 26, 1262
- Royal Niger Company, Qs. Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 19, 778
- Slavery, New Hebrides, Qs. Mr. S. Smith; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 2, 1433
- Transvaal
  - British Uitlander Population, Q. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 25, 1142
  - Jameson Raid (see above)
  - Judges, Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 4, 1610
  - Recent Legislation, Q. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 2, 1444
- West Indian Sugar Commission, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 155

Colston, Mr. C. E. H. A., Gloucester, Thornbury
- Army Estimates: £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 794
- Army Warrant Officers, Good Conduct Medal Feb 18, 721
- Salisbury Plain Feb 25, 1144

Colville, Mr. John, Lanark, N.E.
- Letters for Siberia Feb 25, 1137

Companies Bill

l. 2R., Earl of Dudley Feb 11, 125
Read 2^{a} and Referred to Com. Feb 11, 125

Compton, Lord Alwyne F., Beds, Biggleswade
- Army Estimates: £76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 808

Condon, Mr. T. J., Tipperary, E.
- Cullenagh Mountain, Tipperary Feb 26, 1259
- Irish Mail Service Feb 15, 393

Congested Districts Board (Ireland) (Compulsory Purchase Powers) Bill

c. Intro., Dr. R. Ambrose; Read 1° Feb 9, 27

Contracts
- Admiralty, Qs. Sir H. Vincent; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Macartney Mar 1, 1324
- Industrial Schools, Ireland, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1127
- Mails
  - Australia, Qs. Mr. J. F. Hogan; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 397; Feb 22, 867
  - Indo-China and Australia, Qs. Sir J. Leng; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 158; Mar 2, 1438

County Councils (Qualification of Women) Bill
c. Intro., Mr. W. R. Bousfield; Read 1° Feb 17, 663

County Courts (Right of Audience) Bill
l. Pres., Lord Macnaghten; Read 1ª Feb 18, 665

County Surveyors (Ireland) Amendment Bill
c. 2R., Mr. W. Johnston, 366, 367, 368; Mr. J. Atkinson, 367; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 367; Mr. J. Burns, 367; [Mr. Speaker, 368] Feb 12
Withdrawn Feb 12, 368

Courtney, Right Hon. L. H., Cornwall, Bodmin
Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1481
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 654, 656
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1155, 1208, 1211, 1212

Coventry Electric Tramways Bill
c. 2R., Sir C. Dilke Feb 22, 854
Read 2° Feb 22, 854

Cranborne, Viscount, Rochester
Army Estimates: £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 798, 802
Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1075, 1076, 1078, 1079, 1086
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 219, 220, 227; Feb 25, 1176, 1178; In Com. Mar 1, 1405, 1409; Mar 4, 1626, 1629

Crete
Action of British Ships
Mr. H. Labouchere, (Motion for Adj. of House) 890, 891, 892; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 890, 896, 897, 898, 899, 901, 926; [Mr. Speaker, 890, 892, 894, 895, 915, 916]; Mr. J. Dillon, 892, 895, 897, 898, 909; Sir W. Harcourt, 900, 901, 910, 911; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 904; Sir R. T. Reid, 906, 909, 911, 912; Mr. G. J. Goschen, 909, 910, 911; Mr. Vesey Knox, 913; Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, 915, 916; Mr. F. A. Channing, 917; Sir J. Lubbock, 918; Mr. P. J. Stanhope, 919, 920; Mr. Stuart-Wortley, 920; Mr. E. J. C. Morton, 921; Mr. C. J. Darling, 923; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 925; Sir C. Dilke, 927; (Division, 928) Feb 22
Declaration of Policy
Sir W. Harcourt, (Motion for Adj. of House) 1450, 1453, 1470, 1471, 1506, 1523, 1532; [Mr. Speaker, 1450, 1479, 1501]; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1450, 1514, 1518, 1523; Mr. Curzon, 1453, 1461, 1464, 1465, 1470, 1471, 1474, 1487, 1510; Mr. J. Dillon, 1464, 1465; Mr. T. P. O'Connor, 1472, 1474; Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, 1475, 1479; Mr. R. B. Haldane, 1479, 1484; Mr. L. Courtney, 1481;

[cont.

Crete—cont.
Declaration of Policy—cont.
Mr. H. Labouchere, 1484, 1485, 1487; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1485, 1501, 1504, 1506, 1510; Mr. T. W. Legh, 1490; Mr. H. J. Gladstone, 1491; Mr. Vicary Gibbs, 1495; Mr. F. S. Stevenson, 1497; Mr. F. A. Channing, 1500, 1501, 1504; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 1512; Mr. J. Bryce, 1513, 1514; Colonel Saunderson, 1516; Mr. J. Morley, 1526; (Motion withdrawn, 1533) Mar 2
Ministerial Statements
Earl of Dunraven, 1105; Marquess of Salisbury, 1105; Earl of Kimberley, 1107 Feb 25
Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1150, 1151, 1152, 1153; Sir W. Harcourt, 1151, 1152; Mr. P. O'Brien, 1153 Feb 25
Earl of Kimberley, 1417, 1422, 1427; Marquess of Salisbury, 1422, 1423, 1427 Mar 2
Policy of H.M.'s Government
Mr. E. J. C. Morton, (On Motion for Adj.) 500; Mr. Hanbury, 500 Feb 15
Mr. T. P. O'Connor, (Motion for Adj. of House) 518, 519, 533; [Mr. Speaker, 518, 519, 531]; Mr. J. Dillon, 523; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 524; Sir W. Harcourt, 527; Mr. H. Labouchere, 530, 531; Mr. Curzon, 531; Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, 532; (Motion withdrawn, 533) Feb 16
(For Questions see Foreign Office)

Crilly, Mr. Daniel, Mayo, N.
Distress
Belmullet Union Feb 22, 886
West of Ireland Feb 9, 16
Pawnbrokers, Ireland Feb 9, 17

Cripps, Mr. C. A., Gloucester, Stroud
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 534, 540; In Com. Mar 4, 1631

Crombie, Mr. J. W., Kincardineshire
Collisions at Sea, Fishing Boats Mar 1, 1330
South Shoal, Orkney Feb 18, 714
Trunk Telephone Line Feb 25, 1126; Mar 4 1590

CROSS, Viscount (Lord Privy Seal)
Irish Land Commission Feb 18, 666

Crown Lands, etc. (see Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues of the Crown)

Curran, Mr. T. B., Donegal, N.
Irish Mails Feb 22, 865

CURZON, Right Hon. GEORGE N. (Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs), Lancashire, S.W., Southport
- Affairs in Northern Syria Feb 18, 724, 725
- Akassa Garrison Feb 18, 709
- Alabama Claims Feb 26, 1253
- Armenia Feb 25, 1142; Mar 2, 1441, 1442
- Armenian Refugees, Cyprus Feb 12, 264
- British Trade
  - Foreign Competition Feb 15, 388
  - Liberia Feb 25, 1128
- Christian Population at Halepa Feb 11, 176
- Costa Rica Packet Case Mar 4, 1598
- Crete Feb 9, 23, 24; Feb 11, 176; Feb 12, 274, 275; Feb 15, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408; Feb 16, 513, 514, 515, 531; Feb 18, 722; Feb 19, 787, 788, 789; Feb 22, 887, 888, 889; Feb 23, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986; Feb 25, 1144, 1145, 1146, 1147, 1148, 1149, 1150; Feb 26, 1264, 1265, 1266; Mar 1, 1338, 1339, 1340; Mar 2, 1446, 1447, 1448, 1449; Mar 4, 1604, 1605, 1606, 1607
- Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1453, 1461, 1464, 1465, 1470, 1471, 1474, 1487, 1510
- Cuba Mar 1, 1347
- Cyprus, Armenian Refugees Feb 12, 264
- Dardanelles Feb 26, 1261
- Icelandic Fisheries Feb 9, 9; Feb 15, 392
- Korea Mar 1, 1326, 1327
- Liberia, British Trade Feb 25, 1128
- Lighthouses, Red Sea Feb 26, 1261
- Mission to King Menelik Feb 25, 1143
- Mussulmans in Crete Feb 18, 722, 723
- Naval Force of Powers at Constantinople Feb 18, 718
- Neutrals in Time of War Feb 25, 1124, 1125
- Ottoman Empire Reforms Feb 18, 725
- Outrage at Balliana Feb 15, 396
- Royal Niger Company Feb 19, 778, 779
- Samoa Feb 15, 398
- Slavery in Zanzibar Feb 19, 780; Feb 25, 1132
- S.S. Utopia, Claim against Owners Mar 4, 1587
- Stokes (Mr.), Execution of Feb 18, 718
- Sun Yat Sen's Detention Feb 15, 396
- Supply
  - £36,700 for British Protectorates in Uganda and Central and East Africa (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1297
  - £23,670 for Diplomatic and Consular Services (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1296, 1297
  - £1,200 for Slave Trade Services (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1299
- Tillett (Mr. Ben), Imprisonment in Belgium Mar 4, 1592
- Treatment of Prisoners at Barcelona Feb 22, 869
- Turkish Reforms Feb 12, 276
- Uganda Railway Committee Feb 15, 402

CUSTOMS, EXCISE, AND INLAND REVENUE
- Cahir Estate, Ireland, Q. Major Jameson; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1345
- Imperial Taxes, Ireland, Qs. Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Mar 4, 1612

[cont.

CUSTOMS, EXCISE, AND INLAND REVENUE—cont.
- Income Tax, Farms, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Mar 4, 1573
- Land Tax, Q. Mr. Grant Lawson; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 187. Q. Mr. J. H. Johnstone; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 16, 504. Q. Mr. G. H. Morrell; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Mar 2, 1438
- Land Tax Commissioners, Qs. Sir C. Dilke, Mr. F. S. Stevenson; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 400
- Local Taxation
  - Account, Q. Mr. W. W. Carlile; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 18, 727
  - Ireland, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 182
- Marine Insurance Policies, Stamp Duty, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 25, 1135

Daly, Mr. James, Monaghan, S.
- Land Courts, Ireland Mar 4, 1585

Dalziel, Mr. J. H., Kirkcaldy Burghs
- Army Estimates: £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 828, 839
- Financial Relations, Great Britain and Ireland Feb 18, 727
- Kirkcaldy Post Office Feb 22, 880
- Navy Estimates Feb 19, 791; Feb 22, 880, 881
- Prison-made Goods Feb 18, 715
- Supply
  - £14,980 for Colonial Services, including South Africa (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1298
  - £10 for Post Office (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1307
  - £2,030 for Register House, Edinburgh (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1275
  - £1,200 for Slave Trade Services (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1299
  - £95,434 for Teachers' Pension Fund, Ireland Feb 26, 1302

Darling, Mr. C. J., Deptford
- Crete Feb 23, 985, 986; Mar 2, 1447
- Crete, Action of British Ships Feb 22, 923
- London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 692, 693

Davies, Mr. M. Vaughan, Cardigan
- Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1024

Davies, Mr. W. Rees, Pembrokeshire
- Freeholders, Wales
  - Peasant Feb 23, 1020, 1027
  - Small Feb 9, 4
- Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 1, 1369, 1374; Mar 4, 1670

DAVITT, Mr. MICHAEL, Mayo, S.
- Dublin Corporation Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 617, 618
- Evicted Farm, Westport Feb 25, 1131
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 98
- Treason-felony Prisoners Feb 25, 1138

DEVONSHIRE, DUKE OF (Lord President of the Council)
- Home Defence and the Volunteers Feb 11, 134

DILKE, Right Hon. Sir CHARLES W., Bart., Gloucester, Forest of Dean
- Agricultural Rates Act (1896) Feb 22, 883
- Akassa Garrison Feb 18, 708
- Anglo-French Postal Convention Feb 16, 505
- Army Estimates
  - £894,000 for Clothing Establishments and Services Feb 19, 840
  - 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 327, 335, 336
  - £627,200 for Volunteer Corps, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 812
- Artillery Horses Feb 12, 264
- Business of the House
  - Estimates
    - Army Feb 15, 415
    - Civil Service Feb 18, 729
    - Navy Mar 2, 1449
  - Motions for the Adjournment of the House Feb 23, 986
- Coventry Electric Tramways Bill, 2R. Feb 22, 854
- Crete Mar 4, 1607
- Crete, Action of British Ships Feb 22, 927
- Great Eastern Railway (General Powers) Bill, 2R. Feb 22, 849, 851
- Great Northern Railway Bill, 2R. Feb 25, 1107
- Korea Mar 1, 1326
- Land Tax Commissioners Feb 15, 400
- Military Works Bill, In Com. Feb 22, 935
- Naval
  - Establishment, Pay Mar 2, 1430
  - Manœuvres, Report Mar 1, 1338
- North British Railway, 2R. Feb 22, 852
- Ordnance Store Department Feb 25, 1135
- Pauper Aliens Feb 9, 67, 68
- Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 77
- Royal Niger Company Feb 19, 778, 779
- Supply
  - £36,700 for British Protectorates in Uganda and Central and East Africa (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1297
  - £23,670 for Diplomatic and Consular Services (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1295
  - £1,200 for Slave Trade Services (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1299
  - £4,500 for Temporary Commissions (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1304
- Truck Act
  - Fines at Belfast Feb 9, 7
  - Railway Companies Feb 15, 401
- West Indian Sugar Commission Feb 11, 155

DILLON, Mr. JOHN, Mayo, E.
- Army Estimates: 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 355
- Caretakers, Ireland Mar 1, 1323, 1324
- Crete Feb 12, 275; Feb 15, 405, 407, 408; Feb 16, 523; Feb 19, 788, 789; Feb 22, 889; Feb 25, 1146, 1147, 1148, 1149; Mar 1, 1347, 1350
- Crete
  - Action of British Ships Feb 22, 892, 895, 897, 898, 909
  - Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1464, 1465
  - Mussulmans in Feb 18, 723
- Education, Ireland Feb 11, 181
- Egyptian Government, Grant in Aid Feb 15, 410
- Evicted Tenants (Ireland) Mar 4, 1590
- Financial Relations, Great Britain and Ireland Feb 11, 184; Feb 22, 884, 885
- Land Commission, Ireland Feb 26, 1251
- Listowel Board of Guardians Feb 18, 710, 711
- Loan Fund Societies, Ireland Feb 12, 277, 278; Feb 22, 861; Feb 25, 1139
- Local Taxation, Ireland Feb 11, 182
- Massereene Estate, Police Protection Feb 22, 871
- Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 745, 747; In Com. Feb 22, 941, 942, 944
- Mission to King Menelik Feb 25, 1143
- National Education Board, Ireland Feb 11, 168
- Navy Estimates
  - £507,000 Additonal Expenditure (1896-97) Feb 26, 1269, 1270
  - £5,775. 13s. for Naval Defence Act (1889) (Excess Expenditure) Feb 26, 1272, 1273
- Supply: £12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1276
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 485; Feb 23, 980; In Com. Mar 1, 1407, 1408; Mar 4, 1669

DIXON-HARTLAND, Sir F. D., Bart., Middlesex, Uxbridge
- Hampton Court Green Mar 1, 1336
- London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 681

DONELAN, Captain A. J. C., Cork, E.
- Army Horses Mar 4, 1597
- Chelsea Hospital Mar 4, 1589
- Crete Mar 4, 1605
- Cullenagh Mountain, Tipperary Feb 26, 1260
- Daunt's Rock Lightship Feb 18, 709
- Explosion, H.M.S. Howe Mar 2, 1444, 1445
- Horse-breeding Commission, Dublin Feb 22, 860
- Land Commission, Ireland Feb 23, 969
- Loan Fund Societies, Ireland Feb 22, 862; Feb 23, 975
- Mails
  - Irish Feb 22, 864, 865
  - Skibbereen and Schull Mar 2, 1445
- National Schools, Ireland Feb 22, 879
- Piers, Ireland Mar 4, 1574, 1575
- Rural Postmen, Ireland Feb 26, 1256

DOUGHTY, Mr. GEORGE, Great Grimsby
Icelandic Fisheries Feb 9, 9

DOUGLAS, Right Hon. A. AKERS- (see AKERS-DOUGLAS)

Dublin Corporation Bill
c. 2R., Mr. W. Johnston, (Motion) 70; Mr. T. Harrington, 70; [Mr. Speaker, 70] Feb 10
Mr. W. Johnston, (Motion) 151, 152; Mr. T. Harrington, 152; [Mr. Speaker, 152;] Adj. Feb 11
2R., Debate Resumed on Mr. W. Johnston's Motion: Mr. J. L. Carew, 613; [Mr. Speaker, 613, 622, 623, 624, 625]; Mr. W. Johnston, 613, 622; Mr. T. Harrington, 614, 618, 623, 624; Mr. M. Davitt, 617, 618; Mr. Sydney Gedge, 618, 620; Mr. H. C. Plunkett, 619, (Instruction) 623; Mr. H. V. Duncombe, 619, 620; Mr. J. Lowther, 620; Mr. W. Field, 622; Mr. J. C. Williams, 622, 623; (Division, 623); (Instr. withdrawn), 625 Feb 17

Dublin Port and Docks Board Bill
c. Read 2° and com. Mar 4, 1571

DUDLEY, EARL OF (Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade)
Companies Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 125

DUNCOMBE, Hon. H. V., Cumberland, Egremont
Army Estimates: £295,800 for Medical Establishment, Pay; Report Feb 15, 498
Dublin Corporation Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 619, 620
Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 96, 98, 99, 120
West Ham Electric Light Mar 4, 1597

DUNRAVEN, Earl of
Crete Feb 25, 1105

DYKE, Right Hon. Sir WILLIAM HART, Bart., Kent, Dartford
One-man Companies Mar 4, 1611
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 1, 1354, 1388; Mar 3, 1558, 1559

East India (Officers of General List)
Captain Chaloner, (Notice of Motion) Feb 16, 501
Mr. J. H. Johnstone, (Notice of Motion) Mar 2, 1429

East London Water (Purchase) Bill
c. Read 1° Feb 10, 69
2R., Mr. Sydney Buxton Feb 26, 1246
Read 2° Feb 26, 1246
Mr. J. M. Paulton, (Instruction to Com.) 1246; Colonel Lockwood, 1248; Mr. J. Bryce, 1248; (Motion Agreed to, 1249) Feb 26

EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT
Lord President—Duke of DEVONSHIRE
Vice President—Sir JOHN E. GORST

Board Schools, Financial Aid, Q. Mr. E. J. C. Morton; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 410
Castleton Wesleyan School, Q. Mr. A. E. Hutton; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 164
Certificated Teacher's Dismissal, Gawber, near Barnsley, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst Mar 4, 1587
Children's Metropolitan Asylums Board, Qs. Mr. J. G. Talbot, Mr. B. L. Cohen; As. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 9, 10. Qs. Mr. W. Hazell, Mr. J. G. Talbot; As. Mr. Ritchie, Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 18, 704
Convent and Monastery Schools, Ireland, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 26, 1259
Duke of York's Military School, Q. Mr. E. Strachey; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 12, 267
Education
  Bill, Q. Mr. J. G. Talbot; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 9, 26
  Code, Irish Certificated Teachers, Q. Mr. A. E. Hutton; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 164
  Fee Grant, Ireland, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 878
  Grant, Scotland, Q. Mr. T. Shaw; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 183
  Ireland, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 181. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 276
  Votes, Qs. Mr. T. Lough; As. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 15, 399. Q. Sir J. Fergusson; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 16, 511
Educational Endowments, Ireland, Qs. Colonel Saunderson, Mr. E. H. Carson; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1130
Elementary Schools
  Heywood, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst Mar 2, 1441
  Rating, Qs. Mr. T. Lough, Mr. J. G. Talbot; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 9, 25. Qs. Mr. Ellis Griffith, Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 12, 279
Heywood Elementary Schools, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst Mar 2, 1441
Industrial School Contracts, Ireland, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1127
National
  Education Board, Ireland, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 168
  Schools
    Ireland, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 879
    Teachers
      Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 263. Q. Sir T. Lea; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 967
      Pension Fund, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 16, 510. Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1258. Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1335. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1576

[cont.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT—cont.

- Naval
  - College, Dartmouth, Q. Sir J. S. B. Simeon; A. Mr. Austen Chamberlain Feb 22, 875
  - Instructors, Q. Mr. Gibson Bowles; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 18, 705
- Necessitous Board Schools, Qs. Mr. H. Labouchere; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 11, 186
- St. Andrew's Schools, Willesden, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 177
- St. James's School, Bradford (Yorkshire), Qs. Mr. A. E. Hutton, Mr. E. Flower; As. Sir J. Gorst Feb 15, 394
- Schools
  - Accommodation
    - Southport, Qs. Mr. H. J. Wilson; As. Sir J. Gorst Feb 16, 507
    - Wimbledon, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 167
  - Board
    - Elections, Scotland, Qs. Mr. J. Caldwell; As. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 15, 409; Feb 16, 512
    - Financial Aid, Q. Mr. E. J. C. Morton; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 410
    - Sutton-in-Ashfield, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing, Mr. H. J. Wilson; As. Sir J. Gorst Mar 1, 1328
  - Castleton Wesleyan, Q. Mr. A. E. Hutton; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 164
  - Children, Donegal, Sickness among, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1598
  - Christian Brothers, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox, Mr. W. Johnston; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 782
  - Convent and Monastery, Ireland, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 26, 1259
  - Elementary, Heywood, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst Mar 2, 1441
  - Endowment, Ireland, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 718
  - Industrial (Ireland), Contracts, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1127
  - Military, Duke of York's, Q. Mr. E. Strachey; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 12, 267
  - National Teachers, Ireland (see National above)
  - Necessitous Board, Qs. Mr. H. Labouchere; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 11, 186
  - Premises, Q. Mr. A. E. Hutton; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 165
  - St. Andrew's, Willesden, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 177
  - St. James's, Bradford (Yorkshire), Qs. Mr. A. E. Hutton, Mr. E. Flower; As. Sir J. Gorst Feb 15, 394
  - Science and Art, of, Ireland, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 878
  - Teachers' Superannuation, Q. Mr. R. G. Verney; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Mar 2, 1445
  - Voluntary
    - Bill, Evening Continuation, Q. Mr. H. Hobhouse; A. Sir J. Gorst Mar 4, 1583
    - Bills, Q. Mr. J. Brigg; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 25, 1136
    - Rates, Public Companies, Q. Sir J. Fergusson; A. Sir R. Webster Feb 22, 881
    - Rating, Q. Mr. C. Harrison; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 413
    - Scotland, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 16, 516

[cont.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT—cont.

- Scottish Universities Grant, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 11, 153
- Southport, School Accommodation, Qs. Mr. H. J. Wilson; As. Sir J. Gorst Feb 16, 507
- Sutton-in-Ashfield School Board, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing, Mr. H. J. Wilson; As. Sir J. Gorst Mar 1, 1328
- Teachers
  - Irish Certificated, Education Code, Q. Mr. A. E. Hutton; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 164
  - National School, Ireland (see above)
- University
  - Colleges, Government Grant, Q. Sir W. Houldsworth; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 22, 871. Qs. Sir J. Leng, Mr. J. C. Williams; As. Mr. Hanbury Mar 2, 1440
  - Extension, Annual Grant, Q. Sir J. R. Mowbray; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Mar 4, 1581
- Voluntary Schools Bill, Qs. Mr. J. A. Campbell, Mr. J. W. Mellor; As. Sir M. Hicks Beach, Sir R. Webster Feb 9, 21. Q. Colonel Milward; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 178. Qs. Major Rasch, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 23, 980. Q. Mr. J. Rankin; A. Sir J. Gorst Mar 2, 1435
  (For Debate see Title of Bill)
- Voluntary Schools
  - Bill, Evening Continuation Schools, Q. Mr. H. Hobhouse; A. Sir J. Gorst Mar 4, 1583
  - Bills, Q. Mr. J. Brigg; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 25, 1136
  - Rates, Public Companies, Q. Sir J. Fergusson; A. Sir R. Webster Feb 22, 881
  - Rating, Q. Mr. C. Harrison; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 413
  - Scotland, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 16, 516
- Wimbledon, School Accommodation, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 167

EGERTON, Hon. A. DE TATTON, Cheshire, Knutsford

- Midwives Registration Bill, Intro. Feb 9, 27; Feb 12, 368

ELLIS, Mr. JOHN EDWARD, Nottingham, Rushcliffe

- Crete Feb 16, 513; Feb 19, 789
- Great Northern Railway Bill, 2R. Feb 25, 1108
- Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1229

ELLIS, Mr. T. E., Merionethshire

- Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1031, 1032

ENGLEDOW, Mr. C. J., Kildare, N.

- Land Commission
  - Ireland Feb 26, 1251
  - Kildare Applications Feb 11, 159

Established Church (England and Wales)
Mr. S. Smith, (Motion) 27, 45; Mr. E. J. C. Morton, 38, 43; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 42, 43, 45; Mr. J. C. Williams, 50; Mr. J. H. Roberts, 59; Mr. J. Lowles, 60; (Division, 60) Feb 9

Estates Tail Bill
c. Intro., Mr. A. Hopkinson; Read 1° Feb 17, 663

Evans, Mr. S. T., Glamorgan, Mid
Sitting of the House, Ash Wednesday Mar 2, 1533
Supply: £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1290, 1293
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 1, 1365, 1367, 1369, 1371, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1392, 1402, 1407, 1409; Mar 2, 1535; Mar 3, 1540, 1541, 1543, 1544, 1550, 1552, 1563, 1564; Mar 4, 1668, 1669

Farquharson, Dr. Robert, Aberdeenshire, W.
Army Estimates
  £295,800 for Medical Establishment, Pay; Report Feb 15, 495
  £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 840
Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 318
Infectious Diseases, Metropolis Feb 22, 858
London County Council (General Powers) Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 152
Supply: Army Estimates Feb 15, 414

Fenwick, Mr. Charles, Northumberland, Wansbeck
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 641, 643

Ferguson, Mr. J. E. Johnson- (see Johnson-Ferguson)

Fergusson, Right Hon. Sir James, Bart., Manchester, N.E.
Army Estimates
  158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 333
  £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 795
Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 316, 317
Education Vote Feb 16, 511
Indian Famine Feb 18, 704
Voluntary School Rates, Public Companies Feb 22, 881
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 4, 1644

Field, Admiral Edward, Sussex, Eastbourne
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 696
Nelson's Enchantress, Stage Play Feb 18, 714, 715
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 451

Field, Mr. W., Dublin, St. Patrick
Bray Harbour, Fog Bell Feb 9, 15
Daunt's Rock Lightship Feb 9, 15
Dublin Corporation Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 622
Education, Ireland Feb 11, 181; Feb 12, 276
Members of Parliament, Free Railway Passes Feb 12, 276
Outrage at Balliana Feb 15, 396
Private
  Bill Legislation Feb 11, 181
  Lunatic Asylums Feb 15, 412; Mar 2, 1440

Financial Relations between Great Britain and Ireland
Mr. J. J. Clancy, (Notice of Motion) Feb 9, 4
Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 11, 184. Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 12, 279. Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox, Mr. J. J. Clancy; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 16, 516. Q. Mr. J. H. Dalziel; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 18, 727. Qs. Mr. J. Redmond, Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. A. O'Connor, Mr. J. Morley; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 22, 884. Q. Mr. J. J. Clancy; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 23, 981

FINLAY, Sir R. B. (Solicitor General), Inverness Burghs
Preferential Payment in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 86
Supply: £153,044 for Public Education in England and Wales (Supplementary) Mar 1, 1413
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 426, 430, 434, 439, 440; Feb 16, 568; Feb 25, 1223, 1224, 1225, 1227; In Com. Mar 1, 1390, 1409; Mar 3, 1538, 1539, 1540

Fison, Mr. F. W., York, W.R., Doncaster
Great Northern Railway Bill, 2R. Feb 25, 1109, 1115

FitzGerald, Sir R. U. Penrose, Bart. Cambridge
Army Estimates: £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 828

FitzWygram, General Sir F. W. J., Bart., Hants, Fareham
Army Estimates
  158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 342
  £76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 808

Flower, Mr. Ernest, Bradford, W.
St. James's Schools, Bradford, Yorkshire Feb 15, 395

Flynn, Mr. J. C., Cork County, N.
Army Estimates
  £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 828, 830, 840; Report Feb 22, 961, 962
  £639,000 for Transport and Remounts Feb 19, 824, 825, 826, 827; Report Feb 22, 961
Army Horses Mar 4, 1597
British South Africa Committee Feb 18, 719
Christian Population at Halepa Feb 11, 176
Clonbain "Whiteboy" Case Feb 15, 411; Feb 16, 511
Consecration of Bishop of Killaloe Feb 9, 17
Crete Feb 11, 176; Feb 12, 274; Feb 16, 514; Feb 25, 1148, 1149; Feb 26, 1264; Mar 4, 1604, 1605
Daunt's Rock Lightship Feb 9, 15
Horse-breeding Commission, Dublin Feb 22, 860
Irish Lights Commissioners Feb 11, 158
Listowel Board of Guardians Feb 18, 709, 710
Military Works Bill, In Com. Feb 22, 940, 945, 959
National School Teachers, Ireland
  Character and Salaries Feb 12, 263
  Pension Fund Mar 1, 1335
Naval Pensioner: Devine (John) Feb 22, 874
Parish Records, Ireland Feb 9, 11
Parliamentary Debates Feb 11, 166
Public Works Loan, Ireland Feb 26, 1257
Rabies, M'Govern's Treatment Feb 11, 157
Slaughter of Cattle, Ireland Feb 11, 162; Feb 12, 268
Supply
  £12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses Feb 26, 1281
  £95,434 for Teachers' Pension Fund, Ireland Feb 26, 1302
Vaccination Act, Ireland Feb 25, 1136

Food Supplies, United Kingdom
Mr. H. Seton-Karr, (Notice of Motion) Mar 2, 1429

FOREIGN OFFICE

Secretary of State—Marquess of Salisbury
Under Secretary of State—Mr. G. N. Curzon

Affairs in Northern Syria, Qs. Mr. J. Bryce; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 724
Akassa Garrison, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 708
Alabama Claims, Qs. Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 26, 1253
Armenia, Q. Mr. J. Bryce; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1142. Qs. Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Curzon Mar 2, 1441
Armenian Refugees, Cyprus, Q. Mr. Bryn Roberts; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 12, 264
Balliana, Reported Outrage at, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 396
British Trade
  Foreign Competition, Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 388
  Liberia, Qs. Sir G. Baden-Powell; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1128
Christian Population at Halepa, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 11, 176
Constantinople, Naval Force of Powers at, Q. Mr. F. S. Stevenson; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 718

[cont.

FOREIGN OFFICE—cont.
Costa Rica Packet Case, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Curzon Mar 4, 1598
Crete, Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. J. Lowther, Mr. F. S. Stevenson; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 9, 22. Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 11, 176. Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn, Mr. F. S. Stevenson, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 12, 274. Qs. Earl of Kimberley, Viscount Clifden; As. Marquess of Salisbury Feb 15, 369. Qs. Mr. F. S. Stevenson, Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. C. J. Monk, Mr. H. Labouchere, Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. J. O'Kelly, Sir W. Harcourt, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. Gibson Bowles; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Curzon, Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 404. Qs. Mr. J. O'Kelly, Sir W. Harcourt, Mr. J. Ellis, Mr. J. C. Flynn, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. Hedderwick; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Curzon Feb 16, 512. Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 722. Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. J. Lowther, Mr. T. W. Legh, Mr. Gibson Bowles, Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. J. Ellis; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Curzon Feb 19, 786. Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. F. S. Stevenson, Sir J. Colomb, Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. J. Bryce, Mr. H. Labouchere; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Curzon Feb 22, 887. Qs. Mr. Gibson Bowles, Mr. F. S. Stevenson, Mr. F. A. Channing, Sir W. Harcourt, Mr. T. Bayley, Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. C. J. Darling; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Curzon, Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 23, 982. Q. Earl of Dunraven; A. Marquess of Salisbury; [Obs. Earl of Kimberley;] Feb 25, 1105. Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing, Mr. F. S. Stevenson, Sir H. Havelock-Allan, Mr. J. H. Roberts, Mr. H. J. Wilson, Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. D. F. Goddard, Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. H. Labouchere, Mr. J. Bryce, Mr. J. C. Flynn, Dr. Tanner, Mr. T. Bayley; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Curzon, Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 25, 1144. Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing, Mr. J. C. Flynn, Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 26, 1264. Qs. Mr. J. Bryce, Mr. H. Labouchere, Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; As. Mr. Curzon Mar 1, 1338. Qs. Mr. Gibson Bowles, Sir E. T. Gourley, Mr. Bryn Roberts, Mr. C. J. Darling, Mr. H. Labouchere, Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett; As. Mr. Curzon, Mr. G. J. Goschen Mar 2, 1446. Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn, Captain Donelan, Mr. J. Lowther, Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Sir W. Harcourt, Sir C. Dilke; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Curzon, Mr. A. J. Balfour Mar 4, 1604
  (For Debates see Title Crete)
Cuba, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Curzon Mar 1, 1346
Cyprus, Armenian Refugees, Q. Mr. Bryn Roberts; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 12, 264
Dardanelles, Qs. Mr. Bryn Roberts, Mr. J. Bryce; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 26, 1260
Egyptian Government, Grant in Aid, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 15, 410
Icelandic Fisheries, Qs. Mr. C. H. Wilson, Mr. G. Doughty, Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Ritchie, Mr. G. Curzon Feb 9, 8. Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 391

[cont.

FOREIGN OFFICE—cont.
Korea, Qs. Sir C. Dilke, Mr. R. McKenna; As. Mr. Curzon Mar 1, 1326
Liberia, British Trade, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1128
Lighthouses, Red Sea, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 26, 1261
Mission to King Menelik, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. J. M. Maclean; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1143
Mussulmans in Crete, Qs. Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 722
Neutrals in Time of War, Qs. Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1124
Ottoman Empire, Reforms, Q. Mr. C. J. Monk; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 725
Outrage at Balliana, Reported, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 396
Royal Niger Company, Qs. Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 19, 778
Samoa, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 398
Slavery in Zanzibar, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 19, 780. Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1131
S.S. Utopia, Claim against Owners, Q. Mr. J. G. A. Baird; A. Mr. Curzon Mar 4, 1587
Stokes (Mr.), Execution of, Q. Mr. H. D. Greene; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 717
Sun Yat Sen's Detention, Q. Sir E. T. Gourley; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 396
Tillet (Mr. Ben), Imprisonment in Belgium, Q. Mr. H. Broadhurst; A. Mr. Curzon Mar 4, 1592
Treatment of Prisoners at Barcelona, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 22, 868
Turkish Reforms, Q. Mr. F. S. Stevenson; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 12, 276
Uganda Railway Committee, Qs. Mr. R. W. Perks; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 402
Zanzibar, Slavery in, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 19, 780. Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 25, 1131

Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill
c. Intro., Mr. Ritchie; Read 1° Mar 4, 1676

FORWOOD, Right Hon. Sir A. B., Bart., Lancashire, S.W., Ormskirk
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 559, 560

FOSTER, Mr. H. S., Suffolk, Lowestoft
Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee Bill Feb 25, 1116, 1121, 1122
Nelson's Enchantress, Stage Play Feb 18, 714

FOSTER, Sir B. WALTER, Derby, Ilkeston
West Bromwich Guardians Feb 19, 780, 781

FOWLER, Right Hon. Sir H. H., Wolverhampton, E.
Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1084, 1086, 1093
Crete Mar 1, 1350
Judicature Acts Feb 23, 1011, 1013
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 220; Feb 25, 1214, 1216, 1221; In Com. Mar 1, 1357, 1364, 1380, 1381, 1382; Mar 4, 1638, 1639, 1663

GALLOWAY, Mr. W. J., Manchester, S.W.
Army Estimates: 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 337, 344, 345
Friendly Societies, Rules Feb 16, 509
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 655, 656

Gambling in Options and Futures
Lord Stanley of Alderley, 125, 131; Marquess of Salisbury, 130, 131; Earl of Selborne, 131 Feb 11

GEDGE, Mr. SYDNEY, Walsall
Cordite, H.M. Ships Mar 4, 1579
Dublin Corporation Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 618, 620
Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 89
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1154; In Com. Mar 1, 1401; Mar 3, 1540

GEORGE, Mr. D. LLOYD (see LLOYD-GEORGE)

GIBBS, Hon. ALBAN G. H., London, City
Archdeaconry of London (Additional Endowments) Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1101
City of London Sewers Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 148

GIBBS, Hon. VICARY, Herts, St. Albans
Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1495
Post Office Establishments Feb 9, 7
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1167

GILHOOLY, Mr. J., Cork County, W.
Agricultural Improvements, Ireland Feb 25, 1133, 1134
Army Estimates: £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 832
Fishery Pier, Baltimore Feb 22, 870
Illegal Trawling, Bantry Bay Feb 12, 267
Mail Delivery, Cork Feb 18, 711
Military Works Bill, In Com. Feb 22, 938
Police Patrol, Skibbereen Feb 23, 968
Telegraph Facilities, Drinagh, Cork Feb 25, 1123

GLADSTONE, Right Hon. HERBERT J., Leeds, W.
Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1491

GODDARD, Mr. D. F., Ipswich
Crete Feb 25, 1146
Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 742; In Com. Feb 22, 934, 942
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1183, 1184; In Com. Mar 1, 1354, 1371; Mar 3, 1549

GODSON, Mr. A. F., Kidderminster
Imported Woollen Goods from India Feb 9, 26

Gold and Silver Plate Licences Bill
c. Withdrawn Mar 2, 1429

Goldsworthy, General W. T., Hammersmith
- Army Estimates: £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 836

Gordon, Mr. J. E., Elgin and Nairn
- Post Office Letter Weights Feb 18, 707

GORST, Right Hon. Sir JOHN E. (Vice President of the Council on Education), Cambridge University
- Castleton Wesleyan School Feb 11, 164
- Certificated Teacher's Dismissal, Gawber, near Barnsley Mar 4, 1588
- Education
  - Code, Irish Certificated Teachers Feb 11, 165
  - Vote Feb 16, 511
- Elementary Schools, Heywood Mar 2, 1441
- St. Andrew's School, Willesden Feb 11, 177
- St. James's School, Bradford (Yorkshire) Feb 15, 395
- School
  - Accommodation
    - Southport Feb 16, 507
    - Wimbledon Feb 11, 167
  - Premises Feb 11, 166
- Supply: £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1286, 1290
- Sutton-in-Ashfield School Board Mar 1, 1329
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 482, 485; Feb 16, 568; Feb 25, 1137; In Com. Mar 1, 1403; Mar 2, 1435; Mar 4, 1664
- Voluntary Schools Bill, Evening Continuation Classes Mar 4, 1583

GOSCHEN, Right Hon. GEORGE J. (First Lord of the Admiralty), St. George's, Hanover Square
- Anglo-French Postal Convention Feb 16, 505
- Benin Expedition Feb 18, 723; Feb 22, 964
- Business of the House: Supply
  - Naval Estimates Mar 2, 1449
  - Naval Estimates (Supplementary) Feb 19, 791
- Crete Mar 2, 1447
- Crete, Action of British Ships Feb 22, 909, 910, 911
- Lee-Metford Rifle, Royal Naval Reserve Feb 11, 154
- Military Works Bill, In Com Feb 22, 946
- Naval
  - Instructions Feb 18, 706
  - Manœuvres, Report Mar 1, 1338
  - Shipwrights Feb 11, 165
- Navy Estimates: £507,000 Additional Expenditure (1896-97) Feb 26, 1270, 1271
- Ordnance Store Department Feb 9, 15
- Patriotic Fund Feb 16, 504
- Rams, Warships Feb 18, 706
- Royal Marine Artillery Officers Feb 22, 868

Goulding, Mr. E. A., Wilts, Devizes
- Salisbury Plain, Tenant Farmers Mar 4, 1586

Gourley, Sir Edward T., Sunderland
- Army Estimates: £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 793
- Crete Mar 2, 1446
- Discharge of Seamen, Foreign Ports Mar 2, 1443
- North Eastern Railway Dispute Mar 1, 1344
- Sun Yat Sen's Detention Feb 15, 396

Grand Junction Water (Purchase) Bill
- c. Read 1° Feb 10, 69

Gray, Mr. Ernest, West Ham, N.
- Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1184; In Com. Mar 1, 1369, 1398, 1399; Mar 4, 1624

Great Eastern Railway (General Powers) Bill
- c. 2R., Sir C. Dilke, 849, 851; Mr. J. W. Lowther, 851, 852 Feb 22
- Read 2° Feb 22, 852

Great Northern Railway Bill
- c. 2R., Sir C. Dilke, 1107; Mr. J. E. Ellis, 1108; Mr. F. W. Fison, 1109, 1115; Mr. A. O'Connor, 1111, 1114; Mr. C. T. Murdoch, 1114; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 1114; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 1115 Feb 25
- Read 2° Feb 25, 1115

Green, Mr. W. D., Wednesbury
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 210

Greene, Mr. H. D., Shrewsbury
- Stokes (Mr.), Execution of Feb 18, 717

Griffith-Boscawen, Mr. A. S. T., Kent, Tunbridge
- Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1056, 1057, 1058, 1064
- Locomotives on Highways Bill, Intro. Feb 9, 27
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 119
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 246

Griffith, Mr. Ellis J., Anglesey
- Elementary Schools, Rating Feb 12, 279
- Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1035
- Voluntary Schools Bill, Feb 25, 1153; In Com. Mar 1, 1365, 1372, 1385; Mar 3, 1562; Mar 4, 1614

Guards (The) in the Mediterranean
- OnMotion, That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair; Debate Resumed upon Colonel Lockwood's Amendment: Sir A. F. Acland-Hood, 280, 292, 294; Colonel Kenyon-Slaney, 286, 297; Mr. Brodrick, 291, 292, 294, 297, 303, 310; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 294; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 303, 307, 310, 312, 317; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 311, 312; Sir J. Fergusson, 316, 317; Colonel Blundell, 317; Dr. Farquharson, 318; Mr. Powell-Williams, 318; (Motion Agreed to, 319) Feb 12

GULL, Sir W. CAMERON, Bart., Devon, Barnstaple
- Harbour Accommodation, Devon and Cornwall Feb 22, 856

HALDANE, Mr. R. B., Haddington
- Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1479, 1484
- Trusts (Scotland) Bill, 2R. Feb 12, 365
- Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 1, 1360

HALSBURY, LORD (Lord Chancellor)
- Christchurch Inclosure Allotments Bill, 2R. Mar 1, 1309, 1314, 1318, 1319
- Dismissal of Mr. John Bull Feb 15, 380
- Land Transfer Bill, 2R. Mar 4, 1566

HAMILTON, RIGHT HON. LORD, GEORGE F. (Secretary of State for India), Middlesex, Ealing
- Agricultural Bank, India Feb 11, 156
- Army Medical Service Feb 18, 726
- Bombay
  - Exchange Compensation, Deputy Postmaster Feb 11, 155
  - Peishwa's Estate Feb 11, 156
- British Troops in India, Health of Feb 25, 1141; Mar 1, 1340
- Calcutta, Imperial Museum Mar 4, 1583
- Exchange Compensation, Deputy Postmaster, Bombay Feb 11, 155
- Imperial Museum, Calcutta Mar 4, 1583
- India
  - Agricultural Bank Feb 11, 156
  - Cash Balances Mar 2, 1439
  - Council Mar 4, 1593
  - Enteric Fever Mar 4, 1586
  - Famine
    - Godavery Canal Mar 1, 1334
    - Mortality Feb 11, 177; Feb 18, 704; Feb 23, 979; Mar 4, 1592, 1593
    - Silver Hoards Feb 9, 20
  - Loan Feb 15, 409
  - Mints Feb 25, 1138
  - Staff Corps Feb 9, 6
  - Tea Industry Feb 19, 786
  - Troops, Health of British, in Feb 18, 703; Feb 25, 1141; Mar 1, 1340
- North German Lloyd Steamers Feb 15, 395, 396
- Peishwa's Estate, Bombay Feb 11, 156
- Wreck, Indian Troopship Warren Hastings Mar 1, 1323

HANBURY, RIGHT HON. ROBERT W. (Financial Secretary to the Treasury), Preston
- Agricultural Improvements, Ireland Feb 25, 1133
- American Mail Service Mar 1, 1331
- Australian Mail Contract Feb 15, 397; Feb 22, 867
- Bogus Telegrams, Ireland Feb 26, 1258
- Bridgetown Abbey, Cork Feb 15, 391
- Buckie, Connection with Trunk Telephone Lines Mar 1, 1347

[cont.

HANBURY, Right Hon. ROBERT W.—cont.
- Cavan Leitrim and Roscommon Light Railway Feb 9, 19
- Civil Service
  - Estimates, Supplementary Feb 11, 179
  - Temporary Employment Feb 22, 863
- Crete Feb 15, 500
- Death of a Post Office Servant Feb 22, 873
- Education Fee Grant, Ireland Feb 22, 878
- Friendly Societies Rules Feb 16, 510
- German-made Tins Feb 16, 503
- High Sheriffs Feb 12, 271
- Indian Mail Service Feb 23, 972
- Indo-China and Australian Mail Contracts Feb 11, 159; Mar 2, 1439
- Kirkcaldy Post Office Feb 22, 880
- Land
  - Commission Feb 26, 1251
  - Tax Commissioners Feb 15, 400
- Letters for Siberia Feb 25, 1137
- Letter-weights Feb 18, 707
- Limerick, Canal and Shannon Service Mar 4, 1594
- Mail Service
  - American Mar 1, 1331
  - Australian Contract Feb 15, 397; Feb 22, 867
  - Cork Delivery Feb 18, 711
  - India, China, and Australian Contracts Feb 11, 159; Mar 2, 1439
  - Indian Feb 23, 972
  - Irish Feb 11, 160, 161, 162; Feb 15, 393; Feb 19, 782; Feb 22, 864, 865, 866; Feb 23, 979; Feb 25, 1136; Mar 1, 1325
  - Skibbereen and Schull Mar 2, 1445
  - Stornoway Feb 9, 22; Feb 15, 391
  - West India and Cape Mar 4, 1609
- Manchester Post Office Feb 19, 786
- Money Orders
  - Commission Mar 1, 1326
  - Post Office Feb 23, 966, 967
  - Service, Benevolent Societies Feb 19, 785
- National Teachers' Fund, Ireland Feb 26, 1259
- Parcels Post, Inland Feb 22, 872
- Parliamentary
  - Debates Feb 11, 166
  - Publications, Members' Postage Feb 15, 399
- Pattern Post, Rubber Stamps Feb 11, 171; Feb 15, 390
- Postal Accommodation, Leitrim Feb 23, 970
- Post Office
  - Death of a Servant Feb 22, 873
  - Establishments Feb 9, 7; Feb 19, 791
  - Kirkcaldy Feb 22, 880
  - Letter Weights Feb 18, 707
  - Manchester Feb 19, 786
  - Money Orders Feb 23, 966, 967
  - Savings Bank Accounts Feb 15, 391
  - Sorters Feb 22, 881
- Public Works Loans, Ireland Feb 26, 1257
- Railway Traffic, England and Ireland Mar 1, 1343
- Registered Letter Envelopes Feb 11, 168, 169; Feb 16, 515
- Rural Postmen, Ireland Feb 26, 1256
- Schools of Science and Art, Ireland Feb 22, 878
- Service Money Orders, Benevolent Societies Feb 19, 785
- Skibbereen and Schull Mails Mar 2, 1445
- Statutes, Queen's Printers Feb 25, 1125
- Stornoway Mails Feb 9, 22; Feb 15, 391

[cont.

HANBURY, Right Hon. ROBERT W.—cont.
Supply
  £10 for County Courts (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1275
  £6,800 for Inland Revenue (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1307
  £10 for Post Office (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1307
  £20,110 for Public Education, Ireland (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1294, 1295
  £2,030 for Register House, Edinburgh (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1275
  £16,617 for Repayment to the Local Loans Fund Feb 26, 1305
  £25,000 for Stationery and Printing (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1274
  £95,434 for Teachers' Pension Fund, Ireland Feb 26, 1303
  £4,500 for Temporary Commissions (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1305
  £16,304 for Treasury Chest Fund Feb 26, 1299
Telegrams, Bogus Feb 26, 1258
Telegraph
  Extensions, Scotland Feb 15, 402, 403
  Facilities, Drinagh, Cork Feb 25, 1123
Telephone
  Buckie, Connection with Trunk Lines Mar 1, 1347
  System in England Mar 1, 1342, 1343
  Trunk Lines, Scotland Feb 12, 273 ; Feb 25, 1126 ; Mar 1, 1345 ; Mar 4, 1590
University College Mar 2, 1440
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 546, 556
Volunteer Drill Halls, Aberdeen Feb 23, 976

HARCOURT, Right Hon. Sir WILLIAM VERNON, Monmouthshire, W.
Agricultural Rates Act (1896) Feb 22, 883
City of London Sewers Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 149
Crete Feb 15, 406, 407 ; Feb 16, 513, 527 ; Feb 23, 983 ; Feb 25, 1151, 1152 ; Mar 1, 1348, 1351 ; Mar 4, 1606, 1607
Crete
  Action of British Ships Feb 22, 900, 901, 910, 911
  Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1450, 1453, 1470, 1471, 1506, 1523, 1532
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 698, 699
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 661
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 196 ; 2R. Feb 15, 446 ; Feb 16, 594 ; Feb 25, 1228

HARE, Mr. T. L., Norfolk, S.W.
Marshall's Charity, Norfolk Feb 11, 182

HARRINGTON, Mr. TIMOTHY, Dublin, Harbour
Dublin Corporation Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 70 ; Feb 11, 152 ; Feb 17, 614, 618, 623, 624

HARRIS, LORD (Lord-in-Waiting)
Local Government (Elections) Bill, 2R. Feb 9, 3
Retirement of Vestrymen and Auditors (London) Bill, 2R. Mar 4, 1566

HARRISON, Mr. CHARLES, Plymouth
City of London Sewers Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 140
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 686
Military Works Bill, In Com. Feb 22, 945, 953, 959
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 3, 1548 ; Mar 4, 1656
Voluntary Schools Rating Feb 15, 413

HAVELOCK-ALLAN, General Sir H. M., Bart., Durham, S.E.
Crete Feb 25, 1145

HAZELL, Mr. WALTER, Leicester
Children's Metropolitan Asylums Board Feb 18, 704
Supply : £30,151 for Trustee Savings Bank and Friendly Societies Deficiency (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1300
Verminous Persons Bill, Intro. Mar 1, 1416
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 4, 1653

HEATON, Mr. J. HENNIKER, Canterbury
Lighthouses, Red Sea Feb 26, 1261
Maidstone Assizes Feb 18, 706
Oyster Culture Feb 25, 1132
Telephone System Mar 1, 1341, 1342

HEDDERWICK, Mr. T. C. H., Wick Burghs
Crete Feb 16, 514

HERMON-HODGE, Mr. R. T., Oxfordshire, Henley
Army Estimates : £76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 803

HERSCHELL, Lord
Christchurch Inclosure Allotments Bill, 2R. Mar 1, 1315, 1317
Dismissal of Mr. John Bull Feb 15, 380
Land Transfer Bill, 2R. Mar 4, 1568
Local Government (Elections) Bill, 2R. Feb 9, 2 ; Feb 11, 125
Marine Insurance Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 665

HICKMAN, Sir A., Wolverhampton, W.
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 628, 629, 639, 661

Highways Bill
c. Intro., Mr. C. Bill ; Read 1° Feb 9, 27

HOBHOUSE, Lord
Christchurch Inclosure Allotments Bill, 2R. Mar 1, 1309, 1314, 1319

HOBHOUSE, Mr. HENRY, Somerset, E.
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 4, 1637, 1659
Voluntary Schools Bill, Evening Continuation Schools Mar 4, 1583

Hogan, Mr. J. F., Tipperary, Mid
American Mail Service Mar 1, 1331
Australian Mail Contract Feb 15, 397; Feb 22, 867
Cable, Canada to Australia Feb 22, 878
Colonial Premiers, Visit to London Feb 23, 977
Costa Rica Packet Case Mar 4, 1598
Queen's Reign, Colonial Troops Mar 1, 1331
Royal Engineers, Discharge Feb 15, 398
Samoa Feb 15, 398

Holland, Hon. L. R., Tower Hamlets, Bow and Bromley
Money Orders, Commission Mar 1, 1326

HOME DEPARTMENT

Secretary of State—Sir M. W. Ridley
Under Secretary of State—Mr. Jesse Collings
Assizes
  Essex, Trial of William Walden, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 11, 180
  Lewes, Conviction for Fraud, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 26, 1249
  Maidstone, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 706
  Winchester, Trial for Bigamy, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 388
Bishop of Peterborough, Confirmation of Election, Q. Mr. Bryn Roberts; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 26, 1255
Carbide of Calcium, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 721
Carlisle Gaol, Death of Prisoner, Q. Captain Bagot; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 11, 166
Central Criminal Court, Regina v. Greatorex-Smith, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 19, 777
Commutation of Sentence: James Bate, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 707
Copyholders, Ground Game, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 2, 1433
Employment of a Deaf Mute, Belfast, Q. Colonel McCalmont; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 22, 858
Essex Assizes, Trial of William Walden, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 11, 180
Felon Convicts, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 16, 508; Feb 18, 724
Fraudulent Enlistment: George Smith, Q. Mr. T. Lough; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 392
Holloway Prison: Lady Scott, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1143
Jameson Raid, Prisoners at Holloway, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 21
Lewes Assizes, Conviction for Fraud, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 26, 1249

HOME DEPARTMENT—cont.
Maidstone Assizes, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 706
Murder on London and South Western Railway, Q. Mr. J. Bailey; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 22, 879
National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 2, 1440
Nelson's Enchantress, Stage Play, Qs. Admiral Field, Mr. H. S. Foster; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 714
Penal Servitude, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 2, 1431
Petroleum, Select Committee, Q. Mr. J. McKillop; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 19, 789
Police
  Clothing, Metropolitan, Q. Sir L. McIver; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1134
  Constable Murray: Conviction for Perjury, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 23, 976
Prisons
  Clerks, Parliamentary Elections, Q. Mr. S. Woods; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 4, 1600
  Holloway, Lady Scott in, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1143
  Officers, Q. Lord Balcarres; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 26, 1253
Prisoners
  Death of, Carlisle Gaol, Q. Captain Bagot; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 11, 166
  Discharged, Re-arrest of, Q. Mr. S. Smith; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 2, 1434
  Holloway: Jameson Raid, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 21
  Treason-felony, Q. Mr. M. Davitt; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1138
Private Lunatic Asylums, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 412
Re-arrest of Discharged Prisoners, Q. Mr. S. Smith; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 2, 1434
Servants' Homes and Agencies, Q. Mr. S. Woods; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 4, 1600
Street Organ Grinders, Qs. Mr. J. A. Jacoby, Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, Mr. R. Pierpoint; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 13
Treason-felony Prisoners, Q. Mr. M. Davitt; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1138
Truck Act
  Fines, Q. Mr. S. Woods; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1140
  Fines at Belfast, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 7
  Metropolitan District Railway Company, Q. Mr. T. Lough; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 4, 1595
  Railway Companies, Qs. Mr. R. W. Perks, Sir C. Dilke; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 400. Qs. Mr. S. Woods, Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), Sir H. Vincent, Mr. J. Samuel, Mr. T. Lough; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 23, 972

[cont.

HOME DEPARTMENT—cont.

Vaccinations, Repeated Prosecutions, Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 16, 505
Water Trustees, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 12, 274; Feb 26, 1251
Welsh Land Commission Report, Q. Mr. J. H. Roberts; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 22, 856
Winchester Assizes, Trial for Bigamy, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 388

HOPKINSON, Mr. A., Wilts, Cricklade
Estates Tail Bill, Intro. Feb 17, 663
Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 82
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1173

HOULDSWORTH, Sir W. H., Bart., Manchester, N. W.
Lee-Metford Rifle, Manchester Volunteers Feb 25, 1135
University Colleges, Government Grant Feb 22, 871

HOWARD, Mr. J., Middlesex, Tottenham
Railway Level Crossing, Tottenham Feb 22, 877

HOWELL, Mr. W. T., Denbigh Boroughs
Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1033

HUBBARD, Hon. E., Lambeth, Brixton
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 696

HUGHES, Colonel EDWIN, Woolwich
City of London Sewers Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 151

HUMPHREYS-OWEN, Mr. A. C., Montgomeryshire
Supply: £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Mar 1, 1412
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 1, 1369, 1373

HUTTON, Mr. A. E., Yorkshire, W. R., Morley
Castleton Wesleyan School Feb 11, 164
Education Code, Irish Certificated Teachers Feb 11, 164
St. James's School, Bradford (Yorkshire) Feb 15, 394
School Premises Feb 11, 165
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 4, 1655

Importation of Foreign Manufactured Goods
Sir H. Vincent, (Notice of Motion) Feb 16, 502

INDIA
Secretary of State—Lord G. HAMILTON
Under Secretary of State—Earl OF ONSLOW
Agricultural Bank, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 11, 156

[cont.

INDIA—cont.
Army
  Health of, Qs. Major Rasch, General Russell; As. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 18, 703
  Medical Service, Qs. Mr. T. R. Buchanan; As. Mr. Powell-Williams, Lord G. Hamilton Feb 18, 725
Bombay
  Exchange Compensation, Deputy Postmaster, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 11, 155
  Peishwa's Estate, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 11, 156
Bubonic Fever, Inoculation, Q. Lord Reay; A. Earl of Onslow Feb 15, 383
Calcutta, Imperial Museum, Q. Mr. Bhownaggree; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 4, 1582
Cash Balances, Q. Mr. J. H. Roberts; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 2, 1439
Enteric Fever, Q. General Russell; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 4, 1586
Exchange Compensation, Deputy Postmaster, Bombay, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 11, 155
Famine
  Godavery Canal, Q. Mr. R. J. Price; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 1, 1334
  Grant in Aid, Q. Mr. S. Smith; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 23, 980
  Mortality, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 11, 177. Qs. Mr. R. Souttar, Sir J. Fergusson; As. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 18, 703. Q. Mr. Bhownaggree; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 23, 979. Qs. Sir W. Wedderburn, Mr. Swift MacNeill; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 4, 1592
  Silver Hoards, Q. Mr. Bhownaggree; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 9, 19
Godavery Canal, Indian Famine, Q. Mr. R. J. Price; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 1, 1334
Health of
  Army in, Qs. Major Rasch, General Russell; As. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 18, 703
  British Troops in, Q. Mr. R. Cameron; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 25, 1141. Q. Captain Pirie; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 1, 1340
Imperial Museum, Calcutta, Q. Mr. Bhownaggree; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 4, 1582
Imported Woollen Goods from, Q. Mr. A. F. Godson; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 9, 26
Indian
  Council, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 4, 1593
  Loan, Q. Mr. C. J. Monk; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 15, 409
  Mail Service, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 972
  Mints, Q. Sir H. Meysey-Thompson; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 25, 1138
  Staff Corps, Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 9, 6
  Troopship Warren Hastings, Wreck of, Qs. Mr. P. M. Thornton; As. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 1, 1323
Mail Service
  Contracts (Indo-China and Australia), Qs. Sir J. Leng; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 158; Mar 2, 1438
  Indian, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 972

[cont.

INDIA—cont.

- North German Lloyd Steamers, Qs. Mr. J. M. Maclean; As. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 15, 395
- Peishwa's Estate, Bombay Presidency, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 11, 156
- Tea Industry, Q. Sir H. S. King; A. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 19, 785
- Warren Hastings, Indian Troopship, Wreck of, Qs. Mr. P. M. Thornton; As. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 1, 1323

Industrial and Provident and Incorporated Building Societies (Purchase of Fee Simple) Bill

c. 2R., Mr. H. J. Wilson, (Motion) 1044; (House Counted out, 1044) Feb 23

IRELAND

Lord Lieutenant—Earl Cadogan
Chief Secretary—Mr. G. W. Balfour
Lord Chancellor—Lord Ashbourne
Attorney General—Mr. J. Atkinson
Solicitor General—Mr. W. Kenny

- Agricultural
  - Improvements, Qs. Mr. J. Gilhooly; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1133
  - Rate, Q. Mr. D. Kilbride; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1341
- American Passenger Traffic, Police at Queenstown, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 869
- Army Horses, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn, Captain Donelan, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Powell-Williams Mar 4, 1597
- Ballybot, Licensing Sessions, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1134
- Ballymena, Land Commission Court, Q. Mr. J. Pinkerton; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 182
- Ballyshannon Union, Clerk's Salary, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 877
- Baltimore Fishery Pier, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 870
- Bankruptcy Court, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1126; Mar 4, 1601
- Bann Drainage, Q. Sir T. Lea; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 968
- Bantry Bay, Illegal Trawling, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 267
- Barrow Drainage, Q. Mr. D. Sullivan; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1327
- Belfast
  - Employment of Deaf Mute, Q. Colonel McCalmont; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 22, 858
  - Fines at (Truck Act), Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 7
  - Police
    - Acting Sergeants, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 273
    - Musgrave Street Barracks, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 9, 13

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

- Belmullet Union, Distress, Q. Mr. D. Crilly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 886
- Board of Guardians, Listowel, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 709
- Bog Slide, Kerry, Q. Mr. James Roche; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 16, 505
- Bogus Telegrams, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1258
- Bray Harbour, Fog Bell, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15
- Bridgetown Abbey, Cork, Q. Mr. W. Abraham (Cork); A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 391
- Cahir
  - Estate, Q. Major Jameson; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1345
  - Speech at (Mr. W. O'Brien), Q. Marquess of Londonderry; A. Lord Ashbourne; [Obs. Earl of Arran;] Feb 12, 253
- Cairn at Finner, Donegal, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 18, 712
- Caretakers, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon, Mr. D. Kilbride; As. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1323
- Carrickfergus, High Sheriff, Q. Mr. D. Kilbride; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1137
- Castlebar Union, Q. Dr. R. Ambrose: A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 712
- Cattle
  - Importation of, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 2, 1431
  - Slaughter of, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 162; Feb 12, 268
- Cavan
  - Land Sub-commission, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 781
  - Leitrim and Roscommon Light Railway, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 9, 18
- Christian Brothers Schools, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox, Mr. W. Johnston; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 782
- Clare
  - Assizes, Diminution of Crime, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1608
  - Police Protection Duty, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 720
- Clonbain "Whiteboy" Case, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. J. Atkinson Feb 15, 411; Feb 16, 511
- Clongorey Estate, Kildare, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1344
- Consecration of Bishop of Killaloe, Qs. Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. J. C. Flynn; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 9, 17
- Convent and Monastery Schools, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 26, 1259
- Cork
  - Assizes, Clonbain "Whiteboy" Case, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. J. Atkinson Feb 15, 411; Feb 16, 511
  - Bridgetown Abbey, Q. Mr. W. Abraham (Cork); A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 391
  - Mail Delivery, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 18, 711
  - Telegraph Facilities, Drinagh, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1123
- County
  - Court Judge, Down, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1608
  - Surveyors (Ireland) Amendment Bill (see that title)

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

- Court of Bankruptcy, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1126; Mar 4, 1601
- Criminal Law Amendment (Ireland) Act 1887, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 413
- Cullenagh Mountain, Tipperary, Qs. Mr. T. J. Condon, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 26, 1259
- Daunt's Rock Lightship, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15. Qs. Captain Donelan; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 709
- Derry Corporation Stock, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. J. Atkinson Feb 22, 866
- Distress
  - Belmullet Union, Q. Mr. D. Crilly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 886
  - West of Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Crilly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 9, 16
- Donegal
  - Cairn at Finner, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 18, 712
  - Labourers Acts, Q. Mr. A. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 713
  - Sickness among School Children, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1598
- Down, County Court Judge, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1608
- Drainage
  - Bann, Q. Sir T. Lea; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 968
  - Barrow, Q. Mr. D. Sullivan; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1327
  - Suck Scheme, Q. Mr. J. O'Kelly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1578
- Dublin
  - Barracks, Royal, Q. General Russell; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 11, 159
  - Horse-breeding Commission, Qs. Colonel McCalmont, Mr. J. C. Flynn, Mr. P. O'Brien, Captain Donelan; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 859
- Education
  - Amendment of Act, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 181. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 276
  - Code, Irish Certificated Teachers, Q. Mr. A. E. Hutton; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 164
  - Fee Grant, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 878
- Educational Endowments, Qs. Colonel Saunderson, Mr. E. H. Carson; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1130
- Election of Coroner, Tipperary, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 720
- Employment of Deaf Mute, Belfast, Q. Colonel McCalmont; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 22, 858
- Evictions
  - Farm, Westport, Qs. Colonel Saunderson, Mr. M. Davitt; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1131
  - Monaghan, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 977
  - Tenants, Qs. Mr. W. Abraham (Cork); As. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1332. Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1590

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

- Fermanagh
  - Land Sub-commission, Q. Mr. E. H. Carson; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 719
  - Riot, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 716
- Financial Relations between Great Britain and Ireland (see that Title)
- Fishery Piers (see Piers below)
- Giant's Causeway and Portrush Tramway, Qs. Mr. J. Pinkerton, Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 12
- Great Northern Railway Company of Ireland, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 4, 1591
- Harbour, Bray, Fog Bell, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15
- High Sheriff, Carrickfergus, Q. Mr. D. Kilbride; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1137
- Horse-breeding
  - Commission, Dublin, Qs. Colonel McCalmont, Mr. J. C. Flynn, Mr. P. O'Brien, Captain Donelan; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 859
  - Congested Districts Board, Qs. Colonel McCalmont; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1128; Mar 1, 1336
- Illegal Trawling, Bantry Bay, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 267
- Imperial Taxes, Ireland, Qs. Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Mar 4, 1612
- Importation of Cattle, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 2, 1431
- Industrial School Contracts, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1127
- Irish
  - Land Commission, Qs. Lord Monteagle; As. Viscount Cross Feb 18, 665.
  - Lights Commissioners, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 11, 158
- Judicial Rents, Qs. Sir T. Lea, Mr. J. Morley; As. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1333
- Jurymen's Expenses, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson Feb 25, 1129
- Kerry Bog Slide, Q. Mr. James Roche; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 16, 505
- Kildare
  - Clongorey Estate, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1344
  - Land Commission Applications, Q. Mr. C. J. Engledow; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 159
- King's County, Land Commission, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 184
- Labourers Acts, Donegal, Q. Mr. A. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 713
- Land
  - Commission
    - Ballymena, Court, Q. Mr. J. Pinkerton; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 182
    - General, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese, Mr. D. Sullivan, Mr. C. J. Engledow, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1250
    - Kildare, Applications, Q. Mr. C. J. Engledow; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 159
    - King's County, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 184
    - Returns, Qs. Sir T. Lea, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 969. Q. Mr. D. Kilbride; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1138

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

- Land—cont.
  - Courts, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese, Mr. J. Daly, Mr. M. Austin; As. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1584
  - Sub-commission
    - Cavan, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 781
    - Fermanagh, Q. Mr. E. H. Carson; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 719
- Leitrim, Postal Accommodation, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 970
- Licensing Sessions, Ballybot, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1134
- Light-house Keepers, Qs. Major Jameson; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 26, 1263
- Light Railways (see Title RAILWAYS)
- Lightships
  - Daunt's Rock, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15. Qs. Captain Donelan; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 709
  - Repairs, Supervision of, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Ritchie Mar 4, 1577
- Limerick
  - Canal and Shannon Service, Q. Mr. M. Austin; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 4, 1594
  - Night Watch, Q. Mr. M. Austin; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1593
- Listowel Board of Guardians, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 709
- Loan Fund Societies, Qs. Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 277. Q. Mr. Swift MacNeill; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 16, 507. Qs. Mr. A. O'Connor, Mr. Swift MacNeill, Mr. J. Dillon, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 860. Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 975. Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1139
- Local Taxation, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 182
- Magisterial Districts, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 716
- Magistrates, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1130; Mar 1, 1322
- Mails
  - Acceleration of, Qs. Mr. James Roche, Captain Donelan, Mr. T. B. Curran; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 864
  - Delivery, Cork, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 18, 711
  - Irish Service, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. Swift MacNeill; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 159. Qs. Mr. T. J. Condon, Mr. T. P. O'Connor; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 393. Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 19, 781. Q. Mr. B. C. Molloy; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 978. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1136. Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1325. Qs. Earl of Belmore, Viscount Clifden; As. Duke of Norfolk Mar 4, 1568
  - Skibbereen and Schull, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 2, 1445
- Maryborough Gaol: Prisoner Fitzharris, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 875. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1601

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.

- Massereene Estate, Police Protection, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 871
- Mayo, Tolls, Newport, Q. Dr. R. Ambrose; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 2, 1432
- Monaghan
  - Eviction, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 977
  - Sanitary Arrangements, Clones, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G Balfour Feb 12, 275
- Municipal
  - Franchise, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. J. Atkinson Feb 9, 16
  - Voters Act, Aughnacloy, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese; As. Mr. J. Atkinson Mar 4, 1599
- Musgrave Street Police Barracks, Belfast, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 9, 13. Q. Mr. G. W. Wolff; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 784
- National
  - Education Board, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 168
  - Schools, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 879
  - School Teachers
    - Character and Salaries, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 263.
    - Pension
      - Fund, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 16, 510. Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1258. Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1335
      - Miss Ryan, Q. Mr. P. O. Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1576
    - Residential Rates, Q. Sir T. Lea; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 967
- Newbliss
  - Court-house, Orange Lodge, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 16, 510
  - Petty Sessions, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 175
- Parish Records, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. J. Atkinson Feb 9, 11
- Pawnbrokers, Q. Mr. D. Crilly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 9, 17
- Petty Sessions
  - Courts, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1129
  - Newbliss, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 175
- Piers (Fishery)
  - Baltimore, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 870
  - Ireland, Qs. Major Jameson; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 26, 1263. Qs. Captain Donelan; As. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1574
  - Tramore, Q. Mr. P. J. Power; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1325
- Police
  - Belfast
    - Acting Sergeants, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 273
    - Barracks, Musgrave Street, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 9, 13. Q. Mr. G. W. Wolff; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 784
  - Patrol, Skibbereen, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 968

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.
Police—cont.
Protection
Clare, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 720
Massereene Estate, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 871
Queenstown, at, American Passenger Traffic, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 869
Royal Irish Constabulary (see below)
Poor Law Relief (Ireland) Bill, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 713. Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 2, 1445
Postal Accommodation, Leitrim, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 970
Private
Bill Legislation, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 181
Lunatic Asylums, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 2, 1440
Public Works Loan, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox, Mr. E. H. Carson, Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1256
Rabies, Mr. M'Govern's Treatment, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 157
Railway Traffic, England and Ireland, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1343
Riot, Fermanagh, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 716
Royal Irish Constabulary, Pensions, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1576
Rural Postmen, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1256
Sanitary Arrangements, Clones, Monaghan, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 275
Schools
Christian Brothers, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox, Mr. W. Johnston; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 782
Convent and Monastery, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 26, 1259
Endowment, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 718
Industrial Contracts, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1127
National, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 879
Science and Art, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 878
Sickness among School Children, Donegal, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1598
Slaughter of Cattle, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 162; Feb 12, 268
Suck Drainage Scheme, Q. Mr. J. O'Kelly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1578
Teachers
Irish Certificated, Education Code, Q. Mr. A. E. Hutton; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 164
National School (see under National above)
Telegraph Facilities, Drinagh (Cork), Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1123
Tipperary
Cullenagh Mountain, Qs. Mr. T. J. Condon, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 26, 1259
Election of Coroner, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 720

[cont.

IRELAND—cont.
Tolls, Newport (Mayo), Q. Dr. R. Ambrose; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 2, 1432
Town Courts, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson Mar 2, 1442
Tramore Fishery Pier, Q. Mr. P. J. Power; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1325
Tramps, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1582
Treason-felony Prisoners, Q. Mr. M. Davitt; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1138
Truck Act, Fines at Belfast, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 7
Unions
Ballyshannon, Clerk's Salary, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 877
Belmullet, Distress, Q. Mr. D. Crilly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 886
Castlebar, Q. Dr. R. Ambrose; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 712
Vaccination Act, Ireland, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1136
Westport, Evicted Farm, Qs. Colonel Saunderson, Mr. M. Davitt; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1131

Isaacson, Mr. F. Wootton, Tower Hamlets, Stepney
Mall Cyclists Mar 1, 1337

Jacoby, Mr. J. A., Derbyshire, Mid
Street Organ Grinders Feb 9, 13

Jameson, Major J. Eustace, Clare, W.
Cahir Estate, Ireland Mar 1, 1345
Fishing Piers, Ireland Feb 26, 1263
Lighthouse Keepers, Ireland Feb 26, 1263, 1264
Supply: £12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1282

Jebb, Mr. R. C., Cambridge University
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 576

Jeffreys, Mr. A. F., Hants, Basingstoke
Army Estimates
£295,800 for Medical Establishment, Pay; Report Feb 15, 496
£2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 829

Jessel, Captain H. M., St. Pancras, S.
Army Estimates: 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 338

Johnson-Ferguson, Mr. J. E., Leicester, Loughborough
Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1094

Johnston, Mr. William, Belfast, S.
Bandsmen Assaulted, Scotland Mar 4, 1580, 1581
Christian Brothers Schools Feb 19, 783
Consecration of Bishop of Killaloe Feb 9, 17, 18

[cont.

JOHNSTON, Mr. W.—cont.
County Surveyors (Ireland) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 12, 366, 367, 368
Dublin Corporation Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 70; Feb 11, 151; 152, Feb 17, 613, 622
Irish Mails Mar 1, 1325
Maryborough Gaol: James Fitzharris Feb 22, 876
Municipal Franchise, Ireland Feb 9, 16
School Endowment, Ireland Feb 18, 718
Tramps, Ireland Mar 4, 1582

JOHNSTONE, Mr. J. H., Sussex, Horsham
East India, Officers of General List Mar 2, 1429
Land Tax Feb 16, 504

JOICEY, Sir JAMES, Bart., Durham, Chester-le-Street
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 4, 1636

JONES, Major E. PRYCE- (see PRYCE-JONES)

JONES, Mr. D. BRYNMOR, Swansea, District
Administration of Crown Lands, Wales Feb 16, 502
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1201, 1202; In Com. Mar 3, 1548

JONES, Mr. L. A. ATHERLEY (see ATHERLEY-JONES)

Judicature Acts
Mr. Atherley Jones, (Motion) 987, 989, 992, 1001, 1013; Sir R. Webster, 989, 999, 1001, 1012; Sir F. Lockwood, 992, 1007; Mr. A. F. Warr, 996; Mr. W. F. Lawrence, 1009; Sir H. Fowler, 1011, 1013; Mr. C. J. Monk, 1013; (Motion withdrawn, 1013) Feb 23

Juries Detention Bill
c. Intro., Mr. Lloyd Morgan; Read 1° Feb 23, 987
2R., Mr. Lloyd Morgan Mar 4, 1675
Read 2° Mar 4, 1675

Justices of the Peace Bill
c. Intro., Mr. H. C. F. Luttrell; Read 1° Feb 12, 280

KEARLEY, Mr. H. E., Devonport
Carbide of Calcium Feb 18, 721
Greenwich Age Pension Feb 9, 10
Income Tax Forms Mar 4, 1573
Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 736; In Com. Feb 22, 935, 954, 955
Naval
Establishment Pay Mar 2, 1437
Shipwrights Feb 11, 165; Mar 2, 1437
Patriotic Fund Feb 16, 504
Penal Servitude Mar 2, 1431
Railway Companies and Complainant Traders Feb 9, 8
Soldiers' Effects Fund Feb 11, 179

KEMP, Mr. GEORGE, Lancashire, S.E., Heywood
Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 70

Kent Water (Purchase) Bill
c. Read 1° Feb 10, 69

KENYON-SLANEY, Colonel W., Shropshire, Newport
Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 286, 297

KILBRIDE, Mr. DENIS, Galway, N.
Adulteration of Food Mar 1, 1340
Agricultural Rate, Ireland Mar 1, 1341
Army Estimates: £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 832, 833, 834
Caretakers, Ireland Mar 1, 1324
High Sheriff, Carrickfergus Feb 25, 1137
Land Commission, Ireland Feb 25, 1138
Supply: £12,938 for Irish Land Commission Salaries and Expenses (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1276

KIMBER, Mr. HENRY, Wandsworth
Civil Service, Temporary Employment Feb 22, 862

KIMBERLEY, Earl of
Crete Feb 15, 369; Feb 25, 1107; Mar 2, 1417, 1422, 1427
Dismissal of Mr. John Bull Feb 15, 379
Home Defence and the Volunteers Feb 11, 139
Land Transfer Bill, 2R. Mar 4, 1568

KING, Sir H. SEYMOUR, Hull, Central
Indian Staff Corps Feb 9, 6
Tea Industry, India Feb 19, 785

KINLOCH, Sir JOHN G. S., Bart., Perthshire, E.
Parish Council Accounts, Scotland Feb 15, 392

KNOX, Mr. E. F. VESEY, Londonderry
Army Estimates
£553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 801
£639,000 for Transport and Remounts Feb 19, 822, 826
£627,200 for Volunteer Corps, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 822
£1,016,400 for Works, Buildings, and Repairs Feb 19, 846
£76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 804, 811
Ballyshannon Union, Clerk's Salary Feb 22, 877
Bogus Telegrams, Ireland Feb 26, 1258
Christian Brothers Schools Feb 17, 782, 783
Crete, Action of British Ships Feb 22, 913
Education Fee Grant, Ireland Feb 22, 878
Financial Relations, Great Britain and Ireland Feb 16, 516

[cont.

Knox, Mr. E. F. Vesey—cont.
- Irish Mails Feb 19, 781
- Land Sub-commission, Cavan Feb 19, 781
- Londonderry Corporation Stock Feb 22, 866
- National Teachers' Pension Fund, Ireland Feb 26, 1258
- Navy Estimates
  - £507,000 Additional Expenditure (1896-97) Feb 26, 1268, 1271
  - £5,775 13s. for Naval Defence Act (1889) (Excess Expenditure) Feb 26, 1272, 1273
- Public Works Loans, Ireland Feb 26, 1256, 1257
- Schools
  - Christian Brothers Feb 19, 782, 783
  - Convent and Monastery Feb 26, 1259
  - Science and Art, Ireland Feb 22, 878
  - Voluntary, Scotland Feb 16, 516
- Supply
  - £20,110 for Public Education, Ireland (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1294, 1295
  - £25,000 for Stationery and Printing (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1274

Labouchere, Mr. Henry, Northampton
- Army Estimates
  - 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 351, 355, 358, 359, 360
  - £76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 807
- Cordite Experiments, Woolwich Arsenal Feb 11, 172, 173
- Crete Feb 15, 405, 406; Feb 16, 530, 531; Feb 22, 890; Feb 25, 1147; Mar 1, 1338; Mar 2, 1448
- Crete
  - Action of British Ships Feb 22, 890, 891, 892
  - Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1484, 1485, 1487
- Military Works Bill, In Com. Feb 22, 947
- Necessitous Board Schools Feb 11, 186, 187
- Supply
  - £36,700 for British Protectorates in Uganda and Central and East Africa (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1297
  - £23,670 for Diplomatic and Consular Services (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1296

Labour Law
- Mr. E. Robertson (Notice of Motion) Mar 2, 1429

LABOUR QUESTIONS, ETC.
- Distress from Want of Employment Committee, Qs. Mr. W. R. Bousfield; As. Mr. T. W. Russell Feb 19, 779
- Employers' Liability Bill, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 9, 25. Q. Mr. S. Woods; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Mar 4, 1613
- Employment of Deaf Mute, Belfast, Q. Colonel McCalmont; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 22, 858
- Labourers Acts, Donegal, Q. Mr. A. O'Connor; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 713
- Manchester, Trade Dispute, Qs. Mr. G. W. Wolff, Mr. C. E. Schwann, Mr. J. Lowther, Mr. J. Bryce; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 12, 269

[cont.

LABOUR QUESTIONS, ETC.—cont.
- Naval
  - Establishments, Pay, Qs. Mr. H. E. Kearley, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Macartney Mar 2, 1430
  - Shipwrights, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 11, 165. Qs. Captain Pirie, Mr. H. E. Kearley; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Macartney Mar 2, 1437
- Servants' Homes and Agencies, Q. Mr. S. Woods; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 4, 1600
- Trade Dispute, Manchester, Qs. Mr. G. W. Wolff, Mr. C. E. Schwann, Mr. J. Lowther, Mr. J. Bryce; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 12, 269
- Truck Act
  - Fines, Q. Mr. S. Woods; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1140
  - Fines at Belfast, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 7
  - Metropolitan District Railway Company, Q. Mr. T. Lough; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 4, 1595
  - Railway Companies, Qs. Mr. R. W. Perks, Sir C. Dilke; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 400. Qs. Mr. S. Woods, Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), Sir H. Vincent, Mr. J. Samuel, Mr. T. Lough; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 23, 972

Lambert, Mr. George, Devon, South Molton
- Agricultural Holdings Feb 25, 1144
- Land Tenure Bill, Intro. Feb 24, 1104
- Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1153, 1174, 1175; In Com. Mar 1, 1357, 1359

Lambeth Water (Purchase) Bill
- c. Read 1° Feb 10, 69

Land Tenure Bill
- c. Intro., Mr. G. Lambert; Read 1° Feb 24, 1104

Land Tenure (Great Britain)
- Mr. J. W. Logan, (Notice of Motion) Feb 9, 4

Land Transfer Bill
- l. Pres., Lord Halsbury; Read 1ª Feb 19, 777. 2R., Lord Halsbury, 1566; Lord Thring, 1567; Lord Herschell, 1568; Earl of Kimberley, 1568 Mar 4
- Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House Mar 4, 1568

LANSDOWNE, Marquess of (Secretary of State for War)
- Lee-Metford Rifle, Volunteer Rifle Ranges Feb 18, 668, 669

LAURIE, General J. W., Pembrokeshire and Haverfordwest
- Army Estimates: £76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 808
- Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 265
- Cable Communication, Bermuda to Jamaica Feb 11, 170
- Greenwich Age Pension Feb 9, 9
- Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1030
- Volunteer Cadet Corps Feb 26, 1252

LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE
- American Passenger Traffic, Police at Queenstown, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 869
- Assizes
  - Clare, Diminution of Crime, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1608
  - Cork, Clonbain "Whiteboy" Case, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. J. Atkinson Feb 15, 411; Feb 16, 511
  - Essex, Trial of William Walden, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 11, 180
  - Lewes, Conviction for Fraud, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 26, 1249
  - Maidstone, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 706
  - Winchester, Trial for Bigamy, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 388
- Bankruptcy Court, Ireland, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1126; Mar 4, 1601
- Belfast Police
  - Acting Sergeants, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 273
  - Barracks, Musgrave Street, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 9, 13. Q. Mr. G. W. Wolff; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 784
- Carlisle Gaol, Death of Prisoner, Q. Captain Bagot; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 11, 166
- Central Criminal Court, Regina v. Greatorex-Smith, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 19, 777
- Clonbain, "Whiteboy" Case, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. J. Atkinson Feb 15, 411; Feb 16, 511
- Commutation of Sentence: James Bate, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill: A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 707
- Conviction for
  - Drunkenness, Scotland, Q. Mr. J. Wilson (Govan); A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 12, 267
  - Perjury, Police Constable Murray, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 23, 976
- Coroner, Election of, Tipperary, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 720
- County Court Judge, Down, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien, A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1608
- Court of Bankruptcy, Ireland, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1126; Mar 4, 1601

[cont.

LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE—cont.
- Criminal Law Amendment (Ireland) Act 1887, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 413
- Egloskerry Parish, Cornwall, Q. Mr. T. Owen; A. Sir R. Webster Feb 23, 981
- Essex Assizes, Trial of William Walden, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 11, 180
- Evictions
  - Farm, Westport, Qs. Colonel Saunderson, Mr. M. Davitt; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1131
  - Monaghan, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 977
  - Tenants, Qs. Mr. W. Abraham (Cork); As. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1332. Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1590
- Felon Convicts, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 16, 508; Feb 18, 724
- Fraudulent Enlistment: George Smith, Q. Mr. T. Lough; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 392
- High Sheriffs
  - Carrickfergus, Q. Mr. D. Kilbride; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1137
  - Relief of Expenditure, Q. Mr. Bryn Roberts; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 12, 271
- Holloway Prison: Lady Scott, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1143
- Jameson Raid, Prisoners at Holloway, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 21
- Judicature Acts (see that Title)
- Judicial Rents, Ireland, Qs. Sir T. Lea, Mr. J. Morley; As. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1333
- Jurymen's Expenses, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson Feb 25, 1129
- Land
  - Commission, Ireland
    - Court, Ballymena, Q. Mr. J. Pinkerton; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 182
    - General, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese, Mr. D. Sullivan, Mr. C. J. Engledow, Mr. J. Dillon; As. Mr. G. Balfour, Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1250
    - Kildare Applications, Q. Mr. Engledow; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 159
    - King's County, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 184
    - Returns, Qs. Sir T. Lea, Captain Donelan; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 969. Q. Mr. D. Kilbride; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1138
  - Courts, Ireland, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese, Mr. J. Daly, Mr. M. Austin; As. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1584
  - Sub-commission
    - Cavan, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 781
    - Fermanagh, Q. Mr. E. H. Carson; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 719
- Law of Evidence (Criminal Cases) Bill, Q. Mr. Lloyd Morgan; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 11, 187
- Licensing Sessions, Ballybot, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour, Feb 25, 1134
- Limerick Night Watch, Q. Mr. M. Austin; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1593

[cont.

LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE—cont.

Loan Fund Societies, Ireland, Q. Mr. Swift MacNeill; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 16, 507
Magisterial District, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 716
Magistrates, Ireland, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1130; Mar 1, 1322
Maidstone Assizes, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 706
Maryborough Gaol: Prisoner Fitzharris, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 875. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1601
Monifieth Police Court, Conviction for Sleeping out, Q. Captain Sinclair; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 16, 512
Municipal
  Franchise, Ireland, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. J. Atkinson Feb 9, 16
  Voters Act, Aughnacloy, Qs. Mr. D. Macaleese; As. Mr. J. Atkinson Mar 4, 1599
One-man Companies, Qs. Mr. J. H. Lewis, Sir W. Hart Dyke; As. Sir R. Webster Mar 4, 1610
Penal Servitude, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 2, 1431
Perth and Dundee Prisons, Qs. Mr. Orr-Ewing; As. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 23, 974
Petty Sessions
  Courts, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1129
  Newbliss, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 175
Police
  Belfast
    Acting Sergeants, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 273
    Musgrave Street Barracks, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 9, 13. Q. Mr. G. W. Wolff; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 784
  Clothing, Metropolitan, Q. Sir L. McIver; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1134
  Constable Murray: Conviction for Perjury, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 23, 976
  Court, Monifeith, Conviction for Sleeping out, Q. Captain Sinclair; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 16, 512
  Patrol, Skibbereen, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 23, 968
  Protection
    Clare, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 720
    Massereene Estate, Q. Mr. J. Dillon; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 871
  Royal Irish Constabulary (see below)
  Queenstown, at, American Passenger Traffic, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 869
Prisoners
  Barcelona, Treatment of, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 22, 868
  Death of, Carlisle Gaol, Q. Captain Bagot; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 11, 166
  Discharged, Re-arrest of, Q. Mr. S. Smith; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 2, 1434

[cont.

LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE—cont.

Prisoners—cont.
  Fitzharris, Maryborough, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 875. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1601
  Jameson Raid, Holloway, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 21
  Reform, Pretoria, Qs. Mr. J. M. Maclean; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 18, 727; Feb 26, 1262
  Treason-felony, Q. Mr. M. Davitt; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1138
Prison-made Goods, Q. Mr. J. H. Dalziel; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 715
Prisons
  Carlisle, Death of Prisoner, Q. Captain Bagot; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 11, 166
  Clerks, Parliamentary Elections, Q. Mr. S. Woods; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 4, 1600
  Holloway: Lady Scott, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1143
  Maryborough: Prisoner Fitzharris, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. W. Johnston, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 875. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1601
  Officers, Q. Lord Balcarres; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 26, 1253
  Perth and Dundee, Qs. Mr. Orr-Ewing; As. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 23, 974
  Visiting Committees, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 25, 1123
Prosecution of Mr. Ivory, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 11, 185
Royal Irish Constabulary, Pensions, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1576
Truck Act
  Fines, Q. Mr. S. Woods; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1140
  Fines at Belfast, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 7
  Metropolitan District Railway Company, Q. Mr. T. Lough; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 4, 1595
  Railway Companies, Qs. Mr. R. W. Perks, Sir C. Dilke; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 400. Qs. Mr. S. Woods, Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), Sir H. Vincent, Mr. J. Samuel, Mr. T. Lough; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 23, 972
Vaccination, Repeated Prosecutions, Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 16, 505
Venezuelan Arbitration (Sir Richard Henn Collins), Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir R. Webster Feb 9, 24
Winchester Assizes, Trial for Bigamy, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 388

Law of Evidence (Criminal Cases) Bill
(For Questions see LAW AND JUSTICE AND POLICE)

Lawrence, Mr. W. F., Liverpool, Abercromby
- Foreign Vessels in British Ports Feb 23, 970
- Judicature Acts Feb 23, 1009
- Queen's Reign, Coinage Mar 2, 1436
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 461

LAWSON, Mr. J. GRANT (Parliamentary Charity Commissioner), Yorkshire, N.R., Thirsk and Malton
- Marshall's Charity, Norfolk Feb 11, 182

Lawson, Sir Wilfrid, Bart., Cumberland, Cockermouth
- Army Estimates
  - 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 360
  - £76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 812
- Licensing Exemption (Houses of Parliament) Bill, 1R. Feb 17, 664; 2R. Feb 19, 848
- Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 763

Lea, Sir Thomas, Bart., Londonderry, S.
- Bann Drainage Feb 23, 968
- Judicial Rents, Ireland Mar 1, 1333
- Land Commission, Ireland Feb 23, 969
- National School Teachers, Ireland Feb 23, 967

Legh, Right Hon. T. Wodehouse, Lancashire, S.W., Newton
- Crete Feb 19, 787
- Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1490

Leighton, Mr. Stanley, Shropshire, Oswestry
- Church Patronage Transfer Bill, Intro. Feb 19, 792
- Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1037

Leng, Sir John, Dundee
- Army Special Campaign Pensions Feb 9, 5
- Importation of Cattle, Ireland Mar 2, 1431
- Indian Mail Service Feb 23, 972
- Mail Contract: India, China, and Australia Feb 11, 158; Mar 2, 1438
- Patent Office Feb 9, 6
- Pleuro-Pneumonia, Essex Feb 22, 872
- Trustees Savings Banks, Scotland Feb 25, 1122
- University Colleges Mar 2, 1440

Leuty, Mr. T. R., Leeds, E.
- Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 3, 1548

Lewis, Mr. J. Herbert, Flint Boroughs
- Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1079, 1096
- One-man Companies Mar 4, 1610
- Sitting of the House, Ash Wednesday Mar 2, 1533
- Supply: £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1287; Mar 1, 1413
- Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1224; In Com. Mar 1, 1353, 1354, 1384, 1405; Mar 3, 1538

Licensing Exemption (Houses of Parliament) Bill
- c. Intro., Lord Stanley, Sir W. Lawson, 664; Sir R. Webster, 664 Feb 17
- Read 1° Feb 17, 664
- 2R., Lord Stanley, 848; Sir W. Lawson, 848; Sir R. Webster, 848; Mr. P. A. M'Hugh, 848; [Mr. Speaker, 848] Feb 19

Lloyd-George, Mr. David, Carnarvon Boroughs
- Archdeaconry of London (Additional Endowments) Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1101
- Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1080
- Great Northern Railway Bill, 2R. Feb 25, 1115
- North British Railway Bill, 2R. Feb 22, 854
- Supply
  - £10 for County Courts (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1275
  - £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1289
- Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 197; 2R. Feb 15, 465; Feb 25, 1154, 1156, 1162; In Com. Mar 1, 1362, 1392, 1400, 1401, 1405; Mar 2, 1535; Mar 3, 1545; Mar 4, 1643, 1644, 1670, 1672

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD

President—Mr. H. Chaplin
Secretary—Mr. T. W. Russell

- Adulteration of Food, Q. Mr. D. Kilbride; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Mar 1, 1340
- Agricultural Rates Act (1896) Amending Order, Qs. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. T. W. Russell Feb 19, 789
- Brisley (Norfolk) Parish Council, Q. Mr. F. W. Wilson; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 25, 1139
- Burial Grounds, Qs. Mr. H. C. Stephens, Mr. F. W. Wilson; As. Mr. H. Chaplin Mar 4, 1602
- Casual Wards, Metropolis, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Mar 1, 1321
- Children's Metropolitan Asylums Board, Qs. Mr. J. G. Talbot, Mr. B. L. Cohen; As. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 9, 10. Qs. Mr. W. Hazell, Mr. J. G. Talbot; As. Mr. Ritchie, Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 18, 704. Qs. Mr. B. L. Cohen, Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. H. Chaplin Mar 4, 1588
- Distress from Want of Employment Committee, Qs. Mr. W. R. Bousfield; As. Mr. T. W. Russell Feb 19, 779
- Infectious Diseases, Metropolis, Q. Dr. Farquharson; A. Mr. T. W. Russell Feb 22, 858
- Local Government (Elections) Bill (see that Title)
- Local Taxation Account, Q. Mr. W. W. Carlile; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 18, 727
- Manchester, "Church Ley," Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 18, 722
- Parish Council, Brisleu (Norfolk), Q. Mr. F. W. Wilson; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 25, 1139
- Rating Commission, Q. Mr. T. R. Buchanan; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 11, 178. Qs. Mr. G. Whiteley; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 16, 517
- Vaccination Prosecutions, Q. Mr. J. W. Logan; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 11, 173

[cont.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD—cont.
West Bromwich Guardians, Qs. Sir W. Foster; As. Mr. T. W. Russell Feb 19, 780
West Ham Electric Light, Q. Mr. H. V. Duncombe; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Mar 4, 1597

Local Government (County Council Clerks) Bill
c. Intro., Mr. H. C. F. Luttrell; Read 1° Feb 12, 280

Local Government Elections Bill
l. 2R., Lord Herschell, 2; Lord Harris, 3 Feb 9
Read 2ª and com. Feb 9, 3
In Com., Rep. without Amendt. Feb 11, 125
Lord Herschell, (Motion) 125: Standing Com. negatived, 125 Feb 11
Read 3ª and Passed Feb 12, 262
Royal Assent Feb 16, 501

Local Government (Ireland) Provisional Orders (No. 1) Bill
c. Instruction to Com.: Mr. P. O'Brien, (Motion) 1571; [Mr. Speaker, 1571, 1572;] Mr. J. Lowther, 1572; (Instruction ruled out of Order) Mar 4

LOCH, Lord
Chamberlain (Mr.) and President Kruger Feb 9, 1

LOCKWOOD, Colonel A. R. M., Essex, Epping
Army Estimates: £295,800 for Medical Establishment, Pay; Report Feb 15, 498
Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 266
East London Water Bill Feb 26, 1248

LOCKWOOD, Sir FRANK, York City
City of London Sewers Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 144, 146
Judicature Acts Feb 23, 992, 1007
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 474, 475, 478, 479; Feb 16, 552; In Com. Mar 1, 1366, 1370, 1378; Mar 3, 1557, 1560

Locomotives on Highways Bill
c. Intro., Mr. Griffith-Boscawen; Read 1° Feb 9, 27

LODER, Mr. GERALD W. E., Brighton
Chain Pier, Brighton Feb 18, 715
Post Office Establishments Feb 19, 791

LOGAN, Mr. J. W., Leicester, Harborough
Land Tenure, Great Britain Feb 9, 4
Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 117
Vaccination, Prosecutions Feb 11, 173
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 605, 606; Feb 25, 1188; In Com. Mar 3, 1551

London (Borough Road, Southwark) Provisional Order Bill
c. Read 2° and com. Feb 9, 3

London (Churchway, St. Pancras) Provisional Order Bill
c. Read 2° and com. Feb 9, 3

London (Clare Market, Strand) Provisional Order Bill
c. Read 2° and com. Feb 16, 501

London County Buildings Bill
c. 2R., Mr. C. A. Whitmore, 671, 672, 673, 676; Sir J. Blundell Maple, 672, 691; Mr. E. Boulnois, 675, 676, 698; Mr. C. E. Tritton, 678; Mr. J. Burns, 680, 681, 682; Sir F. Dixon-Hartland, 681; Mr. W. F. D. Smith, 684; Sir J. Lubbock, 685; Mr. C. Harrison, 686; Mr. C. T. Murdoch, 687; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 689; Mr. J. W. Lowther, 690, 693; Mr. B. L. Cohen, 692; Mr. C. J. Darling, 692, 693; Mr. C. E. Schwann, 694, 695; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 695; Admiral Field, 696; Mr. E. Hubbard, 696; Mr. Burdett-Coutts, 697; Sir W. Harcourt, 698, 699; (Division, 700) Feb 18
2R. negatived Feb 18, 703

London County Council (General Powers) Bill
c. 2R., Dr. Farquharson, 152; Mr. J. G. Weir, 152; Mr. B. L. Cohen, 153 Feb 11
Read 2° and com. Feb 11, 153

LONDONDERRY, Marquess of
Cahir, Speech at Feb 12, 253

London Water (Purchase) Bill
c. Read 1° Feb 10, 69

LONG, RIGHT HON. WALTER H. (President of the Board of Agriculture), Liverpool, West Derby
Agricultural Statistics Feb 16, 503
Cattle
  Sale of, Stirling Feb 12, 272
  Weighing, Scotland Feb 15, 389
Muzzling Dogs Mar 2, 1443; Mar 4, 1603, 1604
Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1025, 1027, 1029, 1032
Pleuro-Pneumonia, Essex Feb 22, 872
Rabies Mar 1, 1346
Sale of Cattle, Stirling Feb 12, 272
Weighing Cattle, Scotland Feb 15, 389

Lough, Mr. Thomas, Islington, W.

- Army Estimates
  - £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 793
  - £639,000 for Transport and Remounts Feb 19, 823, 826
- Children's Metropolitan Asylums Board Mar 4, 1589
- City of London Sewers Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 142
- Education Votes Feb 15, 399, 400
- Elementary Schools, Rating Feb 9, 25; Feb 12, 280
- Fraudulent Enlistment: George Smith Feb 15, 392
- Giant's Causeway and Portrush Tramway Feb 9, 13
- Imperial Taxes, Ireland Mar 4, 1612
- Merchant Shipping, Undermanning Mar 4, 1676
- Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee Bill Feb 25, 1119
- Military Lands Act (1892) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 251
- Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 729, 733, 734; In Com. Feb 22, 932, 938, 944, 948, 957, 959
- Pauper Aliens Feb 9, 67, 68
- Supply
  - £14,980 for Colonial Services, including South Africa (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1298
  - £16,304 for Treasury Chest Fund Feb 26, 1299
  - £30,151 for Trustee Savings Bank and Friendly Societies Deficiency (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1300, 1302
- Taxation, London, Grants in Aid Feb 23, 965
- Truck Act
  - Metropolitan District Railway Company Mar 4, 1595
  - Railway Companies Feb 23, 974
- Voluntary School Bill Feb 11, 192; 2R. Feb 15, 489; In Com. Mar 1, 1368, 1391, 1404

Lowles, Mr. J., Shoreditch, Haggerston

- Army Estimates
  - £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 832
  - £639,000 for Transport and Remounts Feb 19, 827
- Established Church (England and Wales) Feb 9, 60
- Pauper Aliens Feb 9, 63, 67, 68

LOWTHER, Mr. J. W. (Chairman of Committees of Ways and Means and Deputy Speaker), Cumberland, Penrith

- Great Eastern Railway (General Powers) Bill, 2R. Feb 22, 851, 852
- London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 690, 693
- Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee Bill Feb 25, 1119
- North British Railway Bill, 2R. Feb 22, 853

[cont.

Lowther, Mr. J. W.—cont.

(Rulings as Chairman of Committees)

Army Estimates: 158,774 for Land Forces (Number of)

The Chairman said: "The hon. Member is trenching upon political subjects. He must confine himself to the military portion." Feb 12, 355

Army Estimates: £639,000 for Transport and Remounts

The Chairman said, it would be obviously undesirable to raise the same question in two Votes. The natural place to raise the question would be on the next Vote Feb 19, 825

Military Works Bill

The Chairman said: "That point does not arise on the Amendment, which is to limit the expenditure of the money within seven years. If this Amendment be carried the whole of the money will have to be spent in seven years." Feb 22, 947

The Chairman said, the argument of the hon. Member was that every year this proposal was to be discussed on the Estimates, but that was not met by the Amendment Feb 22, 947

The Chairman said: "If I correctly understand the proposal of the hon. Gentleman it is that an estimate should be laid before the House of Commons in order that the House of Commons should decide upon it. Such a proposal would be clearly out of order, because that would be contrary to what the House has already decided. If the hon. Member merely proposes that an estimate of the expenditure should be laid on the Table of the House, for the information of hon. Members, that, of course, would be in order." Feb 22, 955

Supply: £6,800 for Inland Revenue (Supplementary)

The Chairman said: "That item refers to the fees paid to counsel and solicitors. The question whether the prosecutions were properly instituted does not arise on that." Feb 26, 1306

The Chairman said, any question relating to prosecutions which had taken place might be dealt with under that item; but a Question as to the future policy of the Department as to prosecutions could not Feb 26, 1306

The Chairman said: "The heads of the Department apply for extra money to meet the expenses of prosecutions that have taken place. The general policy of the Inland Revenue could not be discussed on that." Feb 26, 1306

Voluntary Schools Bill

The Chairman said: "That is not the proposal before the Committee. The proposal is to postpone the first clause to the end of the Bill." Mar 1, 1354

[cont.

Lowther, Mr. J. W.—cont.

(Rulings as Chairman of Committees)—cont.

Voluntary Schools Bill—cont.

The Chairman said: "Anyone who introduces a Bill is entitled to draft it as he thinks best. There is no precedent for an Amendment to postpone parts of a clause. That would be a most inconvenient course. Indeed, there is no machinery for working a Bill in that way." Mar 1, 1354

The Chairman said, he thought it rather an unusual thing to argue the point, but as he unfortunately did not receive, prior to coming into the Chair, the communication to which the hon. Member had referred, he thought it right he should state his case. It seemed to him it was perfectly clear. There was a Standing Order which said that the precise duration of every temporary law should be expressed in a distinct clause at the end of the Bill. He could not get over that. The hon. Member proposed to make this a temporary law, and he proposed to state the precise duration of it by his Amendment. That being so, it was perfectly clear, according to the Order of the House, which he had no authority to set aside even if he wished to do so, that the clause must come in at the end of the Bill. The hon. Member had referred to precedents. He could not answer for those in which he was not concerned, but the hon. Member quoted the precedent of last Session. His attention was not called to the wording of the Standing Order when that Amendment was moved, and he could only say it must have slipped into the Bill, as the lawyers said, per incuriam. He was not then so familiar with the Standing Orders as he had since become, and probably if the proposal were made again from any quarter of the House, it would not be admitted. He felt obliged to rule the Amendment out of Order Mar 1, 1356

The Chairman said: "Certainly not. It would probably be in order as a new clause at the end of the Bill. The Amendments in the names of the hon. Member for Carnarvon (Mr. Lloyd-George)—to leave out the words 'For aiding,' and to insert the words 'in order to establish a fund out of which the Education Department may aid necessitous'—and the hon. Member for West Denbighshire (Mr. Herbert Roberts)—to leave out the words 'For aiding,' and to insert the words 'To necessitous'—appear to be precisely the same as that standing in the name of the hon. Member for the South Molton Division (Mr. Lambert). The two hon. Members first mentioned have very ingeniously attempted to raise the question before the proper time, I therefore propose to call upon the hon. Member for South Molton. The Amendment of the hon. Member for Bethnal Green ought properly to be raised on line 12, sub-section 2. The Amendment immediately following, to leave out 'aiding' and insert 'supplementing voluntary subscriptions contributed towards,' and the Amendment of the hon. Member below the Gangway, ought to come in on line 13." Mar 1, 1357

The Chairman said: "I do not like to give an opinion on an abstract question. It is for the Committee to judge whether the Bill deals only with existing schools or with schools that may be opened in the future. This is not a question of order." Mar 1, 1379

The Chairman said: "The right hon. Gentleman cannot go into the question of whether free education is in full force or not. The only purpose I had in admitting this Amendment was that I thought the hon. Member wished to limit the grant." Mar 1, 1398

The Chairman said: "I listened to the hon. Member to gather his reasons for introducing the subject of free education. Having heard them, I am clearly of opinion that it cannot be further gone into." Mar 1, 1398

The Chairman said, the hon. Gentleman was in order in dealing with the question of the limitation of the amount, but not in going into the general question of free education Mar 1, 1399

The Chairman ruled, that the word "annually" must remain as applying to the Parliamentary Aid Grant. Such grants could not be made quarterly. There was nothing to prevent the proposal of a proviso that payments out of the grant should be made quarterly Mar 1, 1405

The Chairman said, he did not see their relevancy. The sole point before the Committee was whether average attendance or voluntary subscriptions should be the basis of the aggregate amount of the Aid Grant Mar 3, 1543

The Chairman said, he understood the hon. Member was using these instances as an argument to show that the total amount would be reduced Mar 3, 1544

The Chairman said, the right hon. Gentleman should have called attention to the matter after the Division referred to. At present there was no course open to him; but on the occasion the only thing to do under the circumstances was to take measures to avoid passing the Tellers Mar 3, 1552

The Chairman said: "I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Member, but the question of the Board Schools is not before us. The question is whether the grant shall be 5s. or 4s. per head." Mar 3, 1555

The Chairman said: "It is only right that I should say, in accepting this Motion, that I have satisfied myself that if it

[cont.

LOWTHER, Mr. J. W.—cont.
(Rulings as Chairman of Committees)—cont.
Voluntary Schools Bill—cont.
should be carried it would not cut out a single Amendment of any substance. Nearly three pages of the Amendments that follow are out of order. I think it is only due to the Committee that I should give my reason for accepting the Motion. These Amendments are for the most part excluded by the ruling of Mr. Speaker on the Notices of Motion for Instructions on going into Committee. Some of the Amendments are in the wrong place, and the two or three that remain are really not Amendments of substance. I therefore accept the Motion." Mar 3, 1563
The Chairman said, the Standing Order provided that the Closure might be moved on the interruption of business, and the interruption of business was when he announced the numbers of the last Division Mar 3, 1563
The Chairman said: "I must decline to give an opinion in answer to the hon. Member's question as to all the clauses, but certainly the right hon. Gentleman would be in order if he moved that the question be put that the whole clause stand part of the Bill. If it be in order to move the whole clause clearly it is in order to move a portion of the clause." Mar 3, 1564
The Chairman said: "The hon. Member's Amendment is out of order, because it is in the wrong place. It ought to come at the end of the sub-section or as a new clause." Mar 4, 1614
The Chairman said: "I do not exactly see how the question of voluntary subscriptions arises on the Amendment of the hon. Member." Mar 4, 1649
The Chairman said: "The question of due regard is one which can be debated at a later stage. It is obviously inconvenient to debate it now, because the Amendment raises a totally different question." Mar 4, 1649
The Chairman said: "The next Amendment not out of order stands in the name of the hon. Member for Mid Glamorgan (Mr. Samuel Evans). I confess that I do not quite understand what the Amendment means. If it means that the Education Department is to have no discretion as to the mode in allotting the amounts, but is to allot the 5s. grant all round, it is out of order. But if it has any other meaning, then it may be in order, and perhaps the hon. Gentleman will explain it." Mar 4, 1668
Miscellaneous Rulings
Feb 11, 146; Feb 19, 823, 825, 840; Feb 22, 937, 938, 942, 957; Feb 26, 1272, 1299, 1306; Mar 1, 1354, 1355, 1370, 1395, 1401, 1403, 1404, 1405; Mar 3, 1546, 1551, 1559; Mar 4 1614, 1661, 1668, 1672

LOWTHER, Right Hon. JAMES, Kent, Isle of Thanet
Crete Feb 9, 23; Feb 19, 787; Mar 1, 1349, 1350, 1351, 1352; Mar 4, 1605
Dublin Corporation Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 620
Local Government (Ireland) Provisional Orders (No. 1) Bill Mar 4, 1572
Supply: £12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1278, 1281
Trade Dispute, Manchester Feb 12, 271
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 189; In Com. Mar 3, 1552

LUBBOCK, Right Hon. Sir JOHN, Bart., London University
Crete, Action of British Ships Feb 22, 918
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 685
Queen's Reign, National Holiday Feb 11, 186
Shops, Hours of Labour Feb 23, 965

Lunacy
Private Lunatic Asylums, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 412. Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 2, 1440

LUTTRELL, Mr. H. C. F., Devonshire, Tavistock
Justices of the Peace Bill, Intro. Feb 12, 280
Local Government (County Council Clerks) Bill, Intro. Feb 12, 280
Ordnance Store Department Feb 9, 14
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 4, 1662

LYTTELTON, Hon. ALFRED, Warwick and Leamington
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 453, 456

MACALEESE, Mr. D., Monaghan, N.
Belfast Police Feb 12, 273
Eviction, Monaghan Feb 23, 977
Jurymen's Expenses, Ireland Feb 25, 1129
Land
Commission, Ireland Feb 26, 1250
Courts, Ireland Mar 4, 1584
Magisterial Districts, Ireland Feb 18, 716
Magistrates, Ireland Feb 25, 1130; Mar 1, 1322
Municipal Voters Act, Aughnacloy Mar 4, 1599, 1600
Musgrave Street Police Barracks, Belfast Feb 9, 13
National Teachers' Pension Fund, Ireland, Feb 16, 510
Newbliss
Court House, Orange Lodge Feb 16, 510
Petty Sessions Feb 11, 175
Petty Sessions Courts, Ireland Feb 25, 1129
Riot, Fermanagh Feb 18, 716
Sanitary Arrangements, Clones, Monaghan Feb 12, 275
Sickness among School Children, Donegal Mar 4, 1598
Town Courts Mar 2, 1442
Water Trustees Feb 12, 274; Feb 26, 1251

MACARTNEY, Mr. W. G. ELLISON (Secretary to the Admiralty), Antrim, S.
Admiralty Contracts Mar 1, 1324
Explosion, H.M.S. Howe Mar 2, 1444, 1445
Naval
Establishment, Pay Mar 2, 1430
Pensions: Devine (John) Feb 22, 874
Shipwrights Mar 2, 1437
Navy Estimates
£507,000 Additional Expenditure (1896–97) Feb 26, 1268, 1269, 1270, 1271, 1272
£5,775 13s. for Naval Defence Act (1889) (Excess Expenditure) Feb 26, 1273, 1274
Supply: Navy Estimates Feb 22, 880, 881

McCalmont, General Hugh, Antrim, N.
Army Estimates: 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 361
Employment of Deaf Mutes, Belfast Feb 22, 858
Horse Breeding
Commission, Dublin Feb 22, 859, 860
Ireland Feb 25, 1128; Mar 1, 1336

M'Hugh, Mr. P. A., Leitrim, N.
Cavan Leitrim and Roscommon Light Railway Feb 9, 18
Essex Assizes, Trial of William Walden Feb 11, 180
Jameson Raid, Prisoners at Holloway Feb 9, 21
Licensing Exemption (Houses of Parliament) Bill, 2R. Feb 19, 848
Postal Accommodation, Leitrim Feb 23, 970

McIver, Sir Lewis, Bart., Edinburgh, W.
Metropolitan Police Clothing Feb 25, 1134

McKenna, Mr. R., Monmouth, N.
Korea Mar 1, 1327
Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 749; In Com. Feb 22, 936, 946, 947, 951
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 203,; In Com. Mar 1, 1353, 1366, 1370, 1382, 1390, 1406, 1409; Mar 3, 1547; Mar 4, 1654

McKillop, Mr. James, Stirlingshire
Conveyance of Troops, Scotland and London Feb 9, 18
Petroleum, Select Committee Feb 19, 789
Sale of Cattle, Stirling Feb 12, 272

McLaren, Mr. C. B. B., Leicestershire, Bosworth
Hyde Park, Cyclists Feb 22, 863
Westminster Hall Feb 22, 864

Maclean, Mr. James M., Cardiff
Mission to King Menelik Feb 25, 1143
North German Lloyd Steamers Feb 15, 395
Reform Prisoners, Pretoria Feb 18, 727; Feb 26, 1262

McLeod, Mr. John, Sutherland
Army Estimates: 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 362
Post Office Money Orders Feb 23, 967
Telegraph Extensions, Scotland Feb 15, 403

MacNeill, Mr. J. G. Swift, Donegal S.
Indian Famine Mar 4, 1592, 1593
Irish Mails Feb 11, 161
Loan Fund Societies, Ireland Feb 16, 507; Feb 22, 861

Maple, Sir J. Blundell, Camberwell, Dulwich
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 672, 691

Mappin, Sir Frederick T., Bart., York, W.R., Hallamshire
Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee Bill, Feb 25, 1119

Marine Insurance Bill
l. 2R., Lord Herschell Feb 18, 665
Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House Feb 18, 665
Rep. without Amendt. and re-com. to Standing Com. Feb 22, 849

Marks, Mr. H. H., Tower Hamlets, St. George's
Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 113

Martin, Mr. R. B., Worcester, Droitwich
Warehousemen's Certificates Bill, Intro. Feb 23, 987

Massey-Mainwaring, Hon. W. F. B., Finsbury, Central
Bequest to Nation by Lady Wallace Mar 1, 1346
Queen's Reign, South Kensington Museum Feb 11, 174
Regimental Territorial Titles Feb 15, 403

Mellor, Colonel J. J., Lancashire, S.E., Radcliffe-cum-Farnworth
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 644

Mellor, Right Hon. J. W., Yorkshire, W.R., Sowerby
Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee Bill Feb 25, 1121
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 9, 21

Merchandise Marks Acts
Return Ordered (c.) Mar 4, 1676

MERCHANT SHIPPING

- Beam and Otter Trawling, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 15, 390
- Bray Harbour, Fog Bell, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15
- Collisions at Sea, Fishing Boats, Qs. Mr. J. W. Crombie, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Ritchie Mar 1, 1330
- Costa Rica Packet Case, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Curzon Mar 4, 1598
- Cruelty to a Seaman, s.s. Hornby Castle, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 19
- Daunt's Rock Lightship, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15. Qs. Captain Donelan; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 709
- Discharge of Seamen, Foreign Ports, Q. Sir E. T. Gourley; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 2, 1443
- Fishery Piers
    - Baltimore, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 22, 870
    - Ireland, Qs. Major Jameson; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 26, 1263. Qs. Captain A. J. C. Donelan; As. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1574
    - Tramore, Q. Mr. P. J. Power; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1325
- Foreign Vessels in British Ports, Qs. Mr. W. F. Lawrence, Mr. A. F. Warr; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 23, 970
- Harbour
    - Accommodation, Devon and Cornwall, Q. Sir Cameron Gull; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 22, 856
    - Bray, Fog Bell, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15
- Icelandic Fisheries, Qs. Mr. C. H. Wilson, Mr. G. Doughty, Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Ritchie, Mr. Curzon Feb 9, 8. Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 391
- Irish Lights Commissioners, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 11, 158
- Lighthouses
    - Keepers, Qs. Major Jameson; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 26, 1263
    - Red Sea, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 26, 1261
- Lightships
    - Daunt's Rock, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15. Qs. Captain Donelan; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 709
    - Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Ritchie Mar 4, 1577
- Marine Insurance Bill (see that Title)
- Marine Insurance Policies, Stamp Duty, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 25, 1135
- Merchant Shipping (Undermanning) Bill (see that Title)
- North
    - Atlantic Load-line, Q. Mr. J. G. A. Baird; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 1, 1329
    - German Lloyd Steamers, Qs. Mr. J. M. Maclean; As. Lord G. Hamilton Feb 15, 395
- Pilot Service, Falkland Islands, Q. Mr. J. W. Sidebotham; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 23, 968
- Scottish Fishery Cruisers, Qs. Captain Pirie, Mr. J. Bryce; As. Mr. Graham Murray Mar 1, 1335

[cont.

MERCHANT SHIPPING—cont.

- South Shoal, Orkney, Q. Mr. J. W. Crombie; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 714
- S.S. Utopia, Claim against Owners, Q. Mr. J. G. A. Baird; A. Mr. Curzon Mar 4, 1587
- Trawling
    - Beam and Otter, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 15, 390
    - Illegal
        - Bantry Bay, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 267
        - Scotland, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 9, 4

Merchant Shipping Bill

c. Intro., Mr. J. A. Willox; Read 1° Feb 16, 533

Merchant Shipping (Undermanning) Bill

c. Mr. Ritchie, (Motion for leave to Intro.) 1675, 1676; Mr. T. Lough, 1676 Mar 4
Intro., Mr. Ritchie; Read 1° Mar 4, 1676

METROPOLIS

- Archdeaconry of London (Additional Endowments) Bill (see that Title)
- Casual Wards, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Mar 1, 1321
- Chelsea Hospital, Qs. Captain A. J. C. Donelan; As. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1589
- Children's Metropolitan Asylums Board, Qs. Mr. J. G. Talbot, Mr. B. L. Cohen; As. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 9, 10. Qs. Mr. W. Hazell, Mr. J. G. Talbot; As. Mr. Ritchie, Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 18, 704. Qs. Mr. B. L. Cohen, Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. H. Chaplin Mar 4, 1588
- City of London Sewers Bill (see that Title)
- Cyclists
    - Hyde Park, Q. Mr. C. B. B. McLaren; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 22, 863
    - Mall (The), Q. Mr. Wootton Isaacson; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Mar 1, 1337
- Dog Muzzling, Qs. Mr. H. C. Stephens; As. Mr. W. Long Mar 2, 1442; Mar 4, 1603
- East London Water Bill (see that Title)
- Hampton Court Green, Qs. Sir F. Dixon-Hartland; As. Mr. Akers-Douglas Mar 1, 1336
- Holloway Prison: Lady Scott, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1143
- Hyde Park Cyclists, Q. Mr. C. B. B. McLaren; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 22, 863
- Infectious Diseases, Q. Dr. Farquharson; A. Mr. T. W. Russell Feb 22, 858
- Jameson Raid, Prisoners at Holloway, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 21
- London County Buildings Bill (see that Title)
- London County Council (General Powers) Bill (see that Title)
- Mall (The), Cyclists, Q. Mr. Wootton Isaacson; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Mar 1, 1337
- Metropolitan Police Clothing, Q. Sir L. McIver; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 25, 1134
- Nelson's Enchantress (Stage Play), Qs. Admiral Field, Mr. H. S. Foster; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 714

[cont.

METROPOLIS—cont.

Railway Level Crossing, Tottenham, Q. Mr. J. Howard; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 22, 877
Retirement of Vestrymen and Auditors (London) Bill (see that Title)
Richmond Park, Q. Mr. E. Boulnois; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 25, 1122
South Kensington Museum, Queen's Reign, Q. Mr. Massey-Mainwaring; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 11, 174
West Ham, Electric Light, Q. Mr. H. V. Duncombe; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Mar 4, 1597
Westminster Hall, Q. Mr. C. B. B. McLaren; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 22, 864
Willesden, St. Andrew's School, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall: A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 177
Wimbledon, School Accommodation, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 167

Metropolitan and Other Police Courts Bill
c. Intro., Mr. Jesse Collings; Read 1° Feb 15, 415

Metropolitan Police Provisional Order Bill
c. Read 2° and com. Feb 16, 501

Metropolitan Poor Law Schools (Report) Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, (Notice of Motion) Feb 9, 4

MEYSEY-THOMPSON, Sir HENRY M., Bart., Staffordshire, Handsworth
Indian Mints Feb 25, 1138

Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee Bill
c. Mr. H. S. Foster, (Motion) 1116, 1121, 1122; Sir J. B. Stone, 1119; Sir F. T. Mappin, 1119; Mr. T. Lough, 1119; Mr. J. W. Lowther, 1119; Mr. J. W. Mellor, 1121; (Motion withdrawn, 1122) Feb 25

Midwives Registration Bill
c. Intro., Mr. Egerton; Read 1° Feb 9, 27
2R., Mr. Egerton, 368; [Mr. Speaker, 368;] Feb 12

MILBANK, Mr. P. C. J., Radnorshire
Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1023

Military Lands Act (1892) Amendment Bill
c. 2R., Mr. T. Lough, 251; Mr. J. Samuel, 251 Feb 11
Read 2° Feb 12, 365
In Com., R.P. Feb 15, 499

Military Works Bill
c. 2R., Mr. T. Lough, (Amendt.) 729, 733, 734; Mr. Brodrick, 733, 751, 756, 760; Mr. H. E. Kearley, 736; General Russell, 738; Mr. W. H. Myers, 741; Mr. D. F. Goddard, 742; Colonel Wyndham Murray, 744; Mr. J. Dillon, 745, 747; [Mr. Speaker, 747;] Mr. Gibson Bowles, 748; Mr. R. McKenna, 749; Sir J. Colomb, 755, 756, 761; Mr. W. Woodall, 758, 760; Sir W. Lawson, 763; Major Rasch, 763, 765; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 765; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 771; Mr. J. Brigg, 772; (Division, 774) Feb 18
Read 2° Feb 18, 775
In Com., Mr. T. Lough, (Amendt.) 932, 938, (Amendt.) 938, 944, (Amendt.) 948, 957, (Amendt.) 957, (Amendt.) 959; Mr. Brodrick, 933, 936, 942, 945, 946, 949, 955, 958, 959; Mr. D. F. Goddard, 934, 942; Sir C. Dilke, 935; Mr. H. E. Kearley, 935, (Amendt.) 954, 955; Mr. R. McKenna, 936, 946, 947, 951; Mr. W. Woodall, 937, 938, 956; [Chairman, 937, 938, 942, 947, 955, 957;] Mr. F. A. Channing, 937, 954; Mr. J. Brigg, 937; Mr. Powell-Williams, 938, 939, 950; Mr. J. Gilhooly, 938; (Division, 938;) Mr. J. C. Flynn, 940, 945, 959; Mr. J. Dillon, 941, 942, 944; Mr. J. Burns, 943; Mr. C. Harrison, 945, 953, 959; Mr. G. J. Goschen, 946; Mr. H. Labouchere, 947; (Division, 948); Mr. T. R. Buchanan, 950, 951; Sir M. Hicks Beach, 950, 951, 956; Mr. T. P. Whittaker, 952; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 954, 957; (Divisions, 954, 957;) (Amendt. negatived, 958); (Division, 958;) R.P. Feb 22
(For Questions see ARMY)

MILNER, Sir F. G., Bart., Notts, Bassetlaw
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 550, 552

MILWARD, Colonel VICTOR, Warwick, Stratford-on-Avon
Parcels Post, Ireland Feb 22, 872
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 178; 2R. Feb 15, 471, 475; Feb 25, 1191, 1192, 1221

MINTO, Earl of
Home Defence and the Volunteers Feb 11, 131

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS
Agricultural Holdings, Q. Mr. G. Lambert; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 25, 1144
Alabama Claims, Qs. Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 26, 1253
Bequest to Nation by Lady Wallace, Q. Mr. Massey-Mainwaring; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Mar 1, 1346
Bishop of Peterborough, Confirmation of Election, Q. Mr. Bryn Roberts; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 26, 1255
Brighton Chain Pier, Q. Mr. Gerald Loder; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 715
British Trade and Foreign Competition, Qs. Sir H. Vincent; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 9, 24

[cont.

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS—cont.
- Burial Grounds, Qs. Mr. H. C. Stephens, Mr. F. W. Wilson; As. Mr. H. Chaplin Mar 4, 1602
- Carbide of Calcium, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 721
- Copyholders, Ground Game, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 2, 1433
- Cornish Mining Industry, Q. Mr. A. Strauss; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Mar 4, 1611
- Egloskerry Parish, Cornwall, Q. Mr. T. Owen; A. Sir R. Webster Feb 23, 981
- Employers' Liability Bill, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 9, 25. Q. Mr. S. Woods; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Mar 4, 1613
- Foreign Patents, Q. Mr. C. E. Schwann; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 26, 1262
- Friendly Societies, Rules, Q. Mr. W. J. Galloway; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 16, 509
- Gibraltar Drainage Works, Q. Mr. E. Robertson; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 2, 1435
- Half-sovereigns and Farthings, Qs. Mr. C. E. Schwann; As. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 22, 857
- Manchester, "Church Ley," Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 18, 722
- One-man Companies, Qs. Mr. J. H. Lewis, Sir W. Hart Dyke; As. Sir R. Webster Mar 4, 1610
- Oyster Culture, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 25, 1132
- Patent Laws, Qs. Captain Phillpotts; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 11, 163
- Patriotic Fund, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 16, 504
- Queen's Reign
  - Coinage, Q. Mr. W. F. Lawrence; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Mar 2, 1436
  - Colonial Troops, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Brodrick Mar 1, 1331
  - National Holiday, Qs. Sir J. Lubbock; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 11, 186
  - South Kensington Museum, Q. Mr. Massey-Mainwaring; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 11, 174
  - Visit of Colonial Premiers, Qs. Mr. J. F. Hogan, Sir G. Baden-Powell; As. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 23, 977. Q. Mr. V. Cavendish; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Mar 4, 1602
- Rabies
  - Regulations, Qs. Mr. J. Bigwood; As. Mr. W. Long Mar 1, 1346
  - Treatment, Mr. M'Govern's, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 157
- Salisbury Plain
  - Protection of Ancient Monuments, Q. Mr. C. Colston; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 25, 1144
  - Tenant Farmers, Q. Mr. E. A. Goulding; A Mr. Powell-Williams Mar 4, 1586
- Street Organ Grinders, Qs. Mr. J. A. Jacoby, Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, Mr. R. Pierpoint; [Mr. Speaker]; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 9, 13
- Sugar Refining Industry, United Kingdom, Q. Sir T. Sutherland; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 11, 185
- Town Courts, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. J. Atkinson Mar 2, 1442

[cont.

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS—cont.
- Usury Laws, Q. Mr. R. A. Yerburgh; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 412
- Weights and Measures, Q. Mr. W. R. Bousfield; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 19, 779

Molloy, Mr. B. C., King's County, Birr
- Irish Mail Service Feb 23, 978

Monk, Mr. C. J., Gloucester
- Crete Feb 15, 405
- Indian Loan Feb 15, 409
- Judicature Acts Feb 23, 1013
- Ottoman Empire Reforms Feb 18, 725

Monkswell, Lord
- Dismissal of Mr. John Bull Feb 15, 370
- Retirement of Vestrymen and Auditors (London) Bill, 2R. Mar 4, 1565

Monteagle, Lord
- Irish Land Commission Feb 18, 665, 666

Morgan, Mr. J. Lloyd, Carmarthenshire, W.
- Juries Detention Bill, Intro. Feb 23, 987; 2R. Mar 4, 1675
- Law of Evidence (Criminal Cases) Bill Feb 11, 187
- Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1014
- Railway Rates Feb 15, 394
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 215

MORLEY, Earl of (Chairman of Committees [H.L.])
- Christchurch Enclosure Allotments Bill, 2R. Mar 1, 1317

Morley, Mr. Charles, Brecknock
- Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1196; In Com. Mar 4, 1667

Morley, Right Hon. John, Montrose Burghs
- Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1526
- Financial Relations, Great Britain and Ireland Feb 22, 885
- Judicial Rents, Ireland Mar 1, 1334
- Navy Estimates Feb 26, 1266
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 226, 227, 229, 230, 236, 240, 245; Feb 15, 434, 439, 440; Feb 25, 1228

Morrell, Mr. G. H., Oxon, Woodstock
- Land Tax Mar 2, 1438

MORTON, Mr. E. J. C., Devonport
  Board Schools, Financial Aid Feb 15, 410
  Crete Feb 15, 500
  Crete, Action of British Ships Feb 22, 921
  Established Church (England and Wales) Feb 9, 38, 43
  Navy Estimates: £507,000 Additional Expenditure (1896-97) Feb 26, 1269, 1270
  Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 198

MOWBRAY, Right Hon. Sir J. R., Bart., Oxford University
  University Extension, Annual Grant Mar 4, 1581

MUNDELLA, Right Hon. A. J., Sheffield, Brightside
  Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 84
  Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 456; Feb 16, 540, 544, 547, 560; Feb 25, 1225; In Com. Mar 1, 1375, 1382; Mar 3, 1549; Mar 4, 1657, 1658

MURDOCH, Mr. C. T., Reading
  Great Northern Railway Bill, 2R. Feb 25, 1114
  London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 687

MURRAY, Colonel C. WYNDHAM, Bath
  Army Estimates
    £553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 794
    £639,000 for Transport and Remounts Feb 19, 823
  Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 744

MURRAY, RIGHT HON. ANDREW GRAHAM (Lord Advocate), Buteshire
  Bandsmen Assaulted, Scotland Mar 4, 1580
  Beam and Otter Trawling Feb 15, 390
  Crofters' Commission Feb 9, 20; Feb 12, 268
  Drunkenness
    Conviction in Scotland Feb 12, 267
    Glasgow Feb 26, 1254
  Illegal Trawling, Scotland Feb 9, 5
  Import Duty on Scotch Herrings Feb 12, 262
  Mail Packet Service (Scotland) Feb 22, 855
  Monifieth Police Court, Conviction for Sleeping out Feb 16, 512
  Parish Council Accounts, Scotland Feb 15, 392
  Perth and Dundee Prisons Feb 23, 974
  Prison Visiting Committees Feb 25, 1124
  School Board Elections, Scotland Feb 15, 410; Feb 16, 512
  Scottish
    Fishery Cruisers Mar 1, 1336
    Universities Grant Feb 11, 154
  Trawling
    Beam and Otter Feb 15, 390
    Illegal (Scotland) Feb 9, 5
  Trusts (Scotland) Bill, 2R. Feb 12, 365

MYERS, Mr. W. H., Winchester
  Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 741

NAVY
  First Lord—Mr. G. J. GOSCHEN
  Secretary—Mr. W. G. E. MACARTNEY
  Civil Lord—Mr. J. AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN
  Admiralty Contracts, Qs. Sir H. Vincent; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Macartney Mar 1, 1324
  Anglo-French Postal Convention, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 16, 505
  Benin Expedition, Qs. Sir J. Colomb; As. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 18, 723
  Cordite, H.M.'s Ships, Q. Mr. Sydney Gedge; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Mar 4, 1579
  Estimates: Supply, Qs. Mr. J. H. Dalziel; As. Mr. Macartney Feb 22, 880
  Explosion, H.M.S. Howe, Qs. Captain A. J. C. Donelan; As. Mr. Macartney Mar 2, 1444
  Greenwich Age Pension, Qs. General Laurie, Mr. H. E. Kearley; As. Mr. Austen Chamberlain Feb 9, 9
  Lee-Metford Rifle, Royal Naval Reserve, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 11, 154
  Naval
    College, Dartmouth, Q. Sir J. S. B. Simeon; A. Mr. Austen Chamberlain Feb 22, 875
    Establishments, Pay, Qs. Mr. H. E. Kearley, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. Macartney Mar 2, 1430
    Force of Powers at Constantinople, Q. Mr. F. S. Stevenson; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 18, 718
    Instructors, Q. Mr. Gibson Bowles; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 18, 705
    Manœuvres Report, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Mar 1, 1338
    Pensioner: Devine (John), Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. Macartney Feb 22, 874
    Shipwrights, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 11, 165 Qs. Captain Pirie, Mr. H. E. Kearley; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Macartney Mar 2, 1437
  Ordnance Store Department, Q. Mr. H. C. F. Luttrell; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 9, 14
  Patriotic Fund, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 16, 504
  Pilot Service, Falkland Islands, Q. Mr. J. W. Sidebotham; A. Mr. J. Chamberlain Feb 23, 968
  Rams, Warships, Q. Mr. Gibson Bowles; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 18, 706
  Royal Marine Artillery Officers, Q. Sir J. Colomb; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 22, 868
  Supply: Supplementary Navy Estimate, Q. Mr. J. H. Dalziel; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 19, 791

NAVY ESTIMATES, 1897-98
  £507,000 for Additional Expenditure (1896-97)
    In Com., Mr. Vesey Knox, 1268, 1271; Mr. Macartney, 1268, 1269, 1270, 1271, 1272; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1269; Mr. J. Dillon, 1269, 1270; Mr. E. J. C. Morton, 1269, 1270; Mr. E. Robertson, 1270, 1271; Mr. G. J. Goschen, 1270, 1271. Vote Agreed to Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1410

[cont.

NAVY ESTIMATES, 1897-98—cont.

£5,775. 13s. for Naval Defence Act 1889 (Excess Expenditure, 1896-97)
In Com., Mr. Vesey Knox, 1272, 1273; [Chairman, 1272;] Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1272; Mr. J. Dillon, 1272, 1273; Mr. E. Robertson, 1273; Mr. Macartney, 1273, 1274. Vote Agreed to Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1410

New River Water (Purchase) Bill
c. Read 1° Feb 10, 69

NICOL, Mr. D. N., Argyllshire
Mail Packet Service (Scotland) Feb 22, 855
Solent and Clyde, Artillery Firing Feb 26, 1255

NORFOLK, DUKE OF (Postmaster General)
Irish Mails Mar 4, 1570

North British Railway Bill
c. 2R., Sir C. Dilke, 852; Mr. J. W. Lowther, 853; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 853; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 854 Feb. 22
Read 2° Feb 22, 854

NORTHCOTE, Hon. Sir H. STAFFORD, Bart., Exeter
Statutes, Queen's Printers Feb 25, 1125

O'BRIEN, Mr. PATRICK, Kilkenny
American Passenger Traffic, Police at Queenstown Feb 22, 869
Army Horses Mar 4, 1597
Ballybot Licensing Sessions Feb 25, 1134
Bankruptcy Court, Ireland Feb 25, 1126; Mar 4, 1601
British South Africa Company Feb 11, 174
Cairn at Finner, Donegal Feb 18, 712
Clare
  Assizes, Diminution of Crime Mar 4, 1608
  Police Protection Duty Feb 18, 720
County Court Judge, Down Mar 4, 1608
Crete Feb 25, 1153
Cuba Mar 1, 1346, 1347
Election of Coroner, Tipperary Feb 18, 720
Financial Relations, Great Britain and Ireland Feb 12, 279
Horse-breeding Commission, Dublin Feb 22, 860
Industrial School Contracts, Ireland Feb 25, 1127
Irish Mails Feb 11, 160; Feb 25, 1136
Licensing Sessions, Ballybot Feb 25, 1134
Lightships, Ireland Mar 4, 1578
Local Government (Ireland) Provisional Orders (No. 1) Bill Mar 4, 1571
Maryborough Gaol: Prisoner Fitzharris Feb 22, 876; Mar 4, 1601
Pensions
  National School Teachers, Ireland Mar 4, 1576
  Royal Irish Constabulary Mar 4, 1576

[cont.

O'BRIEN, Mr. PATRICK—cont.
Police Protection Duty, Clare Feb 18, 720
Poor Law Relief Bill, Ireland Feb 18, 713
Prosecution of Mr. Ivory Feb 11, 185
Railway Traffic, England and Ireland Mar 1, 1343
Registered Letter Envelopes Feb 11, 168; Feb 16, 515
Treatment of Prisoners at Barcelona Feb 22, 868

O'CONNOR, Mr. ARTHUR, Donegal, E.
Army Retired Pay Feb 11, 183
Financial Relations, Great Britain and Ireland Feb 22, 885
Great Northern Railway Bill, 2R. Feb 25, 1111, 1114
Labourers Acts, Donegal Feb 18, 713
Loan Fund Societies, Ireland Feb 22, 860

O'CONNOR, Mr. J., Wicklow, W.
Criminal Law Amendment (Ireland) Act (1887) Feb 15, 413
Poor Law Relief (Ireland) Bill Mar 2, 1445
Railway Carriage Construction Feb 15, 403

O'CONNOR, Mr. T. P., Liverpool, Scotland
Crete Feb 15, 406; Feb 16, 514, 518, 519, 533
Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1472, 1474
Irish Mail Service Feb 15, 393
Pattern Post, Rubber Stamps Feb 11, 171
Registered Letter Envelopes Feb 11, 169
Supply: £12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1280, 1281
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 554, 557, 558

O'KELLY, Mr. JAMES, Roscommon, N.
Brennan (John), Late 41st Regt. Feb 26, 1259
Crete Feb 15, 406; Feb 16, 512
Suck Drainage Scheme Mar 4, 1578

ONSLOW, EARL OF (Under Secretary of State for India)
India, Bubonic Fever Inoculation Feb 15, 385

ORR-EWING, Mr. C. L., Ayr Burghs
Perth and Dundee Prisons Feb 23, 974
Scots Greys Feb 16, 515

OWEN, Mr. T., Cornwall, Launceston
Egloskerry Parish, Cornwall Feb 23, 981

Parliament.
LORDS—
  Committees
    Chairmen's Panel—Report from Com. of Selection Feb 19, 792
    Companies Bill, Select—Nominated Feb 12, 261

[cont.

PARLIAMENT—Lords—cont.

Committees—cont.

Standing—Rep. from Com. of Chairmen, That they have appointed Lord Herschell Chairman of Standing Com Mar 2, 1417
Statute Law Revision Bills, etc.—Message from Commons re Joint Committee Feb 25, 1105

Miscellaneous

Licensing Exemption (Houses of Parliament) Bill (see that Title)

New Peer Introduced

Feb 23—Sir Joseph Lister, baronet, President of the Royal Society, having been created Baron Lister of Lyme Regis, in the County of Dorset

Petitions

Bull, Mr. John (Dismissal of)—Lord Monkswell, (Motion) 370; Earl of Ancaster, 376; Earl of Kimberley, 379; Lord Halsbury, 380; Lord Herschell, 380; (Division, 382); (Motion negatived, 383) Feb 15
Sinclair, Alfred Law—For leave to present a Bill to dissolve his marriage; Read and ordered to be considered Feb 22, 849

Representative Peers for Ireland

Clonmel, Earl of, Certificate Ordered Feb 12, 253
Farnham, Lord, Claim to Vote Read and Referred to Lord Chancellor Feb 23, 965
Claim Established Mar 1, 1309
Certificate Ordered Mar 4, 1565
Kingston, Earl of, Claim to Vote, Read and Referred to Lord Chancellor Feb 26, 1245
Limerick, Earl of, Right to Vote Established Feb 9, 1
Certificate Ordered Feb 12, 253
Normanton, Earl of, Claim to Vote Read and Referred to Lord Chancellor Feb 18, 665

Sat First

Mar 4—Viscount Gough after the death of his father

COMMONS

Business of the House and Public Business

Adjournment—Mr. E. J. C. Morton, 500; Mr. Hanbury, 500 Feb 15
Mr. T. P. O'Connor, 518, 519, 533; [Mr. Speaker, 518, 519, 531;] Mr. J. Dillon, 523; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 524; Sir W. Harcourt, 527; Mr. H. Labouchere, 530, 531; Mr. Curzon, 531; Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, 532; (Motion withdrawn, 533) Feb 16
Mr. H. Labouchere, (Motion) 890, 891, 892; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 890, 896, 897, 898, 899, 901, 926; [Mr. Speaker, 890, 892, 894, 895, 915, 916;] Mr. J. Dillon,

[cont.

PARLIAMENT—Commons—cont.

Business of the House and Public Business—cont.

Adjournment—cont.

892, 895, 897, 898, 909; Sir W. Harcourt, 900, 901, 910, 911; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 904; Sir R. T. Reid, 906, 909, 911, 912; Mr. G. J. Goschen, 909, 910, 911; Mr. Vesey Knox, 913; Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, 915, 916; Mr. F. A. Channing, 917; Sir J. Lubbock, 918; Mr. P. J. Stanhope, 919, 920; Mr. Stuart-Wortley, 920; Mr. E. J. C. Morton, 921; Mr. C J. Darling, 923; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 925; Sir C. Dilke, 927; (Division, 928) Feb 22
Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. Speaker Feb 23, 986
Military Manœuvres Bill, Q. Mr. A. M. Brookfield; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 414
Procedure: Crete—Mr. J. Dillon, 1347, 1350; Sir W. Harcourt, 1348, 1351; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1348, 1349; Mr. J. Lowther, 1349, 1350, 1351, 1352; [Mr. Speaker, 1350, 1351;] Sir H. Fowler, 1350 Mar 1
Sittings of the House
Ash Wednesday—Mr. A. J. Balfour (Motion) 1533; Mr. J. H. Lewis, 1533 Mr. S. T. Evans, 1533; [Mr. Speaker, 1533;] (Division, 1533) Mar 2
Exemption from Standing Order—Mr. A. J. Balfour, (Motion) 533; (Division, 533) Feb 16
Suspension of Standing Orders CCIV and CCXXXV—Dr. Farquharson, (Motion) Feb 22, 854
Supply
Brigade of Guards—On Motion, That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair; Debate Resumed on Colonel Lockwood's Amendt.: Sir A. F. Acland-Hood, 280, 292, 294; Colonel Kenyon-Slaney, 286, 297; Mr. Brodrick, 291, 292, 294, 297, 303, 310; Mr. Arnold-Forster, 294; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 303, 307, 310, 312, 317; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 311, 312; Sir J. Fergusson, 316, 317; Colonel Blundell, 317; Dr. Farquharson, 318; Mr. Powell-Williams, 318; (Motion Agreed to, 319) Feb 12
Estimates
Army, Qs. Dr. Farquharson, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 414
Civil Service, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing, Mr. T. R. Buchanan, Sir C. Dilke; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 18, 728
Navy, Qs. Mr. J. H. Dalziel; As. Mr. Macartney Feb 22, 880. Qs. Mr. Gibson Bowles, Mr. J. Morley; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 26, 1266. Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Mar 2, 1449
Scotch, Q. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 413
Supplementary
Civil Service, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 22, 886
Navy, Q. Mr. J. H. Dalziel; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 19, 791

[cont.

PARLIAMENT—Commons—cont.

Business of the House and Public Business—cont.

Voluntary Schools Bill—Mr. A. J. Balfour, (Motion for Precedence) 188, 195, 196, 200; Mr. J. Lowther, 189; Mr. T. Lough, 192; [Mr. Speaker, 192, 194, 199, 200;] Mr. J. Samuel, 192; Mr. H. Seton-Karr, 193; Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), 193; Mr. J. G. Weir, 194; Mr. D. H. Coghill, 194; Mr. J. A. Pease, (Amendt.) 194; Mr. J. M. Paulton, 195; Sir W. Harcourt, 196; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 197; Mr. E. J. C. Morton, 198; (Division, 199); Mr. J. C. Williams, (Amendt.) 199; Mr. J. Brigg, 200; Mr. P. J. Stanhope, 200; (Divisions, 200) Feb 11

Committees

Government Contracts (Fair Wages Resolution), Select—Appointed and Nominated Feb 25, 1244
Mr. Jackson and Mr. Parker Smith discharged from, and Mr. Aird and Sir William Arrol added to, Com. Mar 4, 1676

Museums of the Science and Art Department, Select—Ordered and Nominated Feb 26, 1308

Petroleum, Select, Q. Mr. J. McKillop; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 19, 789; Appointed and Nominated Feb 23, 1043

Police and Sanitary Regulations—Ordered Feb 26, 1266

Public Accounts—Nominated Mar 1, 1416

Standing, Chairmen's Panel—Reported, That Sir James Fergusson was appointed to act as Chairman of the Standing Committee for the consideration of Bills relating to Law and Courts of Justice and Legal Procedure Mar 1, 1321

Statute Law Revision Bills—Lords' Message re Joint Committee considered: Ordered, and Seven Members Nominated; Message to Lords to acquaint them therewith Feb 23, 1043
Ordered, That three be the Quorum of the Joint Com. Feb 24, 1045

Uganda Railway, Qs. Mr. R. W. Perks; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 402

Members

Free Railway Passes for, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 12, 276

Postage, Parliamentary Publications, Q. Mr. C. Bill; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 398

Miscellaneous

British South Africa, Select Committee Room, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 18, 719. Q. Mr. F. A. Channing; A. [Mr. Speaker;] Feb 19, 783

Licensing Exemption (Houses of Parliament) Bill (see that Title)

Private Bill Legislation, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 181

Statutes, Queen's Printers, Q. Sir Stafford Northcote; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1125

Westminster Hall, Q. Mr. C. B. B. McLaren; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 22, 864

[cont.

PARLIAMENT—Commons—cont.

New Members Sworn

Feb 19—Sir Charles Cameron, baronet, for the Burgh of Glasgow (Bridgeton Division)

Feb 22—Henry Currie Leigh-Bennett, esquire, for the County of Surrey (North-western or Chertsey Division)

New Writ Issued

Feb 22—For the Borough of Halifax v. William Rawson Shaw, esquire, Manor of Northstead

Parliamentary Debates

Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 166

PAULTON, Mr. J. M., Durham, Bishop Auckland

East London Water Bill Feb 26, 1246

Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 657

Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 195; 2R. Feb 15, 456; Feb 25, 1192; In Com. Mar 1, 1376; Mar 4, 1625, 1670

Pauper Aliens

Mr. J. Lowles, (Motion) 63, 67, 68; Sir H. Vincent, 65, 67, 68; Mr. Ritchie, 66; Sir C. Dilke, 67, 68; Mr. T. Lough, 67, 68; Mr. J. Havelock Wilson, 68 Feb 9

Peasant Freeholders (Wales)

Mr. Lloyd Morgan, (Motion) 1014; Mr. Rees Davies, 1020, 1027; Mr. P. C. J. Milbank, 1023: Mr. Vaughan Davies, 1024; Mr. W. Long, 1025, 1027, 1029, 1032; Mr. Bryn Roberts, 1029; General Laurie, 1030; Mr. T. Ellis, 1031, 1032; Mr. W. T. Howell, 1033; Major Wyndham-Quin, 1035; Mr. J. H. Roberts, 1036; Mr. Stanley Leighton, 1037; Sir M. Hicks Beach, 1038; (Division, 1042) Feb 23

PEASE, Mr. ARTHUR, Darlington

Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 107

PEASE, Mr. JOSEPH A., Northumberland, Tyneside

Prisoners' Personal Correction Prohibition Bill, Intro. Mar 2, 1534

Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 194; In Com. Mar 1, 1367, 1374, 1382; Mar 3, 1547; Mar 4, 1667

PEASE, Sir JOSEPH W., Bart., Durham, Barnard Castle

Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 3, 1554, 1555

Pensions
Army
Retired Pay, Q. Mr. A. O'Connor; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 11, 183
Special Campaign, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 9, 5
Greenwich Age, Qs. General Laurie, Mr. H. E. Kearley; As. Mr. Austen Chamberlain Feb 9, 9
National Teachers' Fund, Ireland, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 16, 510. Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1258. Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 1, 1335. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1576
Naval Pensioner: Devine (John), Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. Macartney Feb 22, 874
Royal Irish Constabulary, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1576

PERKS, Mr. R. W., Lincolnshire, Louth
Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1062, 1064, 1065, 1079
Truck Act, Railway Companies Feb 15, 400, 401
Uganda Railway Committee Feb 15, 402
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 564, 568, 569; In Com. Mar 1, 1370, 1371, 1376, 1393, 1395; Mar 3, 1540, 1541, 1560; Mar 4, 1645

PHILLPOTTS, Captain A. S., Devonshire, Torquay
Patent Laws Feb 11, 163, 164

PICKERSGILL, Mr. E. H., Bethnal Green, S.W.
Agricultural Rates Act (1896) Amending Order Feb 19, 789, 790; Feb 22, 882, 883
Assizes
Lewes, Conviction for Fraud Feb 26, 1249, 1250
Winchester, Bigamy Trial Feb 15, 388
Casual Wards, Metropolis Mar 1, 1321
Central Criminal Court, Regina v. Greatorex-Smith Feb 19, 777, 778
Commutation of Sentence: James Bate Feb 18, 707
Convictions
Fraud, Lewes Assizes Feb 26, 1249, 1250
Perjury, Police Constable Murray Feb 23, 976
Felon Convicts Feb 16, 508; Feb 18, 724
Government Powder Magazine, Purfleet Feb 16, 509
Holloway Prison, Lady Scott Feb 25, 1143
Lewes Assizes, Conviction for Fraud Feb 26, 1249, 1250
Metropolitan Poor Law Schools Report, etc. Feb 9, 4
National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Mar 2, 1440
Prisons
Holloway, Lady Scott Feb 25, 1143
Visiting Committees Feb 25, 1123
Street Organ Grinders Feb 9, 14
Venezuelan Arbitration Feb 9, 24
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 1, 1355
Winchester Assizes, Bigamy Trial Feb 15, 388

PIERPOINT, Mr. ROBERT, Warrington
Street Organ Grinders Feb 9, 14

PINKERTON, Mr. JOHN, Galway
Giant's Causeway and Portrush Tramway Feb 9, 12
Land Commission Court, Ballymena Feb 11, 182

PIRIE, Captain D. V., Aberdeen, N.
Army Estimates
158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 361
£295,800 for Medical Establishment, Pay: Report Feb 15, 498
British Troops in India, Health Mar 1, 1340
Naval Shipwrights Mar 2, 1437
Recruiting Areas, Colonies Mar 4, 1579
Scottish Fishery Cruisers Mar 1, 1335
Volunteer Drill Halls, Aberdeen Feb 23, 976

PLUNKETT, Hon. HORACE C., Dublin County, S.
Dublin Corporation Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 619, 623, 625

POST OFFICE

Postmaster General—Duke of NORFOLK
American Mail Service, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1331
Anglo-French Postal Convention, Q. Sir C. Dilke; A. Mr. G. J. Goschen Feb 16, 505
Australian Mail Contract, Qs. Mr. J. F. Hogan; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 397; Feb 22, 867
Bogus Telegrams, Ireland, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1258
Buckie, Connection with Trunk Telephone Lines, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1347
Cork
Mail Delivery, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 18, 711
Telegraph Facilities, Drinagh, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1123
Death of a Post Office Servant, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 873
Indian Mail Service, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 972
Indo-China and Australian Mail Contracts, Qs. Sir J. Leng; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 158; Mar 2, 1438
Kirkcaldy Post Office, Qs. Mr. J. H. Dalziel; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 880
Leitrim Postal Accommodation, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 970
Letters for Siberia, Q. Mr. J. Colville; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1137
Letter Weights, Q. Mr. J. E. Gordon; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 18, 707
Mail Service
American, Q. Mr. J. F. Hogan; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1331
Australian Contract, Qs. Mr. J. F. Hogan; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 397; Feb 22, 867
Cork Delivery, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 18, 711

[cont.

POST OFFICE—cont.
- Mail Service—cont.
  - Indian, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 972
  - Indo-China and Australian Contracts, Qs. Sir J. Leng; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 158; Mar 2, 1438
  - Irish, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. Swift MacNeill; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 159. Qs. Mr. T. J. Condon, Mr. T. P. O'Connor; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 393. Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 19, 781. Qs. Mr. James Roche, Captain Donelan, Mr. T. B. Curran; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 864. Q. Mr. B. C. Molloy; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 978. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1136. Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1325. Qs. Earl of Belmore, Viscount Clifden; As. Duke of Norfolk Mar 4, 1568
  - Packet Service, Scotland, Q. Mr. D. N. Nicol; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 22, 855
  - Skibbereen and Schull, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 2, 1445
  - Stornoway, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 9, 22. Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 391
  - West India and Cape, Q. Sir E. Clarke; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 4, 1609
- Manchester Post Office, Q. Mr. C. E. Schwann; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 19, 786
- Money Orders
  - Commission, Qs. Mr. J. Rankin, Mr. E. Strachey, Mr. J. McLeod; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 966. Q. Mr. L. R. Holland; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1326
  - Post Office, Qs. Mr. J. Rankin, Mr. E. Strachey, Mr. J. McLeod; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 966
  - Service, Benevolent Societies, Q. Mr. C. E. Schwann; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 19, 785
- Parcels Post, Inland, Q. Colonel Milward; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 872
- Parliamentary Publications, Members' Postage, Q. Mr. C. Bill; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 398
- Pattern Post, Rubber Samples, Q. Mr. T. P. O'Connor; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 171. Q. Mr. A. F. Warr; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 390
- Postal Accommodation, Leitrim, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 970
- Post Office
  - Death of a Servant, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 873
  - Establishments, Q. Mr. Vicary Gibbs; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 9, 7. Q. Mr. Gerald Loder; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 19, 791
  - Kirkcaldy, Qs. Mr. J. H. Dalziel; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 880
  - Letter-weights, Q. Mr. J. E. Gordon; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 18, 707
  - Manchester, Q. Mr. C. E. Schwann; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 19, 786
  - Money Orders, Qs. Mr. J. Rankin, Mr. E. Strachey, Mr. J. McLeod; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 966
  - Savings Bank Accounts, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 390
  - Sorters, Q. Sir A. K. Rollit; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 881

[cont.

POST OFFICE—cont.
- Railway Traffic, England and Ireland, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1343
- Registered Letter Envelopes, Qs. Mr. P. O'Brien, Mr. T. P. O'Connor; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 11, 168. Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 16, 515
- Rural Postmen, Ireland, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1256
- Service Money Orders, Benevolent Societies, Q. Mr. C. E. Schwann; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 19, 785
- Siberia, Letters for, Q. Mr. J. Colville; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1137
- Skibbereen and Schull, Mails, Q. Captain Donelan; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 2, 1445
- Stornoway Mails, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 9, 22. Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 391
- Telegrams, Bogus, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 26, 1258
- Telegraph
  - Extensions, Scotland, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir, Mr. J. McLeod; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 402
  - Facilities, Drinagh, Cork, Q. Mr. J. Gilhooly; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1123
- Telephone
  - Buckie, Connection with Trunk Lines, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1347
  - System in England, Qs. Mr. Henniker Heaton, Mr. G. C. T. Bartley; As. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1341
  - Trunk Lines, Scotland, Q. Mr. A. Asher; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 12, 272. Q. Mr. J. W. Crombie; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 25, 1126. Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1345. Q. Mr. J. W. Crombie; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 4, 1590

Post Office Consolidation Bill
- l. Referred to Joint Com. on Statute Law Revision and Consolidation Bills: Message sent to Commons to acquaint therewith Feb 26, 1245

POWELL, Sir FRANCIS S., Bart., Wigan
- Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1065
- Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 544; In Com. Mar 1, 1389; Mar 4, 1645

POWER, Mr. P. J., Waterford, E.
- Tramore Fishery Pier Mar 1, 1325

Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill
- c. 2R., Mr. G. Kemp, 70; Mr. R. Ascroft, 74, 79; Sir C. Dilke, 77; Sir A. K. Rollit, 78, 79; Mr. H. Broadhurst, 81; Mr. A. Hopkinson, 82; Mr. A. J. Mundella, 84; Mr. A. F. Warr, 84; Mr. H. Whiteley, 85; Mr. Tomlinson, 85: Sir R. B. Finlay, 86 Feb 10
- Read 2° and com. to Standing Com. on Law, etc. Feb 10, 87

PRICE, Mr. R. J., Norfolk, E.
- Indian Famine, Godavery Canal Mar 1, 1334

Prisoners' Personal Correction Prohibition Bill
c. Intro., Mr. J. A. Pease; Read 1° Mar 2, 1534

Prison-made Goods (Importation) Bill
c. Intro., Sir H. Vincent; Read 1° Feb 23, 987

Prisons (see Law and Justice and Police)
(For Scotch and Irish Questions see under Titles Scotland and Ireland)

Pryce-Jones, Major E., Montgomery Boroughs
Army Estimates: £76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 810

Purvis, Mr. Robert, Peterborough
Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1073

Quilter, Mr. W. C., Suffolk, Sudbury
Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 112

Railway Rates
Mr. J. H. Roberts, (Notice of Motion) Feb 9, 4

RAILWAYS
- Cavan Leitrim and Roscommon Light, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 9, 18
- Great Eastern Railway (General Powers) Bill (see that Title)
- Great Northern Company of Ireland, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 4, 1591
- Great Northern Railway Bill (see that Title)
- Level Crossing, Tottenham, Q. Mr. J. Howard; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 22, 877
- Light Railway: Cavan Leitrim and Roscommon, Q. Mr. P. A. M'Hugh; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 9, 18
- Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee Bill (see that Title)
- Murder on London and South Western Railway, Q. Mr. J. Bailey; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 22, 879
- North British Railway Bill (see that Title)
- North Eastern Dispute, Q. Sir E. T. Gourley; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 1, 1344
- North Eastern Railway (Additional Powers) Bill, Q. Mr. Tomlinson; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 4, 1584
- Railway
  - Carriages' Construction, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 15, 403
  - Companies
    - Complainant Traders, and, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 8
    - Truck Act, Qs. Mr. R. W. Perks, Sir C. Dilke; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 400
  - Rates
    - Foreign Producers, and, Q. Mr. Lloyd Morgan; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 15, 394
    - London and Tilbury Company, Q. Major Rasch; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 2, 1436
  - Traffic, England and Ireland, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1343

[cont.

RAILWAYS—cont.
- Railway Clearing House Incorporation Bill, Qs. Mr. Tomlinson; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 8
- Truck Act
  - Metropolitan District Railway Company, Q. Mr. T. Lough; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Mar 4, 1595
  - Railway Companies, Qs Mr. R. W. Perks, Sir C. Dilke; As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 15, 400. Qs. Mr. S. Woods, Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), Sir H. Vincent, Mr. J. Samuel, Mr. T. Lough; [Mr. Speaker;] As. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 23, 972
- Uganda Railway Committee, Qs. Mr. R. W. Perks; As. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 402

Rankin, Mr. James, Herefordshire, Leominster
Agricultural Statistics Feb 16, 503
Post Office Money Orders Feb 23, 966
Voluntary Schools Bill Mar 2, 1435

Rasch, Major F. C., Essex, S.E.
Indian Army, Health Feb 18, 703
Infantry Recruits, Chest Measurement Mar 2, 1430
Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 763, 765
Pleuro-Pneumonia, Essex Feb 22, 872
Railway Rates, London and Tilbury Company Mar 2, 1436
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 23, 980; Feb 25, 1200

Reay, Lord
India, Bubonic Fever Inoculation Feb 15, 383

Reckitt, Mr. H. J., Lincolnshire, Brigg
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 4, 1666

Redmond, Mr. J. E., Waterford
Financial Relations, Great Britain and Ireland Feb 22, 884, 885

Reid, Sir Robert T., Dumfries Burghs
Crete, Action of British Ships Feb 22, 906, 909, 911, 912

Renshaw, Mr. C. B., Renfrew, W.
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 648, 649, 650

Rentoul, Mr. J. A., Down, E.
Supply: £12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1281

Retirement of Vestrymen and Auditors (London) Bill
l. Pres., Lord Monkswell; Read 1ª Mar 1, 1320
2R., Lord Monkswell, 1565; Lord Harris, 1566 Mar 4
Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House Mar 4, 1566

RIDLEY, RIGHT HON. SIR MATTHEW WHITE, BART. (Secretary of State for the Home Department), Lancashire, N., Blackpool

- Assizes
  - Essex, Trial of William Walden Feb 11, 180
  - Lewes, Conviction for Fraud Feb 26, 1249, 1250
  - Maidstone Feb 18, 707
  - Winchester, Bigamy Trial Feb 15, 389
- Bishop of Peterborough, Confirmation of Election Feb 26, 1255
- Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1090, 1093
- Carbide of Calcium Feb 18, 721
- Carlisle Gaol, Death of Prisoner Feb 11, 166
- Central Criminal Court, Regina v. Greatorex-Smith Feb 19, 778
- Commutation of Sentence : James Bate Feb 18, 708
- Conviction for Perjury : Police-Constable Murray Feb 23, 976
- Copyholders, Ground Game Mar 2, 1433
- Employment of a Deaf Mute, Belfast Feb 22, 859
- Essex Assizes, Trial of William Walden Feb 11, 180
- Felon Convicts Feb 16, 508 ; Feb 18, 724
- Fraudulent Enlistment : George Smith Feb 15, 392
- Holloway Prison : Lady Scott Feb 25, 1143
- Jameson Raid, Prisoners at Holloway Feb 9, 21
- Lewes Assizes, Conviction for Fraud Feb 26, 1249, 1250
- Maidstone Assizes Feb 18, 707
- Metropolitan Police Clothing Feb 25, 1134
- Murder on London and South Western Railway Feb 22, 879
- National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Mar 2, 1440
- Nelson's Enchantress (Stage Play) Feb 18, 714
- Penal Servitude Mar 2, 1431
- Petroleum, Select Committee Feb 19, 789
- Prisoners
  - Death of, Carlisle Gaol Feb 11, 166
  - Discharged, Re-arrest of Mar 2, 1435
  - Holloway, Jameson Raid Feb 9, 21
  - Treason-felony Feb 25, 1138
- Prisons
  - Clerks, Parliamentary Elections Mar 4, 1600
  - Holloway : Lady Scott Feb 25, 1143
  - Officers Feb 26, 1254
- Private Lunatic Asylums Feb 15, 412
- Re-arrest of Discharged Prisoners Mar 2, 1435
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 114
- Servants' Homes and Agencies Mar 4, 1600
- Street Organ Grinders Feb 9, 14
- Treason-felony Prisoners Feb 25, 1138
- Truck Act
  - Fines Feb 25, 1140
  - Fines at Belfast Feb 9, 7
  - Metropolitan District Railway Company Mar 4, 1595
  - Railway Companies Feb 15, 401 ; Feb 23, 973
- Vaccination, Repeated Prosecutions Feb 16, 505
- Water Trustees Feb 12, 274 ; Feb 26, 1251
- Welsh Land Commission Report Feb 22, 856
- Winchester Assizes, Bigamy Trial Feb 15, 389

RITCHIE, RIGHT HON. CHARLES THOMSON (President of the Board of Trade), Croydon

- Bray Harbour, Fog Bell Feb 9, 16
- Brighton, Chain Pier Feb 18, 715
- Children's Metropolitan Asylums Board Feb 18, 705
- Collisions at Sea, Fishing Boats Mar 1, 1330, 1331
- Cruelty to a Seaman, s.s. Hornby Castle Feb 9, 19
- Daunt's Rock Lightship Feb 9, 15 ; Feb 18, 709
- Foreign
  - Patents Feb 26, 1262
  - Ports, Discharge of Seamen Mar 2, 1444
  - Prison-made Goods Feb 22, 855
  - Vessels in British Ports Feb 23, 970, 971
- Foreign Prison-made Goods Bill, Intro. Mar 4, 1676
- Giant's Causeway and Portrush Tramway Feb 9, 12, 13
- Harbour Accommodation, Devon and Cornwall Feb 22, 856
- Icelandic Fisheries Feb 9, 9
- Irish Lights Commissioners Feb 11, 158
- Lighthouse-keepers, Ireland Feb 26, 1264
- Lightships, Ireland Mar 4, 1577, 1578
- Merchant Shipping, Undermanning Mar 4, 1675, 1676
- North Atlantic Load-line Mar 1, 1330
- North Eastern Railway
  - Additional Powers Bill Mar 4, 1584
  - Dispute Mar 1, 1344
- Oyster Culture Feb 25, 1133
- Patent
  - Laws Feb 11, 164
  - Office Feb 9, 6
- Pauper Aliens Feb 9, 66
- Prison-made Goods Feb 18, 715
- Railway
  - Carriages, Construction Feb 15, 403
  - Clearing House Incorporation Bill Feb 9, 8
  - Companies and Complainant Traders Feb 9, 8
  - Great Northern Company, Ireland Mar 4, 1591
  - Level Crossing, Tottenham Feb 22, 877
  - Members of Parliament, Free Passes Feb 12, 276
  - Rates Feb 15, 394
  - Rates, London and Tilbury Company Mar 2, 1436
- Solent, Artillery Firing Feb 25, 1129
- South Shoal, Orkney Feb 18, 714
- Trade Dispute, Manchester Feb 12, 270, 271
- Weights and Measures Feb 19, 779

ROBERTS, MR. J. BRYN, Carnarvonshire, Eifion

- Armenian Refugees, Cyprus Feb 12, 264
- Bishop of Peterborough, Confirmation of Election Feb 26, 1255
- Crete Mar 2, 1447
- Dardanelles Feb 26, 1260, 1261
- High Sheriffs Feb 12, 271
- Jameson Raid, Cape Inquiry Feb 26, 1264
- Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1029

ROBERTS, Mr. J. HERBERT, Denbigh, W.
Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1097
Cash Balances, India Mar 2, 1439
Crete Feb 25, 1145
Established Church (England and Wales) Feb 9, 59
Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1036
Railway Rates Feb 9, 4
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 207; In Com. Mar 3, 1552
Volunteer Officers, Examinations Mar 4, 1575
Welsh Land Commission Report Feb 22, 856

ROBERTSON, Mr. EDMUND, Dundee
Gibraltar Drainage Works Mar 2, 1435
Labour Law Mar 2, 1429
Navy Estimates
£507,000 Additional Expenditure (1896–97) Feb 26, 1270 1271
£5,775 13s. for Naval Defence Act (1889) (Excess Expenditure) Feb 26, 1273

ROBSON, Mr. W. S., South Shields
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 442

ROCHE, Hon. JAMES B. B., Kerry, E.
Irish Mails Feb 22, 864
Jameson Raid
Indemnity Feb 18, 726
President Kruger's Claim Feb 22, 875
Kerry Bog Slide Feb 16, 505

ROLLIT, Sir ALBERT K., Islington, S.
Borough Justices' Clerks Bill, Intro. Feb 17, 663
Military Manœuvres, Grant to Officers Feb 19, 790
Post Office Sorters Feb 22, 881
Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 78, 79
Solicitors (Magistracy) Bill, Intro. Mar 4, 1676
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1179

ROUND, Mr. JAMES, Essex, Harwich
Clerical Incomes, Taxation Feb 23, 965
Colchester Barracks Mar 4, 1590

Royal Commissions
Crofters (see SCOTLAND)
Financial Relations between Great Britain and Ireland (see that Title)
Horse Breeding, Dublin (see IRELAND)
Irish Land (see IRELAND)
Rating (see LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD)
Welsh Land (see WALES)
West Indian Sugar (see COLONIES)

RUSSELL, General F. S., Cheltenham
Enteric Fever, India Mar 4, 1586
Indian Army, Health Feb 18, 703
Jameson Raid, President Kruger's Claim Mar 4, 1585
Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 738
Royal Barracks, Dublin Feb 11, 159

RUSSELL, MR. THOMAS W. (Secretary to the Local Government Board), Tyrone, S.
Agricultural Rates Act (1896) Amending Order Feb 19, 789: Feb 22, 883
Distress from Want of Employment Committee Feb 19, 779, 780
Infectious Diseases, Metropolis Feb 22, 858
West Bromwich Guardians Feb 19, 781

Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill
c. 2R., Mr. C. H. Wilson, 87, 99, 117; Mr. Sydney Gedge, 89; Mr. W. E. T. Sharpe, 92; Mr. H. V. Duncombe, 96, 98, 99, 120; Mr. M. Davitt, 98; Mr. T. P. Whittaker, 99; Sir J. S. B. Simeon, 103; Mr. S. Young, 105; Mr. A. Pease, 107; Mr. C. E. Tritton, 109; Mr. W. C. Quilter, 112; Mr. Alfred Thomas, 113; Mr. H. H. Marks, 113; Sir Matthew White Ridley, 114; Mr. J. W. Logan, 117; Mr. J. H. Stock, 118; Mr. Griffith-Boscawen, 119; [Mr. Speaker, 120;] (Division, 120) Feb 10
2R. negatived Feb 10, 123

SALISBURY, MARQUESS of (Prime Minister and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs)
Crete Feb 15, 369, 370; Feb 25, 1105; Mar 2, 1422, 1423, 1427
Gambling in Options and Futures Feb 11, 130, 131

SAMUEL, Mr. H. H., Tower Hamlets, Limehouse
Army Estimates: £627,200 for Volunteer Corps, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 821

SAMUEL, Mr. JONATHAN, Stockton
Military Lands Act (1892) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 251
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 625, 629, 635, 637, 661
Truck Act, Railway Companies Feb 23, 973, 974
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 192

SANDYS, Colonel T. M., Lancashire, S.W., Bootle
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1197

SAUNDERSON, Colonel E. J., Armagh, N.
Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1516
Educational Endowments, Ireland Feb 25, 1130
Evicted Farm, Westport Feb 25, 1131
Supply: £12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1278, 1280, 1282

Schools
Accommodation
Southport, Qs. Mr. H. J. Wilson; As. Sir J. Gorst Feb 16, 507
Wimbledon, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 167

[cont.

Schools—cont.
- Board
  - Elections, Scotland, Qs. Mr. J. Caldwell; As. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 15, 409; Feb 16, 512
  - Financial Aid, Q. Mr. E. J. C. Morton; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 410
  - Necessitous, Qs. Mr. H. Labouchere; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 11, 186
  - Sutton-in-Ashfield, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing, Mr. H. J. Wilson; As. Sir J. Gorst Mar 1, 1328
- Bradford (Yorkshire), St. James's, Qs. Mr. A. E. Hutton, Mr. E. Flower; As. Sir J. Gorst Feb 15, 394
- Castleton, Wesleyan, Q. Mr. A. E. Hutton; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 164
- Children, Donegal, Sickness among, Q. Mr. D. Macaleese; A. Mr. G. Balfour Mar 4, 1598
- Christian Brothers, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox, Mr. W. Johnston; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 19, 782
- Convent and Monastery, Ireland, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 26, 1259
- Elementary, Heywood, Q. Mr. J. C. Williams; A. Sir J. Gorst Mar 2, 1441
- Endowment, Ireland, Q. Mr. W. Johnston; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 18, 718
- Industrial (Ireland), Contracts, Q. Mr. P. O'Brien; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1127
- Military, Duke of York's, Q. Mr. E. Strachey; A. Mr. Brodrick Feb 12, 267
- National Teachers, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 12, 263
- Premises, Q. Mr. A. E. Hutton; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 165
- Science and Art, Ireland, Q. Mr. Vesey Knox; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 878
- Southport, Accommodation, Qs. Mr. H. J. Wilson; As. Sir J. Gorst Feb 16, 507
- Sutton-in-Ashfield Board, Qs. Mr. F. A. Channing, Mr. H. J. Wilson; As. Sir J. Gorst Mar 1, 1328
- Teachers
  - Irish Certificated, Education Code, Q. Mr. A. E. Hutton; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 164
  - National, Ireland (see IRELAND)
  - Superannuation, Q. Mr. R. G. Verney; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Mar 2, 1445
- Voluntary
  - Bills, Q. Mr. J. Brigg; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 25, 1136
  - Rates, Public Companies, Q. Sir J. Fergusson; A. Sir R. Webster Feb 22, 881
  - Rating, Q. Mr. C. Harrison; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 413
  - Scotland, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 16, 516
- Willesden, St. Andrew's, Q. Mr. J. H. Yoxall; A. Sir J. Gorst Feb 11, 177

SCHWANN, Mr. C. E., Manchester, N.
- Foreign Patents Feb 26, 1262
- Half-sovereigns and Farthings Feb 22, 857
- London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 694, 695
- Manchester
  - Post Office Feb 19, 786
  - Trade Dispute Feb 12, 269
- Service Money Orders, Benevolent Societies Feb 19, 785

SCOTLAND
- Secretary for—Lord BALFOUR
- Lord Advocate—Mr. A. GRAHAM MURRAY
- Solicitor General—Mr. C. SCOTT DICKSON
- Bandsmen Assaulted, Qs. Mr. W. Johnston; As. Mr. Graham Murray Mar 4, 1580
- Beam and Otter Trawling, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 15, 390
- Buckie, Connection with Trunk Telephone Lines, Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1347
- Conveyance of Troops, Scotland and London, Q. Mr. J. McKillop; A. Mr. Powell-Williams Feb 9, 18
- Crofters' Commission, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 9, 20; Feb 12, 268
- Drunkenness
  - Conviction for, Q. Mr. J. Wilson (Govan); A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 12, 267
  - Glasgow, Q. Mr. J. Wilson (Govan); A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 26, 1254
- Education Grant, Q. Mr. T. Shaw; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 183
- Import Duty on Scotch Herrings, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 12, 262
- Mail Packet Service, Q. Mr. D. N. Nicol; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 22, 855
- Monifieth Police Court, Conviction for Sleeping out, Q. Captain Sinclair; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 16, 512
- Parish Council Accounts, Q. Sir J. Kinloch; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 15, 392
- Perth and Dundee Prisons, Qs. Mr. Orr-Ewing; As. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 23, 974
- Post Office, Kirkcaldy, Qs. Mr. J. H. Dalziel; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 22, 880
- Prisons
  - Perth and Dundee, Qs. Mr. Orr-Ewing; As. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 23, 974
  - Visiting Committees, Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 25, 1123
- Sale of Cattle, Stirling, Q. Mr. J. McKillop; A. Mr. W. Long Feb 12, 272
- School Board Elections, Qs. Mr. J. Caldwell; As. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 15, 409; Feb 16, 512
- Scottish
  - Fishery Cruisers, Qs. Captain Pirie, Mr. J. Bryce; As. Mr. Graham Murray Mar 1, 1335
  - Rifles, 5th Volunteer Battalion, Qs. Mr. J. Wilson (Falkirk); As. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1595
  - Universities Grant, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 11, 153
- South Shoal, Orkney, Q. Mr. J. W. Crombie; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 714
- Stirling, Sale of Cattle, Q. Mr J. McKillop; A. Mr. W. Long Feb 12, 272
- Stornoway Mails, Q. Mr. J. G. Weir; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 9, 22. Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 391
- Supply: Scotch Estimates, Q. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 15, 413
- Telegraph Extension, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir, Mr. J. McLeod; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 402
- Telephone Trunk Lines, Q. Mr. A. Asher: A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 12, 272. Q. Sir W. Wedderburn; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 1, 1345. Q. Mr. J. W. Crombie; A. Mr. Hanbury Mar 4, 1590

[cont.

SCOTLAND—cont.
  Trawling
    Beam and Otter, Q. Mr. J. Caldwell; A. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 15, 390
    Illegal, Qs. Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Graham Murray Feb 9, 4
  Trustees Savings Banks, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 25, 1122
  Trusts (Scotland) Bill (see that Title)
  Voluntary Schools, Qs. Mr. Vesey Knox; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 16, 516
  Voluntary Schools Bill, Qs. Mr. J. A. Campbell, Mr. J. W. Mellor; As. Sir M. Hicks Beach, Sir R. Webster Feb 9, 21
  Volunteer
    Battalion (5th Scottish Rifles), Qs. Mr. J. Wilson (Falkirk); As. Mr. Brodrick Mar 4, 1595
    Drill Halls, Aberdeen, Q. Captain Pirie; A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 23, 976
  Weighing Cattle, Q. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman; A. Mr. W. Long Feb 15, 389

SCOTT, Mr. CHARLES P., Lancashire, S.W., Leigh
  Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1230

SEELY, Mr. C. H., Lincoln
  Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1168, 1169; In Com. Mar 1, 1400

SELBORNE, EARL OF (Under Secretary of State for the Colonies)
  Chamberlain (Mr.) and President Kruger Feb 9, 2
  Gambling in Options and Futures Feb 11, 131

SETON-KARR, Mr. H., St. Helens
  Food Supplies, United Kingdom Mar 2, 1429
  Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 657, 658
  Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 193

SHARPE, Mr. W. E. T., Kensington, N.
  Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 92

SHAW, Mr. THOMAS, Hawick Burghs
  Education Grant, Scotland Feb 11, 183

Shipwreck
  Warren Hastings, Indian Troopship, Qs. Mr. P. M. Thornton; As. Lord G. Hamilton Mar 1, 1323

Shops (Hours of Labour)
  Sir J. Lubbock, (Notice of Motion) Feb 23, 965

SIDEBOTHAM, Mr. J. W., Cheshire, Hyde
  Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1071
  Pilot Service, Falkland Islands Feb 23, 968

SIMEON, Sir J. S. B., Bart., Southampton
  Naval College, Dartmouth Feb 22, 875
  Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 103

SINCLAIR, Captain JOHN, Forfarshire
  Monifieth Police Court, Conviction for Sleeping out Feb 16, 512

Sinclair's Divorce Bill
l. Petition for Leave to Present considered, Counsel called in; Prayer Granted Feb 26, 1245
  Pres. and Read 1ª Feb 26, 1245

Small Freeholders (Wales)
  Mr. Rees Davies, (Notice of Motion) Feb 9, 4

SMITH-BARRY, Right Hon. A. H., Hunts, Huntingdon
  Supply: £12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1282

SMITH, Hon. W. F. DANVERS, Strand, Westminster
  Army Estimates: £76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 804
  London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 684

SMITH, Mr. SAMUEL, Flintshire
  Established Church (England and Wales) Feb 9, 27, 45
  Indian Famine Feb 23, 980
  Re-arrest of Discharged Prisoners Mar 2, 1434
  Slavery, New Hebrides Mar 2, 1433, 1434

Solicitors (Ireland) Bill
c. Intro.. Mr. E. H. Carson; Read 1° Feb 26, 1267

Solicitors (Magistracy) Bill
c. Intro., Sir A. K. Rollit; Read 1° Mar 4, 1676

Southwark and Vauxhall Water (Purchase) Bill
c. Read 1° Feb 10, 69

SOUTTAR, Mr. R., Dumfriesshire
  Indian Famine Feb 18, 703

Speaker, Mr.

THE RIGHT HON.
WILLIAM COURT GULLY, Q.C.,
Carlisle

  Questions
    I understand this to be a case in which the hon. Member states certain facts upon his own authority, and he must take the responsibility of doing so Feb 9, 17
    The hon. Member is going beyond the limits of a Question. He is arguing a question of procedure Feb 15, 408
    I do not see the hon. Member for Northamptonshire in his place, but I am sure the hon. Member is the last person to wish to encourage a breach of the privileges of this House. His question really does tend to do that, because it invites the First Commissioner of Works to deal with matters which are entirely outside his cognisance. The hon. Member asks the First Commissioner of Works to make adequate arrangements for the Press, and to provide better accommodation. That is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Chairman of the Committee, and in connection with which the First Commissioner of Works has no duties whatever. The hon. Member also proceeds to ask whether the First Commissioner of Works would consider the advisability of changing the room in which the Committee is sitting to Committee-room No. 10. That is, of course, a matter entirely in the hands of the Serjeant-at-Arms and the officers of the House, and not within the cognisance of the First Commissioner of Works. Therefore, I would suggest that the question should not be put to the First Commissioner of Works Feb 19, 784

[cont.

SPEAKER, Mr.—cont.

Questions—cont.

That does not arise out of the Question on the Paper. It is a Question of which the hon. Member might give the Under Secretary of State private notice, but it does not arise out of the Question on the Paper Feb 19, 788

In the point raised by the hon. Member it is obvious there is a hardship upon Members, but I cannot say there is any question of Order for me to decide Feb 19, 790

The Question on the Paper is a precise one about a very small local detail. It is not a general question Feb 22, 865

The hon. and learned Member has the same means as myself of finding out what Department is responsible. It is a little difficult to say Feb 22, 883

Certainly papers which have been laid on the Table and ordered to be printed ought to be printed and circulated at the earliest possible moment. I will inquire into the matter, and if I find I have any authority I shall be ready to exercise it Feb 22, 883

The hon. Gentleman must put down notice of the Question, if addressed to another Minister Feb 23, 983

If the hon. Member continues to interrupt the Business of the House I shall be compelled to request him to leave the House for the remainder of the Sitting Feb 25, 1150

Rules and Order of Debate

Either the Second Reading of the Bill is objected to or it is not. If it be objected to either absolutely or conditionally it must stand over until to-morrow Feb 10, 70

The Bill alters the register by enabling persons to get on the register on different terms from those on which they could previously be on it. Therefore, I think that the Instruction is in order as an Instruction, although I think an Instruction is required Feb 11, 152

[cont.

SPEAKER, Mr.—cont.

Rules and Order of Debate—cont.

The hon. Gentleman is not in order in discussing the question whether the Bill should have been postponed or not Feb 11, 192

I have great difficulty in hearing what the hon. Gentleman is saying, but I am under the impression that he is out of order Feb 11, 194

I did not see the hon. Member rise, although I was looking in his direction. When I did see him I had already collected the opinions of both sides of the House Feb 11, 200

I understand that the hon. Member gave instructions at the Table that this Bill should be postponed to a particular date Feb 12, 368

The hon. Member having given instructions at the Table that the Bill was to be put down for a particular date, he is not in a position to move now, because other hon. Members may have been misled Feb 12, 368

The hon. Member is not in order in referring thus to a speech delivered in the other House. He will be in order in referring to the fact that a statement was made, but not in commenting upon it Feb 16, 519

I must say that this discussion in regard to what took place yesterday as to the Papers is remote from the urgent matter of public importance which is under discussion Feb 16, 531

I hope the hon. Member will see that the House is impatient. The hon. Member stood waiting until there was quiet restored. I am afraid that to get complete quiet at the present hour and in the present state of the House is quite impossible. I trust that the hon. Member will not, in the present temper of the House, prolong his remarks unduly Feb 16, 606

When it was last before the House I said I thought the Instruction was in order, and before doing so I had looked at the Bill and considered the point the hon. Member referred to. I think the Instruction is in order Feb 17, 613

The Instruction standing in the name of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for South Dublin is in order because it is mandatory, and only for that reason; but I hope, under the circumstances, the right hon. Gentleman and the House will not think I am stepping outside my province if I advise him very strongly not to move this Instruction, but to wait until the matter comes before the Committee, and then, if he object to what be done in the Committee, to raise his objection on the Report stage. There is a growing practice of putting on the Paper as the subject of an Instruction matters which do not involve simply a question of principle, but which go into matters of detail, the proper subject of Amendments in Committee, and are only in order as Instructions because they are mandatory. For example, the present Bill, so far as the water question is concerned, proposes to fix the prices at which water should be sold to the different townships around Dublin. These prices are fixed at 2½d. and 3½d. per thousand gallons, and so forth, and were so fixed, I presume, after due consideration by those who prepared the Bill. What the right hon. Gentleman is proposing to do is to instruct the Committee beforehand, when the matter comes before them, not to hear evidence as to the propriety of the proposal so made after careful consideration by the promoters of the Bill, but to sanction a totally different scheme for fixing the price without giving the promoters the opportunity of bringing their evidence before the Committee. Although, as I say, the right hon. Gentleman has put himself in order by making the Instruction mandatory, it seems to me that the course he suggests is entirely contrary to all sound practice of the House in regard to private Bills, and I hope the right hon. Gentleman will see fit not to move this as an Instruction, but will bring his case forward before the Committee, and then take the opinion of the House upon it on the Report stage, if he think it necessary Feb 17, 623

[cont.

SPEAKER, Mr.—cont.

Rules and Order of Debate—cont.

I do not think it is out of order, because I cannot say that the principle of the Bill is to fix the price of water at 2½d., or 3½d., or at any particular figure. The principle of the Bill is to fix and settle the terms on which the water supply shall be made from Dublin to the townships around. But the actual figures are not the principle of the Bill, and it is competent for the Committee, by an Amendment, to say: " We will not fix the prices at 2½d. or 3½d., but make it a question of arbitration." That is what the right hon. Gentleman proposes to do, but I hope, for the reasons I have given, that he will not move the Instruction Feb 17, 624

The second Instruction is out of order, because it proposes that it should be an Instruction to the Committee to establish a water trust in Dublin. That is an entirely new subject-matter, and ought to be the subject of a new Bill Feb 17, 625

I must remind the hon. Member that there is no question of increasing the Army in this Bill Feb 18, 747

The Motion can be changed, no doubt, by using the words, " Cretan insurgents," or whatever the fact is—I do not know myself—but I do not think it is necessary to make the change, as Cretans are, in one sense, Greek. Is the hon. Gentleman supported by forty Members? Feb 22, 890

[cont.

SPEAKER, Mr.—cont.

Rules and Order of Debate—cont.

I must remind the hon. Gentleman that he is speaking of a friendly Sovereign; and it is one of the rules of the House to speak of a friendly Sovereign with the same decency of language as would be empolyed in speaking of a Member of this House or of the other House Feb 22, 892

I must remind the hon. Member that last week there was a discussion on the general policy of the Government in the matter of Crete, and it is a rule of the House that the same question cannot be twice debated in the same Session on a Motion for Adjournment. The present Motion refers to the firing on Greek forces by British war vessels at Canea, and to that point the hon. Member must confine himself Feb 22, 894

I cannot give a general direction to the hon. Member beforehand; but the question whether five people were baked in an oven is not relevant to the matter before the House. I must call the hon. Gentleman's attention to the words of the Motion, which relate to the firing on the Greek forces by Her Majesty's ships, and I trust he will confine himself to what bears upon that question Feb 22, 895

The hon. Gentleman is going outside the question before the House. I am quite aware there has been considerable latitude in this discussion, but I think the remarks of the hon. Gentleman are too remote from the Motion Feb 22, 915

The right hon. Baronet has correctly stated the Standing Order, and the course I always endeavour to pursue. But sometimes I am anticipated by the House. I always first put the question whether it be the pleasure of the House that the Adjournment should be moved, and the proper course for hon. Members is to retain their seats and say "Yes" or "No." If there be no negative the House is taken to consent generally to the discussion. Hon. Members might differ upon the subject-matter of the proposed discussion, and yet agree that it was a proper subject for discussion. So I hope hon. Members will strictly observe the Standing Order, and, on the question whether it be their pleasure that leave be given, retain their seats, only rising in case of a negative, on my putting the further question whether the hon. Member who wished to move the Adjournment has the requisite support Feb 23, 986

There are several Instructions to the Committee on this Bill on the Order Paper. The first is in the name of the hon. Member for South Molton (Mr. Lambert). It introduces a subject that appears to me to be foreign to to the subjects dealt with in the Bill, and on that ground it is out of order. The next Instruction stands in the name of the hon. Member for Anglesey (Mr. Ellis Griffith). That proposes to provide that as a condition for receiving the grant no teacher in a Voluntary School shall be required to perform any extraneous—i.e. non-educational — duty. Such a proposal would be in order as an Amendment to the Bill, and therefore it is out of order as an Instruction. The next Instruction which stands upon the Paper is also in the name of the hon. Member for Anglesey, and proposes to make provision for the absence of religious tests for pupil teachers in Voluntary Schools. That appears to me to enter upon matter which is foreign to the whole scope of the Bill. The Bill is one for affording relief to Voluntary Schools. The term "Voluntary Schools" is substantially convertible with the term "Denominational Schools," and to give an Instruction to a Committee on a Bill for the relief of Voluntary Schools to undenominationalise them would be not only foreign to, but contrary to, the whole scope of the Bill. The next Instruction stands in the name of the hon. Member for Carnarvon (Mr. Lloyd-George). He proposes that the Committee should have power to insert clauses in the Bill for making provision for insuring adequate representation of local authorities or parents on the management of schools in receipt of the aid grant. That appears to me to be in order as an Instruction. The Bill proposes that certain associations representative of the managers of the schools associated together should be the machinery for distributing the grant in aid, and the Instruction proposes to alter and amend the constitution of these managing bodies. As this is a very large proposal, which only bears indirectly on one of the subjects of the Bill, and as it raises a new principle not hitherto brought under the consideration of the House, it cannot be entertained without an Instruction. The next Instruction stands in the name of the hon. Member for Walsall (Mr. Gedge). It proposes to enable the managers of Voluntary Schools to contract with School Boards for the supply of the education required by the Education Code to such children and on such terms as to payment, inspection, representation, or otherwise, as may be agreed between them. That does not relate, it appears to me, either to the relief of Voluntary Schools or to the distribution of the grant in aid. Whether it is a matter that requires legislation or not I do not know, but if it does not require legislation it will have to be done by a separate Bill. The next Instruction stands in the name of the hon. Member for Northamptonshire (Mr. Channing). That Instruction in effect proposes to destroy altogether the existing form of management of Voluntary Schools, and to set up in its place elected authorities in districts where there is no School Board. It also proposes to give powers to the School Boards, with which this Bill is not concerned, to prepare schemes for their districts. Both branches appear to me to be outside of the scope of the Bill and out of order. Therefore the only Instruction which is in order is that of the hon. Member for Carnarvon Feb 25, 1154

[cont.

SPEAKER, Mr.—cont.

Rules and Order of Debate—cont.

Such an Amendment would require an Instruction, and the Instruction standing in the name of the hon. Member for Carnarvon covers the case Feb 25, 1156

The ordinary Rule of the House is, that, when a Motion such as that of the hon. Member has been put on the Paper, it operates, so far as the question of anticipation goes, until it ceases to appear on the Paper. The hon. Gentleman's statement that he intends to withdraw has not, under the existing procedure of the House, any effect Mar 1, 1350

It certainly is not in the Standing Orders. It is a practice of the House which has been acted upon, and the practice of the House, as the right hon. gentleman knows, when acted upon for years, is as binding upon the House as a Standing Order Mar 1, 1350

Of course, it is obvious that there are occasions when the practice would operate inconveniently. It is not for me to say whether, on the whole, it operates inconveniently or not. Certainly, if the House thinks fit to alter the rule, I shall not offer any advice to the contrary Mar 1, 1351

I think there is more than that. The right hon. Gentleman will find that there is such a consensus of practice upon the point for many years past that it is one of the ordinary Rules of the House and part of the ordinary procedure of the House. The right hon. Gentleman well knows that many of our Rules are not to be found in print or in Standing Orders; and this is a practice which has become part of what I may call the common law of Parliament. To alter a long-continued practice at common law requires a statute; and in the same way an alteration in the common law of Parliament cannot be effected on the sole authority of the Speaker, who is not the maker, but only the administrator, of the Laws of this House Mar 1, 1351

Where you want to alter the practice of the House it would be more convenient to do so by Standing Order. At the same time the House has sometimes acted by a Resolution. It is a matter for consideration what course should be followed Mar 1, 1351

I do not think the hon. Member is exceeding the limits of Debate. I do not think the observation was in the nature of a personal insult Mar 2, 1479

[cont.

SPEAKER, Mr.—cont.

Rules and Order of Debate—cont.

I have already said that I did not think the hon. Member had exceeded the limits of Debate. If I thought he had I would have called upon him to withdraw Mar 2, 1479

The Instruction of the hon. Member is out of order. The Provisional Orders (No. 1) Bill merely enables the town of Kilkenny to take compulsory powers to acquire land for waterworks. An Instruction proposing to extend the municipal franchise would be out of order on that Bill, and therefore I cannot put it Mar 4, 1571

I am quite clear that it is out of order. As to the case of Armagh, which the hon. Gentleman mentions, the Instruction was not withdrawn until I had ruled it out of order. In the course of the Debate on the Second Reading the hon. Member who had put down the Instruction asked me whether it was in order. I said it was not, and that is the reason it was withdrawn. What happened in Committee upon that Bill was not brought under my notice. If it had been I might possibly have had something to say on the subject. As far as any statement in this House as to what took place in the Committee is concerned, I hear it now for the first time. As regards the Dublin Corporation Bill, the hon. Member who moved that Instruction gave me an assurance very similar to that which has just been given by the hon. Member for Kilkenny—namely, that it was an unopposed Instruction, and was moved by general consent; and as it was an Instruction on a matter which had been much debated in the House, and as I understood from what was stated in the House, without any contradiction, that it was in the nature of a compromise on a subject which it was desirable to settle, and as everyone was agreed upon it, I allowed the Instruction to pass. But I expressly stated that I doubted very much whether it was in order, and that nothing, except the assurance that the Instruction was unopposed, would have induced me to have allowed it to pass. Therefore it cannot in any way be taken as a precedent, and certainly the results of allowing it to go on are not such as to encourage further experiments in the same direction. I am quite clear that this Instruction is out of order Mar 4, 1572

Miscellaneous Rulings

Feb 9, 14, 17; Feb 10, 120; Feb 11, 152, 200; Feb 12, 368; Feb 15, 406; Feb 16, 518; Feb 17, 622, 657; Feb 19, 787, 788, 848; Feb 22, 860, 865, 883, 884, 890, 916; Feb 23, 974; Feb 25, 1184, 1228; Mar 1, 1325, 1347, 1350; Mar 2, 1438, 1450, 1501, 1533; Mar 4, 1593, 1605

SPENCER, Earl
Lee-Metford Rifle, Volunteer Rifle Ranges Feb 18, 667, 669

SPICER, Mr. ALBERT, Monmouth Boroughs
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1170, 1171; In Com. Mar 3, 1561; Mar 4, 1644

STANHOPE, Earl
Lee-Metford Rifle, Volunteer Rifle Ranges Feb 18, 668

STANHOPE, Hon. P. J., Burnley
Army Estimates: £1,016,400 for Works, Buildings and Repairs Feb 19, 843
Crete, Action of British Ships Feb 22, 919, 920
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 200

STANLEY, LORD (Junior Lord of the Treasury), Lancashire, N.E., Westhoughton
Licensing Exemption (Houses of Parliament) Bill, Intro. Feb 17, 664; 2R. Feb 19, 848

STANLEY OF ALDERLEY, Lord
Gambling in Options and Futures Feb 11, 125, 131

Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill
2R., Mr. J. Samuel, 625, 629, 635, 637; Sir A. Hickman, 628, 629, 639; Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), 629, 636, 649, 650, 653; Mr. G. W. Wolff, 630; Mr. J. Burns, 631, 637, 638, 650; Mr. Jesse Collings, 635, 636, 637, 638, 642, 646, 647, 653; Mr. J. Bryce, 638, 639, 652; Mr. G. Whiteley, 640; Mr. C. Fenwick, 641, 643; Colonel Mellor, 644; Mr. W. Allan, 646, 647; Mr. C. B. Renshaw, 648, 649, 650; Mr. T. Burt, 650; Mr. C. W. Cayzer, 651, 652; Mr. L. Courtney, 654, 656; Mr. W. J. Galloway, 655, 656; Mr. H. Seton-Karr, 657, 658: Mr. J. M. Paulton, 657; [Mr. Speaker, 657;] Mr. Tomlinson, 658; (Division, 658) Feb 17
Read 2° Feb 17, 661
Sir W. Harcourt, 661; Mr. J. Samuel, (Motion) 661; Sir A. Hickman, 661; (Adj.) Feb 17

STEPHENS, Mr. H. C., Middlesex, Hornsey
Burial Grounds Mar 4, 1602
Muzzling Dogs Mar 2, 1442, 1443; Mar 4, 1603, 1604

STEVENSON, Mr. F. S., Suffolk, Eye
Crete Feb 9, 23, 24; Feb 12, 274; Feb 15, 404; Feb 22, 887, 888; Feb 23, 982, 983; Feb 25, 1144, 1145
Crete, Declaration of Policy Mar 2, 1497
Land Tax Commisioners Feb 15, 400
Naval Force of Powers at Constantinople Feb 18, 718
Turkish Reforms Feb 12, 276

Stock, Mr. J. H., Liverpool, Walton
Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 118

Stone, Sir J. Benjamin, Bart, Birmingham, E.
Midland and Great Northern Railways Joint Committee Bill Feb 25, 1119

Strachey, Mr. Edward, Somerset, S.
Duke of York's Military School Feb 12, 267
Post Office Money Orders Feb 23, 966
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 3, 1557

Strauss, Mr. Arthur, Cornwall, Camborne
Cornish Mining Industry Mar 4, 1611

Stuart-Wortley, Right Hon. C. B. (see Wortley)

Sullivan, Mr. Donal, Westmeath, S.
Barrow Drainage Mar 1, 1327
King's Royal Rifle Corps, 8th Battalion Mar 1, 1328
Land Commission, Ireland Feb 26, 1250

SUPPLY

Army and Navy Estimates (see under those Titles)

CIVIL SERVICES AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1896-97

£650 for British Museum
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 26, 1294. Report Mar 1, 1413

£36,700 for British Protectorates in Uganda and Central and East Africa
In Com., Sir C. Dilke, 1297; Mr. H. Labouchere, 1297; Mr. Curzon, 1297. Vote Agreed to, 1298 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1414

£1,000 for Colonial Office
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 26, 1274. Report Mar 1, 1411

£14,980 for Colonial Services including South Africa
In Com., Mr. J. H. Dalziel, 1298; Mr. T. Lough, 1298; Mr. J. Chamberlain, 1298; Mr. S. Buxton, 1299. Vote Agreed to, 1299 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1414

[cont.

SUPPLY—cont.

£10 for County Courts, Salaries and Expenses
In Com., Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 1275; Mr. Hanbury, 1275. Vote Agreed to, 1275 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1411

£23,670 for Diplomatic and Consular Services
In Com., Sir C. Dilke, 1295; Mr. Curzon, 1296, 1297; Mr. H. Labouchere, 1296. Vote Agreed to, 1297 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1413

£6,800 for Inland Revenue
In Com., Mr. T. P. Whittaker, 1306, 1307, [Chairman, 1306;] Mr. Gibson Bowles; 1307; Mr. Hanbury, 1307. Vote Agreed to, 1307 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1415

£12,938 for Irish Land Commission, Salaries and Expenses
In Com., Mr. D. Kilbride, (Amendt.) 1276; Mr. J. Dillon, 1276; Mr. E. H. Carson, 1277, 1280; Mr. G. Balfour, 1277, 1281, 1282; Mr. J. Lowther, 1278, 1281; Colonel Saunderson, 1278, 1280, 1282; Mr. T. P. O'Connor, 1280, 1281; Mr. J. C. Flynn, 1281; Mr. J. A. Rentoul, 1281; Major Jameson, 1282; Mr. A. H. Smith-Barry, 1282; (Division, 1283). Vote Agreed to Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1411

£17,500 for Law Charges
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 26, 1275. Report Mar 1, 1411

£80 for Lunacy Commission, Scotland
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 26, 1275. Report Mar 1, 1411

£40 for the Mint, including Coinage
In Com., Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1274; Sir M. Hicks Beach, 1274; Vote Agreed to, 1274 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1411

£20,110 for National Education, Ireland
In Com., Mr. Vesey Knox, 1294, 1295; Mr. Hanbury, 1294, 1295. Vote Agreed to, 1295 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1413

£327 for National Portrait Gallery, Salaries and Expenses
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 26, 1294. Report Mar 1, 1413

£10 for Post Office Services
In Com., Mr. J. H. Dalziel, 1307; Mr. Hanbury, 1307. Vote Agreed to, 1308 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1415

[cont.

SUPPLY—cont.

£7,000 for Public Buildings (Great Britain)
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 26, 1274. Report Mar 1, 1410

£153,044 for Public Education in England and Wales
In Com., Mr. F. A. Channing, (Amendt.) 1283, 1292; Sir J. Gorst, 1286, 1290; Mr. J. H. Lewis, 1287; Mr. S. Buxton, 1288; Mr. J. C. Williams, 1289; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 1289; Mr. S. T. Evans, 1290, 1293; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1291; Mr. H. J. Wilson, 1291; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 1291; Sir R. Webster, 1291, 1292, 1293; (Division, 1294). Vote Agreed to Feb 26
Report: Mr. A. C. Humphreys-Owen, 1412; Mr. F. A. Channing, 1412; Sir R. B. Finlay, 1413; Mr. J. H. Lewis, 1413; Sir R. Webster, 1413 Mar 1
Reso. Agreed to Mar 1, 1413

£2,030 for Register House, Edinburgh, Salaries and Expenses
In Com., Mr. J. H. Dalziel, 1275; Mr. Hanbury, 1275. Vote Agreed to, 1276 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1411

£10,000 for Science and Art Department for the United Kingdom
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 26, 1294. Report Mar 1, 1413

£1,200 for Slave Trade Services
In Com., Mr. J. H. Dalziel, 1299; Sir C. Dilke, 1299; [Chairman, 1299;] Mr. Curzon, 1299. Vote Agreed to, 1299 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1414

£25,000 for Stationery and Printing
In Com., Mr. Vesey Knox, 1274; Mr. Hanbury, 1274. Vote Agreed to, 1275 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1411

£2,000 for Supreme Court of Judicature
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 26, 1275. Report Mar 1, 1411

£4,500 for Temporary Commissions and Committees
In Com., Sir C. Dilke, 1304; Mr. J. Caldwell, 1304; Mr. Hanbury, 1305. Vote Agreed to, 1305 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1415

£30,151 for Trustee Savings Bank and Friendly Societies Deficiency
In Com., Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 1299, 1301; Mr. W. Hazell, 1300: Mr. T. Lough, 1300, 1302; Sir M. Hicks Beach, 1300, 1301; Mr. T. P. Whittaker, 1301. Vote Agreed to, 1302 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1414

[cont.

SUPPLY—cont.

CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES 1897–98.

£20,500 for International Exhibitions
In Com., Vote Agreed to Feb 26, 1306. Report Mar 1, 1415

£16,617 for Local Loans Fund (Repayment to)
In Com., Mr. Hanbury, 1305; Mr. J. Caldwell, 1306. Vote Agreed to, 1306 Feb 26, Report Mar 1, 1415

£95,434 for Teachers' Pension Fund (Ireland)
In Com., Mr. J. H. Yoxall, 1302, 1304; Mr. J. C. Flynn, 1302; Mr. J. H. Dalziel, 1302; Mr. Hanbury, 1303; Mr. Gibson Bowles, 1303. Vote Agreed to, 1304 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1414

£16,304 for Treasury Chest Fund
In Com., Mr. T. Lough, 1299; Mr. Hanbury, 1299. Vote Agreed to, 1299 Feb 26. Report Mar 1, 1414

SUTHERLAND, Sir THOMAS, Greenock
Sugar Refining Industry, United Kingdom Feb 11, 185

TALBOT, Lord EDMUND, Sussex, Chichester
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 4, 1635

TALBOT, Mr. J. G., Oxford University
Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1060, 1064
Children's Metropolitan Asylums Board Feb 9, 10; Feb 18, 705
Education Bill Feb 9, 26
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 15, 445, 446

TANNER, Dr. C. K. D., Cork, Mid
Army Estimates
£553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 797, 802
£54,800 for Miscellaneous Effective Services Feb 19, 847
£2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 840
£639,000 for Transport and Remounts Feb 19, 823; Report Feb 22, 961
£1,016,400 for Works, Buildings, and Repairs Feb 19, 846
£76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 805, 810
Crete Feb 25, 1149, 1150

Taxation (London) (Grants in Aid)
Mr. T. Lough, (Notice of Motion) Feb 23, 965

THOMAS, Mr. ABEL, Carmarthenshire, E
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 1, 1369; Mar 3, 1562

THOMAS, Mr. ALFRED, Glamorgan, E.
  Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 113

Thompson's Divorce Bill
l. 2R., Counsel called in; Witnesses examined Mar 2, 1417
  Read 2ª and com. to Com. of Whole House Mar 2, 1417
  Rep. without Amendt.; Standing Com. negatived Mar 4, 1565

THORNTON, Mr. P. M., Clapham
  Wreck, Indian Troopship Warren Hastings Mar 1, 1323

THRING, Lord
  Christchurch Inclosure Allotments Bill, 2R. Mar 1, 1318
  Land Transfer Bill, 2R. Mar 4, 1567

TOMLINSON, Mr. W. E. M., Preston
  Army Estimates: £627,200 for Volunteer Corps, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 821
  Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1083
  North Eastern Railway (Additional Powers) Bill Mar 4, 1584
  Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 85
  Railway Clearing House Incorporation Bill Feb 9, 8
  Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 658

TRADE, BOARD OF

President—Mr. C. T. RITCHIE
Secretary—Earl of DUDLEY

  Bray Harbour, Fog Bell, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15
  Brighton, Chain Pier, Q. Mr. Gerald Loder; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 715
  British Trade and Foreign Competition, Qs. Sir H. Vincent; As. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 9, 24. Q. Sir H. Vincent; A. Mr. Curzon Feb 15, 388
  Carbide of Calcium, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 18, 721
  Children's Metropolitan Asylums Board, Qs. Mr. W. Hazell, Mr. J. G. Talbot; As. Mr. Ritchie, Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 18, 704
  Collisions at Sea, Fishing Boats, Qs. Mr. J. W. Crombie, Mr. Gibson Bowles; As. Mr. Ritchie Mar 1, 1330
  Cruelty to a Seaman, s.s. Hornby Castle, Q. Mr. J. Havelock Wilson; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 19
  Daunt's Rock Lightship, Qs. Mr. W. Field, Mr. J. C. Flynn; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15. Qs. Captain Donelan; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 709
  Foreign
    Patents, Q. Mr. C. E. Schwann; A. Mr Ritchie Feb 26, 1262
    Ports, Discharge of Seamen, Q. Sir E. T. Gourley; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 2, 1443
    Prison-made Goods, Qs. Sir H. Vincent; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 22, 855

TRADE, BOARD OF—cont.
  Foreign—cont.
    Vessels in British Ports, Qs. Mr. W. F. Lawrence, Mr. A. F. Warr; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 23, 970
  German-made Tins, Q. Sir H. Vincent: A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 16, 502
  Giant's Causeway and Portrush Tramway, Qs. Mr. J. Pinkerton, Mr. T. Lough; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 12
  Great Northern Railway Company of Ireland, Q. Mr. J. L. Carew; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 4, 1591
  Harbour
    Accommodation, Devon and Cornwall, Q. Sir Cameron Gull; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 22, 856
    Bray, Fog Bell, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 15
  Icelandic Fisheries, Qs. Mr. C. H. Wilson, Mr. G. Doughty, Mr. J. G. Weir; As. Mr. Ritchie, Mr. Curzon Feb 9, 8
  Irish Lights Commissioners, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 11, 158
  Lighthouse Keepers, Ireland, Qs. Major Jameson; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 26, 1263
  Lightships, Ireland, Qs. Mr. J. L. Carew, Mr. P. O'Brien; As. Mr. Ritchie Mar 4, 1577
  Members of Parliament, Free Railway Passes, Q. Mr. W. Field; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 12, 276
  North Atlantic Load-line, Q. Mr. J. G. A. Baird: A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 1, 1329
  North Eastern Railway
    Additional Powers Bill, Q. Mr. Tomlinson; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 4, 1584
    Dispute, Q. Sir E. T. Gourley; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 1, 1344
  Oyster Culture, Q. Mr. Henniker Heaton; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 25, 1132
  Patent
    Laws, Qs. Captain Phillpotts; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 11, 163
    Office, Q. Sir J. Leng; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 6
  Prison-made Goods, Q. Mr. J. H. Dalziel; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 715
  Railway
    Carriages, Construction, Q. Mr. J. O'Connor; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 15, 403
    Companies and Complainant Traders, Q. Mr. H. E. Kearley; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 8
    Level Crossing, Tottenham, Q. Mr. Joseph Howard; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 22, 877
    Rates, Q. Mr. Lloyd Morgan; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 15, 394
    Rates, London and Tilbury Company, Q. Major Rasch; A. Mr. Ritchie Mar 2, 1436
  Railway Clearing House Incorporation Bill, Qs. Mr. Tomlinson; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 9, 8
  Solent Artillery Firing, Q. Sir G. Baden-Powell; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 25, 1129
  South Shoal, Orkney, Q. Mr. J. W. Crombie; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 18, 714
  Sugar Refining Industry (United Kingdom), Q. Sir T. Sutherland; A. Mr. A. J. Balfour Feb 11, 185
  Trade Dispute, Manchester, Qs. Mr. G. W. Wolff, Mr. C. E. Schwann, Mr. J. Lowther, Mr. J. Bryce; As. Mr. Ritchie Feb 12, 269
  Weights and Measures, Q. Mr. W. R. Bousfield; A. Mr. Ritchie Feb 19, 779

[cont.

TREASURY

First Lord—Mr. A. J. Balfour
Patronage Secretary—Sir W. H. Walrond
Financial Secretary—Mr. R. W. Hanbury
Lords Commissioners—Mr. H. T. Anstruther; Mr. W. H. Fisher; Lord Stanley

Tritton, Mr. C. E., Lambeth, Norwood
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 678
Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 109

Trusts (Scotland) Bill
c. 2R., Mr. R. B. Haldane, 365; Mr. Graham Murray, 365; Mr. J. Caldwell, 366 Feb 12
Read 2° Feb 12, 366
In Com., R.P. Feb 18, 775

Vaccination
Prosecutions
Repeated, Q. Mr. T. Bayley; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 16, 505
Suspension of, Q. Mr. J. W. Logan; A. Mr. H. Chaplin Feb 11, 173
Vaccination Act, Ireland, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 25, 1136

Venezuela
Arbitration (Sir Richard Henn Collins), Q. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill; A. Sir R. Webster Feb 9, 24

Verminous Persons Bill
c. Intro., Mr. W. Hazell; Read 1° Mar 1, 1416

Verney, Hon. R. Greville, Warwickshire, Rugby
School Teachers, Superannuation Mar 2, 1445

Vincent, Colonel Sir C. E. Howard, Sheffield, Central
Admiralty Contracts Mar 1, 1324, 1325
Army Estimates: £627,200 for Volunteer Corps, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 814
Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 266
Foreign
Competition, British Trade, and Feb 9, 24, 25; Feb 15, 388
Manufactured Goods, Importation of Feb 16, 502
Prison-made Goods Feb 22, 855
German-made Tins Feb 16, 502
Pauper Aliens Feb 9, 65, 67, 68
Prison-made Goods (Importation) Bill, Intro. Feb 23, 987
Regimental Territorial Titles Feb 15, 403
Truck Act, Railway Companies Feb 23, 973
Volunteer Battalions, Aldershot Mar 4, 1574

Voluntary Schools Bill
c. Mr. A. J. Balfour, (Motion) 188, 195, 196, 200; Mr. J. Lowther, 189; Mr. T. Lough, 192; [Mr. Speaker, 192, 194, 199, 200;] Mr. J. Samuel, 192; Mr. H. Seton-Karr, 193; Mr. J. Wilson (Durham), 193; Mr. J. G. Weir, 194; Mr. D. H. Coghill, 194; Mr. J. A. Pease, (Amendt.) 194; Mr. J. M. Paulton, 195; Sir W. Harcourt, 196; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 197; Mr. E. J. C. Morton, 198; (Division, 199); Mr. J. C. Williams, (Amendt.) 199; Mr. J. Brigg, 200; Mr. P. J. Stanhope, 200; (Divisions, 200) Feb 11
2R., Mr. R. M'Kenna, (Amendt.) 203; Mr. J. H. Roberts, 207; Mr. Walford Green, 210; Mr. Lloyd Morgan, 215; Viscount Cranborne, 219, 220, 227; Sir H. Fowler, 220; Mr. J. Morley, 226, 227, 229, 230, 236, 240, 245; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 229, 230, 236, 240; Mr. Griffith-Boscawen, 246 (Adj.) Feb 11
2R., Debate Resumed on Mr. M'Kenna's Amendt.: Mr. F. A. Channing, (Amendt.) 415, 426; Sir R. B. Finlay, 426, 430, 434, 439, 440; Mr. A. H. D. Acland, 430; Mr. J. Morley, 434, 439, 440; Mr. W. S. Robson, 442; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 442, 478, 479; Mr. J. G. Talbot, 445, 446; Sir W. Harcourt, 446; Mr. Atherley-Jones, 449, 451; Admiral Field, 451; Mr. A. Lyttelton, 453, 456; Mr. J. M. Paulton, 456; Mr. A. J. Mundella, 456; Sir J. Baker, 457, 461; Mr. W. F. Lawrence, 460, 461; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 465; Colonel Milward, 471, 475; Sir F. Lockwood, 474, 475, 478, 479; Sir J. Gorst, 482, 485; Mr. J. Dillon, 485; Mr. T. Lough, 489 (Adj.) Feb 15
2R., Debate Resumed on Mr. McKenna's Amendt: Mr. C. A. Cripps, 534, 540; Mr. A. J. Mundella, 540, 544, 547, 560; Sir F. S. Powell, 544; Mr. Hanbury, 546, 556; Sir F. Milner, 550, 552; Sir F. Lockwood, 552; Mr. T. P. O'Connor, 554, 557, 558; Sir A. B. Forwood, 559, 560; Mr. R. W. Perks, 564, 568, 569; Sir J. Gorst, 568; Sir R. B. Finlay, 568; Lord Warkworth, 569; Mr. J. H. Yoxall, 572, 575; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 575, 592, 593, 594; Mr. R. C. Jebb, 576; Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, 583, 593; Sir W. Harcourt, 594; Mr. J. W. Logan, 605, 606; [Mr. Speaker, 606;] (Division, 608) Feb 16
Read 2° Feb 16, 611
On the Order to go into Com.: Instructions to Com., six in number, stood in the following names:—Mr. G. Lambert, Mr. Ellis Griffith (2), Mr. D. Lloyd-George, Mr. Sydney Gedge, and Mr. F. A. Channing [Mr. Speaker ruled those of Mr. G. Lambert, Mr. Ellis Griffith, Mr. Sydney Gedge, and Mr. Channing out of Order:] [Mr. Speaker, 1154, 1156, 1184, 1228;] Mr. L. Courtney, 1155, 1208, 1211, 1212; Mr. Lloyd-George 1156, 1162; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 1160; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1160, 1162, 1171, 1175, 1202, 1211, 1212, 1216, 1228, 1230, 1237; Mr. A. H. D. Acland, 1164, 1167; Mr. Vicary Gibbs, 1167; Mr. C. H. Seely, 1168, 1169; Mr. A. Spicer, 1170, 1171; Mr. A. Hopkinson,

[cont.

Voluntary Schools Bill—cont.

1173; Mr. G. Lambert, 1174, 1175; Viscount Cranborne, 1176, 1178; Mr. J. L. Walton, 1177, 1178; Sir A. K. Rollit, 1179; Mr. J. C. Williams, 1182; Mr. D. F. Goddard, 1183, 1184; Mr. E. Gray, 1184; Mr. J. W. Logan, 1188; Colonel Milward, 1191, 1192, 1221; Mr. J. M. Paulton, 1192; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 1194; Mr. C. Morley, 1196; Colonel Sandys, 1197; Mr. T. P. Whittaker, 1198; Major Rasch, 1200; Mr. J. H. Yoxall, 1200; Mr. Brynmor Jones, 1201, 1202; Sir E. Clarke, 1204; Sir H. Fowler, 1214, 1216, 1221; Sir R. B. Finlay, 1223, 1224, 1225, 1227; Mr. J. H. Lewis, 1224; Mr. A. J. Mundella, 1225; Mr. J. Brigg, 1226; Mr. H. J. Wilson, 1226, 1227; Mr. J. Morley, 1228; Sir W. Harcourt, 1228; Mr. J. Ellis, 1229; Mr. C. P. Scott, 1230; (Divisions, 1230, 1234, 1238) Feb 25

In Com., R.P. Feb 25, 1243

In. Com., Mr. J. H. Lewis, (Amendt.) 1353, 1354, 1384, 1405; Mr. R. McKenna, 1353, 1366, 1370, 1382, 1390, 1406, 1409; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1353, 1359, 1362, 1363, 1364, 1367, 1368, 1371, 1372, 1373, 1374, 1375, 1378, 1380, 1381, 1382, 1395, 1396, 1404, 1406, 1408, 1409; Mr. A. H. D. Acland, 1354, 1368, 1373, 1397, 1398; [Chairman, 1354, 1355, 1356, 1357, 1370, 1379, 1395, 1398, 1399, 1401, 1403, 1404, 1405;] Sir W. Hart Dyke, 1354, 1388; Mr. D. F. Goddard, 1354, 1371; (Division, 1355); Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, 1355; Sir H. Fowler, 1357, 1364, 1380, 1381, 1382; Mr. G. Lambert, (Amendt.) 1357, 1359; Mr. R. B. Haldane, 1360; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 1362, 1392, 1400, 1401, 1405; Mr. S. Buxton, 1363, 1374, 1387, 1388, 1389, 1398, 1399; Mr. Ellis Griffith, 1365, (Amendt.) 1372, (Amendt.) 1385; Mr. J. H. Yoxall, 1365; Mr. S. T. Evans, 1365, (Amendt.) 1367, 1369, 1371, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1392, 1402, 1407, 1409; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 1366, 1408; Sir F. Lockwood, 1366, 1370, 1378; (Division, 1367); Mr. J. A. Pease, 1367, 1374, 1382; Mr. T. Lough, 1368, 1391, 1404; Mr. Rees Davies, 1369, 1374; Mr. Abel Thomas, 1369; Mr. E. Gray, 1369, 1398, 1399; Mr. Humphreys-Owen, 1369, 1373; Sir J. Baker, 1370; Mr. R. W. Perks, 1370, 1371, 1376, (Amendt.) 1393, 1395; Mr. F. A. Channing, 1371, 1383, 1399, 1405; Mr. J. C. Williams, 1372, 1382; (Division, 1372); Mr. A. J. Mundella, 1375, 1382; Mr. J. M. Paulton, 1376; Mr. J. H. Yoxall, 1376; (Division, 1385); Sir R. Webster, 1386; Sir F. S. Powell, 1389; Mr. H. Broadhurst, 1389; Sir R. B. Finlay, 1390, 1409; (Division, 1393); Sir J. T. Brunner, 1400; Mr. C. H. Seely, 1400; Mr. Sydney Gedge, 1401; Sir J. Gorst, 1403; Mr. H. J. Wilson, 1403; (Divisions, 1404, 1405); Viscount Cranborne, (Amendt.) 1405, 1409; Mr. J. Dillon, 1407, 1408; (Amendt. negatived, 1410) Mar 1

In Com., Mr. W. O. Clough, (Motion) 1535; (Division, 1535); Mr. D. Lloyd-George, (Amendt.) 1535; Mr. S. T. Evans, 1535 Mar 2

[cont.

Voluntary Schools Bill—cont.

In Com., Debate Resumed on Mr. D. Lloyd-George's Amendt.: Mr. J. H. Lewis, 1538; Sir R. B. Finlay, 1538, 1539, 1540; Mr. S. Buxton, 1538, 1562; Mr. Sydney Gedge, 1540; Mr. S. T. Evans, 1540, (Amendt.) 1541, 1543, 1544, 1550, (Amendt.) 1552, 1563, 1564; Mr. R. W. Perks, 1540, 1541, 1560; (Division, 1541); [Chairman, 1543, 1544, 1546, 1551, 1552, 1555, 1559, 1563, 1564;] Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1544, 1548, 1551, 1553, 1562, 1563; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 1545; Mr. J. C. Williams, 1546; Mr. J. A. Pease, 1547; Mr. R. McKenna, 1547; Mr. C. Harrison, 1548; Mr. Brynmor Jones, 1548; Mr. T. R. Leuty, 1548; Mr. D. F. Goddard, 1549; Mr. A. J. Mundella, 1549; Mr. F. A. Channing, 1550; Mr. J. W. Logan, 1551; Mr. J. H. Roberts, 1552; Mr. E. H. Carson, 1552; (Divisions, 1552); Mr. J. Lowther, 1552; Mr. A. H. D. Acland, 1553; Sir Joseph Pease, 1554, 1555; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 1556; Sir J. Baker, 1556; Mr. E. Strachey, 1557; Sir F. Lockwood, 1557, 1560; Sir W. Hart Dyke, 1558, 1559; Sir J. T. Woodhouse, 1560; Mr. A. Spicer, 1561; Mr. Ellis Griffith, 1562; Mr. Abel Thomas, 1562; (Divisions, 1562, 1563, 1564) Mar 3

In Com., [Chairman, 1614, 1649, 1661, 1668, 1672;] Mr. F. A. Channing, 1614; Mr. Ellis Griffith, (Amendt.) 1614; Mr. A. J. Balfour, 1616, 1638, 1641, 1646, 1651, 1652, 1658, 1669, 1670; Mr. A. H. D. Acland, 1617, 1665; Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, 1622, 1662; Mr. H. Broadhurst, 1623; Mr. E. Gray, 1624; Mr. J. M. Paulton, 1625, 1670; Viscount Cranborne, 1626, 1629; Mr. H. H. Asquith, 1628, 1629; Mr. C. A. Cripps, 1631; Mr. J. H. Yoxall, 1634, 1661, 1662; Lord E. Talbot, 1635; Sir J. Joicey, 1636; Mr. H. Hobhouse, 1637, 1659; Sir H. Fowler, 1638, 1639, 1663; Mr. D. Lloyd-George, 1643, 1644, (Amendt.) 1670, 1672; Sir J. Fergusson, 1644; Mr. A. Spicer, 1644; Sir F. S. Powell, 1645; Mr. R. W. Perks, 1645; Mr. T. C. T. Warner, 1646; (Divisions, 1646, 1647); Sir J. T. Woodhouse, (Amendt.) 1647, 1649, 1652; Mr. S. Buxton, 1652, 1669; Mr. W. Hazell, 1653; Mr. R. McKenna, 1654; Mr. A. E. Hutton, 1655; Mr. C. Harrison, 1656; Mr. A. J. Mundella, 1657, 1658; Mr. J. C. Williams, 1660; Mr. H. C. F. Luttrell, 1662; Sir J. Gorst, 1664; Mr. R. Cameron, 1664; Mr. H. J. Reckitt, 1666; Mr. C. Morley, 1667; Mr. J. A. Pease, 1667; (Division, 1667); Mr. S. T. Evans, (Amendt.) 1668, 1669; Mr. J. Dillon, 1669; Mr. Rees Davies, 1670; (Division, 1670) R.P. Mar 4

(For Questions see EDUCATION DEPARTMENT)

WALES

Peasant Freeholders (see PEASANT FREEHOLDERS, WALES)
Small Freeholders (see that Title)
Welsh Land Commission Report, Q. Mr. J. H. Roberts; A. Sir Matthew White Ridley Feb 22, 856

WALTON, Mr. J. L., Leeds, S.
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1177, 1178

Warehousemen's Certificates Bill
c. Intro., Mr. R. B. Martin ; Read 1° Feb 23, 987

WARKWORTH, Lord, Kensington, S.
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 569

WARNER, Mr. T. COURTENAY T., Stafford, Lichfield
Army Estimates
158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 334
£553,000 for Militia, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 792, 797, 800
£54,800 for Miscellaneous Effective Services Feb 19, 846
£1,016,400 for Works, Buildings, and Repairs Feb 19, 843
£76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 810
Military Works Bill, In Com. Feb 22, 954, 957
Supply ; £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1291
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1160 ; In Com. Mar 3, 1556 ; Mar 4, 1646

WAR OFFICE

Secretary of State—Marquess of LANSDOWNE
Under Secretary of State—Mr. BRODRICK
Financial Secretary—Mr. J. POWELL-WILLIAMS
(See ARMY)

WARR, Mr. AUGUSTUS F., Liverpool, East Toxteth
Foreign Vessels in British Ports Feb 23, 971
Judicature Acts Feb 23, 996
Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 84
Sample Post, Rubber Feb 15, 390

WAYS AND MEANS

Land Tax, Q. Mr. Grant Lawson ; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 11, 187. Q. Mr. J. H. Johnstone ; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Feb 16, 504. Q. Mr. G. H. Morrell ; A. Sir M. Hicks Beach Mar 2, 1438
Land Tax Commissioners, Qs. Sir C. Dilke, Mr. F. S. Stevenson ; As. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 400
Local Taxation, Ireland, Q. Mr. J. Dillon ; A. Mr. G. Balfour Feb 11, 182

WEBSTER, SIR RICHARD E. (Attorney General), Isle of Wight
Agricultural Rates Act (1896) Feb 22, 882
Egloskerry Parish, Cornwall Feb 23, 981
Judicature Acts Feb 23, 989, 999, 1001, 1012
Licensing Exemption (Houses of Parliament) Bill, 1R. Feb 17, 664 ; 2R. Feb 19, 848
One-man Companies Mar 4, 1611

[cont.

WEBSTER, Sir RICHARD E.—cont.
Supply : £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1291, 1292, 1293 ; Report Mar 1, 1413
Venezuelan Arbitration Feb 9, 24
Voluntary School Rates, Public Companies Feb 22, 882
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 9, 22 ; In Com. Mar 1, 1386

WEDDERBURN Sir W., Bart., Banffshire
Agricultural Bank, India Feb 11, 156
Buckie, Connection with Trunk Telephone Lines Mar 1, 1347
Exchange Compensation, Deputy Postmaster, Bombay Feb 11, 155
Indian
Council Mar 4, 1593
Famine Feb 11, 177 ; Mar 4, 1592
Peishwa's Estate, Bombay Feb 11, 156
Telephone Service, Scotland Mar 1, 1345

WEIR, Mr. J. G., Ross and Cromarty
Crofters' Commission Feb 9, 20 ; Feb 12, 268
Icelandic Fisheries Feb 9, 9
Illegal Trawling, Scotland Feb 9, 4, 5
Import Duty on Scotch Herrings Feb 12, 262
Lee-Metford Rifle, Royal Naval Reserve Feb 11, 154
London County Council (General Powers) Bill, 2R. Feb 11, 152
Military Works Bill Feb 11, 154
Scottish Universities Grant Feb 11, 153
Stornoway Mails Feb 9, 22
Telegraph Extensions, Scotland Feb 15, 402
Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 194

WELBY, Colonel A. C. EARLE-, Taunton
Army Estimates
158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 339
£639,000 for Transport and Remounts Feb 19, 823
£1,016,400 for Works, Buildings, and Repairs Feb 19, 843
£76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 809

West Middlesex Water (Purchase) Bill
c. Read 1° Feb 10, 69

WHITELEY, Mr. GEORGE, Stockport
Rating Commission Feb 16, 517, 518
Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 640

WHITELEY, Mr. HERBERT, Ashton-under-Lyne
Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act (1888) Amendment Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 85

WHITMORE, Mr. C. A., Chelsea
London County Buildings Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 671, 672, 673, 676

Whittaker, Mr. T. P., Yorkshire, W.R., Spen Valley
- Army Estimates
  - £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 835
  - £76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 809
- Military Works Bill, In Com. Feb 22, 952
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 99
- Supply
  - £6,800 for Inland Revenue (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1306, 1307
  - £30,151 for Trustee Savings Bank and Friendly Societies Deficiency (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1301
- Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1198

Williams, Mr. J. Carvell, Nottingham, Mansfield
- Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1050, 1057, 1058 1078
- "Church Ley," Manchester Feb 18, 722
- Dublin Corporation Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 622, 623
- Elementary Schools, Heywood Mar 2, 1441
- Established Church (England and Wales) Feb 9, 50
- School Accommodation, Wimbledon Feb 11, 167
- Supply: £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1289
- University Colleges Mar 2, 1440
- Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 11, 199; Feb 25, 1182; In Com. Mar 1, 1372, 1382; Mar 3, 1546; Mar 4, 1660

WILLIAMS, Mr. J. POWELL- (Financial Secretary to the War Office), Birmingham, S.
- Army
  - Horses Mar 4, 1597
  - Medical Service Feb 18, 725
  - Retired Pay Feb 11, 184
  - Special Campaign Pensions Feb 9, 5
  - Warrant Officers, Good Conduct Medal Feb 18, 721
- Army Estimates
  - 158,774 Land Forces (Number of) Feb 12, 344, 345
  - £54,800 for Miscellaneous Effective Services Feb 19, 847
  - £2,553,400 for Provisions, Forage, and Other Supplies Feb 19, 830, 832, 833
  - £639,000 for Transport and Remounts Feb 19, 825, 826, 827; Report Feb 22, 961, 962
  - £76,000 for Yeomanry Cavalry, Pay and Allowances Feb 19, 806, 811
- Barracks Act (1890) Feb 22, 881
- Brigade of Guards Feb 12, 318
- British South Africa Company Feb 11, 174
- Cairn at Finner, Donegal Feb 18, 713
- Conveyance of Troops, Scotland and London Feb 9, 18
- Cordite
  - Experiments, Woolwich Arsenal Feb 11, 172, 173
  - H.M.'s Ships Mar 4, 1580

[cont.

Williams, Mr. J. Powell—cont.
- Hospital Accommodation, Sierra Leone Feb 15, 399
- Military Works Bill Feb 11, 154; In Com. Feb 22, 938, 939, 950
- Regimental Territorial Titles Feb 15, 403
- Royal
  - Barracks, Dublin Feb 11, 159
  - Engineers, Discharge Feb 15, 398
- Salisbury Plain, Tenant Farmers Mar 4, 1586
- Soldiers' Effects Fund Feb 11, 180

Willox, Mr. J. A., Liverpool, Everton
- Merchant Shipping Bill, Intro. Feb 16, 533

Wilson, Mr. C. H., Hull, W.
- Icelandic Fisheries Feb 9, 8, 9
- Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill 2R. Feb 10, 87, 99, 117

Wilson, Mr. F. W., Norfolk, Mid
- Brisley (Norfolk) Parish Council Feb 25, 1139

Wilson, Mr. H. J., Yorkshire, W.R., Holmfirth
- Crete Feb 25, 1145, 1146
- Industrial and Provident and Incorporated Building Societies (Purchase of Fee Simple) Bill, 2R. Feb 23, 1044
- School
  - Accommodation, Southport Feb 16, 507
  - Board, Sutton-in-Ashfield Mar 1, 1329
- Supply: £153,044 for Public Education, England and Wales (Supplementary) Feb 26, 1291
- Voluntary Schools Bill Feb 25, 1226, 1227; In Com. Mar 1, 1403

Wilson, Mr. John, Durham, Mid
- Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 629, 636, 649, 650, 653
- Truck Act, Railway Companies Feb 23, 973
- Voluntary Schools Bill, Feb 11, 193

Wilson, Mr. John, Falkirk Burghs
- Scottish Rifles (5th Vol. Batt.) Mar 4, 1595 1596

Wilson, Mr. John, Lanark, Govan
- Drunkenness
  - Conviction for, Scotland Feb 12, 267
  - Glasgow Feb 26, 1254

Wilson, Mr. J. Havelock, Middlesbrough.
- Cruelty to a Seaman, s.s. Hornby Castle Feb 9, 19
- Pauper Aliens Feb 9, 68

Wolff, Mr. G. W., Belfast, E.
- Musgrave Street Police Barracks, Belfast Feb 19, 784
- Steam Engines and Boilers (Persons in Charge) Bill, 2R. Feb 17, 630
- Trade Dispute, Manchester Feb 12, 269, 270

WOODALL, Mr. W., Hanley
Burials Bill, 2R. Feb 24, 1074, 1075
Military Works Bill, 2R. Feb 18, 758, 760; In Com. Feb 22, 937, 938, 956

WOODHOUSE, Sir JAMES T., Huddersfield
Voluntary Schools Bill, In Com. Mar 3, 1560; Mar 4, 1647, 1649, 1652

WOODS, Mr. SAMUEL, Essex, Walthamstow
Employers' Liability Bill Mar 4, 1613
Prison Clerks, Parliamentary Elections Mar 4, 1600
Servants' Homes and Agencies Mar 4, 1600
Truck Act
Fines Feb 25, 1140
Railway Companies Feb 23, 972

WOODS, FORESTS, AND LAND REVENUES OF THE CROWN
Bridgetown Abbey, Cork, Q. Mr. W. Abraham (Cork); A. Mr. Hanbury Feb 15, 391
British South Africa, Select Committee Room, Q. Mr. J. C. Flynn; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 18, 719. Q. Mr. F. A. Channing; A. [Mr. Speaker;] Feb 19, 783
Hampton Court Green, Qs. Sir F. Dixon-Hartland; As. Mr. Akers-Douglas Mar 1, 1336
Hyde Park Cyclists, Q. Mr. C. B. B. McLaren; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 22, 863
Mall (The) Cyclists, Q. Mr. Wootton Isaacson; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Mar 1, 1337
Queen's Reign, South Kensington Museum, Q. Mr. Massey-Mainwaring; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 11, 174
Richmond Park, Q. Mr. E. Boulnois; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 25, 1122
Westminster Hall, Q. Mr. C. B. B. McLaren; A. Mr. Akers-Douglas Feb 22, 864

Working Men's Dwellings Bill. [H.L.]
l. Pres., Lord Norton; Read 1ª Mar 4, 1570

WORKS, FIRST COMMISSIONER
Mr. A. AKERS-DOUGLAS

WORTLEY, Right Hon. C. B. STUART-, Sheffield, Hallam
Crete, Action of British Ships Feb 22, 920

Wreck (see SHIPWRECK)

WYNDHAM-QUIN, Major W. H., Glamorganshire, S.
Army Estimates: £1,016,400 for Works, Buildings, and Repairs Feb 19, 841, 845
Barry Island Fort Feb 9, 18
Peasant Freeholders, Wales Feb 23, 1035

YERBURGH, Mr. R. A., Chester
Usury Laws Feb 15, 412

YOUNG, Mr. S., Cavan, E.
Sale of Intoxicating Liquor on Sunday Bill, 2R. Feb 10, 105

YOXALL, Mr. J. H., Nottingham, W.
Certificated Teacher's Dismissal, Gawber, near Barnsley Mar 4, 1587
St. Andrew's School, Willesden Feb 11, 177
Supply: £95,434 for Teachers' Pension Fund, Ireland Feb 26, 1302, 1304
Voluntary Schools Bill, 2R. Feb 16, 572, 575; Feb 25, 1200; In Com. Mar 1, 1365, 1376; Mar 4, 1634, 1661, 1662

END OF VOLUME XLVI., AND SECOND VOLUME OF SESSION 1897.

PRINTED BY WATERLOW AND SONS LIMITED, LONDON WALL, LONDON.